THE PIANISTA.—NOTICE.—The Post-office now allows Three Numbers of the PIANISTA to be sent free all over the kingdom for 6d instead of 3s as heretofore. The PIANISTA, Australia Auber's new opera of Haydee, Figaro, Somnambula, Norma, Don Giovanni, with overtures complete in 30 numbers, at 3s. per number. Also all the popular Songs and Dance Music of the last seven years, at one-second of the usual price. Specimens sent free. Catalogues gratis. LEE and WALKER, 192, 2nd edition of No. 77, containing Mary Blaine, Lucy Neal, Sweet Spring, Sweet Summer, and Sweet Home, by Balfe, all for 6d.; and 2nd edition of No. 72, containing Bird of the Wilderness, Sea Maiden, Bird of Beauty, and Bird of Love, by Benedict, all for 6d.

AUBER'S NEW OPERA, "HAYDEE." The Six Best Vocal Pieces for a shilling, with English and French Words. The two Barcarolles in the popular Venetian Song in each language, the elegant Duet and a Song in two Threepenny Secrets, and the Brilliant Trio, all from the new Opera, price 1s. each, or the Six Pieces in a wrapper, One shilling. Also, No. 1 of THE MUSICAL TREASURY. Also just ready, the Overture to the "Marriage of Figaro," "Fra Diavolo," "Cenerentola," "Semiramide," "Gazza Ladra," "Father-land," "The Marseillaise," German Song, and "Magnet a Song," both with German and English words, 3d each.

MATTHEWS and LEE'S Fifty Full Music Sheets for Pianoforte, Flute, Violin, and Violoncello, 192, Fleet-street.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS and MEDALS.—PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Coins and Medals, 36, opposite the British Museum, London, requests his patrons to copy his address, as having no other, to answer, he must cease advertising unless they do so. Parties having Coins or Medals to dispose of, or Fine Roman Brass Coins, in each; Roman Denarii, 2s. each; Ancient Egyptian, Greek, the "Sea-horse of Syracuse," specimens of every description of the Present Revolution, in each. WHE any of which his Catalogue will be sent. A lot of good Roman and Silver Coins, 7s. per oz.

ALL THE PARIS WORKS of FASHION, with every Daily and Weekly Newspaper and Magazine published in France, Germany, and throughout the Continent, can be transmitted for at the British and Foreign Newspaper and Advertising Office, 21, Catherine-street, Strand. A list of upwards of 600 political, fashionable, commercial, scientific, military, scientific, religious, literary, medical, and musical publications in Paris, with the price, forwarded, post free, for 2d. stamp.

LIST OF TOWN AND COUNTRY PAPERS, 6d.—Nearly ready, price 6d., A COMPLETE LIST of all the DAILY and WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS and Monthly and Quarterly Magazines Published throughout England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, with the Days of Publication and Price, will be sent post-free (forwarding six penny stamps to the British and Foreign Newspaper and Advertising Office, 21 Catherine-street Strand

The Tenth Edition, price 1s. 6d.

DR. ROWE'S WORK on NERVOUS DISEASES, Indigestion, Liver and Stomach Complaints, &c. &c.

London: SOUTER, Publisher, 131, Fleet-street.

No More Medicine for Indigestion and other Functional Derangements.—By DU BARRY and Co.'s Revalenta Arabica Food, or Meal Biscuits, Nervous Debility, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Diarrhœa, St. Mary Axe, London.—Price 6d., or 8d. by post, a popular Treatise entitled

THE NATURAL REGENERATOR of the DIGESTIVE ORGANS (the Stomach and Intestines) Without Medicine. Court copy, 8s. post paid

Just published in one vol., 8vo, greatly improved and enlarged Edition, price 10s. 6d.

ASTHMA, its VARIETIES and COMPLICATIONS; or, a Research into the Causes, Nature, and Treatment of that Affection, with Remarks on the Treatment applicable to each Variety. Illustrated by Cases and Histories taken from Nature. Also a Treatise on the Principal Diseases of the Heart. By F. H. RAMADGE, M.D., Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians &c.

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS

Just published, price 1s. 6d. by Post, 2s. 6d.,

ON DISORDERS of the MIND and NERVES.—Being Observations, in which the Causes and Moral Management of these Maladies are particularly explained. By T. J. GRAHAM, M.D., Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of London.

Also just published by SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co., Paternoster-row, and HATCHARD and SON, Piccadilly,

A Work which may be had, by the same Author, Ninth Edition, price 6s. MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE A Comprehensive Medical Guide for the Clergy, Families, &c.

"To recommend a work like the present to our readers, is [illegible] per regard to their welfare."—Literary Journal, February 1848.

READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES

Now Ready, Gratis,

AN IMPROVED PLAN for the Formation and Supply of READING SOCIETIES. This Plan is so simple, and the operation so perfect, that every Subscriber can have a Regular Supply of the best Books, at the lowest rate consistent with economy, yet sufficient made by which Book Clubs have been formerly ruined.

Also, Terms and post-free Orders for Books exchanged by the Year, Quarter, or Month, and sent to Readers in the Country, by MUDIE, Bookseller, Cheapside, Cross, Bath, and Clifton.

CHARLES MEEKING and Co., No. 62, Holborn-hill, have purchased the Stock of the Assignees of Mr. MOSES IN LEWIS, of 87, Oxford-street, a large and valuable Assortment of Fancy Goods, Prints, and Rare Books, Portfolios, Drawing Boards, Mathematical Instruments, Paintings, Drawings, &c. &c. The Sale will commence on MONDAY, the 28th inst., and continue for Three Days, at 12 o'Clock precisely each day. Catalogues may be had at the Auctioneer's Offices, Holborn-hill.

Just published, price 1s. 6d.,

THE PRACTICAL ART of DRESSING in GOOD TASTE, with Remarks on the Fashions of the Present Season. By a LADY. Illustrated with Coloured Plates of the Newest Fashions, and Engravings of Patterns for Needlework, Lace, &c. &c.

London: HOULSTON and STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster-row.

Just published, price 1s. 6d.,

THE LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION for MARCH. Four large Plates, 70 Figures, and 100 Patterns of Needlework, Lace, &c. &c.

London: Holywell-street, Strand; and all Booksellers and Newsmen

Just published, price 1s. 6d.,

THE LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION for MARCH. Four large Plates, 70 Figures, and 100 Patterns of Needlework, Lace, &c. &c.

London: Holywell-street, Strand; and all Booksellers and Newsmen

MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, and LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY.—£10 PREFERENCE SHARES.

The Public are informed that the whole of the stock has now been taken up, and no more subscriptions for it can be entertained.

By order of the Directors,
JAMES MYDDLETON, Secretary.
Office, 1, Great George-street, Westminster, 25th February, 1848.

SOYER'S PAROCHIAL MODEL KITCHEN, for supplying the destitute Wayfarer and Poor of Bethnal-green and Spitalfields, cooking his splendid SOUP, under the superintendence of M. SOYER. One quart of the above food, with a quarter of a pound of bread, will be distributed every day for One Penny, or gratis to those who may be famishing, within a circuit. Subscriptions, from Sixpence, and not to exceed One Guinea, will be received by the Rev. Joseph Brown, No. 1, North-terrace, Commercial-road East; Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie, and Co., Fleet-street; Messrs. Drummond, Charing-cross; Messrs. Ablett, Books-Hers, Berners-street; Messrs. Edmeades and Co., Bruton-street; and at the Model Kitchen, Hall-street, Bethnal-green.

NEW and FASHIONABLE COMBS.—PROUT, Brush and Comb Maker, No. 229, Strand, near Temple-bar, begs to call the attention of the public to his splendid and extensive STOCK of Fashionable COMBS, the largest and most complete in the metropolis (comprising all the newest designs in the most beautiful colours, of workmanship not to be surpassed), 229, Strand, near Temple-bar.

DOMESTIC GAS FITTINGS.—The cleanliness, cheapness, ordinancy, and safety of this mode of lighting private residences are leading to its general adoption. GEORGE and JOHN DEANE'S Stock of LAMPS, Chandeliers, Brackets, [illegible] set up in their own workshops, by G. and J. Deane, who engage for the strictest punctuality on the lowest terms for charges. N.B. Plans and estimates prepared. George and John Deane, gas fitters, opening to 1st Monument, 4a, Bishopsgate Within-street, London-bridge.

ART-UNION of LONDON: incorporated by Royal Charter; SUBSCRIPTION 1 GUINEA for 1848 will CLOSE next month. Extra prizes to the amount of £1,000 will be added to the Distribution of 1847.

Every subscriber will receive for each guinea an impression of the Prisoner of Chillon, engraved by F. Bacon, after H. W. Pickersgill, R.A., and a choice selection of Hilton's Allegory and Il Penseroso, illustrated by wood engravings by their leading artists. Specimens of the engravings may be seen at the office. The Impression of the Copperplate cut from Waterloo, due to the subscribers for 1845, are now in course of delivery.

GEORGE GODWIN, } Hon. Secretaries.
LEWIS POCOCK, }

4, Trafalgar-square, Feb. 18, 1848.

ALFRED'S ART REPOSITORY, 168, New Bond-street. "An Establishment of the kind undertaken by Mr. Alfred has long been desirable, as a channel for the exhibition of the rising Works of Art [illegible]."—Times "The [illegible]."—Spectator.

ALFRED'S ART EXPOSITION, for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce. 168, New Bond-street.

[illegible] to be supplied [illegible] every description of [illegible] on the following [illegible] the exhibition of [illegible] Works [illegible] Pictures, Drawings, Sculpture, Models, &c. [illegible] Alfred's reputation [illegible] Alfred's Exhibition Gallery, 168, New Bond-street.

ROYAL PAPIER MACHE WORKS.—JENNENS and BETTRIDGE, Manufacturers by special appointment, to her Majesty and the Royal Family, 18a, and-street West, Regent-street, London, and also at Birmingham. At these Works are manufactured Papier Mache Trays, Tables, Chairs, Cabinets, Desks, Inkstands, &c. &c. Jennens and Bettridge's Manufactures can be had at the Establishments above-named, and of the principal Wholesale and Retail Houses in the United Kingdom, also of their Correspondents in every important city in the world. N.B. All goods marked with Jennens and Bettridge's name are warranted.

USEFUL and ELEGANT PRESENTS. EVERLASTING GOLD PENS, patronised by her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert.—F. MORDAN begs to call the attention of the public to this invaluable article, as possessing every quality requisite for a good pen. They are made of gold, tipped with the hardest native material now known, and have all the smoothness, ease, and elasticity of the quill, with the durability of the diamond. With every pen a perpetual warranty is given against every change (except from violence), and it may be returned at any future time if fault in all that is required for it. Sold by all Stationers, Stationers, and others. To ensure good ink, use F. [illegible]

S. MORDAN and CO.'S Patent EVER-POINTED PENCILS are acknowledged, by the test of time and use, to be the most durable, elegant, and independent of Wakefield-pencils for writing. They are remarkable for beauty of design, richness, variety of form, and purity of material. S. Mordan and Co.'s Ever-pointed Pencils have [illegible] and [illegible] Silver and Gold Pencil Cases, and every other article [illegible] on the public are instantly to be detected. The genuine Ever-pointed Pencil is imprinted with [illegible]

S. MORDAN and Co.'s PATENT EVER POINTED PENCILS. S. M. and Co. CAUTION the public in purchasing this useful article to see [illegible] are stamped on the barrel. [illegible] Manufactory, City-road, London.

FINE ARTS.—S. MORDAN and CO. beg to inform the public that they are enabled to supply a genuine and CLEAN LEAD DRAWING PENCIL without a particle of grit or any other impurity. S. M. and Co. have had the application in manufacturing that such excellent Pencils in every respect have never yet been produced, and on confirmation of this fact, the highest testimonials from the first artists, architects, and engineers have been received. The following is an abbreviated list:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Clarkson Stanfield, Esq., R.A. | G. Pickering, Esq., F.S.A. |
| C. L. Eastlake, Esq., R.A. | W. Wyon, Esq., R.A. |
| J. K. Brunel, Esq., F.R.S. | David Roberts, Esq., R.A. |
| Clarkson Stanfield, Esq., R.A. | J. T. Willmore, Esq., A.R.A. |
| R. Westmacott, Jun., Esq., F.R.S. | H. C. Wilson, Esq., Director of Government School of Design. |
| Samuel Prout, Esq. | |
| Philip Hardwick, Esq., R.A. | |

[illegible] stamped "Warranted pure Cumberland Lead, S. MORDAN and Co., London." To be had of all respectable vendors.—Manufactory, City-road, London.

SUMMERLY'S ART MANUFACTURES, designed by J. Bell, Dyce, A.R.A.; J. C. Horsley, Mac.ise, R.A., Mulready, R.A.; E. Redgrave, A.R.A., Townsend, &c.

| | |
|---|---|
| Tea-pot, in Metals (Dixon's make) | Decanters and Wine Glasses (Richardson's) |
| Jack Knife, in Silver (Hodgson's and Sons) | Salt-cellars, in Glass and Porcelain |
| Glass Cake-dish (Richardson's) | Wine-tray, in Paper Mache (Jennens and Bettridge) |
| Bread Platter and Knife, in Wood | Dessert Knives and Forks (Rodger's and Sons) |
| Champagne Jug (Richardson's) | Paper Cutter (Rodger's and Sons) |
| Shaving Pot and Brush (Wedgwood's) | Inkstand, in Glass and Silver (Richardson's) |
| Flower and Fruit Painting, in Enamel on Glass | |
| "Lord a Trayer" and "Be.ak." Statuettes | |

Sold by J. Bell, 19, Old Bond-street, and all respectable dealers.
A picture catalogue sent on receipt of two postage stamps.

MUTUAL INSURANCE BENEFIT INSTITUTION.—31, Threadneedle-street, London.

Under the Patronage of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, &c. &c. Established 1830.
Empowered and Regulated by Act of Parliament

This Institution places within the reach of all Advantages similar to those hitherto only attainable from Annuity and Life Assurance Companies, upon more Terms, payable Monthly or Quarterly, and is therefore suited to the requirements of each individual.

The funds of this Institution are invested in Government Securities bearing a high rate of Interest, its stability is thus beyond question.

ANNUITIES, OR ANNUAL INCOMES FOR LIFE, commencing immediately, or at a future period, obtainable for a sum of money paid down, or by easy Monthly or Quarterly payments.

ENDOWMENTS, OR SUMS OF MONEY FOR CHILDREN, OR FOR PERSONS OF ANY AGE, from £10 to £200, payable at 14, 21, or any other age, or after any number of Years.

PROVISION FOR WIDOWS AND ORPHANS, by sums of Money, from £10 to £50, payable at the Death of the Insured.

WEEKLY ALLOWANCES, with Medical Attendance and Medicines, during SICKNESS or ACCIDENT, from 5s. to £1 per week.

Prospectus and Tables of Payment, with every information, may be had gratuitously of any of the AGENTS or Medical Officers, or at the Office, 31, Threadneedle-street, London.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

THE ROYAL NAVAL, MILITARY, EAST INDIA, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 14, PALL MALL, LONDON.

CHAIRMAN.

Captain Sir Edward Parry, R.N. Admiral Sir Charles Malcolm, G.C.B.

DEPUTY CHAIRMAN.—Major-Gen. Sir William Gosset, C.B., K.C.M., R.E.

Admiral the Right Hon. Sir G. Cockburn, Bart., G.C.B. Major-Gen. Sir Thomas Arbuthnot, K.C.B., R.A.
Ma.-Gen. Sir J. Cockburn, Bt., G.C.H. Lieut.-Col. H. Hamner, K.H., late R.E.
Major-Gen. Sir Thomas Bradford, G.C.B., G.C.H. Major Shadwell Clerke, K.H., F.R.S.
Major-Gen. Sir Henry, C.B.H., G.C.H. Archibald Tayler, Esq., late Bengal Civil Service.
Major-Gen. Sir [illegible], K.C.B., R.A. Captain Sir William Lawrey, R.E.
Major-Gen. Sir [illegible], K.C.B., R.A. William Cotton, Esq., Navy Agent.
[illegible] James Nugent Daniell, Esq.
[illegible] Wyndham Taylor, Esq.
Major-Gen. Sir [illegible], K.C.B. Major-Gen. Sutt, C.B.
Major-Gen. Edward Forster, C.B. Major F. A. Sotheby, C.B.
Major-Gen Arnold, K.H.K.C., R.E.

BANKERS.—Messrs. Coutts and Co., 59, Strand.

ACTUARY.—John Finlaison, Esq., late Government Calculator.

Assurances are granted upon the lives of persons in every station of life, and for every part of the world, upon particularly favourable terms.

Persons assured in this office may change from one country to another without forfeiting their policies.

A Bonus, amounting to 30 per Cent. on the actual value of the policies, was apportioned to the assured at the first Septennial Meeting, held in the year 1844.

JOSEPH C. BRETTELL, Secretary.

SOVEREIGN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, No. 5, St James's [illegible] London.

Sir A Boyldes Hamilker, Bart.
B. Bond Cabbell, Esq., M.P.

Francis Powell, Esq.
Claude Edward Scott, Esq.

DIRECTORS.

CHAIRMAN, Lieut.-Col. Lord Arthur Lennox, M.P.
DEPUTY CHAIRMAN, T. G. Granger, Esq., M.P
John Ashburner, Esq., M.D.
F. M. Ommanney, Esq.
Philip P. Blyth, Esq.

Henry Bradwood, Esq., M.P.
Sir James Carmichael, Bart.
Charles Farebrother, Esq., Aldermen.
John Gardner, Esq.
Augustus Frederick Thomas Lennox, Esq.
Henry William Powell, Esq.

Assurances granted on the lives of Persons in every station of Life, and every part of the world, on peculiarly favourable terms.

Every facility afforded to Persons assuming the Limits of Offices, so as to render such Policies effectual securities.

Foreign risks at fixed rates, on a very moderate scale

Immediate ANNUITIES and ENDOWMENTS granted on liberal terms, affording great advantages to persons of limited income.

Parish clear attention is invited to the plan adopted by this Company, of granting Deferred Annuities, to commence at any specified age, either with or without the return of the Premiums paid, in case of death before attaining the age at which the Annuity is to commence; thus, a person aged [illegible] secures an Annuity of £50, to commence on attaining the age of 50, and to continue during [illegible] at the following rates:—

ANNUAL PREMIUMS WITH AND WITHOUT RETURN, IN CASE OF DEATH.

| Without Return. | | With Return of Two-thirds. | | With Return of the Whole. | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| £ s. d. | | £ s. d. | | £ s. d. | |
| 12 10 0 | | 14 16 8 | | 15 10 0 | |

J. H. DAVENPORT, Secretary.

COLOURED PHOTOGRAPHIC MINIATURES.
By Mr. HEARD Sole Patentee of the Daguerreotype,
At 69, (N.B.) WILLIAM STREET, CITY,
24, PARLIAMENT-STREET, and the
ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION, REGENT-STREET.

CURRALL and SON, Importers of COGNAC BRANDY, of the highest quality. choice Old Pale at 60s.; and Brown at 48s. per Dozen. Bottles, 2s. per dozen; Hampers, 1s. Brandies at 24s. and 36s. per gallon. Pale high-flavoured sherry at 36s. per Dozen. Excellent Dinner Table at 28s. per Dozen. Bishopsgate-street Without.

RUSSIAN VAPOUR and EGYPTIAN HOT AIR BATHS, 3s. each.
WARM BATHS, 1s. 6d. each, 18 for 25s.; Annual, 42s.,
At 97 and 98, Aldersgate-street, Barbican, and 5, New Broad-street, City.

BREIDENBACH'S EAU DE COLOGNE. 10s. per case of Six Bottles, the same as distilled for her Majesty [illegible] and Caledonian. This Real de Cologne is [illegible] the genuine [illegible] Lodge, 164, New Bond-street, opposite Stafford House.
HENRY BREIDENBACH, 88, Park-street, Grosvenor-square.

CHILDREN'S AND INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—Invalids' and Children's Carriages, from £2 to £25, well finished and of the newest pattern. Spanish and Sedan Chairs, Children's Chaises, Vis-à-vis Waggons, Phætons, Barouches, &c., from Ten Shillings to Twenty Guineas. Immense and varied collection. SALE or HIRE, at INGRAM'S Manufactory, 29, City-road, Finsbury-square. N.B. Illustrated Catalogues

MENIER'S FRENCH CHOCOLATE, [illegible] acknowledged, since 1825, as the most valuable Article for Breakfast. Chemical Analysis may always be purchased in London, at Messrs. HEDGES and BUTLER'S, 155, Regent-street, and at the most respectable Tea Dealers, Confectioners, and Chemists in London and the United Kingdom.

DO YOU SUFFER TOOTH-ACHE?—If so, send 1s. and a stamp to S. Mabile, 4, rue Neuve-des-Petits-Champs, Paris, and you will receive (without any further charge) a Box of his Arsenical Specific Stopping. Sold by dentists at 3s. 6d. An instant and permanent cure. 1000 packets posted weekly.

GOOD FEMALE SERVANTS are obtained at the CITY DOMESTIC REGISTRY, 33 Ludgate-street, by a Lady of the highest respectability. Servants with good characters will find it the best office to get a respectable situation. Open from Ten till Four, Saturdays excepted.

LADIES, READ THIS.—FALSE HAIR, of every description, sent safe by Post.—INVISIBLE CURLS, or SHELL SIDE-COMBS for [illegible] Ladies, [illegible] Gentlemen, [illegible] Children,

THE REVOLUTION IN FRANCE.

The scenes depicted in the present page will be found detailed in our narrative of the Revolutionary proceedings in pages 127 and 128. One of the Illustrations shows the crowd reading the Government Proclamation; accompanying which is the scene of tumult before the Hotel of the Minister of Marine, in the Place de la Concorde.

M. ODILLON BARROT.

M. Odillon-Barrot is the recognised leader of the French Opposition. He is an advocate, but is better known, in England at least, as a politician. He owes his power to his eloquence, and the probity of his character as a public man. Though he might on many occasions have commanded office, he has never, in all the changes from 1815 to the present time, accepted it. He prefers independence of mind and freedom of action. We must accompany the Portrait here given with a description of the scene in the French Chambers, on Tuesday, the 22d, when the movement out of doors was most threatening:—

M. ODILLON BARROT.

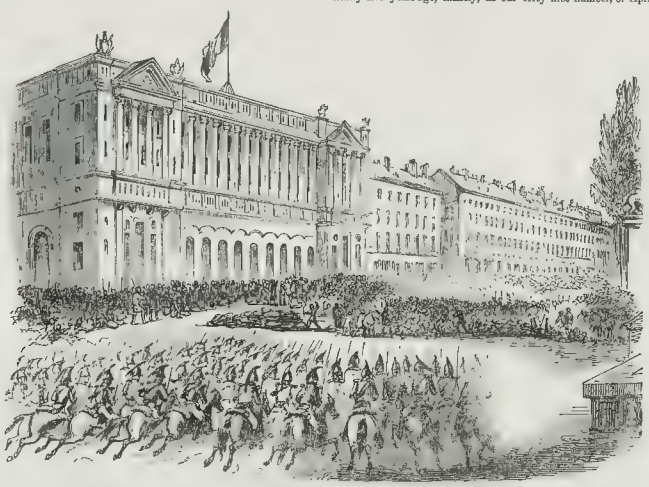
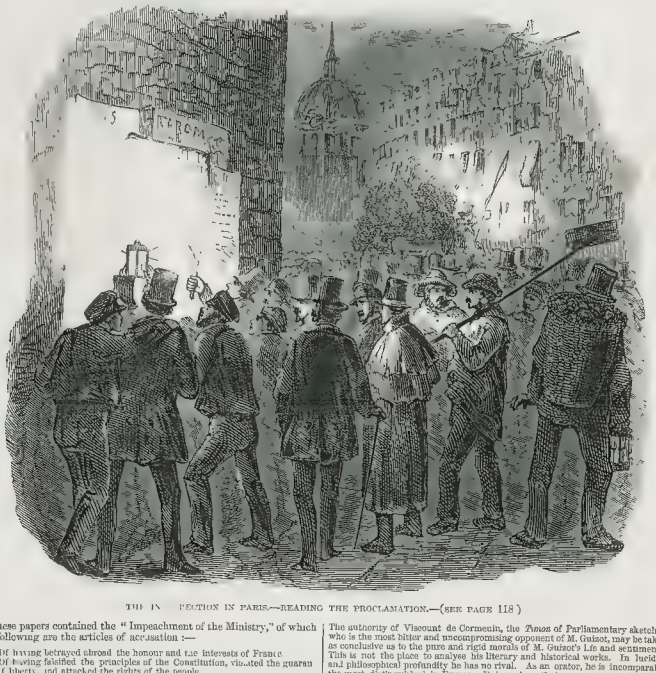
The subject of discussion was the bill for prolonging the privileges of the Bank of Bordeaux. M. Léon Faucher, M. d'Eichtal, M. Gelos, and others, spoke at some length on it, but without meeting with the slightest attention from the very limited attendance of members present.

Whilst one of the deputies was in the midst of a long speech on the currency question, M. Duvergier de Hauranne ascended the estrade on which the President sits, and handed to him a paper. The several Ministers present, M. Hebert, M. Dumon, M. Cunin Gridaine, and lastly, M. Guizot went up successively to the President's table, and read the paper in question. M. Guizot was observed to smile as he perused it. This was by many supposed to be the acte d'accusation, or notice of impeachment against the Ministers, of which the opposition journals had spoken in the morning.



TROOPS CHARGING THE CROWD BEFORE THE HOTEL OF THE MINISTER OF MARINE.—PLACE DE LA CONCORDE.

Some time after, M. O. Barrot was seen to proceed up to the President's chair, and with great solemnity placed a folded paper in his hands. In a few minutes the Abbé de Genoude did the same; the discussion, meanwhile, drew to its close, and the expectation of the spectators was raised to the highest. Suddenly, at about a quarter to five, M. Sauzet declared that the sitting was over. [Loud cries of "No, no," burst from the left, and the President, who had left the chair, was obliged to return to his place]. M. O. Barrot then rose and complained that the President had failed in his duty in not announcing to the Chamber the nature of certain documents which had been presented in the course of the sitting. This the President explained he could not do till the documents had been examined by the Bureaux; but he acknowledged having received them, and the Chamber rose in disorder.



THE INSURRECTION IN PARIS.—READING THE PROCLAMATION.—(SEE PAGE 118)

These papers contained the "Impeachment of the Ministry," of which the following are the articles of accusation:—

1. Of having betrayed abroad the honour and the interests of France.
2. Of having falsified the principles of the Constitution, violated the guarantees of liberty, and attacked the rights of the people.
3. Of having, by a systematic corruption, attempted to substitute, for the free expression of public opinion, the calculations of private interest, and thus perverted the Representative Government.
4. Of having trafficked, for Ministerial purposes, in public offices, as well as in all the prerogatives and privileges of power.
5. For having, in the same interest, wasted the finances of the State, and thus compromised the forces and the grandeur of the kingdom.
6. Of having violently despoiled the citizens of a right inherent to every free Constitution, and the exercise of which had been guaranteed to them by the Charter, by the laws, and by former precedents.
7. Of having, in fine, by a policy overtly counter-revolutionary, placed in question all the conquests of our two revolutions, and thrown the country into a profound agitation.

In this document Odillon-Barrot's is the first signature.

M. GUIZOT.

We are induced by the great interest of the political intelligence from Paris, to repeat a portrait of M. Guizot, which appeared in our journal nearly five years ago, namely, in our forty-first number, of April 11, 1843. We never publish engravings a second time, but on the present occasion we depart from our rule.

The facts of M. Guizot's career would occupy too much space to recapitulate; we must refer the reader to the full biography given in the number above cited. At the present moment his personal character possesses the most interest, as giving a key to his late policy.—

"M. Guizot," says the eloquent Homme de Rien, in his "Galerie des Contemporains Illustres," "may be considered under four points of view—as the private individual, as the literary man and historian, and as orator and statesman."

The authority of Viscount de Cormenin, the Timon of Parliamentary sketches, who is the most bitter and uncompromising opponent of M. Guizot, may be taken as conclusive as to the pure and rigid morals of M. Guizot's Life and sentiments. This is not the place to analyse his literary and historical works. In lucidity and philosophical profundity he has no rival. As an orator, he is incomparably the most distinguished in France. It is curious that so great a man should be fond of exciting debates, but M. Guizot revels in the most animated discussion. As it warms, so does he become more eager for the combat. The Ministerial bench can scarcely hold him. He accompanies the rude or violent attack of his opponent at the tribune by a contemptuous shrug, and he gives a withering sneer at the opposite benches they cheer. At length, when all the false speakers have exhausted their strength, M. Guizot's turn comes. His sarcasms and impressive words, his sedulous periods, epigrams, his calm and dignified action, seem the more of a triumph, and, above all, a kind of government-sentiment and creative force, which is natural to him, awe the turbulent, and inspire confidence in the Conservative phalanx. Frequently has the majority been saved, at the eleventh hour, by some masterly address from M. Guizot; and at the moment when the Cabinet has appeared lost, he has realised one of its greatest triumphs. To effect the most correct notion of the man, is simply to state, that he is now, in the Boulevard des Capucines, at the Foreign-office, what he was in his modest domicile in the Rue Ville l'Evêque. The honours of a Minister have not changed the habits of the man. To sum up M. Guizot's characteristics as a politician, it may truly be done in the language of the Homme de Rien, thus:—"Definitively, what is M. Guizot? He is, above all, a man for power and government, and at the same time the most independent of men; submitting to the yoke of the principles which he has laid down as his rule of conduct, and holding his head high as to the question of persons; a policy of great value estimating all that is worthy of esteem; more convinced than enthusiastic, prouder of the approbation of his conscience than of the homage of the multitude; endowed, in the supreme degree, with that force of will and perseverance which make the statesman; a mortal enemy of everything resembling disorder, and capable, if things came to the worst, of throwing himself without hesitation into despotism which he detests, rather than accept the anarchy which he abhors."

"In 1830 M. Guizot was a simple Deputy. He was one of the thirty who met at the house of M. Casimir Perier on the first day of the revolution of July, and he never deserted the still smaller band of patriotic Deputies who had the courage, during the following days, to sit and deliberate in the midst of the struggle, while the cannon were roaring in the streets, and the crowd of insurgents who protected them were sometimes engaged in combat under the windows."

"As Minister of Public Instruction, M. Guizot presented the singular anomaly of a Protestant directing the church establishment of a Catholic country; yet his impartiality and justice were such, that he never gave cause of dissatisfaction to any party; and in his connexion with literature and education, he gave to his department of state business a development and an impetus which was unknown before. He was ever ready to encourage and employ rising talent, and to a few who have since earned their bread by writing against him, owed their first advancement in the world to M. Guizot's generosity."

M. GUIZOT.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198 Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid. Saturday, February 26, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

Nos. 305 & 306.—Vol. XII.] SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1848. DOUBLE NUMBER. [One Shilling.

THE GREAT REVOLUTION.

A few days ago, and the Government of Louis Philippe appeared one of the strongest of Europe. He was at the head of an army of 300,000 men said to be devoted to him. Forts and navies secured him at home and abroad. He had an obsequious majority in the Chambers—he had the command of the press—he had active and energetic Ministers, and his throne seemed as firmly fixed as France herself. Only a slight murmur of discontent was heard about electoral corruption; a slight aspiration was whispered for reform, and there was a rumour of a banquet, and of opposition, which his Ministers were to put down without trouble or exertion. Some rumours there were that at the death of Louis Philippe the people would resume their rights; but his throne fourteen days ago might have been insured during his life for a mere trifle in any office in Europe.

Suddenly, and without any warning, that throne has disappeared or ever. What has become of him and his Queen at the time we write, nobody knows. They fled from the Tuileries, and were last heard of at Dreux, where the lord of millions sterling had a single five-franc piece, and was indebted for that to the chance suggestion of his Queen, or the contribution of officers, before the beginning of their hurried flight. His family, too, are dispersed. Some of them have taken refuge in England—of the others no tidings have been heard. His race have no prescriptive hold over France. His whole power dates from the revolution of 1830, and it is not only gone suddenly and totally, it has gone for ever, without any apparent hope of being ever restored. It has vanished like a scene shifted at a theatre. So sudden, so great, and so complete a change was never before known.

One day a mighty Monarch, the next a beggared fugitive. One day surrounded by a happy and prosperous family, with guards and flatterers and all the splendour of a court; the next a poor old wanderer without support or consolation, and seeking the means of escaping from phantoms which his own terrors conjure up. Romance and fable have nothing equal to this; and even dreams, those wildest of all the fears of a disordered brain, cannot surpass it. We know nothing resembling it, even in fable, but that eastern story of the magician and the Sultan. Surrounded by his courtiers, the latter asked the former for a proof of his art, and was told to plunge his head into a tub of water. He did so, and found himself transformed to a sick and crippled street porter, surrounded by misery and want. He went through a variety of sufferings, that lasted, apparently, for years. In his agony he exclaimed against the villain dervish; he struggled and raised himself up; and there he was, the dervish still standing before him, and all his courtiers round about him. The adventures of two lives were gathered in that "drop of time." The destruction of the throne of Louis Philippe is such a dream. Its majesty, its power, its consequences, affecting all Europe, are overwhelming. It is the greatest event of the times in which we live; though some of us remember the beginning of the past Revolution—the terrible scenes of the Directory—the rise and fall of Bonaparte—the restoration of the Bourbons, and the revolution of 1830—it surpasses them all in its overwhelming suddenness and the magnitude of its consequences. How to write properly and respectfully to our readers of such a sudden change, almost puzzles and alarms us. We take courage from knowing that they will find in the extra Number of our Journal, and in the other part of it, all the particulars of this extraordinary event. We have, indeed, spared no pains to make those particulars complete and illustrative, and our readers will exercise forbearance towards us, if we can here say nothing that will not in interest fall infinitely below the narrative we elsewhere present to them

SEIZURE OF ARTILLERY ON THE ITALIAN BOULEVARDS.

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

(Continued from page 142.)

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

In this place, detached from the Narrative of the great Events of the Revolution, we shall furnish the reader with a few descriptive notes of the Scenes illustrated by our Artists. The arrangement of these Engravings, generally, follows the order in which the events occurred; but, in some few instances, it has been more convenient, for the sake of picturesque effect, to depart from this order. Of course the several scenes are referred to in the connected narrative in the extra sheet published with the present Number, in addition to the following notes.

The large Engraving upon the front page of No. 305 represents the Duchess of Orleans, the Count de Paris, and the Count d'Eu in the Chamber of Deputies, on Thursday: it will be seen that they occupy a prominent position on the floor of the semicircle beneath the President's chair. This tumultuous scene is minutely described in the Narrative.

The second Engraving shows the earliest event of Tuesday, the Demonstration before the façade of the Chamber of Deputies, amply detailed in the Narrative.

Next is the terrific scene at the Hotel of the Minister of Foreign Affairs; and then the impressive picture of the multitude coming from the Boulevard des Capucines, singing "Mourir pour la Patrie." Both these scenes are also described in the Narrative.

The Barricade in the Rue St. Martin, in the next illustration, shows the very effective mode by which the Revolutionists generally began the conflict.

Louis Philippe.—The Count de Paris.—Of the ex-King, several biographical details are given in the introductory portion of the Narrative. The Count de Paris, Prince Louis-Philippe-Albert of Orleans, Prince-Royal, is the eldest son of the late Duke of Orleans, married to the Princess Helena of Mecklenbourgh-Schwerin, and was born August 14, 1838, so that the Prince is in his tenth year.

The work of Destruction at the Tuileries, on Thursday, is illustrated in the five succeeding Engravings. First is the Throne-Room, whence the Royal seat of State was carried out, broken into pieces, and burnt.

The Wine-Cellar is a scene of almost mad orgies; and the pair of

(Continued on page 146.)

In the heat of the contest that destroyed the Monarchy, there were numerous acts of heroism, and there were some of outrage; but it must gladden the heart of every man to observe, contrary to the practice in former revolutions, that the object of the attack was the system, not individuals; and the system rather than individuals was overthrown. No insult, no outrage, was offered to Louis Philippe or his family. From all that we can see, they would have been perfectly safe had they courageously remained in Paris; and that they fled, was the consequence more of their own apprehensions than of any actual violence offered to them. Numerous cries, indeed, there were of "Down with Guizot!" the unpitying, unyielding Minister of an implacable, all-grasping, all-corrupting tyranny; but they were demands rather for his excursion from power than for personal vengeance. The demands of the long-suffering people were for a change of system. They have all been deeply affronted by the scandal brought on the name of France in the eyes of Europe, by the recent exposures of paltry pecuniary corruption in high quarters. No people are more sensitive to honour than the French—no people have a greater contempt for merely pecuniary considerations when weighed against high moral feelings; and the sordid avarice of their late Sovereign was as hateful and contemptible to them as drivelling cowardice. When they found that system corrupting the high officers of State, and sowing the seeds of anarchy in families, they were filled with silent, but profound, indignation. One of the most conspicuous cries of the two glorious days was, "Let us have no thieves in velvet." It was that terrible system of corruption and theft in high places which the French have put down; and Louis Philippe, his children and Ministers, only disappeared with it, because they were its authors and its creatures.

This great event has been justly characterised as a social Revolution. It is contra-distinguished from a Political Revolution, by having been undertaken by the people, and carried out by them for their own advantage. It was not begun and ended for the sake of a Buonaparte or a Bourbon. Accordingly, we find some of the first measures of the Government are directed to supplying the wants and improving the condition of the workmen, one of whom has been appointed a member of the Government; and they are to form part of a permanent commission to consider of the means of securing to industry its appropriate rewards. We have very little faith in Government measures for the promotion of industry, and protection of the industrious classes. We fear, therefore, that the measure proposed in a hurry will not be so beneficial as the people expect; but ignorance of the means of promoting their welfare does not lessen the importance of having the principle avowed as the basis of the future policy of France. That noble country is no longer to be governed for the sake of the one Monarch, and the 800,000 or 1,000,000 persons constituting the governing classes, and appropriating all the taxes amongst themselves and their friends, but is to be governed for the benefit of the whole 34,000,000 of industrious people who swarm on its fields. There are somewhere about 6,000,000 landed proprietors in France, so that almost every man has a part of the soil, and no class or no individual has a great quantity. Such a division of the land fits the people for a Republic; and if they now establish wise municipal institutions, giving a voice to the peasant as well as the citizen, we doubt not but the Republic will be consolidated, and will flourish for ages—the second greatest Republic in the world. The present Government is purely provisional; its successors, to be nominated by the whole people,—though when and how is not yet settled,—will achieve, we hope, the good work begun by the men of Paris, and will hand down to after ages a durable system of nearly perfect political liberty. The Revolution may have been sudden, but it is also practical; its domestic effects have already been considerable, and it has changed France from a pining Monarchy into a promisin Republi

To say one word of the relations of France with other countries, and particularly with England. Her people have so much to do in promoting manufactures and commerce, and in improving agriculture at home, that there is no necessity to seek employment in war abroad; and, so far as the acts of the Provisional Government have yet gone, they breathe only peace and good-will to all foreign nations. This is judicious. If their Government be consolidated, and offer advantages to the Rhenish provinces and to Belgium, they will, probably, offer to incorporate themselves with France; but attempts on the part of the French to appropriate these territories would kindle war in Europe, and defeat their object. We have the best hopes that peace will be preserved; our own Government has, on the most proper manner, at once acknowledged the Republican Government, and has signified in the plainest language that it will not attempt to meddle with the internal concerns of that country, or alter the peaceful relations that now exist. Such was the confidence the Marquis of Normanby placed in the Republic and people of France, that he declined an offered guard, being well assured that the representative of England would be well treated by all classes of the French. His confidence was not misplaced. If some ill-will have been shown to English workmen, it is less the consequence of national animosity than trade competition, and would probably have been exhibited to successful countrymen of their own, had they been in the place of the English. On the whole, we rejoice to say that the Revolution has led to no manifestations of national animosity, and is likely rather to extend and cement, than sever the brotherly union between the two people.

Wonderful in its origin and in itsconclusion, productive already of the best effects in France and in the relations of France with foreign countries, it is undoubtedly the most astounding and greatest event that any of us have lived to see. But the most important of its consequences will be its future effects on the mind and progress of Europe. It is not given us to know these; we can only darkly guess, and may say, that, as the first French Revolution shook the aristocracy and thrones of Europe, so this will shake the system of government that was established out of their ruins by men who admired them, and who sought to perpetuate their power and their glory. The system that was overthrown in Paris still finds favour throughout the Continent. Louis Philippe had only carried it further and fashioned it more completely than other Monarchs. His people were less adapted to it than the Germans and the Russians are to the similar systems which prevail amongst them; but they will follow the example of the Parisians and of France, and refuse submission to fraud and force. A sympathy with the French is felt throughout Europe. France herself caught some of her enthusiasm from Italy and Switzerland in the consummation of her Revolution, which was partly occasioned by progress abroad, as the herald of numerous other Revolutions in different parts of Europe. We look on the events in Paris as the overthrow of the coercive system of Government, and we look for the subversion of that system, sooner or later—quietly in some countries, as in our own, by force in others—all over the world. Mankind have evidently outgrown the authority established in past times; and the great Revolution in France, which it is our duty this week to record and illustrate, will be marked as an epoch by our posterity from which they will date the commencement of a new system of governing mankind. With Louis Philippe's Government has virtually ended the old plan of ruling nations by force for a class or an individual.

THE CORN-LAWS. The 1st inst. the privilege gr[illegible] session of Parliament for the free importation of all kinds of corn, grain, meal and flour, ceased to exist, as did also the act granting a temporary suspension of the Navigation Laws in regard to the introduction of such articles in vessels of any country or the production of any part of the world, and the same duties and laws of importation are to [illegible]ply to the Acts of Parliament referred to coming into operation.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

Advices from Palermo to the 17th of February mention that the offer of Lord Minto to mediate between the Provisional Government of Sicily and the King of Naples upon a defined basis, recognising, with the consent of the King, the chief objects for which the Sicilians have combated, had been received and accepted with the greatest enthusiasm. The arrival of his Lordship at Palermo was, therefore, hourly expected, and the greatest desire was felt for a speedy [illegible]. It is to cause disquietude to the in[illegible] some of the heads of ex-police officers who had been killed by the rabble were to be seen carried about in the streets; and on the 17th, thirty-four of these persons, who had been placed, as it was considered, in safe keeping, were dragged out by the mob and shot. A well-known character named Thomaso Santoro, suspected of being a traitor to the popular cause, shared a similar fate along with some of his fellows. The Hibernia, Trafalgar, and Supérb had arrived on the 16th, in six days, from M[illegible].

We learn from Rome that the Pope has decreed a Constitution, with the almost unanimous consent of the College of Cardinals. A committee on the Constitution has assembled. Cardinal Bernetti having objected to an edifice which had existed for so many centuries being changed at this moment, Pius IX. replied, "They are precisely old edifices which have need of new foundations."

Accounts from Parma state that, after the Te Deum, on the 13th ult., the cries of "Reform!" "Constitution!" were raised throughout the town. The people followed the Duke, who was walking in the streets, uttering the same cries, when he turned round in a menacing attitude, and exclaimed, "You shall have it!" His son, who accompanied him, appeared to expostulate with him, and afterwards went to the castle, where, having called out the troops, he harangued them, inviting them to prove themselves Italians, and to unite with the people for their just rights. The Duke sent for some Austrian cavalry to disperse the people; about twenty men were sent with orders not to use violence, but they could not succeed in persuading the people to disperse. The Duke at a late hour sent to Piacenza for 1200 Austrians.

Letters from Florence state that the Grand Duke of Tuscany has granted a Constitution, called the "Fundamental Statute," which appears, like those of Naples and Sardinia, to be modelled on the plan of the late French "charter." The people of Sicily are determined to "repeal the union," and to elect a King of their own, should the weak Sovereign of Naples continue to remain obstinate.

The Cabinet of Vienna is gradually giving way. It has just decided on the creation of a political senate in the kingdom of Lombardy, to act as the Council of the Viceroy. This is a concession, but a very meagre one. It is also under consideration to effect similar reform in the representative states, which are convoked for the 10th of March.

Milan was declared in a state of siege on the 23rd inst.

Advices from Palermo of the 18th state that a convention had been concluded between the Sicilians and the commander of a Neapolitan frigate, Captain Luigi Vocchi, for the restoration of prisoners, &c., and so far the island appears to enjoy tranquillity. The assembly of Palermo will strike for the Constitution of [illegible] will accept no compromise. The fortifications around the city had been razed to the ground. The city was filled with joy. A peculiar character deserves, as a sort of Sicilian Jem Baker (named Maria Testa), had taken the command of a body of insurgents, and achieved perfect prodigies of valour. She was still at the head of her troops, bahted in male attire.

Advices from Malta to the 19th inst. state that in consequence of a report by the Neapolitan steamer which arrived on that day, to the effect that the Austrians were marching 20,000 men to assist the King of Naples against the Sicilians, Admiral Parker, in the Hibernia, with the Trafalgar, Superb, and Hecate, left that evening with all possible despatch, for the purpose, it is said, of preventing the Austrians crossing over to Sicily; and the Rodney was sent on the evening

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Bill for establishing diplomatic relations with the Court of Home was read a third time and passed. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The Chairman of the Kinsale Election Committee reported that Mr. Gunness was not duly elected, and that the election was void. A new writ was subsequently ordered to issue for the borough.

Notices of Motions.—Mr. Hume gave notice of his intention to move an address to the Crown, praying her Majesty to give directions that all persons who shall be appointed to civil, military, and naval offices shall be made to accept them subject to any deductions of salary that Parliament may think fit to make.

The Revolution in France.—Mr. Hume asked her Majesty's Ministers if it was their intention to withhold altogether from our Parliament the birth of the people of France, and if they would leave the French at perfect liberty to choose what sort of Government they might please?—Lord J. Russell answered that the Government had received their intelligence from France, which was generally known to the public; and he had no hesitation in declaring, and he did declare, that the Government had no intention whatever of interfering with the form of Government which the French nation might please to choose, nor would the British Government in any way meddle with the internal affairs of France. This declaration of the Prime Minister was received by the House with loud and unanimous approbation.

Privilege.—Mr. J. O'Connell brought under notice a charge made against him and Mr. Fox Maule in the Northern Star newspaper, and moved that the printer and publisher be called to the bar for breach of privilege. After an apology from Mr. Feargus O'Connor, the motion was withdrawn.

The Income-tax—Abandonment of the Proposed Increase.—An immense number of petitions having been presented against the proposed income-tax,

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the order of the day for going into Committee of Ways and Means, and took the occasion to make a supplementary Budget, as an amendment upon that brought forward by the First Minister. The right honourable gentleman said, that, from the £9,136,000 which appear in the estimates of expenditure for the year ending the 5th of April last, £1,400,000 for Irish distress, and £450,000 China money, should have been deducted. Therefore, the actual excess of expenditure over income on the 5th of January last was one million only. Although the symptoms of returning trade were not so rapid as many had anticipated, and although the receipts of the current quarter up to the present day were £400,000 less than the corresponding period of last year, he yet thought, that, as some extraordinary receipts would be obtained before April, he might calculate that the excess of expenditure over income at the close of the financial year ending the 5th of April next would be under a million. The right hon. gentleman proceeded to view the financial prospect of the year 1848-9, the expenditure and income of which he estimated at the same amount as that of the present year, namely, £35,000,000 worth. Interest on the funded and unfunded debt, and pensions, half-pays, and other items of supply services, and this amount Parliament was pledged to redeem; the remaining £18,000,000 of expenditure might be reduced by Parliament, but not to any considerable extent, and certainly not within the current year. The Government, however, were resolved, that, at the present moment, it would not be expedient to propose any reduction of our naval or military force. The right hon. gentleman took a retrospect of the system of taxation adopted since 1842, and argued that it would have been extremely wrong in the Government to run their heads against that system, and to attempt its reversal. Therefore they had proposed an Income-Tax for five years, and an additional two per cent. for two years, which they still considered the "easiest" way of providing for the deficient revenue. He had been asked to pledge himself that the additional two per cent. should cease at the end of two years, but he thought it exceedingly unwise to make such a promise. It was impossible to foresee what the state of the country would be in two years or a much shorter time. When a gentleman who had just arrived from France (Mr. Cobden) recently stated that there could be no object for a Revolution in that country, it was obvious that the wisest and best might be sometimes misinformed. (Hear, hear, cheering.) The Chancellor of the Exchequer having stated what were the first proposals of the Government, carefully abstained that, from all quarters of the House and of the country, the most unequivocal demonstrations of disapprobation had been manifested towards them. He had it down as a maxim, that the representatives of the people had a peculiar right to dictate to the Government with respect to taxation. The proposals, then, that he was prepared to make were, that the expenditure for the Kaffir war and for the naval excess should be defrayed out of the balances of the Exchequer of the present year, which are remarkably high, and this would leave a deficiency of between one-and-a-half and two millions at the end of the next financial year; it was also proposed to continue the existing Income-Tax for three years only; but, in return for these concessions, it should be understood that Government might come down and propose, at some future time during the session, whatever taxation they might find necessary to restore the balances of the Exchequer.

Mr. Hume warned the House, that, if they allowed the balances of the Exchequer to be reduced, the Government would soon leave the finances in the same state as when they last left office. He gave notice of his intention to move a direct negative to the proposed renewal of the Income-Tax.

Mr. Cardwell called on the Chancellor of the Exchequer to afford time for the consideration of duty and justice of the proposition.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer consented, and said he should not call for the opinion of the House on the new resolutions until Friday.

Mr. Gladstone, Sir H. Verney, Mr. Ashley, and Mr. Francis Baring addressed a few remarks to the House.

Mr. Cobden exressed his false prophecy with respect to a revolution in France, on the ground that he had not been prepared for a change in the Ministry or in the madness of a King. The hon. member hinted a suspicion of covert hostile intentions towards the French people on the part of the Government.

Lord J. Russell preferred to postpone the Budget, when the question was adjourned, as most unfair. With respect to Mr. Cobden's unsuccessful prophecy, Lord J. Russell said: "The hon. member has tried to excite a suspicion that I was not sincere in the declaration I made this evening, and that I would be induced by some coteries and clubs to assume a hostile attitude towards France; but I reiterate my declaration, that it is not the intention of the Government to interfere in any way whatever with the settlements that France may think fit to make with respect to her own Government. We, as her most friendly neighbours, only wish that the institutions France may adopt shall tend to her own prosperity. England did not hesitate to perform those duties of hospitality and friendship which have gained for her the title of asylum of the unfortunate; and those duties I for one will never consent that England shall refuse to perform." (The noble Lord's declaration was loudly cheered.)

Mr. Disraeli said, that, as we lived in an age of revolution, we had, of course, our share of revolutionary Ministers; for, within one week, we had a Prime Minister proposing one Budget, a Chancellor of the Exchequer a second, and an intimation given that, before long, a third would be propounded. We had now a seven years' trial of the new principles of commerce and finance, which were to furnish, not simple millions, but hundreds of millions, and add more wealth to the country than all the wealth we possessed; and yet we were puzzled at the present moment to find [illegible] in order to meet the [illegible] illustrated the exaggerations of the Free-Trade prophets, and drew amusing pictures of the results of all their magnificent hopes.

Mr. Bright, Mr. Bankes, Mr. F. O'Connor, Colonel Sibthorp, Mr. Muntz, Mr. Mackell, Lord Dudley Stuart, Sir R. Inglis, and Mr. Blackstone made a few remarks.

Mr. Hoseman gave notice that he should, on Friday, persist in his amendment for a more equitable assessment of the Income-Tax.

The debate was then adjourned to Friday.

The Joint Stock Companies Bill was read a second time.

Some returns were ordered, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

Transit of the Indian Mail through France.—The Duke of Richmond inquired if the report that the India Mail had been burnt in France was true?

The Marquis of Clanricarde said that the report was false. A letter had been received from M. Arago, stating that the mail had, after a short delay, for which the present Provisional Government of France was not responsible, been forwarded to Marseilles. M. Arago assured the Post-Office authorities here, that every facility would be afforded by the French Government for the transmission of mails.

New Zealand Government Bill.—Earl Grey moved the second reading of this bill.—Lord Stanley did not offer any opposition to the second reading of the bill, though he considered it would have been better if the constitution framed by Lord Grey, and which was found totally inapplicable to the colony, was repealed, instead of being suspended for five years, as proposed by the bill. The noble Lord exposed what he deemed to be deceptions upon which this colony was founded, and the faults that had prevailed with respect to it; and held up to ridicule as incongruous the Constitution invented by Lord Grey for it, and which the noble Earl was obliged to ask the House to suspend, before it was even tried.—After a few remarks from Earl Waldegrave and the Earl of St. Germans, the bill was read a second time.

The Lordships adjourned to Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

Mr. Deering reported, from the Lancashire Election Committee, that Mr. Gregson was not duly elected. On the motion of the Hon. Member, a new writ was ordered to be issued.

Mr. Ewart gave notice of a resolution in favour of direct taxation.

Mr. Bouverie gave notice, for Tuesday week, of his intention to move for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the system of the Ecclesiastical Courts.

The Foreign Despatches.—In reply to a question from Mr. M. Milnes, Lord Palmerston said, I have received from Lord Normanby this morning the copy of a communication made to him by M. Lamartine, the Provisional Minister of Foreign Affairs in Paris, and I believe similar communications have been made to the other Ministers of Foreign Powers in Paris, announcing the fact of the formation of the present French Provisional Government, and declaring that the new form of institutions adopted by the French people would make no alteration in the position of France towards the other powers of Europe; and that the French Government would display the same loyal and sincere desire to maintain amicable relations with all those foreign powers which, like France, determine to respect the independence and the rights of nations. This announcement by Lord Palmerston was received with the warmest approbation.

POOR LAW (IRELAND.)

Colonel Dunne moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the working and efficiency of the Poor-law in Ireland. The hon. and gallant member contended that the Irish Poor-law was a complete failure, and urged the necessity of lessening the area of taxation.

Mr. O'Flaherty seconded the motion.

Mr. Drummond opposed the motion.

Sir George Grey, although he admitted that some defects were found in the Irish Poor-Law, could not consent to the appointment of the Committee. He also thought it would have a most mischievous effect, inducing the belief that the Irish poor could not look to the law for support, but that a grant from Parliament could alone relieve them. The law might require some alteration, after due experience of its operation; but to create the idea that it would immediately be repealed, or greatly modified, while the appointment of a Committee of the House of Commons would do, would be productive of great mischief. The right hon. gentleman intimated that it was the intention of the Government to advise her Majesty to issue a Commission to examine into the operation of this law.

Mr Augustus Stafford pointed out the necessity of protecting the improving landlord from being taxed in answer for the neglect of the non-improving landlord. The hon. member insisted upon the justice of establishing a smaller area of taxation.

Colonel Dunne, Mr. Maxwell, Mr. French, Mr. Hume, Captain Jones, Mr. Fagan, Sir J. Walsh, Mr. S. Crawford, Major Black, Mr. Aglionby, Mr. S. O'Brien, and Mr. Clements, impressed on the Government the advisability of granting the Committee of Inquiry.

The Marquis of Kildare did not think it would be expedient, at the present time, to appoint a Committee of Inquiry; he was, therefore, prepared to oppose the motion.

Sir W. Somerville argued that it would be premature to appoint a Committee of the House of Commons.

Mr. Labouchere likewise spoke in opposition to the motion.

Lord Lincoln considered that the Irish Members had been badly treated by the Government on this occasion; but, notwithstanding that the Irish members generally seemed desirous of this Committee, he was himself obliged to vote against it. The noble Lord recommended the withdrawal of the motion

Sir George Grey explained that the Commission intended to be appointed by the Government would be directed to inquire into the [illegible] and [illegible] to their extent, population, and valuation respectively; but it would not be directed to make this revision on the distinct principle that a general revision of the area of taxation should be made.

Mr. Wakley attacked the Government for their want of deference to the unanimous opinion of the Irish members, and brought some charges against the English Poor-law.

Mr. Charles Buller asked the hon. member if, when all the Irish members would unanimously object to the extension of the Income-Tax to Ireland, he would defer to their unanimous opinion, and agree not to the extension of the tax to Ireland. The hon. member defended the English Poor-law from Mr. Wakley's assertions.

Mr. Grogan and Sir Arthur Brooke supported the motion, and, after a few words from Mr. Walter, the House divided.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For the appointment of the Committee | .. | 101 |
| Against it | .. | 165 |
| Majority against the motion | .. | —64 |

Mr. Newdegate moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the law and custom of different parts of England and Wales, as between landlords and incoming tenants; and also as between landlords and tenants in reference to unexhausted improvements or deterioration of land and premises occupied for agricultural purposes.

After a short discussion the motion was agreed to.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer again postponed the nomination of the two Committees on the Navy, Army, and Ordnance, and the miscellaneous expenditure, to Friday.

Some returns were ordered, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, WEDNESDAY.

The House assembled at noon, and sat till six o'clock.

The County Rates Bill and the Poor Law Removal Bill were read a second time.

British Residents in France.—Lord Palmerston, in reply to a question, stated that the British residents in France had not suffered from the late revolution in France, and that they had not interfered at all in the events that had there taken place.

Lord Palmerston's Foreign Policy.—The adjourned debate on Mr. C. Anstey's motion for papers, as the foundation of an impeachment of the Foreign Secretary, was resumed by Lord Palmerston, whose speech on Wednesday last had been interrupted by the hour for dinner. The Noble Lord continued the defence of his foreign policy. He justified his share in the Treaty of Adrianople, and upheld the treaty of 1840 as a successful settlement of the Syrian question. He denied that Baron Brunnow had attempted, on the part of Russia, to effect an alliance between France and England. He declined to re-open the affairs of Algiers, or to discuss the Spanish marriage question, as improper and dangerous in the present state of foreign matters. He defended his refusal to interfere between Russia and Circassia, and justified the general interference with Portugal as a successful endeavour to quell a desolating civil war. The Noble Lord minutely explained the negotiations for the suppression of the Slave Trade, and maintained the expediency and justice of the policy adopted relative to Texas, Persia, China, &c. He disclaimed having given his sanction to the publication of the diplomatic papers in the Portfolio, and gave the history of the partition of Poland and several commercial treaties. The topics of the noble Lord's speech following the charges preferred by Mr. C. Anstey, were so numerous and disconnected, that it would be impossible even to designate them without far exceeding the usual limits of our Parliamentary report.

The noble Lord, who spoke up to six o'clock (five hours), concluded by again declaring that he was willing to submit all the public and private papers over which he had control to any reasonable inquiry of the House. He was not conscious of being guilty of any of the charges preferred against him. He had devoted all his energies to the service of the State; and the leading principle of his policy was that peace should be preserved while it could be honourably preserved, and that, when it could not be preserved without injuring the interests, the honour, and the dignity of Great Britain.

Six o'clock having arrived, the House stood adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Their Lordships met at five o'clock.

Several petitions were presented.

The New Zealand Bill passed through Committee.

The Consolidated Fund Bill was read a second time, and their Lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

Sir R. Inglis moved for a return of the present state of the New Palace at Westminster, the probable expenditure, &c.; and also to inquire into the condition of Westminster Bridge.

Mr. S. Osborne moved as an amendment an address to her Majesty praying the appointment of Commissioners [illegible] the Houses of Parliament, with a view to making arrangements for the completion of the buildings at the earliest possible period.

A long discussion ensued, which was terminated by the adoption of a suggestion made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that both the original motion and amendment should be withdrawn; the Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests undertaking to appoint a commission to superintend and conduct the expenditure.

The House then adjourned at ten o'clock.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Dockyard Brigade.—The Admiralty have issued orders to the various Dockyards, that the instructions for re-organisation are not to be acted upon until Captain Sullivan has visited all of them and made his report to the Board. Gunners' Mates who are in receipt [illegible] are ordered not to be eligible to the situations of drill sergeants for the Beat Brigade. Mr. Brown, Master Attendant at Portsmouth Dockyard, has solicited permission from the Admiralty to resign the command of the Boat Brigade at that port.

The following arrangement for the change of quarters of several cavalry regiments will take effect in May and June next:—The Royal Dragoons and 2nd Dragoon Guards are to move from Ireland—the former regiment to York, and the latter to Edinburgh; the 1st Dragoon Guards, now at Birmingham, and the 12th Lancers, at Hounslow, are to proceed to Ireland; the 3rd Dragoon Guards, now at Edinburgh, will move to Nottingham; the 4th Dragoon Guards, now at Nottingham, will go to Canterbury; the 5th Dragoon Guards, now at York, will move to Birmingham; and the 11th Hussars, now at Coventry, will go to Hounslow. The 16th Lancers, which returned to England a few months after its distinguished gallantry at Aliwal and Sobraon, will remain at Brighton, its present station.

Fugitives from the Continent.—The following passengers were amongst the recent arrivals from the Continent:—Mr. Goddard and family; Major-General Auchmuty, Mr. and Mrs. Paris; Mr. Winkner; Mr. Ford and servant, Mr. Muggins and servant; the Earl of Essex, Mr. and Mrs. Argoyne, Mr. Knowles and servant; Mr. Mason, Mr. Lambert; Mr. W. Hunter and servant; Mr. Batworth; Mr. Vaughan; Mr. and Mrs. Mackey; Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert and family; Mr. Wilson and servant; Mr. and Mrs. Ganns; Mr. and Mrs. Cohen and servant; Mr. and Mrs. Morgan and servant, Mr. and Mrs. Barset and family. Mr. Roberts; General Sir Alexander Grant; Mr. Haviland; Mr. Wilcox, Iron, Belgian Legation; Lieutenant Rooke; Mr. Doncaster; Monsieur Lebis; Baron Boat; Lieutenant Frederick Pearce Leigh and Mrs. Leigh and family; General Gower; Mr. and Mrs. Dalis and family; Mr. and Mrs. Walker; Mr. Betts and servant; Mr. and Mrs. Lay and servant; Mr. Holt; Mr. and Mrs. Morgan; Mr. and Mrs. Sargent; Augustus Devette; Mr. Moore; Mr. Kenner; Mr. Boer, Mr. and Mrs. Valentine and servant; Mons. Barrier; Mr. Payne; Mr. Sibley; Mr. and Mrs. Drury; Marquis du Chastlier and servant; Le Sr. Domis; Mr. Blake; Mons. Van Crombrugge; Mr. Frost; Mr. King; Mr. Glucuser; Mr. Torrens; his Excellency the Marquis de Labon; his Excellency Mons. Parredo, Mr. Lambert; Mr. Ashwell; Mr. and Mrs. Shelgrove; Mr. Budd; Mr. and Mrs. Watson.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Poor-law Commissioners of Ireland have awarded the sum of £300 to the widow of the late Captain Hellard, R.N., who fell a victim to fever induced by his great exertions in the office of Poor-law Inspector, and they have also recommended Mrs. Hellard to the Admiralty for the best pension given to a Captain's widow.

Telegraphic despatches were received at Portsmouth on Saturday morning, inquiring whether there were four steamers ready for sea. The Sybil steamer, Lord Ivanhoe's yacht, was ordered to be ready for sea on Sunday.

At a meeting held at Edinburgh on Thursday (last week) a petition was agreed upon, praying Parliament not to pass the Ministerial bill for establishing diplomatic relations with Rome.

The late Dr. William Crotch, Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, has left personal and funded property estimated at £18,000.

The late Rev. William Bagshaw, M.A., of Bonnercross, Sheffield, who died recently, has bequeathed to the Governors of the General Infirmary, £100, to the Governors of the Sheffield Dispensary, £100, the Trustees of the Blue Coat Charity School, the Trustees of the Girls' Charity School, and the Trustees of the National School, all in Sheffield, the sum of £50 each.

On Wednesday morning (last week) a landslip of part of the embankment near the east end of the Falkirk tunnel, on the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, took place, by which both lines of rails were covered with earth. No personal injury was sustained, notwithstanding that a goods' cattle train came in contact with the obstacle so created.

At Brandra Abbeleix, lately, a man named Toole laid his gun upon a table, when a small dog knocked it down, and it went off, killing a fine child of his, aged four years.

A finer and more prolific lambing season than the present has seldom been known in Hampshire, flocks of 700 ewes having done 900 to 1000 lambs; some of 500 ditto more than 600 lambs. Many large grazers have escaped lost an ewe.

Mr. James Shirreff is appointed Attorney-General of Antigua, in the room of Mr. Hamilton, appointed Chief Justice of that Island. Mr. Lum. Hall is appointed Attorney-General, W. T. Des Barrs Solicitor-General, and Mr. Joseph Howe, Provincial Secretary at Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The Earl of Fife has caused the soup kitchen he established some years ago at Banff to be put in full operation; and for several weeks about 150 poor families, belonging to Macduff and Banff, have been tally supplied with soup and bread, at Lord Fife's expense.

The festival of the Royal Asylum of the St. Ann's Society, on Thursday last, under the patronage of the Duke of Cambridge, was honoured by the presence of the Conde de Montemolin.

Captain Maurice Dennom, R.N., has left town for Leith and Greenock, on a Government investigation into recent accidents which have occurred to steam-vessels in that locality.

The number of persons confined in England and Scotland on the 6th of last December for offences against the Stamp and Tax Acts was as follows, viz. four in England and two in Scotland. There are not any prisoners in Ireland for offences of this description.

Large bodies of whale have recently been seen sporting at short distance off the northern shores of Scotland. Since September, scarcely a day has elapsed without more or fewer being observed; but during the last week their numbers appear to have greatly increased. On Friday and Saturday they were seen at a little distance off the north head of Wick.

The rumour that Comte d'Orsay had quitted England with Prince Louis Bonaparte is not true.

In consequence of the large importations of silk piece goods from the eastern portion of the globe, the East and West India Dock Company have obtained the abolition of the duties at the revenue at their warehouses, in Billiter-street, before and after the legal and usual hours of business, in order to prepare them for sale early in the ensuing month.

A presentment submitted by Government to the Grand Jury at Kilkenny, Ireland, for repayment in instalments of expenditure under the Labour Rate Act, amounting to £233,965, has been refused, on the ground that the Government had not fulfilled all the necessary conditions.

On Thursday, four sailors were drowned in the Shannon, by the upsetting of a boat, while the hands on board were nearly all in a state of intoxication.

Barnard's car, from Tullamore, Ireland, to the railway, was upset, on Tuesday (last week), near Geashill, by a drunken driver, when an elderly lady passenger was nearly drowned in a deep drain. One of the horses was killed.

A man was found lying dead on the rails of the Cashel Railway, on Monday night, apparently killed by an engine. He had recently been in a lunatic asylum.

A shark was, last week, killed on the beach at Dunnibuch, Berwickshire, Scotland. When dead, it was found to measure about twelve feet in length, and a large quantity of oil was obtained from its liver.

The Charivari says:—"The people did not find the wine in the vaults of the Tuileries at all to their taste. It is true that there is no time allowed for tasting."

A rumour prevails that it is in contemplation to double the rates of postage. The penny rate is to be raised, it is said, to twopence.

Her Majesty has appointed the Rev. William Abiah Newman, Master of Arts, to be Chaplain for Cape Town, in the settlement of the Cape of Good Hope.

Every Union in Galway, with the exception of Ballinasloe, is now administered by paid guardians.

We regret to hear that Mr. Ormsby Gore, M.P., has been obliged, on account of ill health, to apply for leave of absence from the House of Commons until Easter.

The success of Fanny Cerito in Paris has been followed by a still greater triumph in Northern Italy. Despite political agitation, Le Venier, in Venice, has been nightly crowded to witness "La Vivandiere a Gli Postiglione."

The Duke of Cambridge has been pleased to appoint the Rev. Edward Bannerman to be one of his Royal Highness's chaplains.

The new dance which Cerito has produced during her Italian sojourn is entitled "La Stellamia," a sort of Tarantella, which produced so much enthusiasm on a late occasion as to be prohibited by the police.

Her Majesty held a Privy Council on Thursday afternoon at three o'clock, at Buckingham Palace.

Orders in Council appeared in Tuesday night's Gazette, authorising the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to sell certain property formerly belonging to the Archdeaconry of Hereford, and certain other property formerly belonging to the Chapter of the Cathedral [illegible]

Plymouth has this week been visited with an unusually severe storm, by which very considerable damage was done to the breakwater in the Sound.

A marine, named Pepper, belonging to the Caledonia, 120, in Hamoaze, fell into the after-hold of that ship on Saturday evening, and was killed on the spot.

In consequence of the present unsettled state of affairs on the Continent, the Sphynx, steam vessel, at Woolwich, is ordered to be prepared for sea immediately, and to proceed to Portsmouth.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Edmund Murray Dodd, Esq., to be a Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of the province of Nova Scotia.

It is noticed by a French paper as a remarkable fact, that the revolution in France, now so highly consummated, was achieved on the same days of the week as the glorious triumph of July, 1830.

At Portsmouth, the Port Admiral has received orders to act as he judges best in despatching to the French coast, at any hour, any of the steam vessels now in readiness for special service.

A deputation from a meeting of Irish members, to request a revision of the area of the Poor-law Unions and electoral divisions in Ireland, had an interview with Sir George Grey on Tuesday, at the Home-office.

Belvoir Castle, the seat of the Duke of Rutland, in Leicestershire, has just been the scene of great festivity on the occasion of the marriage of Lady Adeliza Manners, youngest daughter of the noble Duke, and the Hon. Captain Agar, son of the late Mr. and Lady Elizabeth Norman.

The price of meat, vegetables, and other articles of subsistence in Paris, during and after the late revolutionary proceedings, underwent no increase. Families were supplied with butcher's meat at the same rate as they had been throughout the season.

The annual public suppers at Christ's Hospital will commence on Sunday next, and terminate on Easter-day, occupying a period, as usual, eight Sundays.

A curious but unmistakable proof of the hatred with which all Germans are regarded in Lombardy was given at the theatre La Scala in Milan recently. On the appearance of the previously great favourite [illegible] on the stage, the entire audience rose and quitted the theatre.

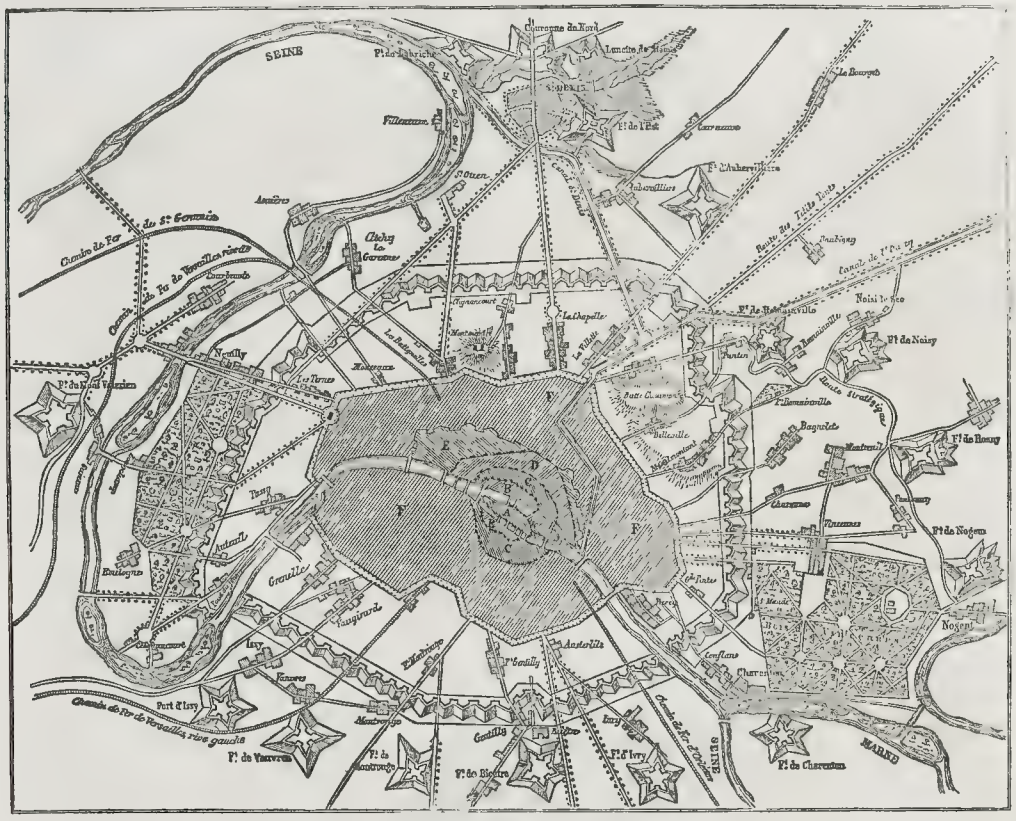
The trial of Thomas Peyton, Esq., coroner, and Mr. George Church, for the manslaughter of Robert Waldron, Esq., of Portsmouth, in the county of Roscommon, was brought to a close on Saturday last, when the jury declared it to be his opinion that the coroner was justified by law in [illegible] and that [illegible] acquitted the prisoners.

The Secretary-General of the Austrian Legation at Pesaro has been assassinated.

A heavy decline is visible in the German funds.

The news of the French Revolution has caused the greatest enthusiasm at Nice and other towns of northern Italy.

On Tuesday evening the Grand Jury, at the Central Criminal Court, returned as "true," a bill of indictment preferred against Anne Meyers, for the recent murder of the soldier in St. James's Park.



SEINE
Couronne du Nord
Lunette de Stains
Pt de la Briche
Pt de l'Est
Aubervilliers
Pantin
Noisi le Sec
Pt de Romainville
Pt de Noisy
Romainville
Bagnolet
Pt de Rosny
Montreuil
Vincennes
Pt de Nogent
Nogent
Pt de Charenton
MARNE
Pt de Vanves
Pt de Montrouge
Pt de Bicêtre
Pt d'Ivry
Ivry
Gentilly
Arcueil
Montrouge
Vaugirard
Grenelle
Boulogne
Neuilly
Pt de Neuilly
Pt de Puteaux
Courbevoie
Asnières
Clichy
Pt de Clichy
Pt de Pont
Pt de Passy
Pt de Grenelle
Pt de Billancourt
Pt de Sèvres
Pt de Point du Jour
Pt de Passy
Pt de Auteuil
Pt de la Conférence
Pt de la Gare
Pt de Bercy
Pt de Charenton
Pt de Conflans
Pt de Charonne
Pt de Ménilmontant
Pt de la Villette
Pt de la Chapelle
Pt de Clignancourt
Pt de la Révolte
Pt de Courcelles
Pt de Monceaux
Pt de Maillot
Pt de Passy
Pt de Auteuil
Pt de Boulogne
Pt de Billancourt
Pt de Sèvres
Pt de Point du Jour
Pt de Grenelle
Pt de Vaugirard
Pt de Montrouge
Pt de Gentilly
Pt de Bicêtre
Pt d'Ivry
Pt de Charenton
Pt de Conflans
Pt de Charonne
Pt de Vincennes
Pt de Nogent
Pt de Rosny
Pt de Noisy
Pt de Romainville
Pt de Pantin
Pt de Aubervilliers
Pt de l'Est
Pt de la Briche
Pt de Courbevoie
Pt de Puteaux
Pt de Neuilly
Pt de Clichy
Pt de Asnières
Pt de Gennevilliers
Pt de Colombes
Pt de Bezons
Pt de Argenteuil
Pt de Nanterre
Pt de Rueil
Pt de Suresnes
Pt de Boulogne
Pt de Auteuil
Pt de Passy
Pt de Point du Jour
Pt de Billancourt
Pt de Sèvres

MARIE-AMELIE, EX-QUEEN OF THE FRENCH.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 5.—Quinquagesima Sunday  Shrove Sunday.  Full Moon at 1h 17m afternoon
MONDAY, 6.—The Sun rises at 6h. 37m., and sets at 5h. 42m
TUESDAY, 7.  Shrove Tuesday.  Perpetua
WEDNESDAY, 8.—Ash Wednesday.  Lent begins.  Old St. Matthias
THURSDAY, 9.—The day is 11h. 22m. in length, and it has increased 1h. 37m. since the first of the FRIDAY, 10.—Day breaks at 4h. 34m., and twilight ends at 7h. 48m
SATURDAY, 11.  Mars and the Moon are near each other
During this week, the planet Mercury is still in a favourable position for observation, and rises

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE, FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 11

| Sunday | Monday | Tuesday | Wednesday | Thursday | Friday | Saturday |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| h. m. | h. m. | h. m. | h. m. | h. m. | h. m. | h. m. |
| 1 50 | 2 01 | 2 20 | 2 50 | 3 15 | 3 39 | 4 04 |
| 2 15 | 2 45 | 3 05 | 3 35 | 4 00 | 4 25 | 4 50 |

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"M. R."  The Portrait has not appeared in our Journal.  The original is not in the Illustrated Museum.
"C. G."  Tunbridge Wells.  The only Index for the present Volume has already been
"  "  Leicester.  Declined
"L. B. D."  See the present No
"A Correspondent."  We cannot spare room for the lines on the Tennyson controversy.
"W. L."  Dublin.—See "Advice to Correspondents"
"E. P."  Address the editor, Dublin.
"W. S. A."  The Post will unquestionably be always the most convenient.
"B. Jones."  The "Mechanics' Magazine," and the "Patent Journal," 3d. each.
"  "  Edinburgh.—See any large collection of French songs.
"M. M."  Declined.
"Sophia."  We regret that we cannot recommend you
"C. T."  is thanked, but we have already illustrated the ceremony of the Judges entering London.  The Archæological subject is, we obligingly remarked, shall appear next week.
"A Lover at Blackheath"  is informed that we cannot interfere in wagers.
"L. L."  The calendars are alleged.
"Ellen"  is thanked for the hint
"J. D. L."  Lochee.  "Greenes on the Gun."
"A New Subscriber."  —Apply to the Secretary to a Lodge.
"J. H."  Dundee, should address his inquiry to Maddox and Co., Leadenhall-street.
"  "  Subscribing Connoisseur."—The impressions may, possibly, be delivered in better condition.
"No ambok."  We have not been favoured with the Sketches by Lieut Rooke
"H. J. D."  is thanked for the Sketch, which has been unavoidably deferred till next week.
"M. E."  Newport.  We cannot spare room.
"N. M. D."  Aberdeen.  Mackenzie's "Australia," published by Orr and Co., is a most valuable work book.
"N. B."  Dundee.  See any large collection of French songs
"J. S."  Boston.—It is not very likely that you will obtain the single number of the "Philosophical Transactions;" but a note addressed to the Publisher's Circular, stating your wish, may be serviceable.  We do not know Mr. Hogg's work.
"E. V. Z."  has not clearly stated the question.
"An Old Subscriber," Limerick.—We fear that we cannot bring the Picture suggested to our Illustrations of the Exhibition
"W. S. M."  Wye, is thanked for the correction explaining that the Crest of the Archbishop of Canterbury should be a combination of the Mitre and Ducal Coronet, instead of the pall.  Mitre, as engraved in our Journal of last week
"F. M."  is recommended to consult Neale's "Feasts and Fasts," and "Whenley on the Common Prayer Book."
"A Subscriber"  may obtain the Views.
"A  Lover of the Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden-street, Hanover-square"
"J. P. W."  Frome.  The Weekly is only 1½d.  See the No
"C."  Manchester.  "M. D." "Augustus," Bristol.  "M. A. C. S." "Chatham.—We are not in possession of the information requisite for replying to your questions.
"J. M. P."  Sheffield.—The present Governor of Jamaica is Sir C. E. Grey, Bart; of Dominica, James Macaulay Higginson.
"N. A."  Kent-road.—Apply to Mr. Brayshaw, Foundling Hospital.

ERRATUM.  The New Colonial Seals, engraved in our Number of last week, are not by Mr. Wyon, as we stated, but by Mr. Benjamin Wyon, Chief Engraver of her Majesty's Seals.

We have to return thanks to several Correspondents, and the Fashions for March, are unavoidably deferred till next week.

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.—Next week we shall continue our Illustrations of this Great Event, from Sketches received from our Artists in Paris, too late for the present Number.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE LIFE OF LOUIS PHILIPPE.

In various Numbers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will be found Engravings of several very interesting scenes and incidents in the Life of Louis Philippe

No. 71 (Vol. 3) contains twenty-six Marine and Land Illustrations of the Visit of Queen Victoria to Louis Philippe, at Château d'Eu

No. 72 (Vol. 3) contains an Engraving of the superb Service Casket presented by Louis Philippe to Queen Victoria.

No. 88 (Vol. 4) contains the presentation of the Corps Diplomatique to the King, on Jan. 1, 1844.

Nos. 128, 129, and 130 (Vol. 5) commemorate the King's Visit to Queen Victoria, at Windsor Castle, in no fewer than thirty-five large Engravings of splendid Magnificence, State Ceremonies, Excursions, &c.

No. 171 (Vol. 7) contains a characteristic Medallion Portrait of Louis Philippe

No. 208 (Vol. 8) contains two Illustrations of the Attempt on the Life of Louis Philippe, in April, 1846, at Fontainbleau, with two Views of the Palace.

No. 210 (Vol. 8) contains the Reception of the National Guard by the King, May 1, 1846.  Also four other Illustrations of the Royal Birth day Fêtes.

No. 223 (Vol. 9) contains an Engraving of the Attempt on the Life of the King, in July, 1846.

THE SPLENDID VIEW OF PARIS

GIVEN TO SUBSCRIBERS OF THE

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,

Being the finest View of this interesting City ever published, may be obtained by Subscribing for One Year, commencing with the First Number in the year 1848.  Subscriptions received by W. LITTLE, 198, Strand, and all Newsmen throughout the kingdom.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1848.

Our observations last week on the Budget of the Whigs have been confirmed in the course of the present week by the Chancellor of the Exchequer.  On Monday, the right hon. gentleman announced not only that he was ready to give up the increased Income-Tax, without proposing any substitute, but that the statements made by his noble friend in introducing the Budget required correction and explanation.  In truth, the right hon. gentleman was so little satisfied with the Premier's speech, that he once before volunteered explanations, and convinced the world, whatever respect it might have entertained for Lord John Russell, that, in the opinion of Sir Charles Wood, the noble Lord was, like other Whigs when dealing with finance, a sorry blunderer.  The prosaic reading of the Chancellor's corrections of the First Lord of the Treasury was rather an unfavourable one.  It was remarked of Lord John's speech at the time it was made, that it was for him, who is in general very clear in his statements, singularly confused, and that he had so jumbled together the facts of balance sheets, and the hypothetical estimates of his right hon. friend, that he could not pick out of them any clear results.  For example, his mode of estimating the probable revenue of the financial year 1848 was to take such a mixture of the facts of the balance-sheet and the conjectures of his right hon. friend, from which Lord John made it out that the revenue for the year would be only £702,940 less than was expected.  But on Monday night the Chancellor sorrowfully informed the House that the revenue for the six weeks which have elapsed of this quarter was £540,000 less than in the corresponding six weeks of last year.  That would make, should the same proportion prevail throughout, a defalcation of £3,200,000 in the year, instead of £702,940.

It is, unfortunately, quite evident that Lord John Russell overestimated our resources, though, perhaps, not to the extent shown by this comparison.  The Chancellor of the Exchequer has admitted the fact; and, as he has been compelled to give up the proposed increase of the Income-tax, nothing remains for the Ministers but to set diligently about reducing expenditure.  There are some taxes, too, which the Chancellor probably means to reduce.  He will attempt, perhaps, to buy popularity, as the story runs, by reducing the stamp duty on newspapers and on advertisements.  In the end, he might lose no revenue by a judicious reduction of these duties; but in the meantime, and with a falling revenue, he can only abate taxation and avoid incurring debt by abating expenditure.  He has now an excellent opportunity.  The revolution in France, even if it do not increase the friendly relations between the two countries, will, for some time, so embarrass France as to guarantee England against an attack.  We can have no fear, as Mr. Cobden said, of being attacked by a nation which requires all her attention to her home affairs.  Thus, reduction in the army and navy is immediately practicable, and retrenchment generally must be had recourse to, in preference to increased taxation, to make the balance between revenue and expenditure equal.  From what we see and hear of the Whigs, we are sensible they feel themselves so powerless—they have exhibited so much weakness—they are so conscious of ignorance and error, that a very little exertion on the part of the public will make them give up all the increase they propose in the estimates, and set heartily about reducing all the expenses of the State.

There is a universal demand for the reduction or abolition of taxes.  One party requires the Window-Tax to be taken off; another demands the reduction of the Tea Duties; a third asks for the abolition of several Excise Duties; and none of them can be gratified,—for it would be impracticable to lessen any additional burdens on the other class to please this one,—except by the reduction of expenditure.  In reduction, therefore, we have all now a common interest, and we have but to speak out to make the Ministry comply with our wishes.

THE principles which guide the proceedings of the Legislature are, in many instances, perfectly incomprehensible; so much so, indeed, that the phrase, at times facetiously applied to Parliament, "the collective wisdom of the nation," has become the bitterest satire that can be expressed in so short a compass on that body. Among the numerous instances of the self-stultification of "the House" which have presented themselves recently, one of the latest is the course taken on Tuesday, in the case of the Irish Poor-Law. An hon. member moved for a Committee of Inquiry into the operation of that law; and in the course of his observations proved, pretty satisfactorily to every unprejudiced mind possessed of the smallest modicum of common sense, that its immediate revision and amendment were absolutely necessary to prevent a large and aggravated augmentation of the social evils which afflict the unhappy sister country.

One after another the representatives of Ireland, of every shade and hue of politics, rose up and expressed their unanimous conviction, that unless the committee were granted, as the first step towards the amelioration of the present system of (misnomered) Poor-Relief, the most lamentable results might be apprehended.

It was stated on all hands that thousands of the poor were starving, while the provisions of the Poor-Law were in effect a dead letter, and that the guardians in a majority of unions had, from some unexplained cause, refused to act, and having been suspended, were replaced by paid guardians, who gave no satisfaction to either payers or paupers by the slipshod manner of discharging the duties which they had undertaken and were paid to perform. The enormous extent of many of the unions, measuring from 40 to 60 miles English, was pointed out as a great hardship to the poor, who were thus often obliged to travel 30 miles before they could obtain relief; and the great abuse of new rates being struck before the old ones had been collected, was, with numerous other defects in the working of the system, dwelt on by all the gentlemen from Ireland in the House, with but one solitary exception; and supported by several of the English members, they strongly urged Ministers to forego their opposition to the appointment of the committee; but all in vain. Sir G. Grey, aided by the Secretary for Ireland, Sir W. Somerville, strenuously opposed the concession of the investigation; not, indeed, on the ground that the alleged evils did not exist,—they admitted they did, to the fullest extent, but that they had not existed long enough to justify inquiry or amendment. They declared, indeed, that they would issue a commission on the subject. But that is the old device for shelving a question; and the majority of the House of Commons, on a division, sealed the absurd resolve of Ministers.

We trust that the several constituencies of Ireland will not suffer their representatives to submit to such quackery. The social condition of that country has too long been neglected and postponed on such frivolous pretences. The present is not the time for persistance in a course so fraught with folly and wickedness.

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the past week has been distinguished by almost constant squalls of rain, hail, and wind, as well as by the circumstance of an unusually low barometer reading continuing for several days. The following are some particulars of each day:—

Thursday, the sky was overcast throughout the day, rain falling at intervals, and there were several violent squalls of wind and rain in the evening; the direction of the wind was S.S.W., and at times blowing strongly; the reading of the barometer was low all day, and the average temperature of the air for the day was 49°. Friday, the sky was generally overcast till the evening; a few stars were then visible; the weather was squally, and at times tempestuous; the wind was S.W. and S.S.W.; the average temperature for the day was 49°. Saturday, the sky was overcast, with a few exceptions; there were frequent violent squalls of wind and rain; at 10h. A.M. the very low reading of the barometer of 28.46 inches took place at the height of 40 feet above the sea; the direction of the wind was S., and at times W.S.W.; the average temperature for the day was 47°. Sunday, there was a gale of wind from the S.W.; there were frequent squalls of rain and wind, and occasionally of hail, rain, and wind; the average temperature for the day was 47½°. Monday, the sky was for the most part half-covered by cloud, but at times it was overcast, and at other times clear; there were squalls of wind, and each was accompanied by rain or by hail; the average temperature for the day was 47½°. Tuesday, the sky was cloudless during a part of the morning, and covered by cloud afterwards, rain falling; the wind strong from the S.W.; and the weather was tempestuous; the average temperature for the day was 42½°. Wednesday, March 1, the sky was overcast, and there were frequent squalls of rain and wind; the direction of the wind was S.W.; and the average temperature for the day was 49½°, and that for the week ending this day was 46½°. The reading of the barometer during the whole week has been very low.

The following are the extreme of enumerethical readings for each day:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Thursday, | [illegible] | 54 | 44 day |
| Friday, | 29.26 | 54 | 44 |
| Saturday, | 29.46 | 50 | 44 |
| Sunday, | 29.47 | 54 | 42 |
| Monday, | 29.28 | 54 | 42 |
| Tuesday, | 29.28 | 48 | 37½ |
| Wednesday, March 1, | | 50 | 38 |

FOR THE MONTH OF FEBRUARY,

The mean temperature of the air was 43½°.
The temperature of the dew point was 39½.
The mean weight of water mixed with a cubic foot of air was 3 grains.
The mean degree of humidity, that of complete saturation being represented by 1000, was 85.
The mean amount of cloud, that of the whole sky being represented by 10, was 8.
The quantity of rain fallen was 2¼ inches.
Blackheath Thursday, March 2nd, 1848.

LATEST NEWS FROM PARIS.

The Paris papers of Thursday contain various decrees and ordinances of the Provisional Government, and of the newly-appointed functionaries, which were, generally speaking, regarded with favour.

Paris was perfectly tranquil.  A monster meeting of the trades, to deliberate on the interests of the working classes, was to take place at twelve o'clock, at the Champ de Mars.  A numerous and imposing procession to the grave of the much regretted Armand Carrel left the Hôtel de Ville before eleven o'clock.

Among the decrees of the Provisional Government, three or four are of great interest.  One changes the word "regiment" into demi-brigade.

Another decree appoints M. Armand Barbes, Colonel of the 12th Legion of Paris National Guard, vice M. Lavocat.

In the departments the enthusiasm for the Republic is extreme.  Up to the present moment, the most perfect unanimity prevails.  The Government is, however, in a difficulty about the mode of conducting the elections.

The Moniteur publishes a decree of the Provisional Government realising public functionaries from all oaths of allegiance to the Republic.

M. Armand Marrast, a member of the Provisional Government, had been appointed national administrator of the property belonging to the Crown and the Civil List.

The Provisional Government continued to receive deputations from all the towns adjoining Paris.

M. Cormenin, the new President of the Council of State, presented the adhesion of that body to the Provisional Government on Wednesday.  The Academy of Medicine, the Literary Association, the Syndicate of the Stockbrokers, the Tribunal of Commerce, the Democratic Committee, &c., had offered their co-operation to the Government.

Marshal Gerard, Generals Dalton, Bedeau, Monthion, Bachelu, Pelet, Paj, Brossard, Girod de l'Ain, de Rigny, &c., had recognised the Republic.

Order and tranquility continued to prevail throughout France, the Republic being every where proclaimed without resistance, even in Brittany and La Vendée.

The public works had been resumed in Paris with great activity 200 workmen were employed at Notre Dame, and orders to complete, with all possible rapidity, the church on the Place Belle Chasse, had been given by the Mayor of Paris.  The most energetic measures had been adopted to repair the railroads, and maintain the traffic.  40 pupils of the Polytechnic school and of St. Cyr had been stationed along the Orleans line for the protection of the road.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Saturday, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen Viscount Palmerston had an audience of her Majesty at Buckingham Palace. The royal dinner party included her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Saxe Coburg, Count Arthur Mensdorff, the Marquis of Douro, Lord and Lady John Russell, Lady Lyttelton, Madame Bunsen, the Baroness de Wangenheim, the baroness de Speth, Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps, and Baron Fritsch.  In the course of the day their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, took walking and pony exercise.  Her Royal Highness the Princess Helena was taking an airing

On Sunday, Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household attended Divine service in the private chapel in Buckingham Palace.  The Hon. and Rev. C. L. Courtenay presided.

On Monday, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, accompanied by his Royal Highness the Duke of Saxe Coburg, attended by his Equerry in Waiting, Colonel Seymour.  Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, took their usual airings.  Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent dined with her Majesty and Prince Albert.  Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess Ernest of Saxe Coburg, and their three infant children, have been received at Buckingham Palace by her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and are, for the present, residing there.  The infant daughter of the Duke de Nemours is likewise, for the present, receiving her Majesty's hospitality.

On Tuesday her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen and Prince Albert at Buckingham Palace.  Lord John Russell had an audience of her Majesty yesterday.  The Earl of Powis had an audience of the Queen, and delivered to her Majesty the Riband and Badge of the most noble Order of the Garter, worn by his father the late Earl of Powis.  The Honourable John Stuart had an audience of the Queen, and delivered to her Majesty the ensigns of the most ancient Order of the Thistle, worn by his father, the late Earl of Moray.  Her Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, attended by his Equerry-in-Waiting, Colonel Seymour.  Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, took walking and pony exercise, in the Royal gardens of Buckingham Palace.  Her Royal Highness the Princess Helena was taken an airing  Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent dined with her Majesty and Prince Albert in the evening at the Palace.

On Wednesday afternoon his Royal Highness Prince Albert held a Levee by desire of the Queen, at two o'clock, in St. James's Palace, on behalf of her Majesty.  His Royal Highness arrived from Buckingham Palace, accompanied by his Royal Highness the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, and was received by the Lord Steward and the Lord Chamberlain.  The Prince was attended by the Marquis of Abercorn, Groom of the Stole; Mr. George Edward Anson, Treasurer; Viscount Clifden, Lord in Waiting; Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps, Private Secretary; and Colonel Seymour, Equerry in Waiting.  His Serene Highness Prince Frederick of Hesse was present at the Levee, attended by Major Stephens.  It being a Collar Day, the principal Knights of the several orders of Knighthood were their respective collars.  The foreign diplomatic circle were introduced, when the following presentations to his Royal Highness took place.—Baron Isola, Secretary to the Sardinian Legation, by Count Adrian de Revel, the Sardinian Chargé d'Affaires.  M. Jacques Prendergast, Attaché à la Legation de sa Majesté Catholique, by the Chevalier de Tacon, Spanish Chargé d'Affaires.

DEATH OF THE DUCHESS DOWAGER OF SAXE GOTHA AND ALTENBURG.—The Court has been thrown into the deepest mourning by the accounts received on Monday by special messenger, Baron Brudenstein, of the sudden demise of the Duchess Dowager of Saxe Gotha and Altenburg, the maternal grandmother of his Royal Highness Prince Albert.  Her Royal Highness was sister of the late Elector of Hesse, and grandchild of the sister of George II.  She died at Gotha on the 23d instant, in her 77th year, lamented and revered by all who knew her. The life of this estimable lady was devoted to acts of charity, and she has died leaving the whole of her property to the poor of the town of Gotha.

THE INCOME-TAX.

NOTWITHSTANDING the withdrawal by the Government of the proposed addition to this odious tax, the agitation whilst the announcement of the proposition had created has not subsided, but, on the contrary, increased, and with a different object, namely—the abolition of the tax altogether.  On Wednesday evening a crowded meeting of the inhabitants of the city of Westminster was held, at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, when the following resolutions were agreed to:—"That, unless the Government forthwith abolished the Income-Tax, they would not possess the confidence of the country, and ought not to possess the confidence of the House of Commons."  "That the meeting considers that the Government was solemnly pledged to the remission of the Income-Tax at the expiration of three years, or, at the most, of five years, from the period of its imposition; that the time has arrived when the people will no longer submit to the continuance of such an oppressive and unequal measure; and, that this meeting, therefore, calls for the entire removal of this tax, and if, after a careful inquiry into the state of public affairs, means should be found wanting of increasing the revenue, beyond the enormous amount which a wise and judicious system of reduction in the various departments of the national expenditure will yield, that the deficiency may be supplied by the substitution of probate duties on landed property, and such other description of taxation only as will be least injurious to the industry of the country, and guard against the extreme injustice of estimating the precarious and transitory income of the professional man and tradesman at the same value as permanent income, derived from real estate and other accumulated property."  At the platform were Dr. Lacy Evans, M.D., W. B. Osborne, M.P., Mr. Lushington, M.P., Mr. Cochrane, Mr. G. Thompson, M.P., &c., each of whom addressed the meeting in support of the various resolutions; a petition embodying which is to be presented to the Legislature.—A meeting was held on Wednesday of the inhabitants of the Ward of Farringdon Within, to petition Parliament against the renewal of the Income Tax.  Mr. Alderman Kelly in the Chair.  The Meeting was addressed by Mr Duncty Eagleton, Mr. Russell, Mr. Blake, Mr. Young, and other gentlemen, and resolutions and a petition were unanimously adopted in condemnation of the Income Tax.—Accounts of Meetings in all parts of the country to petition against the tax have reached us.

The Government having on Monday evening signified their intention of not pressing the proposed increase of the Income-Tax, it is unnecessary to give a detailed account of the various meetings which took place on that day in the metropolis, to pass resolutions and to petition the Legislature against the adoption of it.

THE living of Athy, vacant by the death of the death of the Dean of Elphin, has been presented, by the Archbishop of Dublin, to the Rev. Mr. French, curate thereof.  The Rev. David Reid, late curate, has succeeded his father to the living of Clondalkin, by permission of the Archbishop  His Grace has also presented the living of Donoughmore, in the county of Wicklow, to the Rev. Mr. Fitzgerald, late curate of Clontarf.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

PHILANTHROPIC SOCIETY.—On Saturday, the 69th anniversary of this excellent Institution was celebrated by a public dinner at the London Tavern. The chair was taken by Viscount Morpeth, M.P., supported by Lord Kinnaird, and Mr. R. Monckton Milnes, M.P.; the Sheriffs, Cubitt and Hill, &c. Among the company, numbering about 130, were Colonel Colquhoun, Mr. C. Cochrane, Mr. C. Pearson, M.P., Mr. S. Roth, Dr. Hill (of Warwickshire), Captain Maconochie, and several other gentlemen distinguished by their exertions in the cause of Reformation of Juvenile Offenders. For this benevolent and enlightened object, the Philanthropic Society have resolved on forming a "Model Farm-school of Industry," at some distance from London; there it is proposed to give the children whom they shelter, not only moral and religious instruction, but training in gardening and field labour, besides teaching them tailoring, shoemaking, &c., &c., as in the establishments of St. George's Fields, &c. As soon as £3000 be raised; and this important object gave additional interest to the festival of Saturday last. The cloth being withdrawn, the noble chairman, Lord Morpeth, proposed the customary loyal toasts, which were duly honoured.—Lord Morpeth, in proposing the toast of the evening, "The Philanthropic Institution," quoted several statistical proofs of the immense benefit which it had conferred upon the community. His lordship also dwelt upon the soundness of the principle sought to be extended by the Institution in their proposed Model Farm School; the noble Lord adding his testimony of the approbation of the Home Secretary Sir Gardiner Grey, to which he already placed under the society's care 25 boys from Parkhurst prison. Mr. R. M. Milnes, M.P., when proposed, in an eloquent speech, the health of the Noble Chairman, which was drank with great enthusiasm; and after a variety of other toasts, including the healths of the Rev. Sydney Turner, the Indefatigable Chaplain and Secretary, had been given, the party broke up. We are happy to add that the subscriptions during the evening exceeded £2000. The dinner and wines were excellent

MERCHANT SEAMEN'S ORPHAN ASYLUM.—On Monday, a general meeting of the donors and subscribers to this charity was held in the London Tavern, Capt. Nelson in the chair. The report stated that there were eighty-five children in the asylum. That the late Thomas Ward, Esq., bequeathed £500; that their receipts figured £9844; and that the expenditure left a balance of £537. 7. 4. report was adopted; and four girls and four boys were, by election, placed upon the books of the institution.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF DISTRESSED FOREIGNERS IN LONDON.—The annual meeting of this Society was held on Thursday, at the London Tavern. John Labouchere, Esq., in the chair. The report of the directors congratulated the Society on its successful progress, that the collection at the last anniversary dinner amounted to £2417, that the Bank of England had contributed £200; the Prince Oscar, £20; £10 from the Duke of Saxe Weimar; the King of Hanover, £50. That 80 persons had received a weekly pension of 5s.; 95 from 2s to 8s.; making a total of £1491 9s. 9d. That 2711 had received casual relief, and others had been sent back to their own country, the whole expense of which amounted to £1163 14s. 8d.; but that, in administering this relief no distinction as to country, colour, or religion, had been made. The balance sheet showed that the income for the year, including donations and subscriptions, amounted to £3098 18s., and the expenditure left a balance in hand of £29 19s. 8d., besides which the funded property of the Society amounted to £5,000.

INSTITUTION FOR THE ADULT DEAF AND DUMB.—At a meeting of the committee of management of this institution on Friday (last week), the Secretary, J. G. Shrimpton, Esq., announced that the Corporation of the City of London had presented the liberal donation of £100 in furtherance of the views of the society. Mr. D. Murray, the interpreter and teacher of the establishment, observed that the generous assistance afforded was most opportune; inasmuch as, for some time past, the applications on behalf of the deaf and dumb, had far exceeded the ability of the institution to grant

NORWICH ESTUARY COMPANY.—A half yearly meeting of proprietors was held . Saturday at the London Tavern. Mr. Steward presided. The directors' report stated that they did not think it necessary to recommend any call upon the proprietors at present. They still recommended that no steps should be taken for the purchase of land, or making the cut, before the next half-yearly meeting, unless sanctioned by a majority of the shareholders present, at an extraordinary meeting to be convened in the meantime, pursuant to the company's act, with full notice of the object. The accounts showed that, inclusive of a previous balance, £4029 0s. 8d., had been received, out of which a present balance remained of £92 8s. 10d. The report was adopted, and was followed by the re-election of directors and auditor, retiring by rotation.

MERCHANT SEAMEN'S SOCIETY.—On Monday, the annual election of inmates into the Asylum connected with this society, took place at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street; Captain Nelson, R.N., presiding From a statement of the society's accounts, it appeared that the total receipts of the last year were £23,591 16s., and the expenditure £24,767 9s. 11d., leaving a balance to 1848 in favour of the Society of £824 19s. 1d. Among the receipts were: Duty from London vessels, £1,930 13s. 7d.; duty from outports, vessels of ports under the management of the Corporation, £6367 2s. 8d.; Consolidated Three per Cents, Bank Annuities, for £3000, sold at 88¾ per cent., £2655; Old South Sea Annuities, for £1000, sold at 98¾ per cent., £985. Amongst the items of expenditure, were: Paid to London pensioners, £13,966 2s. 6d.; paid to outports pensioners, £3674; temporary relief, &c., £2200; Seamen's Hospital Society, £368 3s. 4d. Four additional vacancies in the Asylum were elected, and the usual routine business having been disposed of, the meeting separated.

NORTHERN AND EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—The usual half-yearly meeting of this company was held on Thursday, at the Terminus, Shoreditch, Mr. Richard Paterson in the chair. The secretary read the Directors' report, which stated that, in accordance with the agreement that had been entered into with the Eastern Counties Company, the dividend on the respective shares of this company for the half year ending 31st December would be £1 5s. on the £25 shares, 9s. 8½d. upon each £23 share, to which 6 per cent. per annum had been guaranteed, and upon the second class shares of £20 each, 16s 10½ for each £50 share, and 14s. 7d. upon each £25 share. The dividends on the quarter shares, payable in May next, at the guaranteed 6 per cent., would be 7s 6d. each, the whole of the property-tax, being out of the last creation, of £.50, there still remained 339 undistributed, and at the disposal of the proprietors. The statement of accounts for the half-year showed the receipts to have been £85,829 9s. 9d., including the balance of the last half-year's accounts, which was £34,132 13s. 2d., and the expenditure showed a balance in hand of £31,901 9s. 9d.; the general statement of receipts and expenditure was annexed, and exhibited the following results:—Total sum received on calls, £548,369; ditto on loans and debentures, £146,000—total, £694,369. The expenditure side included Parliamentary and law expenses, and the usual items, having the balance stated above. The report was adopted and the accounts passed after a few minutes' discussion, and the meeting separated.

GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY. The half-yearly general meeting of the company was held on Tuesday, at their office, 71, Lombard street. The chair was taken by Mr. Wilkin. A report from the Directors, and a statement of the accounts for the half-year ending the 31st of December last, were read to the meeting. These documents represented the operations of the Company to have been attended with the most successful results The report having been read, was, after some discussion, adopted by the Proprietors, and the usual dividend and bonus declared.

GOLDSMITHS' AND JEWELLERS' ANNUITY INSTITUTION.—On Monday, the half-yearly general meeting of the members of the above Institution was held at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, for the purpose of receiving the report of the Committee for the past year, to elect a Committee of Management, and on general business. Mr. Mills in the chair. The report stated that the Institution was founded in 1837, for the purpose of relieving the decayed members of the trade, including their workmen, shopmen, and clerks, as also their widows. There are now thirteen male and six female annuitants, who have received during the year £361. The men receive £15, and the women £10 each per annum, payable monthly. The balance-sheet showed the expenditure to be £317 4s. 7d., leaving in hand £1309 11s. 6d. A further sum of upwards of £800 has also been raised, and set apart for the erection of almshouses.

KING'S COLLEGE HOSPITAL.—On Tuesday afternoon the annual general meeting of the Governors and Directors of this Excellent Charity was held at the Boardroom, Portugal-street, Lincoln's Inn, Mr. J. F. Twemlow in the chair The report congratulated the friends of the institution, that, during the past severe season, the falling off in the income had occurred, as might have been expected, and the expenditure only exceeded the ordinary income by £47. The number of patients admitted during the year was 1253, exclusive of 106 remaining in the house at the end of December. The out-patients, in the course of the same period, numbered 17,901, being a very considerable increase over the number of previous year. The permanent fund of the hospital had been augmented by the munificent legacy of £1000 from the late Miss Colyer, of Farningham, Kent, and £50 from the late Mr. W. T. Fraed. It was mentioned that the Charity was still in debt about £900, and, as the committee hoped before long to announce a part for the enlargement of the hospital, to meet the greatly increasing demands upon the Charity, abundant room existed for the beneficial exercise of benevolent consideration. The customary compliment having been voted to the chairman, the meeting separated.

MORTALITY IN THE METROPOLIS.—It is satisfactory to observe that the Registrar-General's return for the week ending last Saturday shows a considerable decrease in the mortality of previous weeks. The deaths registered in the metropolis were 1134, a more favourable result than any that has been obtained during the last three months, and exceeding the winter average by only 27. Diseases of the respiratory organs now exhibit a falling below the average, and no decrease is also shown under other important classes of disease, except the epidemic, which continues to preponderate to a great extent and to cause nearly a third of the whole mortality. Influenza has declined to 37, and will probably settle in a short time at the average of former seasons, namely, three deaths the last week it was fatal to 8 persons, of whom 13 died in the Fever Hospital. The births in the week were 1272

THE FRENCH IN LONDON AND THE REVOLUTION. The recent astounding events in Paris on becoming known to the public s f France caused a great sensation in the metropolis at the close of the last and c mencement of the present week, produced, as might be expected, the liv est sensation amongst them. At the various French hotels and coffee-houses in Leicester-square and the neighborhood, the Revolution formed the all-absorbing topic of conversation. On Friday and Saturday especially, as the news arrived by piecemeal of the abdication of Louis Philippe, several reunions were held, and the most enthusiastic feelings displayed for the revolutionary cause. On Saturday many Frenchmen carried their enthusiasm so far as to attach tri-coloured ribands to their button hole, and were to be seen in the streets wearing this favour, new to the eyes of Englishmen.

Several of the political exiles have already gone back to France, amongst the number Dr. Berrier Fontaine, who for many years past has been practi- as a physician in Foley-place, and M Guinard, now appointed Chef d' of the National Guard. Both these gentlemen were, with Marrast, Carnaignac, and other members of the committee of the Société du Droit de l'Homme, and, it will be remembered, were convicted and imprisoned in 1839 for conspiring to dethrone the late Sovereign, and establish a republican form of government. The extraordinary escape of the thirty-three conspirators from the prison of St. Pélagie is well known. A manifesto, of which the following is a translation, was agreed to on Saturday, and numerously signed. During the week it lay for signature at the French Reading Room, No. 67, Strand:—"Frenchmen —At news of the immense events at Paris, your brothers, residing in London, have associated themselves spontaneously with the accomplished revolution. Many phrases would be necessary to express all their sentiments, but they can only testify their admiration of the courageous conduct you have displayed at Paris, and their regret at having been unable to participate by their personal exertions in the cause." (Here follow the signatures.)

ART-UNION OF LONDON AND THE BOARD OF TRADE.—A deputation from the London Art-Union, consisting of Lord Monteagle, Mr. Sergeant Talfourd, Mr. Troughton, Mr. G. Godwin, Mr. Pocock, Mr. Noble, Professor Donaldson, M. Gaskin, Mr. Knight, Mr. Dodd, M.P., and others, had an interview on Friday (last week) with the Right Hon. H. Labouchere, at the office of the Board of Trade, on the subject of the proposed interference with the society. Lord Monteagle, and after him Mr. Godwin, having pointed out the impracticability of the propositions made, Mr. Labouchere also abandoned the proposed tax of ten per cent on the amount of subscriptions; also, any interference with the engravings, and asked the council for some modified proposition in respect to their selecting the pictures—as, for example, that they should choose all above £70 in value. The correspondence is about to be published.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

NEWMARKET.—Half-yearly Meeting.—London, Feb. 28.—Lord G. Manners, M.P., in the chair.—The Directors' report announced that, in accordance with the expressed wishes of some of the proprietors, they had felt it to be their duty not to omit any opportunity of making an advantageous arrangement with either of the larger companies in connection with the Newmarket Railway; and, in furtherance of that object, they, in the course of the past year, made overtures for a renewal of the negociation with the Directors of the Eastern Counties Railway, for a lease or amalgamation, but without effect. They were, therefore, glad to receive overtures from the Norfolk Company, which had led to a conditional agreement, by which it was estimated that the through traffic which would be realised to the Newmarket Railway Company on the opening of the line to Thetford, would produce at least £40,000 per annum (independently of the local traffic), and the annual increase of the Norfolk Railway Company's traffic having been at the rate of 10 per cent, a very great return might be expected. The land required for the extension to Thetford was conditionally purchased before the Act was obtained, upon fair and reasonable terms; and the Directors have every reason to believe the line to Thetford will not exceed £210,000. The capital expended may be termed "the first appearance of the French Revolutionary Flag on the English Coast."

SCENE OF THE DESTRUCTION AT THE PALAIS ROYAL.

(Continued from page 146.)

On Sunday last, the Boat, with Despatches, appeared off Dover, bearing the well-known red flag. She was unable to land, in consequence of the fury of the gale; she ran away to Deal, where she was more fortunate, and an express was sent thither to meet her.

THE EX-QUEEN OF THE FRENCH.

The accompanying Engraving is from a remarkably fine print published in Paris, and reputed to be a characteristic likeness of the ex-Queen, Marie Amelie, daughter of the late Ferdinand I. (IV.), King of the Two Sicilies, born April 26, 1782.

In a paper in France Musicale for the past month is the following anecdotic tribute to her Majesty:—

"The Queen, who is what the French call dévote, very often invites the abbesses and heads of convents, whether in Paris or in the provinces, to pass with her Majesty and the King, who knows the faible of her Majesty, always refuses to these worthy ecclésiastiques the privilege of his claret-cup. Sometimes he enters into conversation with the lady-abbess and if she prove to be an intolerant woman, with rational views, the King orders his valet-de-chambre to leave the dish on which she is breaking fast, to dispose in a small basket under her carriage, each the meilleur as the case may be, a bottle of his Majesty's favourite wine in a crystal claret-jug, and one of his Majesty's petits pains de Paris, made with fine flour, rolled up in a fine damask napkin. In this manner, by the devotion of the Queen, and the King's attention to the creature comforts of the religieuses, they have both won golden opinions from their strict convents. We have ourselves heard the abbess of the Dames Nobles of Cahors and a Henri Quatrième dignitary of Toulouse speak in raptures both of the King and Queen of the French."

Religious matters, or questions connected with the church, clergy, convents, &c., Louis Philippe is understood to have always referred to his Queen.

THE PALAIS ROYAL.

Of the Illustrations show the work of destruction at the Palais Royal, which, it will be recollected, was the private property of Louis Philippe. This was one of the principal wreakings of spoliating vengeance. On Thursday, after a battle which lasted nearly an hour, the people having gained admission to the Palace, its sumptuous furniture was recklessly hurled from the windows into the court-yard and there burnt, together with the throne on which Louis Philippe first sat as King of the French.

These tragic scenes are details in the Narrative, so that we shall merely add, that at the Château d'Eau, on the south side of the Palace were burnt several of the Royal carriages; the scene presenting the terrific tableau shown in the Engraving.

THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT.

We annex Portraits of the leading Members of the Provisional Government, with biographical notes.

ARAGO.

The name of M. Arago, the Minister of Marine, is one of the most brilliant modern science can boast of. As an orator, also, he is almost equally distinguished. He is in his sixty-second year, and is Perpetual Secretary of the Academy of Sciences, and Member of the Board o

BURNING THE ROYAL CARRIAGES AT THE CHATEAU D'EU.

MEMBERS OF THE NEW GOVERNMENT.

LEDRU ROLLIN, MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. DUPONT (DE L'EURE), PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL DRAWN BY BAUGNIET. LAMARTINE, MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Longitudes. In politics, M. Arago is an excellent patriot, a sworn enemy of privileges and monopoly, and an ardent defender of the rights of the people. He voted against the Pritchard Indemnity Bill, and has ever supported all the measures of the Gauche, although he goes much further, and belongs to the extreme Gauche.

CAVAIGNAC.

Cavaignac, the new Governor of Algiers, is nephew of the General Viscount Cavaignac, son of the Conventional Deputy, and brother of the famous Republican of the "Amis du Peuple." He is now in his forty-sixth year.

CORMENIN.

President of the Council of State, is known as one of the bitterest and most powerful pamphleteers which France has produced. His Timon and Orateurs Célèbres are well known: his uncompromising enmity to the Doctrinaires has procured him place and power in the new system.

LEDRU-ROLLIN.

M. Ledru-Rollin, the Minister of the Interior, is in his forty-seventh year. He is an advocate, and has made himself known to us by his lively participation in the interests of the Irish nation, to whom he paid a visit some time back, as an emissary of French sympathisers with the Repeal agitation. We believe he is married to an Irish lady. He was elected for Mans vice the late M. Garnier Pagès. His speech to the electors subjected him to a prosecution on the part of the Government, and the trial produced a great sensation. M. Rollin represents the ultra-Radical interest, and has often attacked not only M. Guizot, but also the policy of such men as Thiers and Odilon Barrot. He sits on the extreme Left, and has defended at the tribune, with vigour and talent, the opinions advocated by La Réforme newspaper.

CORMENIN (TIMON), COUNCILLOR OF STATE.

DUPONT (DE L'EURE).

The President of the Council, M. Dupont (de l'Eure), Deputy for Evreux, is now in his eighty-first year. In the year VIII. he was a member of the Council of Five Hundred; in 1813 he was President of the Corps Legislatif; and, in 1815, he proposed the famous declaration in which the rights of citizens were preserved. He was appointed Minister of Justice in 1830. At the elections of 1842, M. Dupont, indignant at seeing the Deputies of the Eure servilely voting in favour of the execrated Guizot Ministry, contested four colleges of that department simultaneously; he was elected in all four, and chose Evreux. M. Dupont invariably voted against the corrupt and dishonest Administration which has fallen with the King, its protector. His appointment probably derives its chief significancy from its being a species of personal protest against Marshal Bugeaud.

LAMARTINE.

M. de Lamartine, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, must be too well known to require much observation. As a poet, an orator, a historian, and a publicist, he has acquired equal renown. He represents Maçon, and his political opinions have been copiously expressed in his newspaper, Le Bien Public, published in that town. He is everywhere a poet, even at the tribune. Like all poets, however, he is rather fickle and inconstant; but the elevation of his soul secures him against the greatest dangers of versatility. M. de Lamartine for a length of time occupied a very undecided position in the Chamber, but he eventually ranged himself on the side of the Opposition. The day on which he announced his intention of joining the camp of the Gauche was as gloomy a one for the Ministry as the memorable desertion of the Treasury bench of the English House of Commons by the great Burke. From that period M. de Lamartine took a decided part in favour of progressive reform, and ridiculed the Guizot Cabinet as the Ministry of "limitations." He voted against the Pritchard indemnity, and was prized by the Opposition as an invaluable acquisition. M. de Lamartine is in his fifty-eighth year.

---

M. Hippolyte Carnot, Minister of Public Instruction, including the administration of religious affairs, one of the members for Paris and now in his forty-seventh year, was also bred an advocate. He is now however, an homme de lettres, and edits the "Revue Encyclopédique." He was formerly a St. Simonian. M. Carnot was born in 1801, and is the son of the famous Conventionalist of that name. He is a devoted partisan of democratic ideas and belongs to the extreme Left. He voted against the Pritchard Indemnity Bill, and for M. Remusat's project o Parliamentary Reform.

Garnier Pagès, the Mayor of Paris, and Deputy for Mans, has, for a long time, identified himself with the opinions of the extreme gauche His talents are of a very ordinary description.

General Bedeau, the Minister of War, is now only in his forty-fourth year. He and General Lamoricière are the most distinguished young generals of the French army. From the school of St. Cyr he was appointed to the staff, and served successively in the 8th Cuirassiers, in the Lancers of the Royal Guard, in the 2nd Regiment of Horse Artillery and in the 13th of the line. Aide-de-camp to Generals Ferrier, Gerard and Schramm, he made the campaigns of Belgium in 1831-32; and, for the last twelve or fourteen years, has been amongst the most active and distinguished of the young African generals. He held the post of Lieutenant-Governor of Constantine, while Lamoricière held the same office in Oran. From the nature of the country, his administration had more the character of military Government, while that of his colleague partook more of the nature of a military enterprise. The former passes for the more eminent man, the latter for the more daring.

M. Crémieux, the Minister of Justice, is Deputy for Chinon. Immediately after 1830, he purchased of Odilon Barrot the place of Conseiller à la Cour de Cassation, and for the last ten years has been one of the most popular and generally-employed of the Parisian advocates. He was a formidable opponent of the late Ministry. He exposed all its vices and its weaknesses. He demanded, on the discussion of the game law (originated in the Peers), the suppression of the article which ex-

(Continued on page 154.)

ARAGO, MINISTER OF MARINE CAVAIGNAC, GOVERNOR OF ALGIERS.

DRAWN BY BAUGNIET.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S

The production of "Il Barbiere" on Tuesday, was an important musical event, as testing severely the qualities of the two new artists who made so favourable a début in "Ernani": Mdlle. Cruvelli and Signor Belletti. Their success in the [illegible] was beyond expectation. [illegible] and reunion of [illegible] musical [illegible] the good looks, and, [illegible] of the [illegible] point of view its full effect, and by its [illegible] naïve archness of manner, her spirited action, and let us add by a most beautiful and splendid costume, Mdlle. Cruvelli made the most of her natural advantages. We [illegible] achieved a triumph in this difficult part, thanks to a voice which for compass and power, both in the higher and lower notes, [illegible] rich and flexible, has been seldom surpassed. Mdl. Cruvelli has indeed [illegible] by nature, and her very defects [illegible] they generally [illegible] of which the possessor does not know how to take [illegible] thing she has received, and the study she [illegible] suffice exactly for a [illegible] of modern [illegible] to her, one does not but be persuaded that the [illegible] is that in her which would repay the [illegible] study and most unremitting toil [illegible] voice always perfectly under control [illegible] It is not as yet, and, perhaps it can hardly be expected [illegible] it produces a decided [illegible] young fresh voice [illegible] the "Dunique to son." Nozzari are quite novel, and often very surprisingly executed. As she now is, Mdlle. Cruvelli is a remarkable specimen of right [illegible] but somewhat uncultivated talent, and, by a [illegible] a thoughtfully fascinating singer; with [illegible] and constant exertion, there is no saying to what height in her art she may not, at some future time, attain.

Signor Belletti is an admirable [illegible] in point of musical execution of the subject. We know not that we have ever heard him surpassed for the fine voice and adroit [illegible] and still [illegible] voice [illegible] perfectly under control [illegible] It is not as yet, and, young as [illegible], perhaps it can hardly be expected [illegible] it produces a decided [illegible] young fresh voice [illegible] the "Dunique to son." Nozzari are quite novel, and often very surprisingly executed. As she now is, Mdlle. Cruvelli is a remarkable specimen of right [illegible] but somewhat uncultivated talent, and, by a [illegible] a thoughtfully fascinating singer; with [illegible] and constant exertion, there is no saying to what height in her art she may not, at some future time, attain.

Signor Belletti is an admirable [illegible] in point of musical execution of the subject. We know not that we have ever heard him surpassed for the fine voice and adroit [illegible] and still [illegible] voice always

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

RAMJOLY V. SOOJUMAL.—In this case, which was argued last week, and which relates to opium duties bargained in India, where the subject has created considerable interest, the Supreme Court of Bombay holding such bargains to be invalid, illegal, and against public policy, judgment was delivered on Monday by Lord Campbell. This was an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay, holding on a demurrer to a declaration that the contract therein set out was illegal, and could not be enforced in a court of justice. This contract amounts to a wager between the parties upon the average price which opium would fetch at the next Government sale at Calcutta, the plaintiffs being to pay the defendants the difference between this price and a sum named per chest, if this price should be above that sum; and to pay the plaintiffs the difference between this price and a sum named per chest, if this price should be below that sum; and the defendants being to pay the plaintiffs the difference between this price and that sum, if this price should be above that sum; and no question that we must take judicial notice that the opinion to be formed of the policy of the Government of India, and that the price was to form part of the public revenue. I [illegible] to say that we are bound to consider the common law of England to be, that an action may be maintained on a [illegible] is not against the interests or feelings of both parties, and does not lead to corrupt evidence, and is not contrary to public policy. I look with concern and almost with shame on the subterfuges, and contrivances, and evasions to which judges in England long resorted in struggling against this rule; and I rejoice that it is at last completely exploded by an Act of the Legislature; but the statutes 8th and 9th Victoria, cap. 109, does not extend to India; and, although both parties are Hindoos, no peculiar Hindoo law is alleged to exist upon the subject; therefore this case must be decided by the common law of England. The defendants contended that these wagers were illegal, on the ground of public policy, as they concern the public revenue, and gave the plaintiffs an interest unduly to raise the price of opium at the next Government sales, while they gave the defendants an interest unduly to lower the price, whereby individuals dealing in opium, and the East India Company, might be injured. We are of opinion that for mere circumstance that these wagers refer to the public revenue does not establish their illegality. It is for the Legislative Council at Calcutta to consider how far it may be conducive to the benefit of our Indian empire to introduce into the provisions of the statute 8th and 9th Vic., cap. 109. We think that, by the common law of England, the wager in question is not illegal, and may be enforced in a court of justice; and, agreeing with Mr. Justice Cresswell, we shall report to her Majesty that, in our opinion, the judgment appealed against ought to be reversed.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

ALCOCK V. THE ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—MONDAY.—This was an action on a policy of insurance on the ship William Thompson, for a voyage from Adelaide to Trieste, with a cargo of corn, and the usual clause having the ship was valued at £9000; the insurance with this company was for half that sum, and the real question in the case was, whether the loss was a partial or a total loss. It appeared that the ship, which was a ship of 700 tons, sailed from Alexandria to Trieste in the month of July, and was stranded on the coast of Istria, on the 1st of last month, at about forty to sixty miles distance from Alexandria. The master returned to that place, and there obtained assistance, by the orders of the Pasha, two of whose vessels of war, the Nile and the Bowler, went to render every possible aid. The cargo was got off, but the vessel, though so lightened, could not be moved; and the English Consul at Alexandria having sent two captains to give their aid, they found the state of things to be such, that they recommended the entire removal of the cargo, and of all the furniture of the ship, and the sale of the hull to the best bidder. Their recommendations were carried into effect; the ship was dismantled, and the hull was sold. A Tuscan merchant and shipowner became the purchaser, and he afterwards succeeded in getting the vessel off the sands, repaired it, and sent it to Leghorn, where he sold it. The company contended that there had been only an average loss in this case, and not a total loss, and paid into court a sum of £450 as sufficient to cover that loss. Evidence was given on the part of the plaintiff to show that everything had been fairly done for the benefit of all concerned; and that, under existing circumstances, the captain could not have acted otherwise than he did. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, assessing the damages at £2450 as equivalent to a total loss, and paid into court a sum of £450 as sufficient to cover that loss. Evidence was given on the part of the plaintiff to show that everything had been fairly done for the benefit of all concerned; and that, under existing circumstances, the captain could not have acted otherwise than he did. The jury returned a verdict for the defendants, assessing the damages at £2450 as equivalent to a total loss, and paid into court a sum of £450 as sufficient to cover that loss. Evidence was given on the part of the plaintiff to show that everything had been fairly done for the benefit of all concerned; and that, under existing circumstances, the captain could not have acted otherwise than he did. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff empts the Crown lands from the severe provisions of that enactment; but, although successful in the Deputies, the Upper Chamber restored the obnoxious clause. M. Crémieux's parliamentary career has been one of the most important and honourable; and, in short, he was a leading member of the Opposition.

LAMARTINE ADDRESSING THE PEOPLE AT THE HOTEL DE VILLE.

(Continued from page 151.)

"ARMES DONNEES"—"MORT AUX VOLEURS!"

This pair of Illustrations shows two of the methods adopted by the people during the struggle—one for furnishing themselves with arms, and the other for enforcing respect to property. In the first case, persons knocked at the doors of the houses in the streets, which, being opened, they cried "Have you any arms?" If the answer were "Yes," Then give them," was the rejoinder. The collectors then wrote on the doors, "On a donné les armes," so that the inmates of the house might not be applied to a second time.

In the second case, the inscription, "Mort aux Voleurs" ("Death to Thieves!"), was written in various parts of the palaces, to save the property from plunder. Several instances of this severe justice of the people being carried into execution are recorded in the Narrative.

SCENE AT THE HOTEL DE VILLE.

The Hôtel de Ville hitherto has been the seat of the Provisional Government; here their proclamations and other documents have been issued.

On Saturday, the second day of the Republic, the front of the Hôtel presented the very animated picture in our Illustration. M. de Lamartine is there proclaiming to the people, on the part of the Government, the Republic, in the form given in the Narrative.

---

The Chamber of Commerce of Paris had subscribed 20,000f. for the relief of the wounded and the indigent classes.

The Courrier Français says that "M. Jollivet, deputy for the Ile et Vilaine, who had left his residence in the Rue St. Florentin on Thursday, intending to go to the Chamber, had not been heard of for four days; but that on Sunday, at eight o'clock, in consequence of an anonymous note to the Commandant of the Tuileries, search was made near the Pont Tournant, and his body was found under a heap of sand with those of two workmen. He had received a ball under the right armpit. His watch, his medal as deputy, and his pocket-book, containing his papers and cards, were found upon him untouched." The other journals speak of the disappearance of M. Jollivet, but contain nothing to confirm the above announcement of his death.

WE are happy to hear, from a quarter upon which we can place reliance, that the EX-KING AND QUEEN OF THE FRENCH ARE IN SAFETY, though we have not authority to remove the mystery resting upon their "whereabouts."—Globe.

WE hear it reported that M. Guizot is among the arrivals in London.—Globe.

"ARMES DONNEES."—(ARMS GIVEN UP.)

MORT AUX VOLEURS."—(DEATH TO THIEVES!)

ALMS FOR THE WOUNDED.

In various parts of the city houses were opened for the reception of the wounded, for whose relief alms were received at the door, in boxes (troncs) placed there for the purpose, whilst conveyances were sent in all directions to levy similar contributions. Over the door of each receiving-house was inscribed Ambulance (temporary hospital); whilst the national flag waving over the door, and the placard inscribed "République Française," denoted the official character of the establishment.

THE NEWS IN ENGLAND.

The public anxiety to obtain the latest news of the progress of the Revolution, as might be expected, has led to an immense demand for the journals, daily and weekly, in the metropolis. Their sales have exceeded the usual numbers by many thousands; and, in several cases, premiums have been given for early copies. The Engraving is no exaggeration of the anxiety we have characterised; nor will it be questioned when the immense importance of the event is taken into consideration. It shows the publishing office of the London Telegraph daily paper, two doors east of St. Dunstan's Church.

VOLUNTEER NATIONAL GUARD.

This sketch from the life portrays one of the Volunteer National Guards on his new duty as sentry. Of course, there has not been time to regulate the uniform: he wears a blouse, and the labourer's flat cap; and is armed with a cavalry sword, large pistol, and musket and bayonet.

NATIONAL GUARD.—A VOLUNTEER.—SKETCHED FROM LIFE.

THE ORLEANS FAMILY.

Several members of the ex-Royal Family of France have arrived in this country. Amongst them the Duke de Nemours, who reached London on Sunday evening at about 8 o'clock by the South-Eastern Railway. He was accompanied by the Duke and Duchess Augustus of Saxe-Coburg (Princess Clementine). The Duke on his arrival at Hertford House (the French Embassy) seemed greatly dejected, as he was evidently suffering from excessive fatigue; and we regret to say, from their escape from the French capital having been the act of a moment, not the slightest luggage was brought, so that in fact none of the fugitives possessed a change of garment.

The Countess de Jarnac, the Count Louis de Nosilles, and M. de Rabaudy, were assembled in the vestibule to receive the Duke de Nemours and the unfortunate individuals accompanying that Prince.

The Duke was waited on, immediately after his arrival at the Embassy, by their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Baron Fritsch and Lieutenant-Colonel Wilde.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and Prince Albert were instantly conducted to the saloon of the Embassy. The meeting was deeply affecting, the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg being painfully overcome by her feelings. The Count and Countess de Jarnac were alone present at the distressing interview, the Royal Equerries being within call in an ante-room.

On taking their departure from Paris, the Duke de Nemours went by one route and the Duchess (cousin of the Prince Consort) by another, intending to meet or join the same road at a place appointed. It was not discovered till the Duke reached the coast that the Duchess had not preceded him. It appears now that she was unfortunately left behind.

The Prefect of Paris arrived in London, also on Monday, from Paris, having made his escape from the capital on Thursday night.

The Duke de Montebello, the Minister of Marine and the Colonies, and of course member of the Cabinet under M. Guizot, arrived on Saturday in London, and is staying with the Hon. Francis Charteris, M.P., and Lady Anne Charteris, at their residence in Chesham-place. The Duke escaped with little difficulty, but in a state of comparative destitution, having scarcely any clothing.

The Duchess de Colgny, a member of the house of Stair, and consequently a Scotch lady, arrived in Dover-street on Saturday, from Paris, having escaped over the walls surrounding the capital. We learn the Duchess assumed the disguise of a servant. The gallant Duke remains in Paris.

On Monday morning, at half-past ten o'clock, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent arrived at the Embassy, and had a long interview with the Duke de Nemours and his Royal relatives

While the Duchess was at the Embassy, the reigning Duchess of Saxe-Coburg arrived from Buckingham Palace to pay a visit to their Royal Highnesses.

It is understood that the object of the visit, both of the Duchess of Kent and the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg, was to express her Majesty the Queen's desire that their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess Augustus of Saxe-Coburg should make Buckingham Palace their home during their stay in this country.

At half-past eleven o'clock, their Royal Highnesses the Duke de Nemours and the Duke and Duchess Augustus of Saxe-Coburg left the Embassy, in Count Jarnac's carriage, and proceeded to Buckingham Palace, to pay a visit to the Queen. Their Royal Highnesses remained at the Palace until after one o'clock.

The youngest daughter of the Duke de Nemours and the three children of the Duke and Duchess Augustus of Saxe Coburg were subsequently conveyed to Buckingham Palace, where they will remain for the present.

At a quarter to four o'clock, the Duchess de Montpensier arrived at the Embassy from the London-bridge terminus of the South-Eastern Railway. Her Royal Highness parted from the King and Queen very shortly after they left Paris, and, under escort of a confidential friend of the Duke de Montpensier, made the best of her way to Boulogne. At Abbeville the Duchess had a very narrow escape, having been recognised and attacked by the mob. Her Royal Highness only escaped by taking refuge in the house of a gentleman, from the rear of which she afterwards escaped, and ultimately reached Boulogne, from which port she crossed on Sunday.

On Wednesday morning, at an early hour, the Duchess de Nemours, with her youthful children, and the Duke de Montpensier, arrived at Southampton from Havre, and were in the course of the day conducted to town by the two attachés of the French and Belgian Legations. The Royal fugitives are at present staying at East Sheen, at the villa of Mr. Bates, father-in-law to M. Van de Weyer, the Belgian Ambassador.

Madame Guizot (an octogenarian), the mother of the ex-Minister, and his two daughters, accompanied by M. Ignace Fichbon, Avocat à la Cour Royale, have also arrived in London.

BEGGING ALMS FOR THE WOUNDED.

The Duke and Duchess Augusta of Saxe Coburg left the French Embassy on Monday evening for Buckingham Palace, there to take up their residence

The complimentary calls at the Embassy were exceedingly numerous during the day, commencing from an early hour in the morning.

His Grace the Duke of Wellington arrived on horseback at half-past 1 o'clock. His Grace, on alighting, was met by the Count de Jarnac, with whom he remained closeted for some time. His Excellency Baron Brunow reached the Embassy at the same moment with the noble and gallant Duke, and joined in the conference which followed. The absence of his Royal Highness the Duke de Nemours at Buckingham Palace deprived the Duke of Wellington of the opportunity of paying his personal respects. The noble and gallant Duke was how ever, most particular in his inquiries after his Royal Highness, and, we understand, expressed great anxiety as to the fate of the King.

RUSH FOR THE DAILY NEWSPAPERS.

Among the members of the corps diplomatique who called and left their names at Embassy also on Monday were—His Excellency the Austrian Ambassador and the Countess Dietrichstein, his Excellency the Prussian Minister and Madame B—n, his Excellency the Bavarian Minister and the Baroness de Cetto, his Excellency the Belgian Minister, his Excellency the Portuguese Minister and L—l Viscountess de Mornecay, his Excellency the Brazilian Minister, M. Tacon, the Spanish Chargé d'Affaires; the Chevalier Ribeiro, Secretary to the Portuguese Legation; M. de Sarmento, Attaché to the Legation; M. Diaz, Secretary to the Spanish Legation; the Attachés to the Spanish Legation, &c.

The members of the nobility who called during the day included the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk and the Ladies Mary and Adelaide Fitzalan Howard, the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne, the Marquis of Bristol, the Marquis and Marchioness of Salisbury, the Earl and Countess Fortescue, the Earl and Countess Granville, the Countess of Mansfield and the Ladies Murray, the Earl of Mansfield, the Earl and Countess Delawarr, the Earl and Countess Bective, the Earl Fitzwilliam and the Ladies Charlotte, Albreda, and Dorothy Wentworth Fitzwilliam, the Earl and Countess of Shelburne, the Countess of Jersey and Lady Clementina Villiers, the Earl of Jersey, the Countess of Gainsborough and Lady Catherine Noel, the Countess Dowager of Verulam, Viscount and Viscountess Bersford, Viscount Canterbury, Viscount and Viscountess Canning, Viscount and Viscountess Joscelyn, Viscount Villiers, Viscount and Viscountess Falkland, Viscountess Palmerston, Viscount and Viscountess Dillon, Viscount and Viscountess Errington, Lord Bromham and Lady M—d, Lord and Lady Ellesmere, Lord and Lady Graham and Miss Reid, Hon. Colonel Dawson Damer, Hon. Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Ponsonby, Sir Stratford Canning, Sir Harry and Lady Verney, Sir James and Lady Graham and Miss —, Sir Alexander and Lady Woodford, Sir Frederick and Lady Thesiger, Sir [illegible] Mrs. Colonel and Lady Alice Peel

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"L. W. C." Your Problem is neat, but very easy. With regard to the solution of Problem No 213, a Correspondent suggests that Black's escape at his second move to K 3d may be obviated, and mate still be given in the stipulated number of moves, as follows:—

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 B takes P (ch) | P takes B | 3. Q to Q R sq (ch) | Q takes Q (best) |
| 2. ... K B 2d | Q to K Kt 8th | 4. It to K B 5th (ch) | R takes R |
| | (best) | 5 R checkmates | |

"J. P." - Your former letter was not received. You are right, it appears to us, in regard to Problem 213.

"W. P. N."—See our reply above to "C. W. C." You will find the variation of the Knight's Tour which you allude to at the close of its ninth hundred number of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle."

"J. G. R." All the back numbers of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle," we believe, are obtainable. Apply to the publisher, Mr. Hurst. If you will send the position [illegible] to, a solution shall be given.

"Tyro."—They shall be examined. In future be good enough to distinguish the [illegible] by numbers, thus—the [illegible] at "P. to Rook's, must = P.

"Tyro."—Your mode of indicating it is sure to lead to mistake.

"Tyro."—The Kingt cannot move out of check by castling.

"A Old Subscriber."—The "Chess-Player's Hand-book," published by Bohn, of Covent-garden.

"Ignoramus."—You may claim a third Knight, or Queen or Rook, or any other piece.

"Delight." There is but one solution to the Enigma No. 272, and that you have not hit upon. No. 276 is right. Your Problem shall be looked to.

"Q. Q."—The third move is obviously Q to her 4th, or Kt to K B 3d, dependent on [illegible]'s play.

"J. G. M."—The Pawn takes in passing precisely as if the adverse Pawn had moved one square only. You quite mistook our meaning in supposing we stated otherwise. The law respecting a plurality of Queens is universally adopted in this country, and by the players of France and Germany.

"J."—See our notice above, to "S. G. M."

"J. S."—In the position given the Black King is stalemated

"Woodstockensis"—Two or more Pawns advanced to their eighth squares may be exchanged for Queens. It is easy to distinguish them from other Queens, by putting a penny on each. The other question we cannot answer, not being acquainted with the game.

"R. R."—Willingly. It always affords us pleasure to promote the interests of the game; and to further the progress of young players on their first invitation.

"T. H. G."—Issued accordingly. Let us have the companion to it, by all means.

"Woodstockensis."—We must disclaim the connection of master and pupil which "Woodstockensis" would establish. It is a matter of courtesy only, that we are at the trouble of replying to his queries, and we have a right to expect, at least, that they shall be conveyed in gentlemanly language. In the Problem sent, the Black King is already in check with the adverse Queen; and the solution is wanting.

"A New Subscriber."—Your request can neither be [illegible] at present.

"G. H."—See our notice to "C. C."

"Jonas."—The match by correspondence with Amsterdam may be said to have concluded, inasmuch as the members of the Amsterdam Club have sent their first move, which is, P to Q 4th.

"H. P."—Your solution of Problem No. 273 is correct. Your solution is right.

"R. F. H." Burhampton. Always acceptable. The Problem is more curious than entertaining. Can you not favour us with one or two the same number, which are simply natural end-games, unclogged by stipulations, that violate the principles of Chess. Your own stratagems were duly received, and a solution shall be made of them, as you wish.

"W. H. S."—Bellory.—The Indian games shall appear shortly. Many thanks for your attention

"C. H. S." New York.—The promised volume is not obtainable in this country.

"James." "E. G. D.," "M. P." "S. S." "F. S." "Eva." "V. et F.," "[illegible] Shrewsbury." "W. A. B." are correct.

"Student." There is no flaw in Problem No 273. Look at it again.

"A German Amateur"—It does not appear to us that Black has much advantage over his opponent, whom threat of stalemate is very difficult to parry without the loss of the attacked Knight.

"S. P. Q." is thanked for his suggestions. There are great difficulties in the way of carrying the Enigmas as he proposes.

"Pawnbroker."—There is the same mode of solving Problem No. 212; viz. that we published.

"Brighton-ians" is referred to the solution of No 213, given above, under the initials "C. W. C." He must send us a copy of the Enigma he wishes solved.

"Schizons by" "T. R." "Ada." "C. W. C.," "W. P. N." "W. G. C." "E. G. R.," "Ambulator," "A. D.," Gand, "Sopracritic," "Ith," "S. P. Q."

* A few lovers of Chess are exerting themselves to establish a Chess Club, in connexion with the Literary and Scientific Institution in the Old Kent Road. Any gentlemen of that neighbourhood desirous of co-operating with them, are requested to communicate by letter with "A. A." at the above-named Institution.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 214.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. Kt to K R 6th (ch) | P takes Kt | 4. Q to K 5 5th (ch) | Q to K 4th |
| 2. Q to K R 7th (ch) | K to his 3d | 5. P to K 4th (ch)—Mate | |
| 3. B to Q 5th (ch) | K takes B (best) | | |

PROBLEM NO. 215.

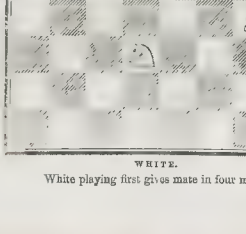
By HERR HORWITZ.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White playing first gives mate in four moves.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 281. By C. E. R.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at Q 7th | K at his 4th | K at Q 4th | |
| R at h 5 5 | | P at Q B 4th | |
| At 6 K 6th | | | |

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 282.—By the Same.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at his 2nd | K at his 5th | B at K B 8th | and Q B 4th |
| R at K B 7th | Ps at K 3d, Q 6th, | P at Q B 4th | |

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 283.—By the Same.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at Q 8th | K's at K 4th and | Kt at Q Kt 6th | |
| R at Q R 2d | Q 5th | Ps at Q Kt 7th and | |
| B at Q B 2d | P at K B 2d | Q B 6th | |

White to play, and mate in four moves.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.—The following papers were issued on Monday, pursuant to order of the House of Commons:—A return of the application of the sum of £500,000 borrowed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners from the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty under the Act 6 & 7 Vict. c. 20, &c. Return of the number of persons confined in the several gaols of Great Britain and Ireland for offences against the revenue laws. A copy of the correspondence between Mr. J. L. Peel and the Commissioners of Customs, &c., relating to the importation of sugar from [illegible]. Dated 10th Nov. 1847.

EXPLOSION.—THREE LIVES LOST.—At a few minutes before eight o'clock, on Tuesday morning, a boiler exploded at the cotton-mill of Mr. Richard Walker, Blue Pits, near Rochdale. The end of the boiler was blown out, and three persons were killed almost instantaneously. Two others were seriously injured, and one of them was dying. The roof of the engine-house house was blown off, and the building considerably damaged. The engine and boiler were two of the kind. Mr. Walker's mill has not been long erected, and the probability is that the boiler was nearly new.

A POACHER SHOT.—On Sunday morning an affray took place in the township of Leagrim, near Stonyhurst, between Henry Greenwood, gamekeeper for John Welds, Esq., and Richard Whalley, in the course of which the death of one of the latter The following are the facts:—At about a quarter before three o'clock, Greenwood, the gamekeeper, heard the report of a gun near his house, and immediately rose, dressed himself in the plainest manner, and proceeded to the place whence the report had come. He came upon [illegible] Whalley's house, with [illegible] in his hand, and commanded a gun; on demanding their names, the men attacked him. One of them, named Matt. Newport, struck the keeper with the butt-end of his gun, the stock of which broke, and caused the discharge of the [illegible] barrel [illegible] Newport's bowels, which resulted almost in immediate death.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—Under the direction of the Royal Italian Opera have the honour to inform the Nobility, Gentry, Subscribers, and the Public in general, that the SEASON will COMMENCE On TUESDAY, MARCH 7, 1848

The SUBSCRIPTION will consist of TWENTY-FOUR NIGHTS, Commencing TUESDAY, MARCH 7, and Terminating SATURDAY, AUGUST 19. The following are the Terms for the Season:—

| BOXES. | |
|---|---|
| Grand Tier | 250 Guineas. |
| First Tier | 200 " |
| Pit Tier | 200 " |
| Second Tier | 160 " |
| Third Tier | 100 " |
| Fourth Tier | 75 " |
| STALLS. | |
| Pit Stalls | 35 Pounds |
| Pit Stalls | 25 " |
| Amphitheatre Stalls | 8 Gs. nages. |

The Directors have the honour to announce that they have succeeded in effecting a very [illegible] with Mr. Lumley, whereby the Theatre called last Season the Amphitheatre, the [illegible] Stalls, &c. &c., and the two upper tiers of Boxes, will be added to the Amphitheatre, nightly commanding upwards of 600 persons.

Ex 66

The Performances will commence at Half-past Eight o'Clock on Tuesday, and at Eight precisely on the Saturdays.

Tickets, Stalls, and Boxes, for the Night or Season, to be obtained at the Box-office (corner of Bow-street and Hart-street), and at the principal Libraries and Musicsellers.

The Box-office is open Daily, from Ten till Five o'Clock.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—CIRQUE NATIONAL des CHAMPS ELYSEES de PARIS, under the direction of Mons. DEBURAU, WILL OPEN ON MONDAY next, March 6. Nouveau dia pompeux Artistes: Messieurs. F. Lehert, Newsome, A. Nicolet, Henry Dixon, Frank Lambert, G. Segrist, Jr. Siegrist, Senior, Baudu, Newell, A. Siegrist, F. Siegrist, B. Lockett, Felix, Cuzzier, Annin, Leroy, Hernandez, Rumbelow, Gilbert, Bradbury, and Cambier (Clowns)—Mr. Auriol, Mr Lechler, Mr. Alfred Bale, Mad'moiselles Caroline, Mathilde, Brigid, Fanny Lambert, Barker, Hughes, Mr. Stanley, Mr. Auriol, Mr. Farquharson, Mr. Anatole, Mesdames Newsome and Dixon. M. Adolphe Franconi, distinguished non les Exercices Equestres.

[illegible] Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, Grand Equestrian Performances, Mons. Deburau, Mons. Auriol, and Mons. Adolphe Franconi, distinguished non les Exercices Equestres.

Every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, Grand Comic Pantomime, Clown, Mons. Deburau; Harlequin, Mons. Auriol; Pantaloon, Mons. Adolphe Franconi; Columbine, Mad'moiselle Caroline. Every Evening, Grand Ballets, Mad'moiselles Caroline, Mathilde, Brigid, Fanny Lambert, Barker, Hughes, Mr. Stanley, Mr. Auriol, Mr. Farquharson, Mr. Anatole, Mesdames Newsome and Dixon. M. Adolphe Franconi, distinguished non les Exercices Equestres.

Private Boxes from Two Pounds Two Shillings and Sixpence to Four Pounds Four Shillings. Stalls, 5s. Second Tier, 3s. 6d. Gallery, 2s. Pit, 1s. 6d. Upper Gallery, 1s. Doors open at Half-past Six, and the Performances to commence at Seven precisely. Box-office open from Ten till Five.

FRENCH PLAYS. ST. JAMES'S THEATRE. On MONDAY next, MARCH 6, a favourite Piece, in which Mdlle NATHALIE will perform, after which will be produced a new Drama, in which Mdlle NATHALIE and M. LAFONT will appear, by M. [illegible], the principal characters by Messrs Carrigny, Feuillet, Mountland, St. Marie, Midme, [illegible] and Mesdames [illegible]. On Wednesday, the following evening, Mdlle. Nathalie's [illegible] LA FAMILLE LAMBERT. On Friday, the celebrated Piece, LA PAILLASSE DE LAFONT, will shortly commence his Engagement, and will perform in his favourite [illegible] Piece, entitled LE CAPITAINE LAMBERT. On Saturday, the celebrated Piece, LA JEUNESSE DE HENRI IV. On Monday, March 13, at Seven o'Clock, Thursday, March 16, at Edmonton.—Thursday, March 23, at Woolwich.—Thursday, March 30, at Walworth.—Begin each evening at Eight.

SACRED CONCERTS, CROSBY HALL, Bishopsgate-street Within.—THE SIXTH SERIES of these PERFORMANCES will take place on Monday, March 6th; Tuesday, March 14th; Monday, April 17th; Friday, April 28th. Misses Birch, Rainforth, Steele, Poole, and Cubitt; Messrs. Lockey, Francis, Lawler, and Machin, are engaged, with a Chorus. The Organ by Miss Mounsey. To commence at Half-past Seven [illegible] Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each, to be had of [illegible] and at the Hall

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES, Princess's Concert Rooms, MONDAY, MARCH 6, and every Monday. A subscription of two guineas entitled to an admission for Himself and lady any six nights during the season. Single tickets, 7s. each. Weippert's Polka Band as usual, conducted by himself. M. G., Mr. Corri. The [illegible] will be engaged by Mr. [illegible]. To commence at 9 o'clock. Refreshments—Ices, Coffee, &c. Dancing to commence at eleven, conclude at three. Tickets and programmes at 21, Soho-square.

EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.—VOS MAITINO'S celebrated Alter-egos, THE MAGNIFICENT TWINS, DOMESTICATED TWINS, and other Pictures and Sketches, from the Collection of a Gentleman Open from Eleven till Dusk. Admission, One Shilling.

MADAME WARTON'S WALHALLA, Leicester-square.—Impressed money, LADY GODIVA on Pedestal. Mr. Warton's Pedestrian Feat, [illegible] Mr. Warton's Pedestrian Feat, [illegible] with new scenery. Mr. Warton's delight by Crowded Audiences and pronounced unanimously by the Public Press to be the chief Feature of Madame Warton's admirable personations. To-morrow, Monday, March 6th, a Grand Morning and Evening Performance, addressing the ladies and gentlemen of the Public Press and Master for this Morning and Evening only—in which Mrs. Warton will sustain a new series of personations, and in the Second Part will appear as her usual impersonations of Mr.

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

Just published, [illegible]

LETTERS ON CHESS, containing an Account of some of the principal Works on that Game; with copious Extracts and Remarks. Translated from the German of C. F. VOGT. By U. EWELL.
SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, &c., Stationers' Hall-court.

Just Published, Price 1s.,

THE COLOURED CROCHET AND TAMBOUR BOOK. By CHARLES HAIR. To be had at his warehouse, No. 9, Queen-s [illegible] Exeter; and all [illegible] and Booksellers.
SIMPKIN MARSHALL, &c.

THE SEA and the RAILWAY; their new Relations set forth in a Rural along the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway to Grimsby Docks. By FELIX SUMMERLY. In preparation. With Woodcuts by C. W. Cope, A.R.A., D. Cox, jun., T. Creswick, A.R.A., and R. Redgrave, A.R.A.
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE RUDIMENTS OF A GOOD MAN'S LIFE."
Now ready, in One Vol. fcp. 8vo. 6s. 6d. cloth, or 10s. 6d. morocco,
THANKFULNESS: a Narrative; including Passages from the Diary of the Rev. Allan Temple. Reprinted from the Christian Lady, 199, Fleet-street.

THE HOLY LAND.
Just Published, price 9s. 6d. (Proof Impressions on India Paper),
A PANORAMIC PICTURE OF THE HOLY LAND; exhibiting Model Views of the principal Cities and Places mentioned in the Old and New Testament. With 83 References. Size of the Plate, 38 inches by 19.
Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand; and sold by all Booksellers.

[illegible] Price 1s.
THE GOVERNMENT PLAN OF EDUCATION.—The question, whether it is based on sound principles, considered in a letter to J. S. Reynolds, Esq. Secretary to the Home and Colonial School Society. Being an endeavour to prove that [illegible] cannot consistently and [illegible] Popery, cannot therefore serve with the Board of National [illegible]
Shall we barter [illegible] for all?
London: Published by JOHN HEARN, 31, Strand [illegible] of all Booksellers

Abdication of Louis Philippe! Revolution in Paris! Now publishing,
THE HYMN OF THE GIRONDINS!—"Mourir pour la Patrie," Chorused by Thousands of the Revolutionists at the Barricades whilst opposing the Troops recalled by captive from Paris, the only copy in England, Words and Music, with Piano-forte Accompaniment, a Superb Portrait of Louis Philippe. One Penny.
London: Duff and Hodgson, 65, Oxford-street.

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS, free by post, ONE HUNDRED BEAUTIFUL PLATES from the ANNUALS, all different, and fine impressions of [illegible] Scraps, Borders, Scrap Roses, Screens, &c., adapted for Albums, Scrap Roses, screens, &c. [illegible] For [illegible] and most acceptable present. Forwarded free immediately on receipt of [illegible] (stamps declined).—JAMES REYNOLDS, Print Warehouse, 174 Strand 200, Fleet-street, London.

ALL THE PARIS WORKS OF FASHION, with every Daily and Weekly Newspaper and Magazine, published in France, [illegible] the Supplement for [illegible] the ILLUSTRIOUS LONDON NEWSPAPER and ALL [illegible] favourable, commercial, educational, [illegible] literary, [illegible] to send publications in Paris, with the price, forwarded, post free, for Sixpence.

Just published, carefully arranged, under the various letters of the alphabet, Price 1s.
each Book, Post Free, 6d. extra,
THE UNCLAIMED DIVIDEND BOOKS of the BANK of England; containing the Names, Addresses, and Descriptions of upwards of 30,000 Persons entitled to various Sums of Money of all amounts; being the whole of the Unclaimed Dividends and Stock in the Public Funds, amounting to Many Millions of Money, which has been accumulating during the [illegible] Years, and which remains, and the whole of which can [illegible] by the Next of Kin. Also useful in stating what [illegible] to whom [illegible] the whole or bonâ fide interest in them, price 20s.
W. STRANGE, 21, Paternoster-row; and all Booksellers.

MR. COLBURN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.
I.
KING ARTHUR. By the Author of "The New Timon." Post 8vo. 8s.
II.
ANGELA. A Novel. By the Author of "Emilia Wyndham." 3 vols.
III.
LIVES OF THE QUEENS OF ENGLAND, Vol XII., COMPLETING THE WORK. Embellished with a Portrait of Jane Seymour. Post 8vo. 10s. 6d. (nearly ready.)
IV.
REMINISCENCES OF PRINCE TALLEYRAND. Edited from the Papers of the late M. COLMACHE, the Prince's Private Secretary. 2 vols., post 8vo., with Portrait.
V.
MEMOIRS OF MADEMOISELLE DE MONTPENSIER. Written by Herself. 3 vols., post 8vo., with Portrait.
VI.
"One of the most delightful and deeply interesting works we have read for a long time. The Memoirs are [illegible] valuable as the [illegible]."—Morning Advertiser.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

AN ELEGANT CHRISTMAS PRESENT.
THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT.
(AUTHORIZED VERSION)
Beautifully bound in leather, embossed and gilt sides, gilt edges, price Five Shillings. In paper wrapper, with Sixty Splendid Engravings from Original Designs, Drawings executed by Eminent Artists, expressly for the edition; Notes, Historical, Explanatory, and Descriptive; and an Original Life, and Revised Panoramic Picture of the Holy Land, as a frontispiece, presented at one view, the principal cities and places mentioned in the Old and New Testament, assisted by a pair of spectacles.
"The ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT contains some fine bold and imaginative sketches. Much taste has been shown in the choice of subjects, and even those which have been, as it [illegible] the [illegible] are treated with originality of conception."—Daily News.
"A publication characterized by the spirit of the age."—Morning Herald.
"The Illustrated New Testament" contains some fine bold and imaginative sketches. Much taste has been shown in the choice of subjects, and even those which have been, as it were,

INAUGURATION OF THE REPUBLIC.

This ceremony did not take place until Sunday: the site was the Place de la Bastille, around the base of the Column of July. There were present Arago, Dupont, Marrast, Flocon, Lamartine, Louis Blanc, Crémieux, Ledru-Rollin, and Garnier Pagès, who proceeded thither from the Hôtel de Ville, and there proclaimed the Republic. The details will be found in the Narrative of the proceedings of Sunday.

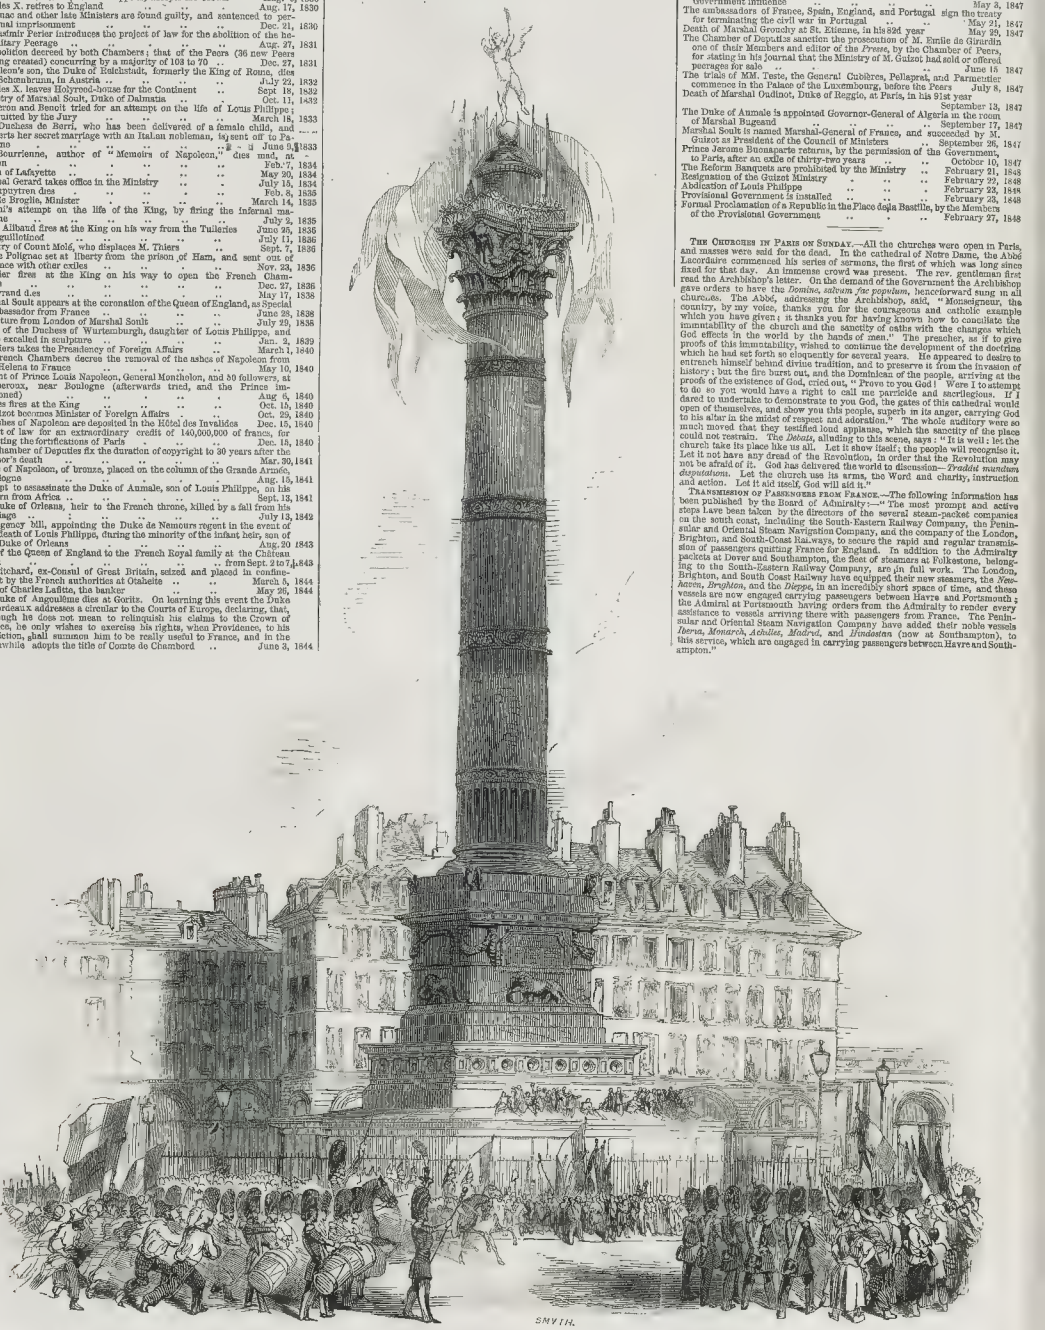
CHRONOLOGY OF THE REIGN OF LOUIS PHILIPPE.

(We have much pleasure in acknowledging our obligation for the first half of the annexed Chronology to "Haydn's Dictionary of Dates," a work of accredited character.)

| | |
|---|---|
| The obnoxious ordinances regarding the press, and re-construction of the Chamber of Deputies | July 26, 1830 |
| Revolution commenced | July 27, 1830 |
| Conflicts in Paris between the populace (ultimately aided by the National Guard) and the army; they continue three days, till | July 30, 1830 |
| Charles X. retires to Rambouillet; flight of the Ministry | July 30, 1830 |
| The Duke of Orleans (Louis Philippe I.) accepts the Crown | Aug. 9, 1830 |
| Charles X. retires to England | Aug. 17, 1830 |
| Polignac and other late Ministers are found guilty, and sentenced to perpetual imprisonment | Dec. 21, 1830 |
| M. Castmir Perier introduces the project of law for the abolition of the hereditary Peerage | Aug. 27, 1831 |
| Its abolition decreed by both Chambers; that of the Peers (36 new Peers being created) concurring by a majority of 103 to 79 | Dec. 27, 1831 |
| Napoleon's son, the Duke of Reichstadt, formerly the King of Rome, dies at Schœnbrunn, in Austria | July 22, 1832 |
| Charles X. leaves Holyrood-house for the Continent | Sept 18, 1832 |
| Ministry of Marshal Soult, Duke of Dalmatia | Oct. 11, 1832 |
| Bergeron and Benoit tried for an attempt on the life of Louis Philippe; acquitted by the Jury | March 18, 1833 |
| The Duchess de Berri, who has been delivered of a female child, and asserts her secret marriage with an Italian nobleman, is sent off to Palermo | June 5, 1833 |
| M. Bourrienne, author of "Memoirs of Napoleon," dies insane, at Caen | Feb. 7, 1834 |
| Death of Lafayette | May 20, 1834 |
| Marshal Gerard takes office in the Ministry | July 15, 1834 |
| M. Dupuytren dies | Feb. 8, 1835 |
| Duc de Broglie, Minister | March 14, 1835 |
| Fieschi's attempt on the life of the King, by firing the infernal machine | July 2, 1835 |
| Louis Alibaud fires at the King on his way from the Tuileries | June 25, 1836 |
| He is guillotined | July 11, 1836 |
| Ministry of Count Molé, who displaces M. Thiers | Sept. 7, 1836 |
| Prince Polignac set at liberty from the prison of Ham, and sent out of France with other exiles | Nov. 23, 1836 |
| Meunier fires at the King on his way to open the French Chambers | Dec. 27, 1836 |
| Talleyrand dies | May 17, 1838 |
| Marshal Soult appears at the coronation of the Queen of England, as Special Ambassador from France | June 28, 1838 |
| Departure from London of Marshal Soult | July 29, 1838 |
| Death of the Duchess of Wurtemburgh, daughter of Louis Philippe, and who excelled in sculpture | Jan. 3, 1839 |
| M. Thiers takes the Presidency of Foreign Affairs | March 1, 1840 |
| The French Chambers decree the removal of the ashes of Napoleon from St. Helena to France | May 10, 1840 |
| Descent of Prince Louis Napoleon, General Montholon, and 30 followers, at Vimereux, near Boulogne (afterwards tried, and the Prince imprisoned) | Aug. 6, 1840 |
| Darmes fires at the King | Oct. 15, 1840 |
| M. Guizot becomes Minister of Foreign Affairs | Oct. 29, 1840 |
| The ashes of Napoleon are deposited in the Hôtel des Invalides | Dec. 15, 1840 |
| Project of law for an extraordinary credit of 140,000,000 of francs, for erecting the fortifications of Paris | Dec. 18, 1840 |
| The Chamber of Deputies fix the duration of copyright to 30 years after the author's death | Mar. 30, 1841 |
| Statue of Napoleon, of bronze, placed on the column of the Grande Armée, Boulogne | Aug. 15, 1841 |
| Attempt to assassinate the Duke of Aumale, son of Louis Philippe, on his return from Africa | Sept. 13, 1841 |
| The Duke of Orleans, heir to the French throne, killed by a fall from his carriage | July 13, 1842 |
| The regency Bill, appointing the Duke de Nemours regent in the event of the death of Louis Philippe, during the minority of the infant heir, son of the Duke of Orleans | Aug. 30 1843 |
| Visit of the Queen of England to the French Royal family at the Château d'Eu | from Sept. 2 to 7, 1843 |
| Mr. Pritchard, ex-Consul of Great Britain, seized and placed in confinement by the French authorities at Otaheite | March 5, 1844 |
| Death of Charles Lafitte, the banker | May 26, 1844 |
| The Duke of Angoulême dies at Goritz. On learning this event the Duke of Bordeaux addresses a circular to the Courts of Europe, declaring, that, although he does not mean to relinquish his claims to the Crown of France, he only wishes to exercise his rights, when Providence, to his conviction, shall summon him to be really useful to France, and in the meanwhile adopts the title of Comte de Chambord | June 3, 1844 |
| Tangiers bombarded | August 6, 1844 |
| The Battle of Isley | August 14, 1844 |
| Mogador bombarded and taken | August 15, 1844 |
| Peace concluded between France and Morocco | September 6, 1844 |
| Evacuation of Mogador by the French | September 16, 1844 |
| Amnesty to all political offenders whose sentences, pronounced previously to this year, were to expire before the 1st January, 1847 | October 4, 1844 |
| Louis Philippe lands at Portsmouth, for the purpose of visiting her Majesty Queen Victoria at Windsor Castle | Oct. 7, 1844 |
| Return of Louis Philippe to France from the port of Dover | Oct. 14, 1844 |
| The vote of 14,130,000 francs for the fortifications of Paris carried in the Chamber of Deputies, by a majority of 227 to 144 | May 7, 1845 |
| New Convention signed between France and England for the suppression of the Slave Trade | May 29, 1845 |
| Ibrahim Pacha, son of the Pacha of Egypt, visit France | Nov. 27, 1845 |
| Prince Louis Napoleon Buonaparte escapes from the Castle of Ham, in Normandy, disguised as a workman | May 26, 1846 |
| Louis Buonaparte, Count of St. Leon, and ex-King of Holland, died of apoplexy at Leghorn. He was 68 years of age | July 25, 1846 |
| An attempt is made on the life of Louis Philippe by Joseph Henri, who fires two pistol shots at the King as he is standing with his family in the balcony of the Tuileries to hear the concerts annually given during the fêtes of July | July 29, 1846 |
| The Marriage of the Duke of Montpensier with the Infanta Louisa Maria of Spain is formally announced to the Spanish Cortes | September 14, 1846 |
| Formal Protest against the Marriage of the Duke de Montpensier and the Infanta Louisa Maria made by the English Government | September 21, 1846 |
| The marriage of the Duke of Montpensier and the Infanta Louisa Maria takes place at the same time as the spousals of the Queen of Spain with Francisco d'Assis, Duke of Cadiz, in the palace at Madrid | October 10, 1846 |
| The Duke of Bordeaux marries the Archduchess Maria Theresa of Modena, at Bruck, in Styri | November 16, 1846 |
| Death of Prince Jules de Polignac, Prime Minister of Charles X. in 1830, at St. Germain-en-Laye | March 3, 1847 |
| The French destroy five corvettes belonging to the Cochin Chinese, and silence the forts in Turong Bay, for the purpose of avenging the treatment experienced by the French missionaries | April 15, 1847 |
| Institution of legal proceedings by the Procureur-Général against M. Teste, ex-Minister of Public Works, and President of the Court of Cassation; General Cubières, ex-Minister of War; and M. Parmentier, Director-in-chief of a salt mine company; for the sale and purchase of Government influence | May 3, 1847 |
| The ambassadors of France, Spain, England, and Portugal sign the treaty for terminating the civil war in Portugal | May 21, 1847 |
| Death of Marshal Grouchy at St. Etienne, in his 82d year | May 29, 1847 |
| The Chamber of Deputies sanction the prosecution of M. Emile de Girardin one of their Members and editor of the Presse, by the Chamber of Peers, for stating in his journal that the Ministry of M. Guizot had sold or offered peerages for sale | June 15 1847 |
| The trials of MM. Teste, the General Cubières, Pellegrad, and Parmentier commence in the Palace of the Luxembourg, before the Peers | July 8, 1847 |
| Death of Marshal Oudinot, Duke of Reggio, at Paris, in his 91st year | September 13, 1847 |
| The Duke of Aumale is appointed Governor-General of Algeria in the room of Marshal Bugeaud | September 17, 1847 |
| Marshal Soult is named Marshal-General of France, and succeeded by M. Guizot as President of the Council of Ministers | September 26, 1847 |
| Prince Jerome Buonaparte returns, by the permission of the Government, to Paris, after an exile of thirty-two years | October 10, 1847 |
| The Reform Banquets are prohibited by the Ministry | February 21, 1848 |
| Resignation of the Guizot Ministry | February 22, 1848 |
| Abdication of Louis Philippe | February 23, 1848 |
| Provisional Government is installed | February 23, 1848 |
| Formal Proclamation of a Republic in the Place de la Bastille, by the Members of the Provisional Government | February 27, 1848 |

The Churches in Paris on Sunday.—All the churches were open in Paris, and masses were said for the dead. In the cathedral of Notre Dame, the Abbé Lacordaire commenced his series of sermons, the first of which was long since fixed for that day. An immense crowd was present. The rev. gentleman first read the Archbishop's letter. On the demand of the Government the Archbishop gave orders to have the Domine, salvum fac populum, henceforward sung in all churches. The Abbé, addressing the Archbishop, said, "Monseigneur, the country, by my voice, thanks you for the courageous and catholic example which you have given; it thanks you for having known how to conciliate the immutability of the church and the sanctity of oaths with the changes which God effects in the world by the hands of men." The preacher, as if to give proofs of this immutability, wished to continue the development of the doctrine which he had set forth so eloquently for several years. He appeared to desire to entrench himself behind divine tradition, and to preserve it from the invasion of history; but the fire burst out, and the Dominican of the people, arriving at the proofs of the existence of God, cried out, "Prove to you God! Were I to attempt to do so you would have a right to call me parricide and sacrilegious. If I dared to undertake to demonstrate to you God, the gates of this cathedral would open of themselves, and show you this people, superb in its anger, carrying God to his altar in the midst of respect and adoration." The whole auditory were so much moved that they testified loud applause, which the sanctity of the place could not restrain. The Débats, alluding to this scene, says: "It is well: let the church take its place like us all. Let it show itself; the people will recognise it. Let it not have any dread of the Revolution, in order that the Revolution may not be afraid of it. God has delivered the world to discussion—Tradidit mundum disputationi. Let the church use its arms, the Word and charity, instruction and action. Let it aid itself, God will aid it."

Transmission of Parliamentary Packets.—The following information has been published by the Board of Admiralty:—"The most prompt and active steps have been taken by the directors of the several steam-packet companies on the south coast, including the South-Eastern Railway Company, the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, and the company of the London, Brighton, and South-Coast Railways, to secure the rapid and regular transmission of passengers quitting France for England. In addition to the Admiralty packets at Dover and Southampton, the fleet of steamers at Folkestone, belonging to the South-Eastern Railway Company, are in full work. The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway have equipped their new steamers, the Newhaven, Brighton, and the Dieppe, in an incredibly short space of time, and these vessels are now engaged carrying passengers between Havre and Portsmouth; the Admiral at Portsmouth having orders from the Admiralty to render every assistance to vessels arriving there with passengers from France. The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company have added their noble vessels Iberia, Monarch, Achilles, Madrid, and Braganza (now as Southampton), to this service, which are engaged in carrying passengers between Havre and Southampton."



PROCLAMATION OF THE REPUBLIC AT THE COLUMN OF JULY.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, March 4, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

Nos. 307 & 308.—Vol. XII.] SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1848. DOUBLE NUMBER. [One Shilling.

FRENCH REVOLUTION, FEBRUARY, 1848.

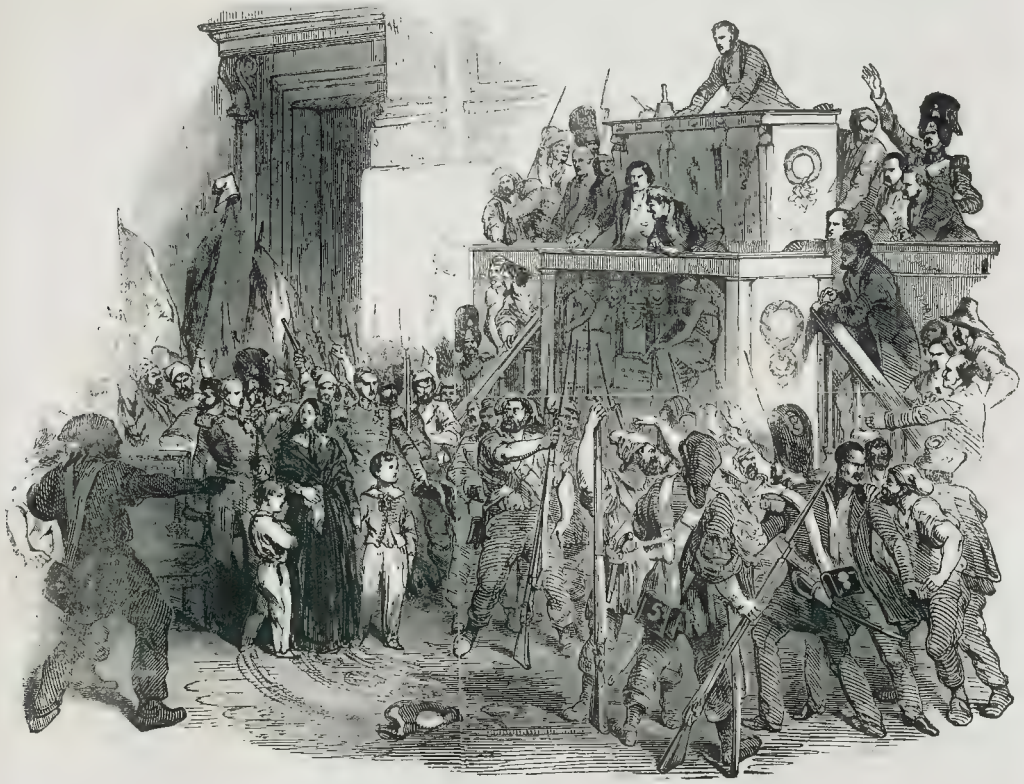
The spectacle of a great and enlightened nation, for the second time within the space of eighteen years, unanimously flying to arms in the assertion and vindication of its political rights, is one which cannot be contemplated with too careful a scrutiny. Its minutest details must be fraught with the most solemn and significant lessons to the people, as well as to the rulers of every contemporary nation. Wherever the light of popular Government has begun to dawn, or is approaching the lustre of noon-day—wherever the people have begun to breathe the pure, but intoxicating air of political liberty—it behoves all men to watch attentively, in the case of humanity, the calamitous episodes which may attend its progress, tracing to their origin the results of fraud or imbecility on the one hand, or of overheated zeal on the other. It has been the deplorable destiny of France to furnish more than one such lesson to the world, written in characters of blood, and read by the torchlight of rebellion.

Charles the Tenth, the last King of the elder branch of the House of Bourbon, had, unlike his brother Louis the Eighteenth, gained neither prudence nor philosophy from adversity. Thoroughly imbued with the prejudices that had once proved fatal to the interests of his family, he was unable either to place himself with confidence at the head o the popular party, or to remain an inactive spectator of its constitutional tendencies. Such an inability either to take part in, or support the progressive development of the French Constitution, ultimately led to the decisively hostile position assumed by the Deputies of the people with reference to the Polignac Cabinet—a position more embittered by the obstinacy with which the King supported the nobleman who was at its head, against the wishes of the nation, in a course of government directly at variance with the liberal spirit of a Constitutional Government—in this respect, at least, proving himself a worthy descendant of Louis the Fourteenth.

Looking back, enlightened by subsequent events, on the circumstances which led to the memorable Three Days, we can entertain little doubt but that the Revolution which in so brief a space transferred the Crown of the Bourbon from the elder to the younger branch of that Royal line, was more immediately the result of a hole-and-corner intrigue, which used the popular impulse for its own purpose, than of a real and active movement on the part of the people themselves. The bankers, the journalists, and the lawyers—men who could not profit by any disturbance which was thoroughly and completely levelling in its tendency—placed themselves at the head of the movement. The immediate outbreak which dethroned the elder Bourbon commenced in the attempt to suppress the liberty of the Press, and terminated in a change of dynasty. A Protest, signed by the leading Editors of the French Press, against the measures adopted by the Government, was the Revolutionary manifesto; Lafayette was the name which supplied its respectability to the cause created by such a protest; Charles Laffitte brought it the support of those who had money and means; and the Philippists—for by a personal party the first Revolution was immediately matured—only transferred the sceptre from one hand to another. In weight and metal it remained the same. The people who spilt their blood in behalf o their liberties, gained nothing, unless it were a confidence in their own strength, which has ultimately led them to displace the Monarch they then called to the Throne; and one by one, to repudiate the leaders to whose personal ambition and individual intrigue their wrongs and indignation had only been a convenient stalking-horse. The men of the Three Days have been successively laid aside by the Monarch they placed upon the Throne, or the people whose confidence they betrayed. Louis Philippe himself discarded Laffitte. Immediate protégés of the dynasty of Orleans had supplied the places of all the minor intriguers who furthered its elevation with a view to their own advantage. Thiers sacrificed his position to the paltry exigencies and possibilities of ministerial power. A place-hunter at heart—he sacrificed the trust reposed in him to the desire of profiting by the variations in the current of Court favour. Equally unscrupulous in his practice, but more sincere in his views, and enslaved by a theory which attempted to identify the constitutional form of a popular Government with the purely personal and dynastic tendencies of a family interest, Guizot succumbed after a battle of seventeen years and a half to the discontent and opposition of half-corrupted France. The iron will of Paris broke in the commencement of the struggle, under the painful consciousness of its own inability to do justice to the conflicting claims of the nation and those of the family of Orleans. After seventeen years and a half of continued effort to centre in itself the entire and uncontrolled Government of France, the family of Orleans has itself shared the fate of the elder Bourbons; and the King of the Barricades has been dethroned by the very agencies he had worked for the purpose of mounting a throne so peculiarly perilous to the want of faith which could forget the purposes and the rights it was presumed by its constituents to represent. In the sharper struggle and battle of an earlier Revolution



THE DUCHESS OF ORLEANS, THE COUNT OF PARIS, AND THE COUNT OF EU, IN THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.

Philippe Egalité, Duke of Orleans, the father, lost his head. In the more silent and constitutional struggle which has just closed, Louis Philippe, King of the French, the son, has lost his throne, unable to say with the chivalrous Francis, after the fatal field which terminated his contest for Continental supremacy with the Emperor, "Tout est perdu fors l'honneur." A deceived people has chased the Monarch, whose professions had cheated their legitimate expectations, from the crown he had stolen. To his own duplicity alone can he attribute the Revolutionary resumption of that crown which he inherited from a preceding Revolution.

The Duke of Orleans' first grasp of the reins of Government was made in the character of Lieutenant-General of the kingdom. It will scarcely be possible more completely to show the extent of the delusion entertained by the people, and fostered by those to whom the modelling of the new state of things was entrusted, than by quoting the proclamation with which the Lieutenant-General entered on his functions and the immediately subsequent address published by the liberal members of the Chamber of Deputies.

The first runs thus:—

"INHABITANTS OF PARIS!

"The Deputies of France at this moment assembled in Paris, have expressed the desire that I should repair to this capital in order to exercise therein the functions of Lieutenant-General of the kingdom.

"I have not hesitated in coming forward to share your dangers—by placing myself in the midst of your heroic population, and contributing all my efforts to preserve you from civil war and anarchy.

"In returning to the city of Paris, I were with pride the glorious colours which you have once more assumed, and which I myself had so long borne.

"The Chambers are about to re-assemble; they will advise as to the means of ensuring the supremacy of the laws, and the maintenance of the rights of the nation.

"A Charter will henceforward be a truth.

"LOUIS PHILIPPE D'ORLEANS."

The second, framed in the following words, was signed by ninety-one Deputies:—

"FRENCHMEN!

"France is free. Absolute power had lifted its standard; the heroic population of Paris has stricken it down. By arms Paris has ensured the success of the sacred cause which had vainly triumphed at the elections. A power which usurped our rights, disturbed our repose threatened at the same time liberty and order. We again enter on the possession of order and liberty. No more fear for acquired rights; no more barriers between us and the rights which still remain to be acquired.

"A Government which, without delay, should guarantee these benefits, is to-day the first want of the country. Frenchmen, those of your Deputies who were already in Paris have assembled, and, previous to the regular intervention of the Chambers, have invited a Frenchman who has never combatted but in the cause of France, Monsieur the Duke of Orleans, to exercise the functions of Lieutenant-General of the Kingdom. This, in their eyes, is the means of properly and peaceably accomplishing the success of a most legitimate resistance.

"The Duke of Orleans is devoted to the national and constitutional cause. He has always defended its interests, and professed its principles. *He will respect our rights, for it is from us he will derive his own. We will ensure, by laws, every guarantee necessary to render liberty strong and durable.

"The re-establishment of the National Guard,† with the intervention of the National Guards themselves in the choice of their officers.

"The intervention of the citizens in the formation of the departmental and municipal administration.

"Trial by Jury for offences of the Press.

"The legally organised responsibility of the Ministers and the secondary agents of the Administration.

"Legal security for the position of the soldier.

"The re-election of Deputies promoted to public functions.

"We shall give to our Institutions in concert with the Head of the State, the development of which they are in need.

"Frenchmen, the Duke of Orleans himself has already spoken, and his language is such as should be addressed to a free country. He tells you that the Chambers are about to assemble. They will advise as to the means of assuring the supremacy of the laws, and the maintenance of the rights of the nation.

"The Charter will henceforward be a truth."†

It will be seen that there is a difference in the phrase which terminates both proclamations. In that of the Lieutenant-General the opening words are "a charter." And, slight as the variation may, at first sight, appear, it derives significance from the fact that the Moniteur of the 31st of July states the variation to have arisen from a misprint—the original conception of the phrase having been identical with that which occurs at the close of the subsequent manifesto published by the Liberal Deputies. In the Journal des Débats the phrase was also printed, in both instances, "the Charter," &c. In all the other journals it is reproduced as originally posted upon the walls of Paris. It is, moreover, singular that the original of the first proclamation has disappeared from the archives of the Chamber of Deputies.

From the name and functions of Lieutenant-General to those of Monarch was but a short step. Yet, in taking this, an unexpected difficulty occurred in the republican prejudices of the venerable Lafayette, which at last, however, gave way to the personal cajolery of the Duke, and the determination of those who from the first had embarked in the struggle with the purpose of placing the House of Orleans on the throne. On the 7th of August the throne was declared vacant by the Chamber of Deputies, and on the 8th the lately-installed Lieutenant-General was offered and accepted the Crown of France. On the 9th of the same month he was solemnly inaugurated in his new dignity, under the style and title of "LOUIS PHILIPPE THE FIRST, KING OF THE FRENCH." The titles of Louis the Nineteenth or Philippe the Second had been previously debated between the new Monarch and his advisers, but discarded, from a wish to disunite the new order of things from all association which might link it to the old Monarchy. A similar wish dictated the new style of KING OF THE FRENCH, as which, Louis Philippe assumed the crown of a dynasty with which he was connected by the ties of blood.

From the first moment of the assumption of regal power by the Citizen King, a tendency was evinced on his own part, as well as on those of his advisers, to nullify that progress in the path of constitutional liberty, the security of which had been the object and the hope of the Revolution. But to this there were great obstacles. The absolute monarchies of central and northern Europe viewed with natural suspicion a Government engendered in popular convulsion and revolution. At the first moment it was evidently an useless effort to endeavour inspiring them with a conviction that a "Citizen King" could be as despotic in his wishes and purposes as themselves. Even after the recognition of the new system, Austria and Prussia but coolly received its representatives, while Russia did not hesitate to make the residence of a French Ambassador at their Court as unpleasant as want of consideration and personal disrespect could render it. England had tendered him the only recognition of his Government marked by any approach to cordiality. Moreover, it was evident that a probable sympathy between the constitutional forms of the two Governments rendered the English alliance the most desirable one for the presumed interests of the new Monarchy. There was little option left him, and we have therefore less to thank Louis Philippe's personal predilections than the necessities of his position, for the apparent good feeling evinced towards England during the first portion of his reign. A master in craft, he also felt, that, had he at first sought directly the countenance of the more absolute monarchies, the blows which he aimed at the liberties of constitutional France would have been less easily disguised. Nor, indeed, did he feel sufficiently strong in his newly-acquired position, to begin by treating his Ministers so unscrupulously as mere agents for dynastic aggrandisement. Nothing could be more dissimilar from the Louis Philippe who co-operated with Casimir Perier than the Louis Philippe who subsequently made a blind tool of Thiers and a willing one of Guizot. No sooner did the new régime fancy itself based with sufficient firmness to dispense with the humiliating farce of mere subserviency, than it dispensed with the policy of absolute artifice. Lafitte, one of the more immediate instruments in the elevation of the King, was compelled to retire. Bonhommie, pliability, and easiness of access were discarded by the Ministry. Casimir Perier became the head of the Cabinet. Representing in his own person the interests of the middle classes, and more especially those of finance, vehemment and domineering in his personal character, it was obvious that this Minister must work exclusively for the advantages and power of a class. But with this class the interests of the dynasty were at present identified; hence the Monarch, by the aid of the Minister, was enabled to take the first steps towards perverting the constitution in the interests of absolutism. Yet the temporary alliance between the Monarch and his Minister was so precarious, that the day after Casimir Perier obtained power he offered his resignation. It was only the conviction of his necessity that induced the King to temporize with so indocile an instrument.

The first act of the new Ministry was significant indeed. It was the disavowal of all the insurrectionary tendencies awakened by the example of France in the rest of Europe. From this it passed to the prosecution of sixteen of the most influential members of the Republican party. Although the Ministry failed in the prosecution, its very commencement, and the abandonment of Italy and Poland to their fate, were ominous signs of the intention of the Government to deny those principles, as the exponent of which it had been called to power.

In the Belgian Revolution alone, amongst the various troubles which the subsiding agitation of the Three Days gave an impulse to, did France take a prominent part. There can, indeed, be but little doubt that the only reason which prevented the acceptance of the Crown of Belgium, on the part of Louis Philippe, for the Duke de Nemours, was the fear entertained by himself and his Minister of coming to a positive difference with England, which had taken an active part in the settlement of the troubles of the Netherlands. The time for family aggrandisement and dynastic extension had not yet arrived for the subtle Monarch. He as yet distrusted the strength of his own position. One desperate attempt, it is true, was wrung from the growing intemperance of Casimir Perier, when he saw Metternich preparing to intervene in the pacification of the Papal States. This was the occupation of Ancona; but, in its results, this demonstration was all but valueless, counteracted as it was by the attitude preserved by the French Government; and Italy ultimately fell back into its old position, hopeless of liberty, and cursing the delusions under which she had been induced to trust to French support, and nurse the idea of a constitutional millennium based upon foreign intervention. In the midst of his power Casimir Perier died, the victim to his own excitability of temper, and the weariness of the continuous and fierce struggle he was obliged to maintain for the supremacy of the Chamber; and with him passed away the only apparent grandeur of spirit which ever appeared to guide the Government of the late dynasty. Zealously attached to the existing order of things, as that which was the most advantageous to the bourgeoisie, and, therefore, to himself—impetuous and overbearing, but prompt and energetic, there was even in his denegation of the principles of the Revolution by which he entered the Cabinet a certain force and elevation which palliated or disguised it. France was dear to him, but it was the France of the tradesman, the financialist, and the throne.

But even this degree of moral force passed away from the new dynasty with the death of the Minister. "Perier est mort," said the King; "sauve un bien? est-ce un mal?" His own opinion may be gathered from the fact, that within six months he himself took credit for all which Perier had co-operated in, or done alone, and attributed to himself by inference the prestige of having submitted so indomitable a will as that of the deceased Minister to his own. The improbability of this having been the case is self-evident, when it is seen that the next Minister who was destined to possess the confidence of the Monarch was M. Thiers.

It was no longer a zealous co-operator in the task of strengthening the foundations of the throne, that the astute ruler needed. It was a pliant tool for the personal aggrandisement of himself and his family. At the commencement of his career a mere journalist, without connexion or influence, his début in the service of the House of Orleans had been the compilation and authorship of his well-known "History of the Republic," since the time of Froissart the most living Chronicles which have been given to the world. With little pretension to take rank as philosophical history, they are the clearest, most intelligent, and interesting history of events possible; and, as such, at once created a reputation for their writer. But, in addition to their mere merits as a narrative, they were written with an ulterior object. The character of the licentious, feeble, and false Philippe, Duke of Orleans, called afterwards Philippe Egalité, was glazed over, and every more attractive position in which his son could be placed with regard to a French public was brought into higher and warmer colours. Not a circumstance was omitted which would conduce to surround the House of Orleans with the prestige of having been supporters of the liberties of France against the oppression and tyranny of the elder branch of the Bourbons. Jemappes was all but exalted into a level with Marengo and Austerlitz and the victories of the Consulate and the Empire paled by inference at the side of the one battle of the representative of the House of Orleans. As profuse and almost as needy as when he first sold his pen to the ambition of the son of Philippe Egalité, M. Thiers was the best of tools. Unfortunately he lacked the personal consideration necessary to the formation of a Cabinet solely dependent upon himself; and it was in conjunction with the Duke de Broglie, M. Guizot, and Marshal Soult, that he entered office.

The portfolio of the Interior was placed in the hands of M. Thiers, the member of the Ministry supposed to be most subservient to the personal interests of the Citizen King. The new Minister took the inheritance of Casimir Perier at a time when the Vendée was on the eve of an outbreak. The Duchess of Berri, in the hopes of exciting a civil war which should place her son upon the throne of his ancestors, had entered France; but the indecision of three of the leading chiefs of the Vendéans, and the counsels of MM. Chateaubriand and Berryer had deferred the moment, and the arrest of the Duchess herself, through the agency of a Jew named Deutz, her imprisonment in the citadel of Blaye, and the doubt subsequently cast with such infernal ingenuity upon the legitimacy of the Duke of Bordeaux, through circumstances at first unsuspected by the Government, put an end, at least for the time, to all the hopes of the Legitimist party. To his employment in the affair by the Government as one of the most unscrupulous agents it could select, the present Marshal Bugeaud owed the commencement of a career whose brilliancy will, in all probability, terminate with the fall of the dynasty, to which he rendered such signal but unworthy service.

During this period civil disturbances were still threatening the apparent stability of the Government; but these were invariably repressed with the strong hand. Grenoble yet discontented, and smarting from the outrages committed by the 35th regiment of the line upon its unarmed inhabitants, under the auspices of its Prefect, M. Maurice Duval—Lyons always ready to murmur—Paris itself still fearing another such disturbance as that which, shortly after the death of Perier, signalised the funeral of General Lamarque—Buonapartists, Royalists, and Republicans almost ready to make common cause, because equally hating the new order of things, kept the Ministry on the alert. The Citizen King was obliged to maintain his authority with arms in his hands, and suppress strongly and energetically the demonstrations of discontent, which might otherwise have shaken his recently acquired power, even amongst that very bourgeoisie, whose interests Casimir Perier had rendered at present identical with his own.

But it is far from our purpose, as it would be beyond the limits of a mere introduction to the startling events of the last few days, to follow every step by which Louis Philippe believed himself gradually to have acquired the strength sufficient to trample out the last remains of constitutional liberty. M. Thiers for a time served his purposes admirably. Guizot, whose firmness and jealousy rendered him intractable as a colleague, was consigned to the honourable exile of an embassy; and the former statesman became de facto the head of a Cabinet which was originally constructed with a view to give weight to his individual character. It was then that the Monarch and his Minister began to play into the hands of the War Party, for the purpose of acquiring popularity and distracting public attention from the real tendency of their plans. Here, however, M. Guizot, with a small chicanery that assimilates marvellously to practical swindling, became the active cause in the ruin of his former colleague. The conflicting interests of Turkey and Egypt in Syria had given reason for an intervention of the greater powers. France alone professed itself the supporter of Mehemet Ali. Deluded by the representations of his ambassador at the Court of St. James's, M. Thiers thought that he had still time to diplomatize and threaten, and France found itself suddenly isolated from the rest of Europe by the decision of England, Russia, Austria, and Prussia, to settle the question without her assistance.

This, perhaps, might not alone have led to the fall of M. Thiers; but, although willing enough to serve every personal or dynastic advantage aimed at by the Monarch he served, his old ties with the Liberal and Republican parties rendered him at times an incapable tool, and it had become necessary to forswear the War policy which had fulfilled its immediate purpose, in order to preserve the English alliance unbroken. Subsequent events have, however, proved, that, in spite of the continued exhibition of personal attachment to the Royal Family of England, and the very prominent manner in which the principle of the entente cordiale, as it has been called, was put forward, the King of the French was solely intent upon strengthening his Throne by alliance with the more absolute Monarchies rather than by the promotion of sympathies based and founded on resemblance in the fundamental and constitutional elements of national government.

It was not, however, at first that M. Guizot replaced his rival. A few unimportant changes and modifications of Ministries took place before this Minister became the right hand of the King, who grew daily bolder and more resolute in his advance towards Absolutism.

These modifications, however important in a detailed history, are scarcely in place in so brief and general a sketch of the position of Louis Philippe with regard to the French nation. Guizot did at last become the virtual head of the Cabinet, and ultimately its nominal one. When he entered it, he found the Monarchy strengthening daily, although slowly: one daughter of the House of Orleans seated on the Throne of Belgium; the heir to the sceptre of Louis Philippe beloved by the people and the army; Algiers still troubled, but gradually quieting; Russia and Austria yet jealous of the intentions, and suspicious of the character of the new Monarch; a Chamber of Deputies with an Opposition strong enough to trouble the Government; and provinces in which a weekly disturbance was anything but an unnatural occurrence. Two weeks since he might have told his Sovereign that he had given one of his sons a Royal bride and a Vice-Royalty; that he had wedded another to the Heiress Presumptive to the throne of Spain, in spite of the opposition of Great Britain; that, by his defence of the Gallician massacres, the support he had tendered the Sonderbund, and that which he had refused the liberalizing Government of Italy, he had secured him the cordial forgiveness of Austria for his sins against legitimacy; that, by abandoning Poland, he had reconciled him to Russia; and that, by his repressive administration, and unsparing corruption, he had obtained a majority in the Lower Chamber, which should stand his family in good stead of that son's popularity, whose untimely death had bequeathed the hazardous chances of his succession to the Throne to a weak and feeble child. It is true that the means by which these effects had been produced would not have borne too close a scrutiny. There were murmurs occasionally heard against the aggrandisement of the family of Orleans at the expense of France herself. There were angry interpellations addressed to the Minister on the subject of electioneering corruption. The Press complained of the numerous prosecutions instituted to stifle liberty of thought and expression. Processes had been commenced against public officers and men who had sate on the same benches with M. Guizot, for the sale of places. Judicial decisions had ratified the complaints of the public. It had openly been said from the tribune, that the honour of France was compromised by the abandonment of Poland; that England had been permitted to usurp the natural position of France in Italy; and that in Spain the more solid considerations of French influence and power had been trucked for the family aggrandisement of the Monarch. This, however, and more than this, might be said to the impassable and impracticable Guizot. On his own behalf and that of his master, he refused Electoral Reform. With a cold and withering scorn he repudiated MM. Teste and Parmentier; silenced the attack on his foreign policy by the numerical force of a Parliamentary majority; and, supple only to his Sovereign, trampled down all complaint with a stern and inflexible heel. But the cries of an insulted and duped nation were not always to be evaded, and when the last drop was poured into the cup of endurance, it overflowed.

* Words introduced into the original document at the instance of MM. Benjamin Constant and Bérard.

† Any obscurity which may be noticed in this translation, results from the literal fidelity with which the vague character of the original document has been adhered to.

The necessities of their position had forced the mere liberal party to act in some measure in conjunction with the Republican and Royalist leaders; and the demand for Electoral Reform ensured the steadiness and compactness of the minority in their struggle with the Ministry. The demand for Electoral Reform rang from the Chambers through the country; and the cry which had originated in a mere intrigue of party for place, symbolised the real wants of a nation.

MM. Odilon Barrot, Ledru-Rollin, Lamartine, and Duvergier de Hauranne were ostensibly the leaders of the Opposition; but amongst the more active Liberals were Generals Cavaignac, Bedeau, and Lamoricière, MM. Louis le Blanc and Armand Marrast. The country, already alive to the disgusting exposure of the corruptibility of the Administration caused by the processes of MM. Parmentier and Teste and General Cubières, responded immediately to the call made by these men; and a series of political dinners commenced under the title of Reform Banquets, to which the attention of Government was speedily directed. These assemblies took place from time to time in the provinces and Paris, and served as a means for enabling the Liberal Deputies and the more prominent Republicans to express their opinions without infringing the laws. At Autun, Corpiegne, Bezières, Amiens, Montargis, St. Denis, &c., these banquets took place; and at many of them, amongst the toasts drunk after dinner, the health of the King was pointedly omitted.

For some time it was doubted whether the Ministry would dare the risk of attempting to prevent such demonstrations; but in this instance the popular party had evidently not completely understood the lengths to which the Monarch and his Minister would push their determination to crush the rights of freedom of opinion and speech. Since the accession of Louis Philippe to the throne of France he had gradually prepared himself for a definitive struggle. Through the assistance of M. Thiers, whose co-operation was, it is probable, purchased by the Court, the law for constructing the forts around Paris had been carried. These had been constructed, and stored with artillery and ammunition. A large proportion of the troops of the line had been concentrated around Paris, more than 100,000 having been brought within that military arrondissement; and General Bugeaud was looked upon as the man who was to accomplish successfully that which Marmont had failed to effect in the Revolution of 1830.

So completely had everything been foreseen and calculated upon before the Ministers formally resolved upon forbidding the Reform Banquets, that, in the recent pillage of the Tuileries, a document was found—which we append in a note—marking the disposition of the troops for the purpose of repressing the expected outbreak on the part of the people.*

Beyond a doubt, the Monarch and the Ministry were prepared to abide the consequences of the collision they had so rashly provoked. Untaught by the fate of the elder branch of the Bourbons, the House of Orleans rushed blindly upon the same danger; and, fresh from the completed pacification of Algiers, signalised by their breach of faith to the gallant soldier who had so long defied their arms, madly offered themselves to the chances of one of those popular conflicts in which a victory would almost have been as fatal as a defeat.

The conquered and swindled Abd-el-Kader had scarcely set his foot upon the soil of those who had defeated and duped him, than he was destined to behold the conclusion of a reign whose commencement his own struggle with France had witnessed. A new, but happier Jugurtha, he has seen the overthrow of the aggressive Government which had conquered his untaught valour, in a more serious and vita struggle than any which arises between different races and peoples—the struggle which is as old as the date of the first Crowned Ruler and the first organised Government—the struggle between tyranny and freedom.—Absolutism and the fundamental right of those masses who are too often thrust upon the bloody necessity of conquering them at the point of the sword.

MONDAY.

The Reform Banquet of the twelfth arrondissement of Paris, which was announced to take place on Sunday in the Champs Elysées, had been postponed to the subsequent Tuesday, the necessary arrangements not being in a sufficiently complete state. That the Government would not interfere to prohibit it, was the general belief. A merely formal protest, it was expected, would be made on the spot by a Commissary of Police, upon which would be founded a legal prosecution. The whole proceeding, in fact, was looked upon as the practical assertion of a right, the legitimacy of which was to become the subject of a judicial decision. In this view the managing committee issued a new programme. The Deputies were to assemble in the Place de la Madeleine between eleven and twelve o'clock, and the other guests in the Place de la Concorde, and thence to go in procession to the place appointed. Ten thousand National Guards in uniform, but unarmed, were to line the route in double file to the Arc de Triomphe, which terminates the avenue of the Champs Elysées. It was also announced that only one toast was to be given, "Reform and the right of meeting," introduced by a short address from M. Odilon Barrot. The meeting was then to dissolve, and the National Guards lining the route were to disperse.

On Monday night, the 21st ultimo, proclamations by the Prefect of Police, and an order of the day by the Commander of the National Guard, were published, forbidding the Reform Banquet, and all assemblages of people, and prohibiting the appearance of the National Guards in uniform, unless ordered by their chiefs.

At a meeting of the Opposition members in the afternoon of this day intimation was received that this course had been resolved on by the Government. They immediately proceeded, 250 in number, to the Chamber of Deputies, M. Odilon Barrot at their head, and acting as spokesman, to challenge the Minister of the Interior as to the legality of employing force in the suppression of the intended demonstration.

To this the Minister of the Interior replied, that the Government had up to a certain period taken the view expressed by M. Barrot, and had been willing to permit matters to arrive at the point when an evident contravention should supply facts for a case in the court of law. But all had been changed by a manifesto issued by a Committee that morning, and published in all the Opposition journals. That address, in contempt of the law of 1831, called on the National Guards to form part of and a protection to the assembly, and appealed to the young men under age, the students of the schools. The law relative to mob assemblages, and that relative to the National Guards, were both openly to be violated at the call of the holders of the Banquet.

M. Barrot expressed fear that there was designed exaggeration in this statement. The National Guards were not invited to attend with arms.

The Minister demanded if self-constituted Committees were to have the mission of calling out the National Guards in order to maintain order.

M. de Courtais exclaimed "Will you dare to call out the National Guard? Only try it!"

The sitting closed in great tumult.

A meeting was immediately held at M. Barrot's; and it was resolved to abandon the Banquet. And their proclamation to this effect, entreating the people to submit, and announcing that a motion for the impeachment of the Ministers would be made in the Chamber of Deputies, appeared simultaneously with that of the Prefect of Police.

On the same day the Commander-in-Chief of the National Guards, General Jacqueminot, issued an order of the day, exhorting them not to disappoint the confidence of the country, which had confided to them the defence of Constitutional Royalty and legal order. Orders were then issued to the respective captains to have the rappel beaten in the morning.

During the night, between Monday and Tuesday, military waggons and artillery caissons, escorted by cavalry, were incessantly passing along the line of Boulevards which connect Vincennes with the quarter of the Tuileries and Palais Bourbon; and orders had been issued to concentrate troops around the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday morning. Orders to pass had been delivered to all those whose business or offices called them to the Chamber. The garrisons of the arrondissement of Paris had been increased to 100,000 men. Each company of infantry carried, besides their usual arms, a collection of implements for cutting down barricades, such as hatchets, pickaxes, adzes, &c. These were tied upon the knapsack, each soldier carrying one.

The following is the manifesto which was drawn up by the Opposition Deputies, renouncing the Banquet:—

"The General Commission charged to arrange the Banquet of the 12th arrondissement, after having been informed of the conference of the Deputies of the Opposition, inasmuch as the Minister of the Interior has declared at the tribune that he would allow the banquet, provided each person went separately,—that thus an opportunity would be afforded to the Ministers to allege a breach of the law and refer it to a court of simple police, a political right which is the main-spring of the Chamber and the whole country,—that thus the wishes of the Minister could be complied with, and that for its benefit would be delayed a farce beneath the dignity of citizens impressed with the solemnity of their duty; and inasmuch as the general manifestation which would have been attended by the population of Paris would give its true character to the proposed banquet; and as the measures taken by the military authorities would expose those who should persist to make a collective demonstration to certain collisions and shedding of blood; and as patriotism and humanity equally call on us to avoid such consequences, the Commission has decided that the banquet of the 12th arrondissement shall be adjourned. It leaves to the Government the responsibility of its provocation and its violence. It has the most entire confidence that the impeachment of a Minister who has led the population of Paris to the brink of a civil war, will be presented to-morrow to the Chamber; and that France, when called on, will, by the influence of its opinion, render justice to a policy which has so long excited the contempt and indignation of the country."

At the same time, the Electoral Committee of the 12th arrondissement expressed in a counter-document their surprise that the Deputies of the Opposition had not given in their resignation at the same time that they came to the determination of abandoning the Banquet, and inviting them, as the only measure capable of satisfying public opinion, to do so forthwith.

TUESDAY.

THE REVOLUTION.

At an early hour troops were in movement in every direction, and crowds of great magnitude began to assemble. By ten o'clock the river side in front of the Chamber of Deputies was thronged by some 6,000 men, chiefly students in blouses. All the avenues leading to the Palais Bourbon were occupied by horse and foot Municipal Guards and troops of the line. A squadron of dragoons was stationed in front of the edifice, while another, together with a battalion of the 69th, cleared the area in front of the Chambers, and the bridge of La Concorde, the mob quietly retiring before them, singing the "Marseillaise," and shouting "A bas Guizot! Vive la Réforme!" "Vive la Réforme!" On reaching the Place de la Concorde, they were joined by another dense column, with whom they proceeded, headed by two National Guards armed with sabres, towards the Boulevards, marching abreast in perfect order, and shouting in chorus the "Marseillaise." In this manner they arrived in front of the hotel of M. Guizot, whom they treated with a volley of groans. Some few began throwing stones, and several gamins kicked at the gates, one of whom took up a huge paving stone, and dashed it against the boards.

A body of the Municipal Guards, commanded by a Commissary of Police in coloured clothes, but wearing a tri-coloured sash, turned into the court, and deliberately loaded their guns. They were then drawn up before the door, and a body of Horse Municipal Guards rode up and dispersed the mob. The troops showed great forbearance. From time to time could be heard "Au nom de la loi" from the mouth of the Commissary of Police, calling on the people to disperse; and from the people, "Vive la Ligne!" intended to flatter the soldiers.

It was singular to observe, in most respects, the perfectly similar appearance of that quarter to-day and at the same hour of the 27th July, 1830. The same species of attack on the Hôtel des Affaires Etrangères (then inhabited by Prince Polignac)—the same measures of repression—the same expression of hatred towards the Minister on the part of the people—the same air of severity on the countenances of the gendarmes. Near to the gate occurred an incident precisely of a kind that was witnessed on nearly the same spot on a former occasion. A horse-soldier ordered a man to move on, telling him that if he did not he would cut him down. The man, folding his arms, and looking sternly at the soldier, replied, "Would you, coward?" The trooper rode off.

In other quarters the collision between the soldiery and the mob assumed a less serious aspect. In the Place de la Concorde, the Municipal Guards of the post, at the corner near the Turkish Embassy, sallied out and attempted to drive the crowd before them, but, instead of succeeding, were obliged to retreat into their fortified guard-house to avoid being disarmed; for not only did the people not give way, but absolutely pressed upon them. The soldiers had scarcely secured themselves within, when the people ran off in their turn, fearing that they would be fired upon.

Immediately afterwards the people stopped a carriage in which was a Ministerial Deputy on his way to the Chambers, which is only separated from the Place de la Concorde by the bridge. They made him alight, and then shook him for several minutes. Ultimately they allowed him to proceed. A different process was adopted towards, it was said, M. Marrast, principal editor of the National, whom they cheered, and all but "chaired." Thus the proceedings of the day displayed the same mixture of the grave and the gay, of tragedy and farce, that a French assemblage always exhibits. All that has been described was done in the presence of an immense force of Municipal Guards by a perfectly unarmed crowd. They were charged scores of times by the cavalry, who inflicted some very serious wounds with their sabres; but the people scampered off laughing, and subsequently returned to their previous position, and provoked new assaults by mockeries and execrations of the Municipal Guards and their employers.

During the great part of the day, in fact, no great apprehensions were entertained as to the results of the popular commotion. In support of this, a significant fact was cited, namely, that, far from falling, the funds at the Bourse had actually risen. So extraordinary an anomaly, however, leads one to suspect that this was no natural result of confidence on the part of the speculators.

Nevertheless, barricades were thrown up in several quarters, and became the centres of conflicts that threatened to become serious, although the greater portion of the people were unarmed. The soldiers, however, manifested generally considerable repugnance to the painful duties which they were compelled to discharge, and displayed the utmost forbearance; while, on the other hand, in the midst of apparent recklessness, and in spite of occasional disaster, the utmost good feeling seemed to be preserved by the assembled crowds.

The Chamber presented a gloomy aspect. Few Deputies were in attendance; the benches of the Opposition were completely vacant. M. Guizot arrived at an early hour; he looked pale, but confident. He was shortly afterwards followed by the Ministers of Finance, Public Instruction, and Commerce. Marshal Bugeaud, who was believed to have accepted the military command of Paris in the event of a revolt, took his seat close to the Ministerial bench. The Chamber then resumed the adjourned discussion on the bill relative to the renewal of the privilege of the Bank of Bordeaux.

At three o'clock M. Odilon Barrot entered the hall, accompanied by Messrs. Duvergier de Hauranne, Marie, Thiers, Garnier Pagès, &c. Their appearance produced some sensation. Shortly afterwards M. de Haurance went up to the President and handed him a paper, supposed to be a proposition for the impeachment of Ministers. This paper having been communicated by the President to M. Guizot, the latter, after perusing it, laughed immoderately. MM. Thiers, Dupin, Lamartine, Billault, Crémieux, and the Minister of the Interior and Justice, next made their appearance; but the discussion on the Bank Bill continued until five o'clock, and no incident of interest occurred. When the discussion terminated, M. Odilon Barrot ascended the tribune, and deposited on the table a formal proposition to the effect of impeaching Ministers. The President, however, raised the sitting without reading it to the great disappointment of the Opposition, but announced that it should be submitted to the approbation of the bureaux on Thursday.

The following is a copy of the Impeachment, which was published the same day in the Opposition papers:—

"We propose to impeach the Ministry of being guilty—

"1. Of having betrayed abroad the honour and the interests of France.

"2. Of having falsified the principles of the Constitution, violated the guarantees of liberty, and attacked the rights of citizens.

"3. Of having, by a systematic course of corruption, attempted to substitute for the free expression of public opinion the calculations of private interest, and of having thus perverted the representative Government.

"4. Of having in a Ministerial interest trafficked in public situations as well as in all the attributes and privileges of power.

"5. Of having, for the same interest, undermined the finances of the State, and so compromised the national strength and greatness.

"6. Of having violently despoiled the citizens of a right inherent in every free constitution, and the exercise of which had been guaranteed by the Charter, by the law, and by precedents.

"7. Finally, of having, by a policy openly counter-revolutionary, thrown into doubt the conquests of our two revolutions, and thrown the country into a profound perturbation."

---

* The document alluded to in the text was discovered in the cabinet of M. Berthois, the first aide-de-camp to Louis Philippe.

1RE ZONE (CAROUSEL).

1 bataillon du 21ème de ligne—à l'Alle Neuve.
2 bataillons du 25ème id. Ecole Militaire.
1 bataillon du 69ème—Rue de Lille.
200 Chasseurs d'Orléans—Vincennes.
Tous les disponibles du 8ème Dragons—Quai d'Orsay.
Idem du 13ème Chasseurs—Ecole Militaire.
30 hommes de Gendarmerie. 4 pièces—Ecole Militaire.
Lieutenant-Général commandant la 1ère Division, intendant,
Général PRETOT, de la Cavalerie.

2ME ZONE (PLACE DES VICTOIRES).

1 bataillon du 21ème de ligne—Assumption.
100 hommes Garde Municipale à pied.
20 cavaliers du 13ème Chasseurs.
Général FRIANT, de la Garde Nationale.

2ME ZONE (ST EUSTACHE).

2 bataillons du 1er Lége.—Nouvelle France.
1 bataillon du 99ème—Babylone.
100 hommes du Chasseurs d'Orléans—Vincennes.
3 pièces d'artillerie—Ecole Militaire.
Général ST. ALDEGONDE.

4ME ZONE (HOTEL DE VILLE).

2 bataillons du 14ème de ligne—Ecole Militaire.
2 bataillons du 7ème Léger—Montetard.
100 Chasseurs d'Orléans—Vincennes.
60 cavaliers du 8ème Dragons—Quai d'Orsay.
60 cavaliers Garde Municipale.
2 pièces—Ecole Militaire.
Général TALLANDIER.

5ME ZONE (LA BASTILLE).

2 bataillons du 29ème de ligne—Popincourt.
2 bataillons du 74ème de ligne—Reuilly.
1 bataillon du 45ème de ligne—Ave Maria.
400 Chasseurs d'Orléans de ligne—Vincennes.
140 cavaliers du 8ème Dragons—Quai d'Orsay.
2 pièces d'artillery—Vincennes.
Général DUHOT.

6ME ZONE (PLACE DU PANTHEON).

2 bataillons du 55ème de ligne—Oursine.
Colonel du 7ème Léger.

9ME ZONE (PLACE BALLE CHASSE).

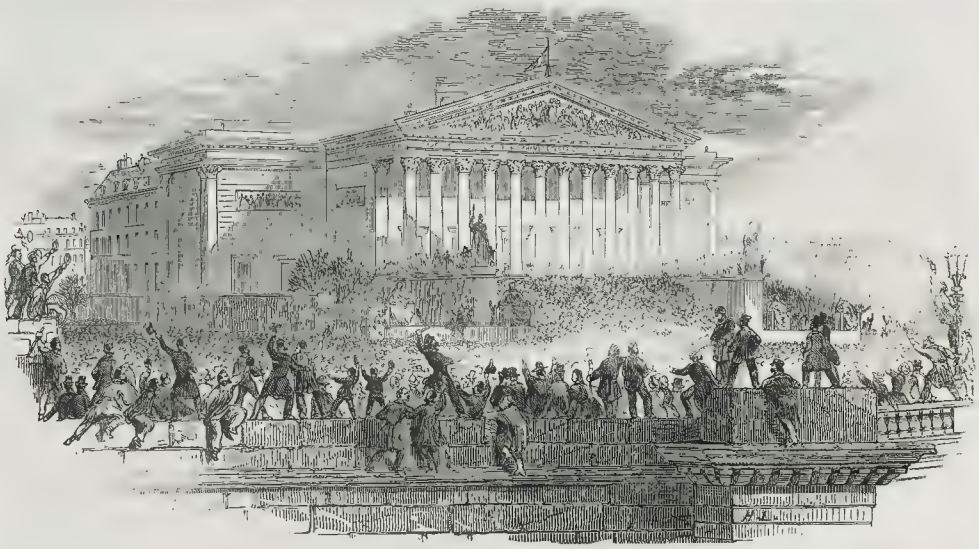
1 bataillon du 9ème Léger—Ecole Militaire.
Colonel LEMOURIER, de la Garde Nationale.

CME ZONE (BOULEVART ST. DENIS).

2 bataillons du 32ème de ligne—Pépinière.
1 bataillon du 49ème de ligne—Ave Maria.
180 hommes de la Garde Municipale à pied
120 cavaliers du 13ème Chasseurs—Ecole Militaire.
2 pièces d'artillerie—Vincennes.
Général GARRAUBE.

7ME ZONE (PLACE DE LA CONCORDE).

1 bataillon du 6ème Léger—Ecole Militaire.
140 cavaliers du 13ème Chasseurs—Ecole Militaire.
4 pièces d'artillerie—Ecole Militaire.
Général DELARUE, de la Garde Nationale.



ATTACK ON THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.

It was signed by the following members:—

| MM. | MM. |
|---|---|
| Odilon Barrot | Bixio. |
| Duvergier de Hauranne | Lafayette (Georges) |
| Thiard (général) | Marie |
| Dupont (de l'Eure) | Carnot |
| Isambert | Bureaux de Puzy |
| Léon de Malleville | Dussolier |
| Garnier Pagès | Mathieu (Saône-et-Loire) |
| Chambolle | Drouyn-de-l'Huys |
| Bethmont | D'Aragon |
| Lherbette | Cambacérès (de) |
| Pagès (de l'Ariège) | Druult |
| Baroche | Marquis |
| Havin | Bigot |
| Léon Faucher | Quinette |
| Ferdinand de Lasteyrie | Maichain |
| De Courtais | Lefort Gonsollin |
| Hortensius-Saint-Albin | Tessié de la Motte |
| Crémieux | Damarçay |
| Gaultier de Rumilly | Berger |
| Rimbault | Bonnin |
| Boi-sel | Jouvencel (de) |
| Beaumont (de la Somme) | Larabit |
| Jessepa | Vavin |
| Mauguin | Garnon |
| Créton | Murat-Ballange |
| Abatucci | Taillandier |
| Luneau | |

During the day great surprise and disapprobation had been expressed that the National Guards had not been called out. This omission was attributed to the fact that the National Guards, at the same time that they had announced their readiness to make every exertion for the preservation of peace, had expressed their sympathy with the cause of Reform. Several of them, however, had appeared in their uniforms in the midst of the populace, and had endeavoured, by their efforts, to calm the prevailing excitement. At length, at five o'clock in the afternoon, it was thought expedient and safe to beat the rappel. The manner in which it was done, however, was curious and significant. The drummers, who were preceded and followed by two sections of armed National Guards, were accompanied by some hundred young men in blouses, armed with long sticks, proffering shouts of "Vive la Reforme!" and singing the various revolutionary ditties.

WEDNESDAY.

The barricades thrown up on the previous day had, during the night, been everywhere demolished; and, to withdraw as much as possible the means of forming them afresh, early in the morning all hackney-coaches, cabs, omnibuses, and every description of public carriage, had been cleared from the public stands. It was observed also, that, at the Hotel of the Minister of Marine, in the Place de la Concorde, at the Churches of the Assumption and of St. Roch, and other places, the iron railings had been torn down, to supply the populace with weapons.

At about half-past eleven o'clock, the National Guards of the 2nd arrondissement, to the number of about 500 or 600, collected in front of the Opera House in the Rue Lepelletier. Soon after a general stir and excitement was visible among them. Loud shouts broke forth from the populace of "Vive la Reforme!" "Vive la Garde Nationale!" "Vivent les vrais défenseurs de la Patrie!" which were accompanied with the waving and casting up of hats, and concluded with the chorus of the Marseillaise, in which the National Guards loudly joined. They had declared in favour of Reform, or, at least, agreed in the condemnation of the existing Ministry. From that moment the cause of Reform may be said to have triumphed, and the Ministry to have received its doom.

An hour afterwards the National Guards formed in line and marched towards the Tuileries to declare their sentiments. They were hailed in all directions with the same cries, to which they returned a hearty response. In this manner they reached the Rue Rivoli, where between the Rue du Dauphin and the Rue 29 Juillet, they halted and drew up. Immediately an orderly officer from General Jacqueminot rode up, and after exchanging a few words with the Lieutenant-Colonel rode back in all haste to the château. The National Guards were soon surrounded by an immense crowd of the populace; and the same interchange of the popular cries took place, which must distinctly have reached the ears of the King and the Royal Family. Nevertheless no troops were ordered in that direction, and the people and National Guards were allowed to fraternise without disturbance, although the two extremities of the street were occupied by an immense force.

At about one they returned and re-occupied the Rue Lepelletier. A squadron of cuirassiers and half a squadron of chasseurs à cheval shortly after arrived. The chef d'escadron gave orders to draw swords. The ranks of the National Guards closed. The cries of the people redoubled, although not a man of them was armed. The squadron made a half movement on the Rue Lepelletier, when the officer in command of the National Guards drew his sword, advanced, and saluted the officer commanding the Cuirassiers. A few words were exchanged between the two officers in command of the respective parties. They separated. The one placed himself at the head of his soldiers, and gave the word to wheel and "forward," and they resumed their march, accompanied by cheers and clapping of hands from the multitude. The officer of the National Guards returned quietly to his post, and sheathed his sword.

THE SLAUGHTER AT THE DOOR OF THE MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

THE CROWD CHAUNTING "MOURIR POUR LA PATRIE."

These words, it is said, were as follows:—

"Who are these men?" "They are the people." "And those in uniform?" "They are the second legion of the National Guard of Paris." "The people must disperse." "They will not." "I shall use force." "Sir, the National Guard sympathise with the people—the people who demand Reform." "They must disperse." "They will not." "I must use force." "Sir, we, the National Guards, sympathise in the desire for Reform, and will defend them."

It is added that the officer and the cuirassiers cried "Vive la Reforme!"

In the meantime the Nationals of the third Legion collected to the number of 300 on and about the Place des Petits Pères; and their officers having held a council, agreed to depute their Colonel to the King to acquaint his Majesty with the wishes of the National Guard, in other words, Reform and the dismissal of the Cabinet. That officer immediately proceeded to the Palace, but was not admitted into the Royal presence; he merely saw General Jacqueminot, the Commander-General of the National Guard, who promised that he would himself carry the memorial to the King. The National Guards remained assembled on the square awaiting the return of the Colonel, their determination being to march upon the Tuileries if the reply was negative. Occasionally strong patrols were sent out, to interpose, if necessary, between the combatants; but no hostilities took place in the neighbourhood, the troops quietly remaining on the adjoining Place des Victoires, without giving the least provocation. The Nationals filed by them crying for Reform and the dismissal of Ministers, surrounded and followed by an immense mass of people uttering the same cries, and the soldiers by their countenances testified that they concurred in that wish. In one of the by-streets a detachment of troops, stationed there to intercept the passage, accepted bread and wine from the people, and their officers looked on, and even encouraged them to accept the provisions offered to them.

In every direction similar scenes to these occurred. Everywhere the National Guards were fraternising both with the mob and with the soldiers. The initiative, however, appears to have been taken by the 3rd legion of the National Guard, who, at the mairie of the 3rd arrondissement—Place des Petits Pères—declared for Reform this morning. The Municipal Guards, whose barracks adjoin the church of the Petits Pères, were ordered to disarm them, and advanced with charged bayonets on them; but the movement was imitated by the National Guards, the bayonets crossed, blood was about to flow, when the Colonel of the National Guards, M. Textorix (a stockbroker, I believe), cried out, "Hold, soldiers! These are the people; respect the people." The effect was electric. The Municipal Guards raised their bayonets shouldered arms, and marched off.

At half-past three, the Marché des Innocens and the Faubourg St. Martin were the scene of a melancholy and unequal conflict between the people and the Municipal Guards—a volley fired by the latter wounded a great number. A strong patrol of National Guards, however, arriving, interposed, and compelled the Municipal Guards to surrender their colours.

At the Filles du Calvaire there was also fighting, several cannon-shots having been fired in that street; and the General commanding the troops (Feyronet Tiburce Sebastiani), brother of the Marshal, is said to have been shot by a man en blouse.

Ten of the people made prisoners by the troops were confined in the guard-house of the Boulevard des Bonnes Nouvelles, which has uniformly been taken by the people in every émeute. The people attacked it at five o'clock, disarmed the soldiers, discharged the muskets, and then returned them, liberating the prisoners. They carried off the flag that adorned the entrance, and presented it as a trophy to the 3rd Legion of National Guards. The 5th regiment, which joined the people in July, 1830, was present during this affair, and again fraternised with the people. The people proceeded at five o'clock to the Prefecture of Police, to liberate the prisoners confined there. On their way, they called at the Reforme newspaper office, and were told that all was not over, that the Banquet must take place, and that good care would be taken to secure their liberties.

At three o'clock, M. Rambuteau, Prefect of the Seine, waited upon the King to inform him that the Municipal Council had decided on demanding the resignation of the Ministry. The King immediately convoked a council of Ministers, and brought the subject before them. The Ministers replied "Sire, renvoyez-nous." Having accepted their resignation, the King sent for M. Molé, who replied that he accepted of the Ministère de l'Emeute."

BARRICADE IN THE RUE ST. MARTIN

Towards half-past four an officer of the Etat Major passed along the Boulevards, announcing the change of Ministry, and the appointment of Count Molé to the Presidency of the Council. The feelings with which this announcement was received showed that this concession would not be deemed sufficient—that securities would be demanded for the future. "There shall be no mistake this time" was an exclamation heard in numberless groups.

Nevertheless, there was a short interval of lull; the firing had ceased; the troops were everywhere returning to their barracks, and some hope might be entertained that all might yet terminate without further disaster. In the course of the evening, however, an incident occurred which at once gave a fatal turn to the events of the day. As the crowd assembled before the hotel of the Minister of Foreign Affairs were uttering the usual cries, the soldiers fired without any previous notice, and fifty-two persons fell dead or wounded. A cry of vengeance was immediately uttered by the people, the victims of this abominable outrage, and several of them hastened into the neighbouring streets, shouting "To arms! to arms! We are being assassinated!" Shortly after a cart arrived at the offices of the National, containing dead bodies. The vehicle was surrounded by people, who were weeping and full of indignation, and who showed the bloody bodies, crying, "They are assassins who have slain them! We will avenge them! Give us arms!—arms!" The torches, casting their glare by turns on the bodies and on the people, added to the violent emotions of the scene. M. Garnier Pagès, being at that moment in the offices of the National, addressed the people. He promised that he would employ his efforts to obtain for the people thus attacked the satisfaction which was required from their impious and atrocious Ministers. M. de Courtais, Deputy of the Opposition, hastened to the Boulevard des Capucines, to inquire into the causes of this shameful butchery. He ascertained that the colonel of the regiment which had caused the firing to take place was in consternation at what had occurred. He thus explained what he called a deplorable imprudence. At the moment at which the crowd arrived, a bullet from a gun, which went off by accident in the garden of the hotel, broke the leg of the lieutenant-colonel's horse. The officer commanding the detachment believed that it was an attack, and, immediately, with a guilty want of reflection, commanded his men to fire. This officer was immediately placed in prison. Of this unfortunate incident another account is given, which attributes the firing of the soldiers to a spontaneous movement of their own, occasioned by seeing a young man walk up to the officer in command and blow his brains out with a pistol. This account receives no corroboration, however, from the French papers, and is probably unfounded.

A few minutes after, the buzz of an approaching multitude was heard from the Boulevard des Capucines was heard, and a low song of death, "Mourir pour la Patrie," was chanted by the throng, instead of the victorious "Marseillaise." Mingled with this awful and imposing chorus, the noise of wheels could be heard. A large body of the people slowly advanced. Four in front carried torches. Behind them came an open cart surrounded by torch-bearers. The light was strong, and discovered four or five dead bodies, partly undressed, which appeared to have been carefully ranged in the cart.

When the head of the column reached the corner of the Rue Lepelletier, the song was changed to a burst of fury, which will not soon be forgotten by those who heard it.

The Revolutionary storm again rose, loud and violent. The night was one of immense activity. Barricades were raised at the corner of every street. One of prodigious strength was built at the end of the Rue Richelieu. Every tree on the whole line of the Boulevards has been felled for use in the barriers.

A significant occurrence took place in the Boulevard des Italiens: three regiments of the line, armed to the teeth, preceded by five hundred National Guards, a regiment of Cuirassiers, three field-pieces, and three caissons of ammunition, appeared. The people coolly stopped and unharnessed the horses, and opened the caissons and distributed the ammunition. Numbers then mounted astride the guns, and were dragged off by their comrades in derisive triumph: the troops of the line, the Guards, and the people fraternising with enthusiasm.

The inhabitants were politely conducted to their residences. Fires were lighted for the bivouac. In the Rue Rambuteau, the people, carrying torches, knocked at the doors until some one answered. They then cried, "Have you arms?" "Yes." "Then give them." When the arms were given, the people wrote on the doors, "On a donné les armes."

During the day, in the Chamber of Deputies, the members of the Left had mustered in considerable numbers. M. Vavin, one of them, a Deputy of Paris, rose amidst profound silence, and said that he had a solemn duty to accomplish, which was to call the Minister of the Interior to account for the scenes then passing in the capital. During twenty-four hours serious disturbances had taken place in Paris, and the population remarked with astonishment the absence of the National Guard. On Monday orders had been given for its attendance. Why had they been countermanded? Why was it only after a first collision that the drummers were permitted to beat to arms? If from the beginning the National Guard had been called out, fatal misfortunes would have been avoided.

M. Guizot had shortly before entered the Chamber, followed by the groans of the 10th Legion of the National Guard, stationed without, who had saluted him with cries of "A bas Guizot!" He rose and said, "I have nothing to say at the present moment to the interpellations of the honourable member. The King has sent for Count Molé, who is empowered to form a Ministry." (Loud cries of "Bravo," and cheers followed this announcement, which appeared to annoy M. Guizot. He then continued.) "We are not to be prevented by such manifestations as those I now hear, as long as we remain in office, which will be till our successors are appointed, from doing our duty. We shall consider ourselves answerable for all that may happen. We shall act in everything we do according to our best judgment and our consciences, and according to what we consider the interests of the country."

After some interruption created by this announcement, M. Odilon Barrot rose, and said:—"In consequence of the situation of the Cabinet, I demand the adjournment of the proposition which I made yesterday (the impeachment). (Loud cries of "Yes, yes," and "No.") I will submit to the decision of the Chamber on the point. (No, no.)"

M. Dupin then rose, and said, "The first thing necessary for the capital is peace. It must be relieved from anarchy. Every one knows that the spirit of July exists yet. Homage has been done to the will of the nation. But the people must know that its deliberations cannot be in the public streets. The assemblages must cease. I do not see how the Ministry, who are provisionally charged with the public affairs, can occupy themselves at the same time in re-establishing order, and with the care of their own safety. I demand the adjournment to the proposition presented yesterday. (A cries of "No, no.")

M. Guizot: "As long as the Cabinet shall be entrusted with public affairs, it will make the law be respected. The Cabinet sees no reason why the Chamber should suspend its labours. The Crown, at the present moment, is using its prerogative. That prerogative must be respected. As long as the Cabinet is upon these benches, no business need remain suspended."

The President then put the question as to the adjournment of M. Odilon Barrot's proposition. About one hundred members of the Opposition supported the adjournment; the whole of the Conservatives were against it. The Chamber immediately rose in great agitation.

A minute after the entrance of M. Guizot into the Chamber of Deputies, M. Muret (de Bort) came out and announced that M. Guizot and his colleagues were out of office. The announcement spread like wildfire, and in less than half an hour was known all over Paris. At about eight o'clock in the evening an immense crowd proceeded to the residence of M. Odilon Barrot, and entered the court-yard of his house. Several even made their way into his apartment, although in the most peaceable manner. A deputation advanced towards him. He was at the time in company with many of his colleagues. M. Barrot addressed the deputation as follows:—"My Friends, I think I see your fathers of July, 1830: it is a display of the same courage—the same generosity. (Unanimous cheers.) And to be, like them, worthy of liberty, be calm in triumph; that is the character which is suitable to the cause of right and liberty."

Loud cries of "Long live Odilon Barrot!" were then raised. M. Garnier Pagès added a few energetic words to persuade the crowd to retire peaceably. The shouts recommenced with increased strength, and were taken up by the people in the Rue de la Ferme des Mathurins.

Late in the night the King sent for M. Thiers, M. Molé having declined the task of forming a new Ministry. M. Thiers immediately undertook, with more readiness than insight into his own position, to submit to his Majesty the list of a new Cabinet, making a proviso, however, that he might be permitted to join with him, as one of his colleagues, M. Odilon Barrot. To this his Majesty was graciously pleased to accede.

THURSDAY.

Upon Thursday Paris passed completely into the hands of the populace. The news of the dissolution of the Guizot Cabinet, and the summons of M. Molé to the presence of the King of the French, had caused the most lively satisfaction; but the destiny that decides the fate of empires had doomed the dynasty of Orleans. The gasconading brutality or ill-judged zeal of an infantry officer became the more immediate cause which threw the Crown of France into the market, and will, probably, change or modify the whole of the present political combinations of Modern Europe.

The indignant people, no longer satisfied with having effected a change of Ministry, now demanded a new form of government. The fall of the House of Orleans was henceforth inevitable.

During the whole of the night the people worked at the barricades. Pale, but resolute and fearless, they wrought in perfect silence; and when the morning broke, Paris was prepared to dispute her streets inch by inch, if need were to do so.

The majority of the populace was but scantily supplied with arms; yet the indomitable spirit which animated them supplied the place of weapons, and not a doubt or fear was entertained with regard to the termination of the conflict. This, except on a few scattered points, was happily avoided. The National Guard had fraternised with the people and the regiments of the line with the National Guard. The National Guard would not fire on the people; the line would not fire on the National Guard. The force of the Government was paralysed. It was about nine o'clock that the 45th regiment of the line fraternised bodily with the National Guard. The 30th regiment gave up their arms to the people at the first summons. At eleven the quarters of the five companies of Pompiers were assailed, and the whole of their arms and ammunition were given up to the insurgents. Similar reports were every moment brought to the Tuileries; and it became evident that if something were not done, and that speedily, the whole of the troops would desert the Sovereign. At eleven o'clock the following Proclamation was issued:—

"CITIZENS OF PARIS,—Orders have been given to suspend the firing. We have just been charged by the King to compose a Ministry. The Chamber will be dissolved immediately. General Lamoricière has been nominated Commander-in-Chief of the National Guard of Paris.

"MM. O. Barrot, Thiers, Lamoricière, and Duvergier de Hauranne are Ministers.

"LIBERTY! ORDER! UNION! REFORMS!

(Signed) "ODILON BARROT and THIERS."

Earlier in the day this proclamation might have satisfied the people, but now they knew their power, and were determined to guarantee and ensure the liberties which were within their grasp. The pusillanimous hesitation of M. Thiers to identify himself completely with the Reforming party had rendered him personally unpopular; and while on his way to the presence of the King, in company with Odilon Barrot, hitherto one of their favourite leaders, the populace assembled round the Tuileries had given audible manifestations of their displeasure.

Scarcely had the address of the new Government, hastily printed in the offices of the Constitutionnel and the Presse, been posted, than it was torn down. The march of events had swept past the original leaders of the Reform party. M. Odilon Barrot had himself in vain addressed the people. Listened to with cold respect alone, it was obvious that, if he wished to maintain his leadership, it must be by swimming with the current. Clinging to M. Thiers and the Orleans dynasty, he could but sink with them. Such is the usual course of Revolutions. The leader of this hour is the laggar-behind in the next. As the Girondins were effaced by the Mountain, M. Odilon Barrot was blotted out by the progressive will of that Reform he had adopted partly from conviction and partly from necessity. The active energy of the people had already left him behind.

The troops had been gradually concentrated round the Tuileries as they were withdrawn from the barricades. The people had been informed that they had been ordered back to their barracks. No sooner was this piece of duplicity known, than an immediate cry, "Aux Tuileries! Aux Tuileries!" arose; and from every part of the capital the insurgents began to march upon the Palais Royal and the Tuileries.

The suddenness and unanimity of this movement was extraordinary. By twelve o'clock the whole of this quarter of the town was invested, and it was evident that an attack was contemplated. The alarm in the Palace may be imagined from the fact that at one o'clock the following Proclamation was posted at the Bourse and in most of the streets:—

"CITIZENS OF PARIS,—The King has abdicated in favour of the Count de Paris, with the Duchess of Orleans as Regent.

"A General Amnesty.

"Dissolution of the Chamber.

"Appeal to the Country."

But this was again too late. It was in vain that M. Emile Girardin, who was, according to his own journal—the Presse—one of the most earnest counsellors of the abdication, appealed to the people, urged by their wrongs, or to the gallant Lamoricière, whose gratitude to the Orleans family for the rank to which he had risen in their service effaced itself in the bitterness of his feelings towards the Marshal Duke of Islay, and the consistency of his own Republicanism. The terrible cry of "A la potence Louis Philippe!" was now heard. At half-past twelve the attack on the Palais Royal commenced. It was taken by storm after a battle which lasted for nearly an hour. At half-past one the Palace of the Tuileries surrendered, and was taken possession of by the National Guards and the people. The carnage on both sides must have been very great. The computation is that there are upwards of 500 killed and wounded, but this is probably an exaggeration.

It was fortunate that the King and Queen, and Royal Family, were able to escape before the Tuileries was abandoned to pillage. The Queen and the Duchesses of Nemours and Montpensier left at one o'clock, escorted by a large body of cuirassiers and dragoons. They directed their way along the quay between the gardens of the Tuileries and the river, which was still in the hands of the Royal troops, and crossed the Place de la Concorde, towards the Barrière de Passy. It was generally believed that beyond the barrier they had taken the road to Dreux. It was also supposed that the King had accompanied the Queen and Royal Family in their flight; but, according to the Morning Chronicle, he left the Palace by the garden of the Tuileries disguised as a citizen, and walked to the station of the Rouen Railway, accompanied by two friends, with whom he took his place in one of the second-class carriages of a train about to start, and departed almost immediately. The same reports stated his destination to have been Havre. In London, on the Sunday evening, it was confidently stated that he was at the Château of Eu.

It now only remained for those who yet adhered to the monarchical form to endeavour to establish the claim of the young Count of Paris to the throne.

The Chamber of Deputies was to have met at three o'clock, but the events of the morning having deranged the order of business, the President took the chair at one o'clock, the time at which the bureaux ought to have met.

About three hundred Deputies were present.

The first proposition was that of M. Charles Laffitte, that the Chamber should declare its sitting permanent. A brief discussion left this question unsettled, except by the tacit determination of the members not to propose or carry an adjournment. No explicit resolution having been assented to, about half-past one it was rumoured that the Duchess of Orleans and the two Princes, her sons, were on their way to the Chamber. Shortly after, the Duchess and her children entered, followed by the Dukes of Nemours and Montpensier. The Count of Paris was led in first. With difficulty he penetrated as far as the semicircle in front of the President's chair, so crowded was it with Deputies and National Guards. The Duchess seated herself in an arm-chair, with a son at each side of her, in the space just alluded to.

Immediately after, the passages to the various parts of the Chamber were filled with an immense body of the people and National Guards, both armed. Cries of "You cannot enter!" "You have no right to enter!" were heard; but the next moment a number of men belonging to the people forced their way into the Chamber, and placed themselves under the tribune.

The Duchess of Orleans then rose, and, taking the young Princes by the hand, led them to the range of seats behind the Deputies, and in front of the President. The Duke de Nemours and the Duke de Montpensier placed themselves immediately behind the Princes and her sons. The greatest agitation prevailed, and it was a moment after increased by the public tribunes having been invaded by another body of the people.

M. Dupin, who ascended the tribune amidst deep silence, said, "In the present situation of the capital and of the country, the Chamber was bound to assemble immediately. The King has abdicated. He has disposed of the Crown in favour of his grandson, the Count of Paris; and has constituted the Duchess of Orleans Regent." (Applause from all the Centre and some of the public tribunes, with loud disapprobation on the Left.)

A Voice (from one of the Tribunes): "It is too late!"

An agitation impossible to describe here arose. A number of Deputies collected round the Duchess of Orleans and the rest of the Royal group. National Guards without ceremony mingled with the Deputies who had done so.

After the tumult had in some degree subsided, M. Marie said "The position of the people had changed since the morning, and as the Regency had been given by an act of the Chambers to the Duke de Nemours, it could not be transferred to the Duchess. A Provisional Government ought to be nominated, for the purpose of consulting with the two Chambers on the necessity of satisfying the wishes of the country." After a few words in support of this proposal from M. Crémieux and the Abbé Génoude, M. Barrot, who had just entered, made an appeal on behalf of the Count of Paris and the Duchess of Orleans, during which the Duchess herself attempted to speak. M. de la Roche Jacquelin followed, in a temperate but firm speech, insisting on the right of the people themselves to decide on a future form of Government. M. Michel Chevallier then ascended the tribune, but was violently interpellated during the few phrases he uttered, on the score of not being a member of the Chamber.

While he was speaking, a crowd broke into the Chamber, dressed in the most heterogeneous manner—some in blouses, with dragoons' helmets on their heads; others with cross-belts and infantry caps; others in ordinary clothes; but all with arms—swords, lances, spears muskets—and tri-coloured banners. They at once seized on such seats as were unoccupied; several even ascended the tribune. The President, to mark his disapprobation of their proceedings, put on his hat. This created a dreadful uproar, and the cry of "Off with your hat, President!" broke from the new-comers. Several of them even directed their muskets at him. The scene was one of almost unimaginable violence.

M. Ledru-Rollin, from his place, overpowering the tumult with his voice, called, in the name of the people, for silence. A number of the Deputies now withdrew, and the crowd took possession of their places The tumult was tremendous. The Duchess of Orleans, however, sat calmly amidst the uproar.

After some time, M. Ledru-Rollin succeeded in making himself heard. In the name of the people, he protested against the kind of Government which had just been proposed. (Immense applause; cries of "Bravo! bravo!" from the new-comers, and their comrades in the public tribunes.) Already, in 1842, he had demanded the constitution of 1791. (Cheers.) That constitution declared that it should be necessary to make an appeal to the people, when a Regency bill was to be passed. (The loudest applause.) He protested, therefore, against the Government that it is attempted to establish, in the name of the citizens who for the last two days had been fighting, and who would, if necessary, resume arms. (Cries of "Yes, yes;" cheers, with brandishing of arms, and in some cases, raising of muskets to the shoulder.) He concluded by demanding, in the name of the people, a Provisional Government. (Great applause.)

M. de Lamartine followed the same line of argument as that adopted by M. Ledru-Rollin, and was continually interrupted by thunders of applause.

At this moment a violent knocking was heard at the door of an upper tribune, which was not entirely filled. On the door being opened, a number of armed men rushed in. Several of them forced their way to the front seats, and pointed their muskets at the Deputies. Some of the weapons were also turned in the direction of the Royal party.

The persons immediately around the Duchess and her children now endeavoured to persuade her to quit the Chamber, and in a few moments she did so, accompanied by her sons and the Dukes of Nemours and Montpensier.

M. Sauzet, at the same moment, withdrew from the President's chair. M. Ledru-Rollin then proposed the names of MM. Dupont, (de l'Eure), Arago, de Lamartine, Ledru-Rollin, Garnier Pagès, Marie, and Crémieux, as members of the Provisional Government.

These names were received with acclamation. Cries of "No Civil List, and "No King!" were then raised by the crowd. Amidst the tumult which followed a shot was fired by one of the mob into the painting of "Louis Philippe swearing to the Charter." Great confusion ensued, and the painting would have been hewn from the wall, but for a workman who mounted the tribune, sabre in hand, and called upon his brethren, to prove that the people knew how to conduct itself with propriety after victory.

M. de Lamartine was then called for. On mounting the tribune, he said that the Provisional Government at once ought to be proclaimed. The names were then again read aloud, in the midst of cries and tumult; and at four o'clock the members of the new Government proceeded to the Hôtel de Ville, inaugurated by their own happy audacity, backed by the will of some hundreds of National Guards and as many of the people; scarcely ten Deputies having remained to the conclusion of the sitting.

Meanwhile, the Duchess of Orleans, who in the crush and confusion had been momentarily separated from her children, passed through the residence of M. Sauzet, the President of the Chamber of Deputies, accompanied by M. Crémieux and several other Deputies, in the direction of the Hôtel des Invalides, where a carriage was in waiting. It was, however, understood in the evening that the Duchess and her children were still in Paris.

The Duke de Nemours, who conducted himself throughout the events of the day with coolness, rode away with a large party of General officers, and no certain intelligence was to be learnt about him. The Duke de Montpensier was said to be at Vincennes.

During these events the insurgents had not been idle. The two palaces had been abandoned to pillage. The garden of the Tuileries was strewed with dresses, bonnets, music-books, and other ladies' gear. The furniture had been nearly all burnt on three huge fires, the one in the Rue Rivoli, and the others on the quay. The cellars of the palace were filled with drunken rioters.

Between the railing which separates the Tuileries from the Place de Carrousel, on which spot Louis Philippe had, at nine o'clock, reviewed a portion of the troops who were so soon to desert him, there were thousands of bloused and armed citizens, in all stages of drunkenness. The same distaste for personal plunder had, however, been evinced by the people as that which had distinguished the Revolution of July; and every man or woman who issued from the Tuileries was scrupulously searched by the guards stationed by the leaders of the populace at the gates. In the Palais Royal a similar scene had taken place. A huge fire kindled in the court had consumed the gilt chairs, paintings, canopies, sofas, settees, curtains, and tables, which were hurled by the mob from the windows. Amongst these was the throne on which Louis Philippe, for the first time, sate, as King of the French, ere he took possession of the Palace of the Tuileries. It was thrust into the fire amid thunders of applause, and the charred and burning fragments were subsequently trampled under foot in savage sport. Some of the splendid draperies were borne in frantic triumph along the Boulevards. The Palace was gutted by the insurgents from garret to cellar.

At five o'clock the Provisional Government issued the following proclamation:—

"TO THE CITIZENS OF PARIS!

"Paris, Feb. 24.

"A great revolution has just been accomplished. In two days public opinion has declared itself with an energy and a unanimity which, we have no hesitation in saying, find no precedent in our history.

"Eighty thousand National Guards are out: upwards of one hundred thousand citizens have taken up arms!

"You are providing for the wants of liberty; but the necessity of order must also be thought of.

"Therefore, organise yourselves, form patrols, mingle with the National Guard, unite together the different points of the capital. Whilst waiting until the public powers be reconstituted on their mutual bases, until the men who will undertake the direction of affairs have commenced accomplishing their duty towards you, it is you who guard Paris. Paris has confidence in your patriotism and your devotedness. Above all, let there be no division.

PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT.

| MM. | MM. |
|---|---|
| Arago | Marrast. |
| Dupont (de l'Eure) | Louis Blanc |
| Lamartine | Ferdinand Flocon |
| Ledru-Rollin | Albert (a workman)." |
| Marie | |

After this, tranquility was restored, only to be disturbed by the cries of drunken persons who paraded the streets.

Thus, after a reign of seventeen years and a half, fell Louis Philippe of Orleans, first King of the French. As a successful intriguer, called by a people to the throne from which the will of the same people had finally ejected him, he fell in the same fruitless struggle as that which had destroyed a preceding dynasty.

FRIDAY.

The first morning that dawned on the new Republic found Paris in an excited but perfectly peaceful state. The flush of a great and decisive victory was visible in the bearing and attitude of the people, who thronged the streets in immense multitudes; but their behaviour was marked with the utmost moderation and propriety. A large proportion of them were armed with every variety of weapon, from the regular musket to the improvised pike; yet was there no disturbance nor tendency to use them for anything but the maintenance of order, and the legitimate precautions of defence required by the new position of affairs. The barricades remained protected by bodies of armed citizens, whose deportment was everywhere characterized by the utmost civility. It must not, however, be supposed that crimes were not occasionally committed. So apparently convenient an opportunity for the misdeeds of the malefactor was certainly not allowed to escape. But in every instance the offenders, when discovered, fell the victims of popular justice, the decrees of which were summarily executed on the spot. Several thieves taken in flagrante delicto were tried by the bystanders, and shot without further ceremony. In some cases the bodies of the marauders thus signally punished were allowed to remain where they had fallen, with the inscription "Voleur" affixed to them, as ghastly warnings to such as might be similarly inclined.

The Provisional Government installed the previous day in the Hôtel de Ville, under the sanction of the sovereign people, was officially announced in the following Proclamation, which appeared in the Moniteur and other morning papers:—

"PROCLAMATION OF THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT.

"To the French People,—

"A retrograde Government has been overturned by the heroism of the people of Paris.

"This Government has fled, leaving behind it traces of blood, which will for ever forbid its return.

"The blood of the people has flowed, as in July; but, happily, it has not been shed in vain. It has secured a national and popular Government in accordance with the rights, the progress, and the will of this great and generous people.

"A Provisional Government, at the call of the people and some Deputies in the sitting of the 24th of February, is for the moment invested with the care of organizing and securing the national victory. It is composed of MM. Dupont (de l'Eure), Lamartine, Crémieux, Arago, Ledru-Rollin, and Garnier Pagès. The Secretaries to this Government are MM. Armand, Marrast, Louis Blanc, and Ferdinand Flocon. These citizens have not hesitated for an instant to accept the patriotic mission which has been imposed upon them by the urgency of the occasion.

"Frenchmen, give to the world the example Paris has given to France. Prepare yourselves, by order and confidence in yourselves, for the institutions which are about to be given you.

"The Provisional Government desires a Republic, pending the ratification of the French people, who are to be immediately consulted.

"Neither the people of Paris nor the Provisional Government desire to substitute their opinion for the opinions of the citizens at large upon the definite form of Government which the national sovereignty shall proclaim.

"L'unité de la nation, formed henceforth of all classes of the people which compose it.

"The government of the nation by itself.

"Liberty, equality, and fraternity for its principles.

"The people to devise and to maintain order.

"Such is the democratic government which France owes to herself, and which our efforts will assure to her.

"Such are the first acts of the Provisional Government.

(Signed) "Dupont (de l'Eure), Lamartine, Ledru-Rollin, Bedeau, Michel Goudchaux, Arago, Bethmont, Marie, Carnot, Cavagnac, Garnier-Pagès."

The Municipal Guard is disbanded.

The protection of the city of Paris is confined to the National Guard, under the orders of M. Courtais.

These are the first acts of the Provisional Government.

M. Dupont (de l'Eure), President of the Council
M. de Lamartine, Minister of Foreign Affairs
M. Arago, Minister of Marine
M. Crémieux, Minister of Justice
General Bedeau, Minister of War
M. Marie, Minister of Public Works
M. Ledru-Rollin, Minister of the Interior
M. Bethmont, Minister of Commerce
M. Carnot, Minister of Public Instruction
M. Goudchaux, Minister of Finances
M. Garnier Pagès, Mayor of Paris
M. Recurt, Adjoint
M. Geunard, Adjoint
General Covaignac, Governor of Algiers
General de Courtais, Commandant-General of National Guards.

The other Mayors are provisionally retained, as well as the Adjoints, under the name of Mayors-Adjoints of Arrondissement.

The Prefecture of Police is under the orders of the Mayor of Paris, and will be re-constituted under another bill.

The Municipal Guard is dissolved. The guard of the city of Paris is entrusted to the National Guard, under the orders of M. Courtais, superior Commandant of the National Guard of Paris.

In some copies of this document the following paragraph is inserted:—"When blood has flowed, when the capital of France is in flames, the mission of the Provisional Government is the public safety. All France will listen to it, and lend it a patriotic concurrence. Under the popular Government which the Provisional Government proclaims, every citizen is a magistrate." While, on the other hand, that beginning "Neither the people of Paris" is omitted. Another name also is added to those of the secretaries, that of Albert, who, in the printed proclamation placarded on the walls, where his name also appears, is described as a working mechanic. Whether these modifications were unintentional, or made with a view to adopt the Address to different classes of readers, it is difficult to say. Probably the latter is the truest interpretation.

In the course of the day the following notices were also published:—

"IN THE NAME OF THE SOVEREIGN PEOPLE.

"Citizens,—The Provisional Government has just been installed; it is composed, by the will of the people, of the citizens Frederick Arago, Louis Blanc, Marie, Lamartine, Flocon, Ledru-Rollin, Recurt, Marrast, Albert—to watch over the execution of the measures which will be taken by the Government.

"The will of the people has also chosen for delegates in the department of the Police the citizens of Coessidière and Sobrier.

"The same sovereign will of the people has designated the citizen Et. Arago to the Direction-General of the Post Office.

"As first execution of the orders given by the Provisional Government, it is advised that the bakers, or furnishers of provisions of Paris, keep their shops open to all those who may have occasion for them.

"It is expressly recommended to the people not to quit their arms, their positions, or their revolutionary attitude. They have often been deceived by treason; it is important that they should not give opportunities to attacks as criminal as they are terrible."

"IN THE NAME OF THE FRENCH PEOPLE.

"The Provisional Government decrees: -

"The Chamber of Deputies is dissolved. The Chamber of Peers is prohibited from meeting.

"A national assembly will be convoked as soon as the Provisional Government shall have regulated the measures of order and police necessary for the vote of all the citizens.

"Lamartine, Ledru-Rollin,
"Louis Blanc, Secretary.

"IN THE NAME OF THE FRENCH PEOPLE.

"It is interdicted to the members of the Ex-Chamber of Peers to meet.

"Paris, 24th February."

"THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT TO THE NATIONAL GUARD.

"Citizens,—Your attitude in these late and glorious days has been such as was to be expected from men long accustomed to struggles for liberty. Thanks to your fraternal union with the people and the schools, the Revolution is accomplished. The country will be grateful to you for it. At the present hour all the citizens form part of the National Guard; all are bound to co-operate actively with the Provisional Government for the regular triumph of public liberties. The Provisional Government reckons on your zeal and devotedness to second its efforts in the difficult mission which the people have conferred upon it."

Proclamations, addresses, exhortations, and every species of document now pour forth from the Provisional Government, couched in language semi-official, semi-bombastic. Oratorical tropes figure side by side with peremptory decrees, and give a strange excited look to all the acts of the new Government. The utmost eagerness is displayed to testify its presence to every department of the State, and to drive off full gallop with the car of Government, lest its wheels should meet with untimely obstruction from its lively constituents. The multitude and rapid succession of these proclamations render it difficult to introduce them into our narrative with any degree of order.

The distress among the working classes, the absence of work, and the dearness of provisions, formed, if not the immediate, a very powerful incentive to the revolutionary outbreak. Hunger and desperation were the arms with which the people resisted and vanquished a tyrannical and corrupt Government. The following address to the working men was accordingly well calculated to induce tranquility and confidence:—

"FRENCH REPUBLIC.

"Paris, Feb. 25.

The Government of the French Republic pledges itself to guarantee the existence of the working man by his labour. It engages, also, to guarantee work to all citizens. It recognises the fact that working men are entitled to unite together to enjoy the legitimate advantages of their labour. The Provisional Government restores to the working classes, to whom it belongs by right, the million which falls in from the Civil List.

"Garnier Pages, Mayor of Paris."

In the morning the people had been enjoined not to lay aside their arms, but to preserve an attitude of defence, as an attack from the fortress of Vincennes, though not anticipated, was yet possible. Preparations were made to march against that fortress the same day. All fears as to any danger from that quarter were allayed by the following:—

FRENCH REPUBLIC.

The garrison of the Fort of Vincennes has acknowledged the Government of the Republic. All the troops are sending in their adhesion to the movement with which all France has been carried along. At every moment the Provisional Government of the Republic receives from the towns and populations the most impassioned testimonies of sympathy with the cause of the people. "Vive la République!" Paris, 25th February, 1848.

The members of the Provisional Government,

Dupont (de l'Eure).
Lamartine.
Garnier Pagès.
Arago.
Marie.
Ledru-Rollin.
Crémieux.
Louis Blanc.
Marrast.
Flocon.
Albert (Ouvrier).

Measures were taken in the various Ministerial departments to prevent any branch of the public service from suffering any interruption. The Minister of the Interior addressed a circular to the Prefects, calling on them to proclaim directly the Republican Government. The Court of Cassation, on the demand of the Minister of Justice, and in conformity with the views of M. Dupin, Procureur-Général, passed a decree, declaring that henceforth justice should be rendered in the name of the French people.

To ensure peace in the midst of an armed populace, and abstinence from all lawless pillage, a competent supply of food was one of the most urgent necessities, and the following measure was wisely concerted:—

IN THE NAME OF THE FRENCH PEOPLE.

The Provisional Government decrees:—

"The bakers of Paris are required to place at the disposal of the chiefs of posts of the National Guard one-fifth of their make of bread, in exchange for checks of payment, which shall be paid to them at the Hôtel de Ville, for bread destined to the nourishment of the armed citizens.

"The distribution shall be made by the said chiefs.

"Hôtel de Ville, 25th February. "By delegation."

In the same view of ensuring order and tranquility, by giving a useful direction and employment to a number of armed men, whose want of occupation might render them dangerous, the following notice was conceived:—

"The Provisional Government decrees:—That twenty-four battalions of National Guards for active service shall be immediately recruited in the city of Paris; the enrolment shall commence at twelve o'clock this day, in the twelve mairies in which the persons enrolled may reside. These National Guards shall receive 1f. 50c. per day as pay, and shall be clothed and armed at the cost of the country. The Minister of War is charged to concert with the Commander-in-Chief of the National Guards of the Seine for the organisation, the prompt instruction, and the arming the said battalions. "Lamartine."

"Hôtel de Ville, Feb. 26, seven o'clock in the morning.

"Garnier Pages, Mayor of Paris."

The interests of the poorer classes are again wisely consulted, and their adhesion to the new Government strengthened, by the following decree:—

"The Provisional Government decrees as follows:—

"All objects pledged at the Mont-de-Piété, from Feb. 4, consisting of linen, clothes, and other small articles, on which not more than 10f. have been lent, shall be given back to the parties to whom they belong. The Minister of Finance is charged with the task of providing for the expense which the present decree will occasion.

"The Provisional Government decrees that the Tuileries shall henceforward serve as an asylum to invalided workmen."

It was reported during the day that a body of men had threatened or actually begun to visit the various printing-offices, for the purpose of breaking the machinery in them, and the following placard appeared on the walls of Paris:—

"Brothers! "Paris, Feb. 25, 6 P.M.

"We learn that, amidst the joys of triumph, some of our companions, misled by perfidious counsels, have wished to tarnish the glory of our

LOUIS-PHILIPPE, EX-KING OF THE FRENCH.

THE COUNT OF PARIS.

Revolution by excesses which we disapprove of with all our energy: they have threatened to break the mechanical presses! Brothers! These men are in the wrong. We suffer, as they do, the perturbations caused by the introduction of machinery into manufactures; but, instead of quarrelling with inventions which abridge labour, but multiply produce, we charge none but egotistical and improvident Governments with being the cause of all our grief. In future this can never be. Therefore spare the machines. Besides, to attack machinery is to stop the march and stifle the voice of the Revolution. It is, under the grave circumstances by which we are surrounded, doing the work of bad citizens."

An unfortunate incident occurred in the course of this day, through which the Pont Louis Philippe was destroyed. The toll-house having been set on fire about one o'clock, the flames caught the joists where the chains of the bridge are connected with the wood-work; they gave way, and the platform was precipitated into the Seine. The shock was tremendous, and several passengers who were crossing the bridge at the fatal moment were submerged and perished.

The bridge is henceforth to be called "Le Pont de la Reforme." Changes of a similar nature in the names of various public edifices and streets were also announced. "Liberté," "Egalité," "Fraternité," are to be inscribed again on all public monuments. The Royal colleges of Paris are to resume their old names, such as Lycée-Napoléon, Monge, Chenier, Fourcroy, &c. The town of Bourbon-Vendée is to be again Napoleon-Vendée. The Place Royale is Place de la République, and the same denomination is to be restored to the Place Louis Quinze and bridge. The Rue du Chemin de Versailles, where the famous banquet was to have taken place, is to be called Rue du Banquet.

The Commerce of this day announced that all the departments were following "the sublime movement at Paris." Rouen, especially, had joined the Revolution heart and soul; and 300 inhabitants of that city and Havre, with a copious supply of arms, had arrived in the capital that morning by the Rouen Railroad. Among the incidents of the day was the procession of a large number of people to St. Cyr, to bring in the pupils of the Military School, and to apprise them of the downfall of Royalty, and the proclamation of the Republic, which had been concealed from them. The young men of the school, to the number of 600, repaired forthwith to the Hôtel de Ville, and sent in, by a deputation, their adhesion to the Provisional Government of the Republic, with an offer of their services.

In the course of the night M. Arago, the Minister of the Marine, sent for all the French Admirals in Paris. They all attended. He then addressed them, and asked if there were any of them willing to serve the Republic? They replied, "All." He then said that he required a man of courage and steadiness—that he knew them all to be so, and that he was ready to appoint to the command of the fleet of the Republic any one they might choose to select. They declared their willingness to abide by his own decision. M. Arago then said that he had equal confidence in all, but that there was one among them who enjoyed an advantage which determined his choice—that of popularity, he therefore appointed Admiral Baudin to the command of the Toulon fleet. The nomination was at once approved of by all the Admirals.

This fact brings us to the termination of the first day of the Republic, which has the glory of having been marked throughout, although amidst circumstances of the most exciting nature, by singular order and tranquility.

SATURDAY.

In the interval which had elapsed since the first establishment of the Provisional Government, order had been in great measure restored. To this mirable conduct of the National Guard had chiefly contributed; but it must be admitted, that, but for the wisdom and temper exhibited by the people themselves, it would have been all but impossible to have preserved tranquility. From the country round Paris, and the provinces, however, accounts were scarcely so favourable to the pacific wishes of the more moderate Republicans, for the prevalence of public order. The fort of St. Valerian, the last of the fortifications which held out against the Provisional Government, had surrendered, after a considerable degree of resistance; but the Château of Neuilly had been sacked and burnt to the ground during the night. The splendid country mansion of Baron Rothschild, at Surennes, had also been burnt, under the impression that it was royal property. On the Northern Railway, at different intervals as far as Pontoise, the rails had been taken up. A viaduct had been destroyed between Paris and Amiens, and another between Amiens and the frontiers of Belgium. The railway stations at St. Denis, Enghien, Pontoise, &c., had also been burnt. The destruction of the bridge of Asmeres, on the Rouen line, had also put a complete stop to traffic. These wanton displays of insurrectionary rage were likely to be severely felt in Paris, as they would probably interpose new obstacles to the arrival of provisions, a probable dearth of which had already demanded the attention of the Provisional Government. In addition to this, rumours of the most idle and occasionally contradictory nature were circulated through the whole of the day for party purposes. The public papers asserted Belgium to have declared itself a Republic. It was reported that London was in flames, and the Queen Victoria a fugitive; that Louis Philippe was dead from an attack of apoplexy immediately consequent on his arrival in London, and that the Russian and Austrian ambassadors at Paris had demanded their passports. It was also reported, late in the day, that the prisoners had escaped from Poissy. On the other hand, it was positively known that the Minister of the Interior had received telegraphic intelligence, that the Republic had been proclaimed at Lille, Tours, Bordeaux, Dijon, Boulogne, Amiens, and many other towns, and had everywhere been adhered to with joy and enthusiasm.

Early in the morning Admiral Baudin left Paris for Toulon. He was immediately to sail for Algiers. His instructions are to take possession of any ships he may find in the port of Algiers, and to proclaim Algeria an integral province of the French Republic.

The following address to the citizens of Paris appeared in the Moniteur of this day, bearing date from the preceding evening:—

"CITIZENS OF PARIS,—

"The emotion which agitates the capital would compromise, not the victory, but the prosperity of the people; it would retard the advantages to be derived from the conquests which it has effected in these two immortal days. This emotion will calm down in a little time, for it has no longer any real cause in existing facts.

"The Government, which was overturned on the 22nd, has fled.

"The army returns hour by hour to its duty towards the people, and to its glory, which consists in devotedness to the nation alone.

"The circulation, suspended by the barricades, is being prudently but rapidly established; provisions are assured, and the bakers are provided with flour for 35 days.

"The Generals bring in to us the most complete and most spontaneous adhesions.

"One thing alone still retards the sentiment of public security, and that is, the agitation of the people, which is want of work, and the ill-founded distrust which causes the shops to be kept closed, and puts a stop to business.

"To morrow, the uneasy agitation of a suffering part of the population will disappear, under the impression of the works which are about to be resumed, and of the enrolments of men receiving pay, which the Provisional Government has decreed to-day.

"It is not weeks which we demand from the capital and the people to show a popular power fully re-organised, and to exhibit a return of that calm which full work and occupation produce: two days more, and public peace will be completely restored! two days more, and liberty will be immovably established! two days more, and the people will have its Government."

This address was signed by the Provisional Government, and immediately preceded the following decrees, bearing the same date:—

"The Provisional Government of the French Republic being informed that certain soldiers have put down their arms and deserted, gives the most severe orders in the departments, that the men who thus abandon their corps may be arrested, and punished with all the rigour of the law Never had the country more need of its army to assure its independence, abroad and its liberty at home. The Provisional Government, before having recourse to the law, appeals to the patriotism of the army.

"The Provisional Government decrees as follows.—All objects pledged at the Mont-de-Piété, from Feb. 4, consisting of linen, clothes, and other small articles, on which not more than ten francs have been lent, shall be given back to the parties to whom they belong. The Minister Finance is charged with the task of providing for the expense which the present decree will occasion.

"The Provisional Government decrees that the Tuileries shall henceforward serve as an asylum to invalided workmen.

"The Provisional Government decrees:—The National Guards, dissolved by the former Government, are re-organised. They will immediately resume their duty throughout the whole extent of the Republic.

"The Provisional Government decrees:—The children of citizens killed are adopted by the country. The Republic charges itself with all assistance to be given to the wounded, and to the families of the victims of the monarchical Government."

(Signed by the Provisional Government.)

"The Provisional Government of the Republic decrees:—General Subervie is appointed Minister of War; General Bedeau to the command of the first military division; M. Etienne Arago, Director-General of the Post-office; M. Guinard, Chief of the Staff of the National Guard of Paris; M. Buchez, Deputy to the Mayor of Paris; M. Recurt, Deputy to the Mayor of Paris, is delegated by the Mayor of Paris to the Prefecture of Police; General Duvivier is charged with the organisation of the moveable National Guard, of whom he is appointed Commander-in-Chief.

"Given at the Hôtel-de-Ville, Feb. 23"

(Signed by the Provisional Government.)

By a decree signed by M. Crémieux, Minister of Justice and Member of the Provisional Government, the following Procureurs-General at Courts of Appeal were dismissed from their functions:—M. Delangle, at the Court of Appeal of Paris; M. de Peyramont, at Angers; M. de Golbéry, at Besançon; M. Parès, at Colmar; M. Corbin, at Orleans; M. Blanchet, at Grenoble; M. Preux, at Douai; M. Didelot, at Bourges; and M. Lepeytre, at Caen.

The Provisional Government has also announced that the civil, judicial, and administrative functionaries are released from their oath, and that the tricolor is to continue the national flag.

The whole of the colonels of the twelve Legions of National Guards have also been dismissed, and all political prisoners set at liberty.

It was not of course to be supposed that the regularity and determination with which the Provisional Government had entered on their functions could inspire at once a perfect sympathy in the citizens. As on the preceding day, however, malefactors were summarily disposed of by the populace themselves, without the intervention of the magistrates. A man who attempted to set fire to the Palais Royal was shot near the Prefecture; and two others, one for endeavouring to set fire to the buildings in the Parc Monceau, and the other for a barbarous assassination and robbery, met with a similar fate. In the Rue Richelieu two thieves were shot, and their bodies left lying on the spot, with a paper on their breasts, having the word "Voleur" in large characters inscribed upon it. Another band of eight robbers was brought out for execution in the same unceremonious manner in the Place de la Madeleine. Somewhat staggered by the largeness of the number, the improvised executioners hesitated; but on carrying them to the mairie of the first arrondissement, and obtaining the sanction of the Mayor, the criminals, of whose guilt there could be no doubt, as they were caught in the act of pillage, were rapidly disposed of in the usual manner.

During this, of course, the usual personal intrigues incidental to the transition of a Revolution continued. The cry of "Plus des Bourbons!" had been exchanged for that of "Plus de Royauté," and all emblems of Royalty on the palaces and public buildings had been defaced; but occasionally a cry of Vive l'Empereur! was to be heard, and the name of Louis Napoleon was from time to time mentioned.

The National was also obliged vehemently to contradict the report of disunion existing amongst the members of the Provisional Government, and several times during the day the members of the Government itself had to contend with the excited and heated passions of the unruly portion of the Republican party.

About twelve o'clock, a great number of workmen, armed, presented themselves at the Ministry of the Interior. Some of them having manifested an intention of entering, M. Ledru-Rollin, in an energetic address, enjoined them to withdraw. They then offered to go to Vincennes, and possess themselves of the arms in that fort, lest they should fall into the hands of the enemies of the people, but the Minister of the Interior reassured them on that point, by announcing that M. F. Flocon had been sent to take possession of the fort. M. Ledru-Rollin then invited them to proceed to the Ecole Militaire, to be organised as National Guards for active service, with which recommendation they ultimately complied. Several similar scenes took place in the course of the day, at the Hôtel de Ville, where the members of the Government had been permanently sitting since the close of Wednesday's debate in the Chamber of Deputies. Five times, in the course of the day, the Government had recourse to the eloquent words of M. de Lamartine, for the purpose of quieting the enthusiasm of the people. On one occasion he defended the resolution of the Government to return the tricolor or the national flag, in the following eloquent words:—"It is thus you are led from calumny to calumny against the men who have devoted themselves head, heart, and breast, to give you a real Republic. Yesterday you asked us to usurp, in the name of the people of Paris, the rights of 35,000,000 of men, to vote an absolute Republic, instead of a Republic invested with the strength of their consent; that is to say, to make that Republic, imposed and not consented to, the will of a part of the people, instead of the will of the whole nation. To-day you demand from us the red flag instead of the tricolor. Citizens! I will never adopt the red flag; and I will explain why I oppose it with all the strength of my patriotism. It is, citizens, because the tricolor flag has made the tour of the world, under the Republic and the Empire, with our liberties and our glories, and that the red flag has only made the tour of the Champ de Mars, trained through torrents of the blood of the people." Subsequently M. de Lamartine appeared before the people in front of the Hotel de Ville, and, on the part of the Government, proclaimed the Republic in the following terms:—

"CITIZENS!

"The Provisional Government of the Republic has called upon the people to witness its gratitude for the magnificent national co-operation which has just accepted these new institutions.

"The Provisional Government of the Republic has only joyful intelligence to announce to the people here assembled.

"Royalty is abolished.

"The Republic is proclaimed.

"The people will exercise their political rights.

"National workshops are open for those who are without work.

"The army is being reorganised. The National Guard indissolubly unites itself with the people, so as to promptly restore order with the same hand that had only the preceding moment conquered our liberty.

"Finally, Gentlemen, the Provisional Government was anxious to be itself the bearer to you of the last decree it had resolved on and signed in this memorable sitting, that is, the abolition of the penalty of death for political matters.

"This is the noblest decree, gentlemen, that has ever issued from the mouths of a people the day after their victory. It is the character of the French nation which escapes in one spontaneous cry from the soul of its Government. We have brought it with us, and I will now read it to you. There is not a more becoming homage to a people than the spectacle of its own magnanimity."

This speech was received with tremendous applause and cheers. As the decree for abolishing the penalty of death for political offences not appear in any of the reports of the scene, it is probable that it was not read. But M. Dupont de l'Eure, leaning on the arm of Louis Blanc, and accompanied by the other members of the Government, afterwards appeared on the balcony of the room which was formerly called the Chamber of the Throne to receive anew the consecration of the popular voice. The people then separated peaceably, but with renewed acclamations.

In spite of the occasional doubt inspired by these and similar ebullitions of popular feeling, confidence was nevertheless gradually restored; and, as barricades were removed, and paving-stones returned to their old places, the shops opened, and trade resumed its functions—a significant testimony of the faith entertained by the bourgeoisie in the strength and Constitutional tendencies of the new Government. To this, most undoubtedly, the conduct of the Bank of France in no slight degree contributed—so infallible a thermometer of the confidence to be reposed in a Government is the state of commercial affairs. The Bank had, during the day, accepted the bills which were remitted to it by merchants, and kept at their disposal the value in cash.* At a meeting of the principal merchants of Paris, it was decided to postpone by twelve days the right of exacting commercial bills falling due from 22nd Feb. to 5th March next.

M. de Rothschild had also intimated to the Provisional Government that he was prepared to observe all his engagements towards the State for the new loan.†

From these indications, it may be reasonably concluded that the check to business will only be a momentary one, and that commercial affairs will soon resume their ordinary course.

In addition to the previous proclamation of the popular will, the following was subsequently published, and posted on the walls of Paris:—

"THE SOVEREIGN PEOPLE

"Declare,

"That the Government, having betrayed its trust, is de facto and de jure dissolved!

"Consequently,

"The people resume the full exercise of their sovereignty, and decree as follows:—

"The Chamber of Peers, which only represents the interests of the aristocracy, is suppressed.

"The Chamber of Deputies, which is the mere representative of privilege, monopoly, and corruption, and the majority of whose members have been participators in the unpardonable crime of the Government, which has subjected the citizens to a murderous fire, is hereby, and remains, dissolved.

"The nation, from the present moment, is constituted a Republic.

"All citizens should remain in arms, and defend their barricades until they have acquired the enjoyment of all their rights as citizens and as operatives.

"Every citizen who has attained his majority is a National Guard.

"Every citizen is an elector.

"Absolute freedom of thought and liberty of the press, right of political and industrial associations, to be secured to all.

"As the Government of the future can only respect the wishes and the interests of all classes, all Frenchmen should assemble together in the respective communes, in deliberative assemblies, in order to elect new and real representatives of the country.

"Until the nation has formally declared its will on this head, every attempt to restore obsolete powers must be deemed an usurpation, and it is the duty of every citizen to resist any such attempt by force!

"Brethren! Let us be calm and dignified, in the name of liberty, equality, and human fraternity!"

(Signed by the Provisional Government.)

M. Portalis, the new Procureur-General, had also, in the course of the day, issued a warrant for the arrest of the late Ministers. This warrant was granted on an act of accusation‡ presented to the

* To the amount, it is said, of 7,000,000 francs.

† M. Rothschild is also understood to have transmitted 50,000 francs to the Mayor of Paris, as a contribution to the subscription on behalf of the wounded.

‡ The form of this requisition was as follows:—

"We, Procureur-Général to the Court,

"Considering that the Ministers of the ex-King Louis Philippe, in preventing an act not forbidden by the law, and in placing in many parts of Paris masses of troops with orders to fire on the citizens, are guilty of a crime provided for by art. 91 of the penal code:—

"That in fact that act, if it be established by the instruction, does constitute the crime of attempting to excite the citizens and inhabitants to arm themselves against one another, and to carry devastation, massacre, and pillage in the communes of Paris.

"Considering that after that attempt, and to ensure its execution, the same inculpated parties gave on the days of Wednesday, the 23rd, and Thursday, the 24th February, instructions and orders to fire on the citizens, which equally constitutes a crime provided for and punished by our penal laws.

"Considering that in all affairs the courts of appeal, even though they have not decided if there be cause for pronouncing the act of accusation, can by their office, whether there be or be not an instruction com-

Court of Appeal. It was, however, considered unlikely that they were still in Paris," those, at least, who are most compromised by the late changes.

The ex-Prefect of Police and the Duke of Montebello, ex-Minister of Marine and the Colonies, arrived in London on Saturday. The latter is at present residing with the Hon F. Charteris, M.P., and Lady Anne Charteris, at their residence, in Chesham-place.

In the position of affairs.

The only one of the Diplomatists present in Paris, who had taken any decisive step with regard to the Provisional Government, was Mr. Rush, the Ambassador from the United States, who visited the Hôtel de Ville, in the course of the day, for the purpose, it is believed, of recognising its authority, and presenting his warm congratulations.

In the evening the city was illuminated. The "Marseillaise" and the hymn of the Girondins resounded on all sides; the voices of women and children joining in concord with the male tones of the heroes of the 24th. In the Passage Verdot, the Lyric Society of the children of Paris sang popular hymns, composed and arranged for the event, which drew forth peals of applause at the end of every strophe. At the barricades yet undestroyed the citizens and National Guards did duty, and the strictest military aspect was observed. No breach of the public peace was reported on the following morning.

SUNDAY.

The proclamation abolishing the penalty of death for political offences, alluded to by M. de Lamartine in making the official declaration of the Republic on the preceding day to the citizens assembled in front of the Hôtel de Ville, was this morning published—a proclamation alike honourable to the principles of the Government and the cause which it represents, and worthy of the sacred character of the day on which it was first issued.

"THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

"LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY.

"The Provisional Government, convinced that greatness of soul is the highest degree of policy, and that each revolution effected by the French people owes to the world the consecration of an additional philosophical truth;

"Considering that there is no more sublime principle than the inviolability of human life;

"Considering that in the memorable days in which we live, the Provisional Government has remarked with pride that not a single cry for vengeance or for death has dropped from the mouths of the people;

"Declares:—

"That in its opinion the punishment of death for political offences is abolished, and that it will present that wish to the definitive ratification of the National Assembly.

"The Provisional Government has so firm a conviction of this truth, that it proclaims, in the name of the French people, that if the guilty men who have just caused the blood of France to be spilt were in the hands of the people, it would in their opinion be a more exemplary chastisement to degrade them than to put them to death."

An order from the Minister of Justice was also published, carrying out the noble principle laid down in this document.†

Garnier Pagès had already published a proclamation taking the public edifices under the care of the Government as national property. This was now followed by an address to the citizens of Paris, calling on them to permit the collection of the duties and tolls at present existing, for the unavoidable expenses which the municipality of Paris would be obliged to incur in the reconstruction and reparation of public buildings, and the replacing the pavement torn up for the purposes of the barricades. One of the most remarkable proclamations of the day is, however, a general one addressed to the citizens by the Provisional Government, and posted throughout Paris. It is singularly characteristic in its form and style; and, as will be seen, concludes with an appeal to those instincts of order which have already done so much towards calming the popular mind. It was to be considered as an announcement on the part of the new Government, that it no longer recognized any necessity for the preservation of the attitude hitherto maintained by the citizens and population, whom they had in the first instance recommended not to lay down their arms.

"THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

"LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY.

"PROCLAMATION OF THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT.

"IN THE NAME OF THE FRENCH PEOPLE.

"CITIZENS!

"Royalty, under whatever form it assumes, is abolished.

"No more legitimacy—no more Bonapartism—no regency.

"The Provisional Government has taken all the necessary measures to render impossible the return of the ancient dynasty, or the advent of a new one.

"The Republic is proclaimed.

"The people are united.

"All the forts in the vicinity of the capital are ours.

"The brave garrison of Vincennes is a garrison of brothers.

"Let us preserve with respect that old Republican flag, whose three colours have gone the round of the world with our fathers. Let us show that this symbol of equality, liberty, and fraternity is at the same time the emblem of order—of order the most real and durable, since justice is its basis and the people its instrument. The people have already comprehended that the supply of Paris calls for a freer traffic in the streets, and the hands which erected the barricades have in several places made openings large enough to admit the free passage of carriages laden with provisions.

"Let this example be followed everywhere. Let Paris resume its usual aspect, commerce its activity and confidence. Let the people watch, at the same time, over the maintenance of their rights, and continue to assure, as they have always done, the tranquility and security of the public.

"Dupont (de l'Eure).
"Lamartine.
"Garnier Pagès.
"Arago.
"Marie.
"Ledru-Rollin.
"A. Crémieux.
"Louis Blanc.
"Armand Marrast.
"Flocon.
"Albert (Operative)."

Decrees were also published by the Provisional Government, condemning the destruction of private property—for the immediate re-construction of the broken-up railways, and the immediate resumption of the public works. In addition to these, the Minister of Public Works published the following address to the working classes:—

"WORKING MEN,—

"By a decision of this day (Saturday, February 26), the Minister of Public Works has ordered that the works in course of execution shall be immediately resumed. From Wednesday, March 1, important works will be organised on different points. All workmen who wish to take part in them should apply to one of the mayors of Paris, who will receive their applications, and direct them without delay to the different work-yards.

"Working Men of Paris,—You wish to live honourably by labour; all the efforts of the Provisional Government will, you may rely on it, be directed to assist you in the accomplishment of that wish. The Republic has a right to expect, and it does expect, from the patriotism of all its citizens, that the example it gives may be followed. In that manner the extent of the works may be increased. Let labour, therefore, everywhere resume its wonted activity. Workmen, after victory, labour is again a fine example which you have to give to the world, and you will give it.

"MARIE,
Minister of Public Works."

In fact the great object of the Saturday's labours of the Provisional Government would appear to have been the re-establishment of order by those legitimate means which can alone ensure the stability and tranquility of the Republic. Rumours of every kind are of course prevalent, but there appears little cause for immediate apprehension on behalf of the public peace. Legitimacy, wherever it has attempted to interfere, has been coolly laughed down by the people. Ten young men attempted on Saturday evening to get up a Legitimist manifestation in the Faubourg St. Germain. The people, seeing them all dressed in black, with white cockades in their hats, cried out "Tiens! Tiens! A funeral! They are undertakers' men!" The young men, finding the people in good-humour, immediately set to work. "Friends," exclaimed they, "remember Henry IV., and proclaim his descendant. Long live Henry V.!" The people, in the same good-humour, immediately cried out, "Ah, how is he, the dear Prince? Is he not dead? So much the better! Make our compliments to him, if you please, gentlemen. How happy he will be! Vive la République!"

The ex-King and brother of the Emperor, Jerome Bonaparte, had already signified his adhesion to the new Government. The Prince Louis Napoleon has also placed his services at the disposal of the nation; and it was understood that Marshal Bugeaud had tendered his support to the new system. Too late in the day, as political influences, MM. Barrot, Billault, Thiers, and Dufaure, with the remaining members of their party, had also decided, at a meeting held on the Saturday, to give in their adhesion to the Provisional Government.

A reply to the notification of the Proclamation of the Republic, addressed by M. de Lamartine to the representatives of the Foreign Powers, immediately on the Saturday, has also been received from the Papal Nuncio. It is couched in the following terms:—

"Paris, Feb. 27.

"MONSIEUR LE MINISTRE,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of the communication which you have just made to me, under date the 27th of February, and I will hasten to transmit it to our Most Holy Father Pope Pius IX. I cannot refrain from profiting by this opportunity of expressing the lively and profound satisfaction with which I am inspired by the respect which the people of Paris have shown to religion in the midst of the great events which have just been accomplished. I am convinced that the paternal heart of Pius IX. will be profoundly touched by it, and that the common father of the faithful will call down in all his prayers the blessing of God on France."

We have quoted this in full, as, with the exception of the visit of congratulation, made on the preceding day by the Minister of the United States, to the Hotel de Ville; it is the first positive diplomatic communication opened with the Provisional Government by any of the resident Foreign Ministers. It was, however, believed that they had resolved unanimously, at a meeting held on Saturday at the hotel of the Turkish Ambassador, to remain in Paris until they should receive communications from their respective Governments.

The Inauguration of the Republic had been postponed until this day. Two o'clock was fixed for the ceremony; and in spite of the tempestuous character of the weather, and the great quantity of rain which had fallen in the earlier part of the day, it attracted a large portion of the population of Paris to the Place de la Bastille. At the hour previously named, MM. Arago, Dupont (de l'Eure), Marrast, Flocon, Lamartine, Louis Blanc, Crémieux, Ledru-Rollin, and Garnier Pagès proceeded from the Hôtel de Ville to the Column of July, where, before the National Guard and the people, they proclaimed the Republic. The National Guard, which consisted of two battalions from each of the twelve legions of Paris, the 13th legion of cavalry, and the battalions of the Banlieu, was drawn up from the Madeleine to the Bastille. During the ceremony of the inauguration the patriotic song of the "Marseillaise" was sung by the National Guard and the people, accompanied by repeated cries of "Vive la République!" The citizen troops assembled on this occasion in immense numbers, to testify by their presence their approval and support of the Provisional Government. The appearance of the cavalry was magnificent, and formed with the infantry, in grand tenue, a most imposing sight. The aspect of the newly-organised part of the force was, as might be expected, less satisfactory as a military spectacle. These volunteers, however, made up for their want of discipline by heartiness and zeal, and already handled their arms with a zest and dexterity which went far towards proving the adage that "Tout Français est né soldat." About three o'clock all the troops filed off before the column of July, among cries of "Vive la République!" and to the spirit-stirring strains of the "Marseillaise" and the "Chorus of the Girondins." The members of the Provisional Government, preceded by a detachment of the National Guards and some officers, and surrounded by a number of pupils of the Polytechnic School, and of the Military School of St. Cyr, then descended the Boulevards, followed by all the National Guards. They were greeted with enthusiastic cries of "Vive le Gouvernement!" and there were also hearty shouts of "Vive Lamartine!" "Vive Arago!" "Vive Louis Blanc!" &c. Immense masses of spectators lined both sides of the Boulevards, and all the windows of the houses, as the National Guard marched along, accompanied by a vast crowd. The procession occupied a long time in passing. The National Guards and the volunteers chanted the "Marseillaise" and other patriotic airs, and the chorus was taken up by the spectators. The effect produced by the thousands of voices joining in the burden of the songs, was of the most imposing character. With the exception of these, and similar manifestations of pleasure in the completeness of the triumph, nothing occurred on the part of the people which might not have marked an ordinary day of fête.

It was understood that on the following day (the Monday), the attention of the Provisional Government was to be directed to the constitution of a scheme for calling together a National Assembly. The Government are said to be strongly disposed to adopt the principles which were laid down in the elections of 1791.

According to the Moniteur, all the principal towns of the departments have sent in their adhesion to the Provisional Government. At Lyons the abdication of Louis Philippe was known on the 25th, and no disturbances took place. At Blois the Mayor resigned his functions. At Macon the populace contented themselves with singing the "Marseillaise." There are, however, contradictory reports current in the capital. At Rouen, Lyons, and Strasbourg, serious disturbances had taken place; and in the two latter places collisions had taken place between the populace and the troops.

M. de Cormenin (Timon) has been appointed Conseiller d'Etat, and M. Achille Marrast Procureur-General to the Court of Appeal of Paris.

Masses were said for the dead in all the churches of the capital during the day; and in the Cathedral of Notre Dame the Abbé Lacordaire preached with such effect, and in so popular a spirit, that one passage elicited loud acclamations, which even the holiness of the place could not repress, from the auditory.

So completely had public order been restored since the events of the early part of the week, that six malefactors, who had attempted to set fire to the entrepôt and railway station at the Batignolles, and were seized by the populace and National Guards with combustible materials in their possession, were quietly handed over to the legal authorities. Everything has entered into its regular order. The Magistrates, ex-Peers, Deputies, and officers of the army and navy, are every hour sending in their adhesion to the Government. Place-hunting has begun. The shops are again opened, and the cafés frequented as usual. On the Monday Louis Philippe of Orleans entered into a contest with the people, and on the Sunday following the New Republic was proclaimed from the base of that very column which had been erected to the memory of the victims of that Revolution which had called him to the throne of Charles the Tenth, last Prince of the elder branch of the Bourbons.

THE FRENCH FUNDS.

The Three per Cents. which had fallen on the two preceding days to 73f. 85c. closed on Wednesday at 73f. 50c. The Five per Cents. which had been down as low as 115f. 90c. closed at 116f. 15c. Business was then suspended, it having been understood that the Society of agens de change would come to a decision for the regulation of all commercial operations. They subsequently took measures analogous to those adopted in 1830, having assumed as a basis for all compensations the lowest quotations of the last Bourse, thus providing against a crisis which threatened so greatly to endanger public credit. Thanks to the attitude taken by the great financial establishments of the capital, such as the Bank of France and the Caisse Gouin, commerce and industry will triumph over the political shock which the country has just suffered. The commercial measures of the Provisional Government have all tended to give confidence to public credit. The subscribers to the public loan have already intimated, through M. Rothschild, their intention to fulfil towards the French Republic the obligation entered into with the preceding Government, respecting the loans, and there can be little doubt that the temporary shock given to commerce will be speedily removed, if no want of wisdom on the part of those who now administer the affairs of France, destroys the confidence of trade and finance in the strength and consequent stability of the new system.

MONDAY.

Paris was to-day perfectly tranquil, and the intelligence received of the suppression of the incendiary riots at Maisons Lafitte by the National Guard and a squadron of Dragoons, after a sharp struggle, tended to increase public confidence in the ability of the new régime to preserve order. In this affair a large number of the rioters were taken prisoners, and it is said that eight were killed.

All the Prefects of the Departments have been superseded, and the civil and military administration are to be placed in the hands of delegates from the Government.

Victor Hugo is appointed Mayor of the 9th arrondissement of Paris.

M. de Cormenin is appointed Vice-President of the Council of State.

M. Orfila is superseded in his office of doyen of the Faculty of Medicine of Paris.

The Inspectors of the Public Domain have been ordered to prepare an inventory of the property of the Civil List, for the purpose of its being taken possession of in the name of the nation.

Early in the day, the Ministers of the Argentine Republic, and that of Uruguay, repaired in person to the Hôtel de Ville, and officially recognized and congratulated the Provisional Government. At twelve o'clock on the same day, the Ambassador of the United States of America, accompanied by the First Secretary of the American Legation, a second time waited on the members of the new Government, and congratulated them in his official character, and in the warmest terms, on the order and tranquility with which the Revolution had been accomplished. He stated his conviction that his Government would approve of the step he had taken, and concluded by quoting the hope expressed on a similar occasion by Washington, "that the friendship of the two Republics might be co-extensive with their duration." M. Arago replied to the address in terms of lively satisfaction, and told the Ambassador that France had expected no less from a Government with whom she allied herself more intimately by the proclamation of a Republic." In offering the American Minister his hand, the aged President of the Council, M. Dupont (de l'Eure), assured him "that the French people offered the hand of friendship to the American nation." On quitting the Hôtel de Ville, the guards presented arms, and the Ambassador manced, ordain proceedings, cause documents to be brought before them, inform or cause to be informed, and decree, in fine, that which appertains to them.

---

"Considering that, in the circumstances in which we are placed, and to show to all citizens how their magistrates interest themselves for their safety, and for the punishment of such crimes if they be proved;

"We demand an inquiry against the undersigned, as authors, and if there be cause, against their accomplices, according to the terms of the Article 235 of the Code of Criminal Instruction, and that such be immediately deliberated on.

(Signed) "AUGUSTE PORTALIS."

* M. Duchâtel, the ex-Minister of the Interior, was supposed to have escaped towards the Belgian frontier or the south of France, to pass into Italy.

† "THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

"LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY.

"The Minister of Justice, Member of the Provisional Government of the Republic, to M. Faustin Hélie, Director of Criminal Affairs.

"Paris, Feb. 26, 1848.

"Despatch immediately to the Attorney-Generals the order to suspend all capital executions, which were to have taken place in virtue of Sovereign decrees, and the definitive order which authorized those executions.

"You will present to me the documents relative thereto, and annex a new report to the reports already made by your predecessor. If, after examining them, I can commute the penalty, I will propose the modification to the Provisional Government. As respects the convicts in whose case no change appears possible, I will suspend all decision until the day when the National Assembly shall have pronounced on the question relative to the penalty of death. "CREMIEUX."

THE PEOPLE IN THE THRONE-ROOM OF THE TUILERIES.

and First Secretary were saluted with loud cries of "Vive la République des Etats Unis!" which Mr. Rush acknowledged by repeatedly uncovering to the crowd. The English Ambassador had also a long interview with M. de Lamartine, at the Hôtel des Affaires Etrangères, the particulars of which have not yet transpired; but it is generally believed in Paris that a friendly disposition had been exhibited to the new Government on the part of England. The Ambassadors of Austria, Prussia, and Holland replied to the note addressed to them by M. de Lamartine, that they could not recognise the new Government until they should have received instructions to that effect from their Courts. It was understood that they intended in the meantime to retire from Paris to Versailles or St. Germain-en-Laye, leaving a Secretary of Legation in the capital, to transact necessary business.

In the course of the day, a body of two thousand workmen repaired to the Hôtel de Ville to demand the reduction of the hours of labour to ten per day, the abolition of the system of marchandage (middlemen), and prompt measures to effect a good understanding and association between masters and workmen. The deputation was received by the Provisional Government, and M. Louis Blanc presented himself on the steps of the Hôtel de Ville to declare to the people on the part of the Government that this question would not fail to engross its most serious attention.

The following decree on this subject was subsequently published:—

"Considering that the Revolution made by the people ought to be made for [illegible] time to put an end to the long and iniquitous sufferings of workmen;

"That the labour question is one of supreme importance;

"That there is no other more high or more worthy of the consideration of a Republican Government;

"That it belongs to France to study ardently, and to resolve a problem submitted at present to all the industrial nations of Europe;

"The Provisional Government of the Republic decrees a permanent commission, which shall be named Commission de Gouvernement pour les Travailleurs, is about to be nominated, with the express and special mission of occupying themselves with their lot.

"To show how much importance the Provisional Government of the Republic attaches to the solution of this great problem, it nominates President of the Commission of Government for Workmen one of its members, M. Louis Blanc, and for Vice-President another of its members, M. Albert, workman.

ORGIES IN THE PALACE WINE-CELLAR.

SCENES IN THE COURTYARD OF THE TUILERIES.

"Workmen will be invited to form part of the Committee.

"The seat of the Committee will be at the Palace of the Luxembourg.

"LOUIS BLANC.
"ARMAND MARRAST.
"GARNIER PAGÈS."

Reports that the Duke of Montpensier had been arrested, and that M. Guizot had surrendered to the warrant issued against the bodies of the late Ministers at the requisition of the Procureur-Général, were also circulated, but neither rumour obtained much credit.

From the provinces it is stated that the towns of Angoulême, Grenoble, Lyons, Nogent-sur-Seine (Aube), Arras, Nimes, Avignon, Besançon, Narbonne, Bayonne, Valence, Bercy, Tours, Saumur, Brest, St. Brieux, Alençon, St. Amand, Montluçon, Montaign, Bordeaux, Dôle, Auxonne, Dijon, Langres, Chaumont, Bar-sur-Aube, Troyes, St. Dizier, Bar-le-Duc, Vitry, all the cities in the north with their garrisons, St. Lo (where the soldiers fraternised with the people), Guadaloupe, Toulouse, Nevers, Nancy, Verdun, Strasburg, Caen, Agen, Laon, Chalons-sur-Saône, St. Quentin, Angers, Valenciennes, Cambray, Blois, Perigueux, Montpellier, Clermont-Farrand, Mezières, the Indre, &c. have declared for the new Government. At Rennes, Havre, Boulogne, and Calais there was some little opposition, but the Republic was eventually hailed with acclamations; and at Rheims, the city where the Sovereigns of the "dynasty of a thousand years" were wont to be crowned, the triumph of the cause that has extinguished Royalty was hailed with unanimous acclamations.

By a decree of the Provisional Minister of Public Instruction, the Royal Colleges are to resume their former name of Lyceums. The College of Louis le Grand is in future to be called Lycée Descartes; the College of Henry IV., Lycée Corneille, the College of St. Louis, Lycée Monge; the College Bourbon, Lycée Bonaparte, its former name; and the College Charlemagne, Lycée Charlemagne.

Amongst the adhesions given in to the Provisional Government are those of the Parisian Bar, whose Council has presented its congratulation to the Minister of Justice; of the three Colonial Delegates, Messrs. Jabrun, Reiset, and Sully Brunet; and of M. Piscatory, ex-Ambassador from the Court of the Tuileries to that of Athens, who, with a very commonplace plasticity, is anxious to transfer his services from the dynasty of Orleans to the Republic, by proceeding to Madrid for the purpose of obtaining a recognition of the French Republic on the part of Spain.

Traffic on the Great Northern line of rail is re-established. The trains leave Paris—morning, 8h. 30m.; noon, 12h.; evening, 7h.

Several most important mercantile failures were spoken of. Two large banking houses are said to have suspended their payments.

Amongst the more curious accidents of a Revolution so complete and rapid may be cited the incidental arrival of a dispatch from the Duc d'Aumale, addressed to M. Guizot, in which the fallen Minister is warmly congratulated on the energetic attitude he had assumed with reference to the Reform Banquet. Nothing can be more strikingly illustrative of the ignorance which seems to have blinded the fallen Monarch, his children and his Ministers, to the real feeling of the people, from which alone these meetings derived the ominous significance to which subsequent events have given so fearful an interpretation.

THE FRENCH FUNDS.

The "liquidation" (settlement) on the Bourse fixed for the Three Per Cents, is, at the end of the month, at 70f. 50c.; the shares of the larger railroad companies at a fall of 25f., and of the smaller companies at 19f.

TUESDAY.

The Provisional Government continued their multifarious exertions with indefatigable zeal, and everything appeared to be returning into order and regular organisation. In the districts contiguous to Paris, however, the same tranquility did not exist, symptoms of the tendency to outrage and disorder being perceptible. Detachments of students of the Polytechnic, and of the Military School of St. Cyr, were despatched in all directions to repress such outbreaks, and the best effects were expected from this measure. Adhesions from Marshals, Generals, and other functionaries, continued to pour in from all quarters. Among these were Marshal Soult, Molitor, Sebastiani, Reille, and Dode de la Brunerie, and Generals St. Yon, M. Guizot's colleague in the War Department, Fabvier Schramm, Aupick, late Governor of Paris, Grouchy, Preval, Monthelon, Feuchères, Oudinot, Achard, Gourgaud, Lahitte, Paixhans, &c.

[illegible] IN A SALOON OF THE TUILERIES.

The late garrison of Paris—on which odium was thrown, in consequence of the collision of some of the regiments with the people during the Revolution—had, to a great extent, been disarmed and disbanded, and the numbers of the different regiments changed, in order to efface all recollection of their participation in the unfortunate event.

The following important proclamation was published:—

"French Republic.

"Liberty, Equality, Fraternity.

"The Provisional Government, considering that equality is one of the great principles of the French Republic, and that it ought, in consequence, to be immediately carried into effect, decrees as follows:—

"All the ancient titles of nobility are abolished, and the qualifications which were attached thereto are prohibited. They cannot be used publicly, or figure in any public document whatever.

"Signed by

"Dupont (de l'Eure)
"Lamartine
"L. Blanc
"Garnier Pagès
"Arago
"Albert
"Crémieux
"Marrast
"Flocon
"Marie
"Ledru-Rollin."

M. La Rochejaquelein, the celebrated Legitimist Deputy, addressed his adhesion to the Provisional Government, "without," he said, "any mental reservation," his motto being "Le pays avant tout."

M. Dupin had been superseded by M. Baroche in the functions of Attorney-General in the Court of Cassation.

The following are additional particulars respecting the commencement of the King's flight, the end of which is still buried in obscurity. There is little known in the capital respecting the fugitives. The ex-King, after leaving the Tuileries with the Queen, got into a brougham in the Place de la Concorde, and drove off to St. Cloud as rapidly as possible. After taking some papers, the ex-King entered a hackney-coach at St. Cloud, and drove on to Versailles, and thence to Trianon. He there entered a travelling-carriage; but before leaving the park he saw at a distance approaching him six men on horseback, and became afraid that they were in search of him. He therefore ordered the coachman to stop, alighted, and ran into a guard-house at the gate of the park, near the railroad station (Montretout), and concealed himself behind a stove. The men having passed, an aide-de-camp informed him that there was no danger. He then re-entered the carriage and drove off. At the village called La Queue, on the road to Dreux, he was joined by the Dukes of Nemours and Montpensier. Nothing more than that he then went on to Eu, and embarked at Tréport on board the Fusee steamer, is known.

WEDNESDAY.

Paris had resumed its usual air of business and pleasure.

Numerous deputations of workmen had, as usual, waited on the Government.

It was said that M. Rothschild had, with the view of confirming public confidence, deposited a very large sum in Treasury Bills as guarantee for the fulfilment of the condition of the loan.

Adhesion to the Republic had arrived from almost every leading town in the Provinces.

The Clergy had, through the Archbishop of Paris, pronounced for the Republic, as will be seen by the following document:—

"Archeveche de Paris.
"Republique Francaise.
"Liberte, Egalite, Fraternite.

"Paris, Feb. 23.

"The Archbishop of Paris invites Messieurs the Curés to conform to the orders of the Government, and to raise the flag of the Republic upon the religious edifices. "Denis, Archbishop of Paris.

"Seen by the delegate of the Republic at the Department of Police.
"Caussidiere."

ADDITIONAL DOCUMENTS, PROCLAMATIONS, AND OFFICIAL PAPERS.

THE EXHIBITION AT THE LOUVRE.

Feb. 24.

Everything that concerns the direction of the beaux arts and the musées, hitherto in the attributions of the Civil List, will constitute a new division of the Ministry of the Interior. The jury charged to receive the paintings for the annual exhibitions will be named by election. Artists will be convoked for this purpose by an early decree. The exhibition of 1848 will be opened on the 15th of March.

Ledru Rollin.

THE PUBLIC EDIFICES.

Feb. 24.

The French Republic.
Liberty, Equality, Fraternity.

The Mayor of Paris being informed that some citizens have manifested their intention of destroying the residences which have belonged to the fallen Royalty, in order to remove the very last vestige of tyranny, reminds them that those edifices henceforth belong to the nation; that, in consequence of a resolution adopted by the Provisional Government, they are to be sold, and the proceeds to be applied to relieve the victims of our glorious Revolution, and compensate the losses sustained by trade and manufactures. It accordingly invites all good citizens to recollect that those national edifices are placed under the protection of the people.

Garnier Pagès, the Mayor of Paris.

CIRCULAR ADDRESSED TO THE AGENTS AND ACCOUNTANTS EMPLOYED IN THE MINISTRY OF FINANCE.

Feb. 25.

Sir,—The Provisional Government has just confided to me the direction of the administration of finance. In accepting this position, I believe that I do an act of devotedness and of a good citizen—that is also I doubt not what France must expect from the agents and accountants of the Ministry of Finance. Out of the pale of struggles and passions, you have been ess mixed up therewith than any body else. Let this position remain yours. Employ the same uprightness, and the same exactitude in the discharge of your duties, and all of you may count on my co-operation and my support.

I also count on you, and on your devotedness to France.—Receive, &c.

M. Goudchaux, Minister of Finance.

PROCLAMATION TO THE ARMY.

Feb. 25.

Generals, Officers, and Soldiers,—The Administration by its attempts against liberty, the people of Paris by its victory, have caused the fall of the Government to which you swore obedience. A fatal collision has drenched the capital with blood. The blood of civil war is that which is the most repugnant to France. The people forgets all in pressing the hands of its brethren who bear the sword of France. A Provisional Government has been created; it has risen from the imperious necessity of preserving the capital, of re-establishing order, and of preparing for France popular institutions, similar to those under which the French Republic rendered France and its armies so great.

You will salute, we doubt not, the flag of the country, but in the hands of the same power which first raised it. You will feel that these new and strong popular institutions, which are about to be formed by the National Assembly, open to the army a career of devotedness and services which the nation, become free, will appreciate as much and even better than Kings.

Union between the army and the people, interrupted for a moment, must be re-established.

Swear love to the people, among whom are your fathers and your brethren! Swear fidelity to its new institutions, and all will be forgotten except your courage and your discipline!

Liberty will not demand from you any other services than those of which you will have to rejoice before it, and to glorify yourselves before its enemies.

Garnier Pages,
Lamartine.

CIRCULAR LETTER TO THE CLERGY OF PARIS.

Feb. 26.

Monsieur le Curé,—In presence of the great event of which the capital has just been the theatre, our first movement has been to weep for the fate of the victims whom death has struck in such an unforeseen manner. We weep for them all, because they are our brethren; we lament them, because we have learnt once more what disinterestedness, respect for property, and generous sentiments fill the hearts of the people of Paris.

We must not confine ourselves to shedding tears: we will pray for all those who have fallen in the struggle; we shall beseech God to open to them the place of light and peace.

You will consequently perform, as soon as possible, a solemn service, to which you will give all the pomp which your resources permit. The mass shall be that In Dies Obitus, with Pro pluribus Defunctis. This service must take place as soon as you can have given notice of it to your parishioners, were it even on a Sunday. During the mass a collection shall be made for the poor families of those who are killed or wounded. The produce of this collection shall be paid into the hands of the Mayor of the arrondissement. The present letter to be affixed as may be necessary.—Receive, &c.

Denis, Archbishop of Paris.

DECLARATION OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Feb. 26.

Monsieur le Ministre—The Chamber of Commerce of Paris hastens to associate itself to the movement of glorious national regeneration, and to join its efforts to those of all good citizens for the prompt re-establishment of order after victory. Ready to give its co-operation to the Provisional Government, it places itself at your disposal for all the necessary relations of the Government with the trade and manufactures of Paris. It will occupy itself from the present moment, and within the range of its means, on the task of sustaining commercial credit, facilitating the resumption of affairs, and contributing to the welfare of the working classes. We are with devotedness your fellow citizens, the Members of the Chamber of Paris—Legentil, President; Horace Say, Secretary; Lanquetin, Treasurer; T. Baudot, Bayvet, Bertrand, Devinck, F. Gaillard, Hemon, Moder aîné, Moinery fils, G. Thibaut.

Horace Say, Secretary.

CIRCULAR TO THE COMMANDING OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

Paris, Feb. 26.

General,—A great national act has just been accomplished; Royalty has disappeared before the sovereignty of the people. All good citizens, all men of sound feeling, ought to rally round the Provisional Government of the Republic. The Generals in command of divisions and sub divisions will, therefore, assemble the troops under their command, will proclaim at their head the new Government, and will call forth a manifestation of their adhesion. They will afterwards transmit without delay to the Minister of War documents declaratory of their adhesion. The Generals will besides employ all the means in their power to maintain discipline amongst the troops; they will see that their wants are regularly provided for; and they will give all the necessary orders for that purpose. They will concert with the administrative authorities, in order that public order may be respected, and, to that end, they will seek support from the National Guard, to whom is more particularly confided the task of defending our public liberties. The Government counts that the army, faithful to its duties, will always remain in the path of honour. You will acknowledge the receipt of the present circular, the execution of which I confide to your patriotism.

Subervic.

INAUGURATION OF THE REPUBLIC.

Feb. 26.

The French Republic.
Liberty, Equality, Fraternity.

To-morrow, Sunday, 27th of February, at two o'clock, Messrs. Arago, Dupont (de l'Eure), Albert (an operative), Armand Marrast, Ferdinand Flocon, Lamartine, Marie, Louis Blanc, Crémieux, Ledru-Rollin, Garnier Pagès, members of the Provisional Government of the French Republic, will leave the Hôtel de Ville for the Column of July, where they will inaugurate, in the presence of the National Guard and the people fraternally united, the great era of reconquered liberty.

COLLECTION OF THE TOLLS.

Feb. 26.

The French Republic.
Liberty, Equality, Fraternity.

The Municipality of Paris.

Citizens,—The victory of the people imposes great expenses on the municipality of Paris. It is obliged to re-pave the streets in order to restore circulation, to reconstruct the municipal edifices destroyed to serve as barricades, to relieve the families of the citizens who died for the cause of liberty, and to ensure labour and bread to the working classes. Such are the expenses for which immediate provision must be made.

The principal, and, it may be said, the only revenues of Paris consist in the tolls. That tax shall be soon revised, and so modified as to render it less burdensome for the labouring classes. But, until your representatives shall have discussed with maturity that important question, it is necessary, in order that the public service may not suffer, that the present duties should be collected.

We, consequently, entreat all the good citizens to assist the excisemen in collecting a tax intended to feed the defenders of the people.

Buchez, the Deputy-Mayor of Paris.

PUBLIC WORKS.

Feb. 26.

All the works on buildings and public edifices undertaken at the charge of the state, with the exception of the works on the forts, will be immediately resumed. The contractors of these different works are, therefore, called upon to organise their different work-yards.

Payments on account will be made monthly, according to the degree of progress given to the works.

Marie.

DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY.

Feb. 26.

French Republic.
Liberty, Equality, Fraternity.

The Provisional Government having been informed that malefactors have gone to various points to devastate public and private property, burn bridges, cut off the great lines of communication so necessary for provisioning Paris, and to interrupt the circulation of the railway, declares:—

Public and private properties, bridges, roads, railways, monuments, are placed under the safe keeping of the Republic.

Whoever shall be caught committing any ravages on the public roads, or making any attacks on private property, destroying or cutting off the rails of the railways, injuring objects of public utility, will be instantly arrested, prosecuted, and punished according to the laws, particularly the law established for the police of the railways, with all the rigour authorised by the circumstances of the case.

Citizens, The destruction of property is always an odious act; under existing circumstances it is treason against the Republic. Lend, therefore, your vigilant and active concurrence: in defending yourselves, you defend the sacred interests of the country.

(Signed by the Members of the Provisional Government.)

PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT.

Feb. 26.

Art. I.—There shall be immediately organised companies of workmen—1. To clear away the cutting of Clamart, and carry the earth into Paris, in order to prepare a terminus for the West railway between the external tunnel and the Boulevard. 2. For the execution of the Paris terminus of the Chartres Railway. 3. For the improvement of the navigation of the Oise. 4. For the extension of the railway from Sceaux to Orsay.

Art. II.—The engineers charged with the direction of the works will demand the immediate co-operation of the railway companies to secure the execution of the preceding arrangements.

(Signed by the Members of the Provisional Government.)

ADHESION TO THE REPUBLIC.

Feb. 26.

The nation has just destroyed the treaties of 1815. The old soldier of Waterloo, the last brother of Napoleon, re-enters from that moment the bosom of the great family. The time of dynasties has passed for France! The law of proscription, which weighed on me, has fallen with the last of the Bourbons. I demand that the Government of the Republic shall issue a decree declaring that my proscription was an insult to France, and has disappeared with all that was imposed on us by foreign Powers.—Accept, &c.,

Jerome Bonaparte.

ADHESION TO THE REPUBLIC.

Feb. 26.

At the very moment of the victory of the people, I went to the Hôtel de Ville. The duty of every good citizen is to assemble round the Provisional Government of the Republic; I consider it the first duty to be discharged, and shall be happy if my patriotism can be usefully employed.—Receive, &c.,

Napoleon Bonaparte.

CIRCULAR ADDRESSED TO THE RECTORS OF THE UNIVERSITIES BY THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION.

Feb 27

M. le Recteur,

The condition of the primary instructors is one of the principal subjects of my solicitude. It is the members of the hierarchy of the University that most directly affect the whole people, and it is to their hands that the bases of the national education are confided.

It is not only important to raise their condition by a just augmentation of their stipends, but the dignity of their office must be elevated in every possible manner; and with this view I wish the principle of emulation and reward to be introduced amongst them.

Instead of confining themselves to the instruction which they have received in the primary normal schools, they must be constantly solicitous to increase it.

The progress which they may find it possible to realise in this course of solitary education must be ascertained and proved in the same way as that which they accomplished in the schools wherein they were trained.

This progress must become a source of profit to themselves, no less than to the Republic.

There is nothing to prevent those who are competent to the task from raising themselves to the highest conditions of our hierarchy. Their lot, as regards advancement, cannot be inferior to that of the soldiers—their merit has also a right to advance by degrees.

Those who have been endowed with genius only require a few books of mathematics, physics, natural history, and agriculture, to attain by their studies the loftiest ranks of science. But in order that all may be animated in a path of emulation so glorious, intermediate positions must be ensured them. This will be effected in due course by the extension that is to be given, in the superior primary schools, to the teaching of mathematics, physics, natural history, and agriculture.

The primary instructors will be, therefore, invited, throughout the Republican territory, to prepare themselves to recruit the personnel of these schools. Such is one of the supplements of the establishment of the primary normal schools.

It is the interest of the Republic that the gates of the hierarchy the University should be opened as widely as possible to these popular magistrates.

From this moment, M. le Recteur, have the goodness to communicate to the primary instructors of the normal schools of your district the views thus entertained by the Government with respect to them.

Receive, M. le Recteur, the assurance of my high esteem.

CARNOT.

EXTRACT FROM THE PROCLAMATION OF THE SYNDICATE OF THE BAKERS.

Feb. 27.

DEAR COMRADES,

Yesterday, at half-past twelve o'clock, we were admitted to an interview with M. de Lamartine and the Provisional Government at the Hôtel de Ville, and we spoke as follows:—

"We come to protest the devotion of the trade to the cause of the French people and the security of the city. We affirm that the consumption of Paris is ensured for thirty-three days.

| | Flour. |
|---|---|
| The bakers hold— | |
| Deposited in granaries of reserve .. .. .. | 24,500 sacks |
| At home in magazines . .. .. . | 40,000 — |
| By the baking trade . .. .. . | 64,500 — |
| There are in the Halle, belonging to the trade . | 15,500 — |
| Total . . .. .. .. .. | 80,000 sacks |

which, at the rate of 2400 sacks daily consumption, furnishes a supply of bread for 33 days. But, in order that bread may not be wanting, we ask for aid and protection for the free delivery of bread in all parts of Paris, for the free circulation of flour, for the transport of the wood necessary for the heating of the ovens, for the arms of all our workmen. We demand these privileges with the greatest urgency, for there exist extreme differences between the supplies in the domestic magazines, some bakers having a supply of flour for a month's consumption, and another for only two days. The same with wood. Not an hour, therefore, must be lost, but measures be taken to raise the supply to the level of the demand.

"Such was our declaration: M. de Lamartine promised us everything, and the fortunate results of his promise are everywhere rendering themselves apparent.

VICTUALLING SYSTEM IN THE NAVY.

"Feb. 28.

FRENCH REPUBLIC.

LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY.

In the name of the French people,

The Provisional Government, considering that complaints, ascertained to be well founded, have long arisen against the insufficiency and composition of the rations of seamen employed on board the fleet, and that humanity is here in accord with the well-understood interest of the nation, has deemed it expedient to direct to that essential point the just solicitude of the Government.

DECREE.

Article I.—Measures shall be adopted forthwith to the effect of introducing into the victualling system practised on board the ships of the Republic such improvements as shall be deemed necessary.

Article II.—The Minister of Marine is charged with the execution of the present decree.

(Signed) (The Members of the Provisional Government.)

ADDITIONAL FACTS AND ANECDOTES OF THE REVOLUTION.

The following account is given of the mode in which the ex-King took his departure from the Palace of the Tuileries:—

"About one o'clock in the afternoon, a young man in plain clothes, who turned out to be the son of Admiral Baudin, on horseback, trotted past at a quick pace, crying out that Louis Philippe had abdicated, and requesting that the news might be circulated. A few instants after, the Pont Tournant, a troop of National Guards on horseback, from the Tuileries, at a walking pace, forming the head of a procession, and by gestures and cries inviting the citizens to abstain from every unfavourable demonstration. At this moment the King Louis Philippe, his right arm passed under the left arm of the Queen, on whom he appeared to lean for support, was seen to approach from the gate of the Tuileries, in the midst of the horsemen, and followed by about thirty persons in different uniforms. The Queen walked with a firm step, and cast around looks of assurance and anger intermingled. The King wore a black coat, with a common round hat, and wore no orders. The Queen was in full mourning. A report was circulated that they were going to the Chamber of Deputies to depose the act of abdication. Cries of 'Vive la Reforme!' 'Vive la France!' and even, by two or three persons, 'Vive la Roi!' were heard. The procession had scarcely passed the Pont Tournant, and arrived at the pavement surrounding the Obelisk, when the King, the Queen, and the whole party made a sudden halt, apparently without any necessity. In a moment they were surrounded by a crowd on foot and horseback, and so crowded that they had no longer their freedom of motion. Louis Philippe appeared alarmed at this sudden approach. In fact, the spot fatally chosen by an effect of chance produced a strange feeling. A few paces off, a Bourbon King, an innocent and resigned victim, would have been happy to have experienced no other treatment. Louis Philippe turned quickly round, let go the Queen's arm, took off his hat, raised it in the air, and cried out something, which the noise prevented being heard; in fact, the cries and pêle-mêle were general. The Queen became alarmed at no longer feeling the King's arm, and turned round with extreme haste, saying something which was also lost, and, pushing back a hand which was extended near her, to urge her to proceed, she exclaimed "Laissez, moi," with a most irritated accent, and seizing hold of the King's arm, they both turned their steps towards two small black carriages with one horse each. In the first were two young children. The King took the left, and the Queen the right, and the children, with their faces close to the glass of the vehicle, looking at the crowd with the utmost curiosity; the coachman whipped his horse violently; in fact, with so much rapidity did it take place, that the coach appeared rather carried than driven away; it passed, surrounded by the cavalry and National Guards present, and Cuirassiers and Dragoons. The second carriage, in which were two ladies, followed the other at the same pace, and the escort, which amounted to about 200 men, set off at a full gallop, taking the water side, towards St. Cloud. The horse in the coach in which the King was could not have gone the whole way, so furiously did he gallop under the repeated lashes of the coachman, whilst the surrounding crowds vociferated that they were taking flight.

In illustration of the ex-King's imperturbable confidence in the strength of his position, he is reported to have said on Tuesday to a foreign ambassador, "I fear nothing, I am so firmly seated in my saddle that I dread neither a change of Ministry nor a disobedience of my commands." The King also requested a gentleman about to quit the capital of France to remain and witness the quiet manner in which he (the King) was about to "put down" the mob.

The ex-Ministers, it is said, were assembled at the Hotel of the Minister of the Interior when the news of the King's abdication was brought in, and forthwith made their escape by back-doors, or, as some say, by leaping out of a low window.

A letter, published in one of the French papers, dated Dreux, stated that Louis Philippe arrived at the château there on the 24th, at eleven o'clock in the evening. A supper was sent out for amongst the public eating-houses of the town. He was accompanied by Marie Amelie and the Duke de Montpensier. He slept at the château, after having sent for the Sub-Prefect and some intimate acquaintances. He was in a state of complete prostration, and repeated each moment, "Like Charles X.!" He left the next morning in a hired carriage, and by byroads, for Vernon. It was said that his passage through this latter town was not effected without obstacles.

By another account he was said to have just reached Dreux with only a solitary five-franc piece in his pocket, and that he had even this was owing to the presence of mind of the Queen, who, remembering in the hurry of leaving the château that they were without money, returned, at some risk, to a bureau in which were some few hundred francs. These, however, scarcely served to defray the expenses of the journey.

On the Thursday, when the crowd began to withdraw from the Tuileries, after flinging out of the windows all the rich articles of clothing, pictures, and furniture, a working man with a musket on his shoulder was going along the Boulevards to the Madeleine: he suddenly stopped before two gentlemen and a lady, who had ventured down to their porte-cochère to get a peep at what was going on. "Who do you suppose," said he, addressing the group, "will be most put out by this famous charivari? Why Abd-el Kader to be sure. For what now becomes of the famous promise made at his capitulation? Enfoncé l'Arabe!" And saying so, quite satisfied at having unburthened his mind to some one, he passed on his way.

It is rather singular that not fewer than three members of the Provisional Government are married to our countrywomen. De Lamartine to an Englishwoman, Marrast to an Englishwoman, Ledru-Rolin to an Irishwoman.

The number of wounded received into the Hospital of La Charité on the 24th and 25th of February amounts to 84; and into the Hospital Beaujon, 62.

The Archbishop of Paris on Saturday visited these establishments, wearing his full costume, and accompanied by his Grand Vicars and several of the clergy. He went through the wards, and gave his blessing and the consolations of religion to the wounded. The prelate was everywhere welcomed with gratitude and veneration. A pastoral letter has been published, announcing that all the churches will be opened on Sunday, and service will be performed for the dead. When the people, during the day of the 24th entered the Tuileries, they stopped with respect before the chapel of the château. It is said that a pupil of the Polytechnic School collected the sacred vases, and carried them to the Church of St. Roch, in the midst of a numerous crowd of people, with their hats off.

On taking the Tuileries, the people found a magnificent image of Christ, in sculpture. The people stopped and saluted it. "My friends," cried a pupil of the Ecole Polytechnique, "this is the Master of us all!" The people took the Christ, and bore it solemnly to the church St. Roch. "Citizens, off with your hats. Salute Christ!" said the people; and everybody inclined in a religious sentiment.

It is noticed by a French paper as a remarkable fact, that the Revolution in France, now so happily consummated, was achieved on the same three days of the week as the glorious triumph of July, 1830.

M. Guizot is said to have escaped from the Foreign Office in a servant's livery. When the people broke into the Hotel, his daughters were still there, but were left undisturbed by the people, who retired from their room.

It is stated that the Provisional Government has at its disposal 200,000,000f., deposited in the Bank of France. By a decree it has annexed the domains of the ex-Civil List to the domain of the Republic.

A new journal, entitled La République, appeared for the first time on Saturday. As it is the organ of the newly formed Government, the following quotation from its leading article will be interesting.

"The title and mottoes of our paper sufficiently explain what this journal will be. We desire liberty, progress, and order; but, above all, we desire that the laws which restrict the liberty of thought, of speech, of writing, and of meeting for political and other purposes, be for ever abolished; that the interests and the rights of everybody, rich as well as poor, be equally respected, and effectually maintained by institutions in harmony with the necessities of the age and the desire of the present period; that all citizens who share the burdens of France be electors, and even eligible; that gratuitous education be supplied to all French children; that material and intellectual labour be organized on new bases; that the relations of masters and workmen be definitively ensured; that the different branches of agriculture, trade, and commerce receive the ameliorations which they claim; that science, literature, and the arts be protected as they ought to be in France—in this enlightened nation, which has so long marched at the head of European intelligence. We desire, in a word, that our citizens may be free; that they may occupy all offices for which they are qualified; that they may enjoy all political rights; and that they may be for ever emancipated from the curse of want and misery! Vive la République!"

The editor-in-chief is M. Eugène Baraste. The Journal des Débats, the devoted and even servile organ of the ex-King, joined the Republican Government on Sunday, on which day it appeared in the usual form, and replete with intelligence of the ordinary commonplace character, including a feuilleton.

At a meeting held on Sunday evening by the friends of Armand Carrel, the editor of the National, some years since killed in a duel by Emile Girardin, it was resolved to propose to the people that his statue should be placed in the Pantheon. The proposition was made forthwith, and received with enthusiasm. At nine o'clock on Monday the procession charged with transporting the statue was to start for the cemetery of Pere la Chaise, where it at present stands.

The following mysterious intimation of the whereabouts of Guizot has appeared:—"Every one has known for several days where M. Guizot was; it is understood that the police told him he must fly, or else they would be obliged to capture him, and to refuse it."

The first club, Société Républicaine Centrale, at its second meeting, proceeded to the vérification des pouvoirs and the election of a bureau. Blanqui, the famous conspirator, was the president. Every member had to give his name and address, and his "antecedents." A furious debate arose on the election of one man, who had been rédacteur of a popular journal at Toulouse, and afterwards was accused of coming to Paris to conduct a Carlist journal. His defence was, that he belonged to those "Légitimistes qui voulaient sincèrement la République." The storm which arose on this ended at last by his expulsion. Then came such virulent attacks on Robespierre and the Jacobins, and furious defences of them and their policy, that it was surprising the parties did not come to blows. Then the Fourrieristes, Communists, &c., came on the scene, and the sitting ended in tumult; but no blood was shed, and the partisans of "order," on the whole, were in a majority.

A deaf lady, living in apartments at the Tuileries, heard nothing of the émeute, when she was surprised reading by the entry of the people. When she recovered herself, they told her she must quit the palace, but should be escorted whither she pleased, and might take her clothes and jewels with her, and leaving her to pack up her things, they locked her door and placed a guard before it. Three hours later they returned to take her away, when one of her large boxes, badly corded, came open, and all her things fell out; they packed it again for her, and marched away with three drums in front and a strong guard, and deposited her and her property at the house of one of her relations.

A gentleman, during Friday, went to the Hôtel de Ville on horseback with despatches from the Minister of War. He found the Place, and the streets leading to it, so crowded with people, "packed like herrings," that it was next to impossible for him to get there, and he said the sight of those innumerable bayonets was effrayant; he was obliged to shout "Vive la République!" en route, till he lost his voice.

The following is an animated description of the scene at the Tuileries immediately after its surrender:—"We then entered the court of the Tuileries, where a scene of tumult, and fête, and saturnalia presented itself which surpasses all description. The Place and palace, from the base to the roof, was crowded with the triumphant populace; the costumes and arms were of every conceivable variety; the exaltation of the public feeling amounted to frenzy; the Royal carriages and much of the furniture were burning in great bonfires in the courtyard; the provisions and contents of the cellar were being distributed, and many of the actors in the scene were drunk; the papers were being scattered from the windows, torn to atoms, or heaped on the fire—a cloud of paper ashes and fragments filled the air at one end from the top to the bottom of the palace; the people, whose hands were covered with smoke or dirt, sometimes smeared with blood, fraternized with the spectators; the shouts and patriotic choruses, and incessant discharge in the air of firearms of all descriptions, produced a discord which harmonized with, and heightened the effect of this unique and inexpressible spectacle. Meanwhile mixed posts at the gates watched vigilantly to prevent pillage, and a friend of mine, who entered with the first masses of the people, and traversed all the apartments, said, that sentinels were posted everywhere spontaneously in the first quarter of an hour to prevent wanton destruction and pillage, and many of these sentinels remained at their post till they were exhausted by fatigue and hunger."

"Everywhere was the National Guard paralysed by fear in the presence of the people, who continued to shout 'Vive la Garde Nationale!' but showed that they felt themselves the masters, and this sometimes with expressions of contempt. The Municipal Guard had fired on the people, and the battle was begun again. After a desperate defence, the post of the Municipal Guard, at the corner of the Champs Elysées, had been stormed by the people, and the Municipal Guards almost all massacred, the National Guards looking on, 'Tuons au brasi' Some of the victims sought refuge in the ranks of the National Guard, and were pursued there, and killed by the people. One in particular succeeded in dodging about in the ranks, and escaping his pursuers, till near the grille of the Tuileries, where the line were drawn up; some lookers-on, pitying the poor wretch, already severely wounded, and shrieking for mercy, followed among his pursuers to rescue him, but, when he reached the line of infantry, he escaped through them into the garden, and the soldiers fired at the moment on all who were before the unfortunate."

An idea of the zeal displayed by the National Guard may be formed from the fact that 85 patrols passed before the guard-house of St. Eustache on Sunday night.

M. Pasquier has quitted the Hôtel du Petit Luxemburg. The inscription "Chancery of France" has been effaced, and the national flag substituted, with the inscription "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity."

Achmet Pasha, son of Mehemet Ali, fought on the popular side with the greatest intrepidity. On the proclamation of the Republic, he hastened to offer his services to the municipality of his quarter.

Emile Girardin had found the greatest difficulty previously in persuading Louis Philippe to sign his abdication, but when he offered it to the people they answered with one voice, "Non, non, nous ne voulons pas de ça," and he had but just time to save himself after they reached the Place de Carrousel.

Those who sacked and set fire to Neuilly were many of them so drunk that several were burnt in the Château.

When the King and Queen arrived at Neuilly, the National Guard clubbed together to give them enough pocket-money to continue their journey! (?)

The National publishes the following returns of the wounded admitted into the hospitals on the 22nd, 23rd, 24th, and 25th inst:—

At the Hôtel Dieu—84 men, 3 women, 34 soldiers: total 120.
Pitié—8 people and 1 soldier: total 9.
Charité—89 people, 2 women, 28 soldiers: total 119.
St. Antoine—27 men, 9 soldiers: total 36.
Cochin—1 woman
Necker—[illegible] 2 soldiers: total 5
Bon secours—3 men
St. Louis—45 men, 3 women, 1 soldier: total 49.
Clinique—5 men, 1 soldier: total 6.
Maison de Santé—2 men.
Incurable—2 men
Hotel Dieu (a branch)—5 men, 2 soldiers: total 7.
Beaujon—62 men.

The whole number of wounded in the hospitals was 423: of whom 330 were civilians, and 73 military.

"The ex King and the ex-Royal Family preserved the strictest incognito at Dreux, but, unfortunately, the name of the King was accidentally pronounced by the only valet that accompanied them. The entire suite consisted of this man and two femmes de chambre. At one o'clock (on Thursday) the Duke de Montpensier arrived, announcing the irreparable ruin of the Royal Family. The fugitives were filled with consternation at this intelligence. The ex-King and his family quitted Dreux on Friday, at nine o'clock. In order to conceal their departure, the valet doffed his livery, and put on a great coat and other apparel purchased two hours before. The Sub-Prefect accompanied the carriage, and appears to have been instrumental in favouring the escape. The ex-King had scarcely passed through the forest of Anette, when the workmen of a neighbouring paper-mill reached the spot with the intention of arresting him."

GENERAL CAVAIGNAC AND STAFF BEFORE THE PORTE ST. DENIS

The details as to the damage caused to the St. Germain Railway are most melancholy. The injury done is estimated at from four to five millions at least. The Pont de Bezons is destroyed, like that of Asnieres. The atmospheric apparatus has been devastated at Nanterre, and several other partial demolitions have been effected. The company is showing great zeal in re-establishing the service, partly by common carriages, and partly by the parts of the line which remain uninjured. On the Rouen and Havre line the damage has also been considerable, particularly about Rouen at both sides.

A captain of the National Guard waited upon Lord Normanby on Friday, on the part of the new Government, and stated that as the report was current, that the Ambassador was alarmed on account of the disturbances, the Government was ready to send a party of the National Guards for the protection of the Embassy. Lord Normanby at once declined the offer, declaring that he felt every confidence in the French people, and was well assured that the residence of the representative of a nation which had been so long on friendly terms with France would be respected. The result showed the correctness of Lord Normanby's judgment.

The most thriving trade in Paris on Saturday, was decidedly the sale of tricolored cockades. In fact, all that morning, along the boulevards, ambulating marchands plied a brisk trade for a couple of hours, offering their merchandize to all comers without fee or retribution, leaving the reward to the generosity of the citizen so supplied. Such a mode of carrying on the trade was not a losing one, as it might not have been a safe thing to offer for the distinctive mark of the Republic anything less than at least a piece of silver coin. The ultra-Republican party were most anxious for the red colour alone, and that distinctive mark was on Friday to be seen in almost every man's breast, either in the shape of a shred of ribbon, two pieces crossed, or a cockade. The women, too, wore nothing but red ribbons in their caps and bonnets; and, if the humour had continued, there is no doubt that red in all its shades would have been the fashionable colour of the coming season. But the choice of the national colours all at once became an object of contention.

At the Passage de l'Opera, a complete row took place between the favourers of the red colour alone and those who saw no reason for giving up the triple sign. "Why change," said the latter party, "that which has been so glorious for us? Why adopt the old type of the first revolution, which is only a sign of blood?" "No," cried the adverse party, "we must have the république toute pure! We must have nothing to remind us of tyrants!" The persons engaged in this wordy contest were respectable men, most of them speculators in the French rente, and constant frequenters of the Passage.

"The flight of Louis Philippe was marked by an incident which does so much honour to the feelings of our population that we hasten to mention it. At the moment the ex-King was escaping by the little low doorway nearly opposite the bridge, and going into the little carriage that waited for him, he found himself surrounded by the people. Two cuirassiers stationed in the Place de la Concorde rushed to his protection, and this brave regiment, without however using their arms, opened a passage. An officer, seeing the danger, cried out, 'Messieurs, spare the King.' To which a stentorian voice replied, 'We are not assassins—let him go.' 'Yes, yes; let him go—qu'il parte,' became the general cry. The people have been too brave during the combat not to be generous after the victory."

(The Series of Illustrations to the preceding Narrative, with additional descriptive details, is completed in Number 306, published with the present Sheet.)

[illegible] IN THE COURTYARD OF THE [illegible]

London: Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LLOYD, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1848.—SUPPLEMENT.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 307.—Vol. XII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1848. [Sixpence

FRANCE A REPUBLIC.

EVENTS of late have crowded on each other with such rapidity, and all rife with consequences of such importance to the whole of Europe, that it is impossible in the space of an article to state even their general bearings fully.

No one who has not studied attentively the history of the last ten years can conceive the utter loathing and contempt which was felt for the system of Louis Philippe, which he had identified with himself: it was corruption calculated in the coldest and most sordid spirit; it was fast demoralizing the whole community; and this storm is like the natural convulsion, which purifies the atmosphere when it is becoming dangerous: there is the noise of thunder and the dread flash of public indignation; but the danger of the tempest is as nothing compared with the living death of an all-surrounding pestilence.

We have repeatedly dwelt on the vices of the Bourbon race. It was fortunate when they were merely vicious; but generally they degenerated into criminals. If any one could sum up the millions of lives, the seas of blood, the waste of wealth that one family has cost the world, it would convince all men that they were like those races of the ancient Greeks, over whom a doom always hung—a fated line, producing little but disasters and tragedies. But it has played its last stake: as a Royalty it will trample the world no more. Both branches have been tried, and both have brought themselves to ruin. The Orleans family is doubly lost; for, raised to the throne by choice and election, it has no other principle to appeal to: its deposition is perfectly logical; the power that raised it has hurled it to the dust. The steps by which Louis Philippe mounted the throne and descended from it were—the Barricades of Paris.

His great error was one that no statesman could have committed. A form of government or a charter may be worked by means perfectly legal, and yet cease to return to the posts of command those who represent the tendencies of the age; and, if they do not, they must rely on something beyond opinion for their strength. It can only be found in force; it succeeds to a certain point; but, pressed too far, it recoils and shatters to pieces the system that, trusting to it, defies the thought and rising intellect of the age. Most of the acts of Louis Philippe were according to the written law; his policy was approved by the elected Legislature; but the base of the representative system was narrow, and, being small, had been corrupted by the bribes of wealth and office. In such a case, to mistake a majority for a power is fatal. That mistake has been made, and this is the result. No earthly power can long keep a pyramid standing on its apex; its tendency is ever to destruction, and the slightest accident suffices to produce what Mirabeau called la culbute générale.

What a rebuke to the calculations of despotism, that relies on the physical means of slaughter as a defence in the commission of wrong, have these late events given! What are armies and forts, when the armies themselves share the feelings of the people from whom they are taken! The instrument breaks in the hand; or its edge, "like an ill-sheathed knife, doth wound its master." To attempt a desperate stroke, without absolute certainty of the power that is to effect it, is mere destruction.

The Republic is established and recognised; but it is surrounded with difficulties and dangers: those from without are not, perhaps, the greatest. There is, no doubt, a deep under-current of Communism—theories respecting property that may produce a war of classes. The first efforts of the Government are to give employment to these dangerous numbers. It is its first necessity.

The Republic having been established, the great question now arises, what will be its foreign policy? It cannot be disguised that, though the late declaration of Lamartine, and the scarcely less important manifesto of Emile Girardin in the Presse, assert the importance of peace, yet the chances of war are imminent. All the traditions of the old Republic are warlike; the people are "jealous of honour, sudden and quick in quarrel," and the bubble reputation will lead them further in its pursuit than any race in the world. The frontier of the Rhine is an object on which their hearts are set, and if a quarrel can be picked at all, it will be first with the Rhenish cities of Germany. It is to this, though indirectly, that De Lamartine [illegible] does not recognise the [illegible] Vienna, and the sympathy of the French people for the Polish nation is not likely now to be confined to a barren annual vote in the Chamber, or [illegible] England, to a few public meetings and a [illegible] to support that treaty? It is a difficult question; and though an immediate solution will not perhaps be required, it will present itself in a formidable shape by-and-bye. This is the cause of the anxiety which the Republican declaration is known to have given to the diplomatists of Europe. The soil of France teems with hundreds of thousands of unquiet spirits, for whom no employment can be found; the Republic, to preserve itself a day, has been obliged to enrol thirty thousand of the enfans de Paris, and true enfans terribles they are. They wait but the word to march to the frontier with the greatest pleasure; and there are twice the number in Paris alone, whose backs the citizens would be delighted to see, for though all is quiet at present, there is under it a strong feeling of inquietude. Commerce is deranged, the banks are stopping their business. It is impossible to foresee from day to day what will happen.

DEFENDERS OF THE BARRICADE.—DRAWN BY GAVARNI.—(SEE PAGE 168.)

The difficulties from within the state must, however, occupy the Government, under any form, for a considerable time. The first step to calling the National Assembly has been taken; there is to be one representative for every 40,000 inhabitants; every man of twenty-five years of age may be elected; all who have attained twenty-one can elect; and the vote is secret: universal suffrage and vote by ballot are, therefore, to be tried at once in a population of thirty-four millions, without preparation. These violent oscillations between remote extremes, from a narrow Beaurconcratic Monarchy to a Republic, from the smallest base of the franchise to the widest that can exist, are not the mode in which constitutions grow that are to be long-lived. The fate of the gourd of the prophet that sprung up in a night, and withered again as quickly, will, in all probability, be that of the Government so established. There is an abyss of Communism yawning under its feet, that has not yet been fathomed; and many are impressed with the belief that a war of classes is beginning—the eternal struggle between those who have and those who have not. There are plenty ready to play over again the part of the Gracchi. Everything depends upon whether France can produce a man able to bridle the fierce democracy; if it is done, it will only be by turning the devouring flood towards the frontiers. And if there is a curse from which the world should pray to be delivered, it is the advent of another Napoleon. The gradations of the three revolutions are significant. The first and the bloodiest was the revolt of the middle class, assisted by the mass of the people, against the privileges and tyranny of a profligate feudalism: the second reduced Royalty to an elective authority, which was skilfully turned for eighteen years to a despotism: the last is as much directed against the middle class as against Royalty; though at present the citizens seem united, when the two classes divide again, there will perhaps be another and a worse conflict. For a time the policy of foreign powers should be that of non-intervention: let things settle for a while; one spark thrown among the inflammable spirits of France at this moment would shake every throne of Europe to the dust.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.—THE REVOLUTION.

At accounts from Paris to the date of our last publication concur in representing the tranquility of that city as completely restored as though the recent unparalleled Revolution had been but a minute spectacle of the Carnival.

This exterior quiet, however, must not be mistaken as an indication of true or a symptom of paralysis in the country, it is but the dignified calm of mighty elements after a commotion sufficiently violent to call into full action their power without exhausting it. If proof were needed, the general prevalence of order, and the activity of the Provisional Government, might be indicated [illegible] of public business got through by its members in the most satisfactory, social and political state of things is as much as it is satisfactory, seeing that the extent, the intellect, the prudence and moderation, displayed by these extraordinary men, in converting one of the most perilous crises recorded in history into an occasion of extensive and fundamental amelioration of national institutions, afford the most secure guarantees for the reign of order at home and of peace abroad. The genius of De Lamartine is the ruling spirit of the scene: at once poet, orator, philosopher, and statesman, he exalts the character of the movement to the dignity of his own noble soul, imparting to its every [illegible] exhibited in the several provisional decrees, poetic grace, vigour, and [illegible]. His circular to the diplomatic agents of the French Republic may be taken as the text of the principles which will guide the Young Republic in its conduct towards foreign nations. It is a most remarkable document, and, notwithstanding the great pressure on our space this week, we give it in full. It will be found in another column.

All France has at once, with alacrity, accepted the Republic, and the Provisional Government, like the advanced guard of a great army, is busy in clearing the way for its great successor, the National Assembly, which is to establish the permanent Government of the Republic. In the interim, measures of immediate necessity, required by the actual state of things, are decreed and carried into execution with vigour and despatch.

The Commander-in-Chief of the National Guard had informed the citizens of Paris that every able-bodied man from twenty to fifty-five years of age was entitled to enter the National Guard, and invited them to present themselves at their respective municipalities, where registers would be opened to inscribe their names. The Provisional Government was to arm all, and those who should not [illegible] to put a period to the level complaints that had burst forth when the duty on [illegible] was ordered to be maintained.

The Moniteur announces that the Minister of Finances has determined that from the 4th inst., and until further orders, the interest on Treasury bonds at five months' date shall be [illegible] per cent., and on those at six months' date and upwards at 3 per cent.

[illegible] the duration of the law [illegible] or for the working classes, to [illegible] de.

FRENCH REPUBLIC

"LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY.

"CITIZEN LABOURERS.—Considering that the decree of the 2nd of March 1848, which fixes the duration of effective labour, has given rise to demands of [illegible] on the part of the operatives in some manufactories where the people [illegible] without exception, twelve hours;

"That the intention of the Provisional Government, such as it [illegible] the decree, has been to spare the strength of a portion of their race for their intelligence;

"The President of the Commission of the Government [illegible]

"DECREES:

"Article 1. [illegible] effective labour in Paris and in the suburbs is fixed at ten [illegible]

"The President and Vice-President of the Commission of Government for the [illegible]

[illegible] BLANC.

[illegible] (operative)."

A Correspondent of a morning paper, writing under this date, mentions the establishment, in accordance with the above decree, of the Gouvernatore des Travailleurs, which is now holding its sittings at the Luxembourg, in what was the Chamber of Peers. "The benches, he observes, [illegible] are now occupied by the representatives of labour. There the matters of state, are now occupied by the representatives of labour. There the matters of state, are now occupied by the representatives of labour. There the questions of their condition are formally discussed; M. Louis Blanc takes the most prominent part in the debates. The results I up to the present time are partial enough; the demands of the deputation had been granted to the full extent. The hours of labour have been shortened by a decree, manual toil is limited, in Paris, to ten hours [illegible] ten hours, and in the provinces from twelve to eleven hours. The principle of [illegible] workmen, or what we should call the practice of taking small contracts for [illegible] and the payment between the employer and the [illegible] workman, is to be established as a standard [illegible] as to the amount of labour done. Whether [illegible] is to be regulated by the piece, or by the number of men chosen to do it, [illegible] the wages equally, according to the amount of labour done. Whether these questions will be [illegible] remains a doubt. The Government cannot inspect every workshop of a nation and in the infinite variety of occupation many [illegible] are overlooked in practice which run counter to perfect theory.

The change of the [illegible] functionaries entering upon office is dispensed with by decree.

Slavery is abolished.

[illegible] decree of the 4th of March, M. Comider, Advocate, has been appointed Attorney-General to the Court of Appeal of Nismes, by the Provisional Government of the Republic.

Other decrees direct that the members of the National Assembly are each to receive an indemnity of 25f. per day during the session. Paris is to have 34 Representatives, and Algeria and the colonies are to return 18.

The Prince de Ligne, Ambassador of Belgium, waited on M. de Lamartine on Sunday last, and informed him that his Government was desirous to maintain friendly relations with that of France.

On Sunday Paris was not as gay as is customary during the time of the Carnival. The evening ordinarily gaiety with which Shrovetide was formerly celebrated in the French capital was vastly contrasted by the almost complete absence of masks in the streets and Boulevards. The [illegible] arrival had for some years been going out of fashion; the late Revolution had suggested a serious reflections, and the weather had become most unfavourable. Circumstances which were held to account for the comparative tristesse of [illegible].

"Generally speaking, says a letter, "the Revolution has, for the moment, injured Paris. Its English have already left in great numbers, nor has the panic yet subsided.

"The pet resorts of houses and hotels, of the restaurants and cafés, and, in fact, all who hold upon the caprices of foreigners in the capital, are nearly in the F. each were two colossal bronze hands in friendly grasp. Branches of laurel, and evergreen, and blooming flowers were luxuriantly disposed over the body of the car, which was covered with crimson velvet trimmed with gold. On reaching the column, the assembled thousands waiting the arrival of the cortège were collected on the Boulevards, on the military post of the Place de la Bastille, on the roofs of houses, and at the windows of every house. The cortè were filled with visitors, but there was no demand made for places. A demi tasse of coffee secured as good a view of the procession as the most splendid rental. Epatish was certainly the order of the day, for two horrible-looking women, with handkerchiefs on their heads, in the vieille mode, asserted their right to mix with the well-dressed customers. At a small marble table was seated a venerable and benevolent woman, dressed in deep mourning, accompanied by a National Guard, who, from the likeness, I should take to have been her brother. She was quiet, modest, and unassuming, evidently shocked at the influx of men and women of all grades into the café. The two women of the people to whom I have referred took it into their heads to insult most grossly the inoffensive young lady; and why? Because the latter had a bonnet. "We are Republicans now—we are all equal, although we have no bonnets on our heads," began the beldames, and following up the sally with very gross language. I mention the incident, because it was the only instance of bad behaviour I met with during the day. The people were orderly in their conduct, freely exchanging jokes, and provoking mirth by ludicrous criticisms on the actors of the day. As regards the funeral, it was evidently regarded as a spectacle—as a fête. As a political demonstration, nothing could be more flat. There were very few cries of "Vive la République!" All eyes, all ears seemed to be directed to the procession.

The published programme was not adhered to, and the various parties marched as it were at random. A fine squadron of dragoons was the first seen along the Boulevards, and then a squadron of cuirassiers. A company of artillery closed the cortège. The National Guards were in great force, horse and foot, and amongst them, or in separate legions, were the newly-enrolled citizens, with paper labels on their hats or caps, and without uniform, armed with every description of weapon, ancient or modern. I doubt whether Falstaff would have marched through Coventry with such a set. The music of the military bands and the choruses of the societies gave life and variety to the military part of the display. Not even the presence of the relatives of the deceased could awaken the sympathies of the volatile population.

I was informed that upwards of 1200 coffins were interred in the morning, the sixteen hang left for the fêtat of the cortège. The official returns give 150 killed, and 500 wounded in the fighting; but I fear that the number was really much more considerable.

The weather was magnificent, and the sun's rays on the Column gave the most brilliant aspect to the scene. The Column had two black crape streamers, with sprigged stars, floating at the summit. The clergy alone descended into the vaults to chant the last prayer for the dead. The troops presented arms as they passed, and the Orphéoniste sung the Girondin chorus :—

"Ah! ça ira, ça ira, ça ira!
Tout le peuple en chantant
Dans ce jour la rendra
Tout le sort le plus beau.

The members of the Ministry were present, save M. Lamartine, whose absence was accounted for on the ground of excessive fatigue. The orators were—M. Dupont (de l'Eure), the venerable President of the Council; M. Crémieux, the Israelite, Minister of Justice and Religion; M. Garnier Pagès, the Mayor of Paris. Correspondent of the London Telegraph.

CIRCULAR OF THE MINISTER FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO ALL THE DIPLOMATIC AGENTS OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

Sir,—You are acquainted with the events at Paris, the victory of the people, their heroism, moderation, pacification, order restored by the co-operation of all citizens, as if in this interregnum of visible authorities the general reason were alone the Government of France.

The French Revolution has thus entered its final period. France is a Republic: the Republic needs not be acknowledged to exist. It is of natural right.

It is of national right. It is the will of a great nation that demands its title [illegible]. Nevertheless, this [illegible] wishing to [illegible] Constituted Governments a regular power, and not as a phenomenon disturbing European order, it is proper that you should promptly inform the Government you are accredited to of the principal considerations that shall henceforth direct the French Government's external policy.

The proclamation of the French Republic is an act of aggression against no form of Government in the world. Forms of Government have more or less a lawful as varieties of character, geographical situation, and intellectual, moral, and industrial development among nations. Nations have, like individuals, different ages. The primary ages, which seem to be successive phases, of Monarchic, Aristocratic, Constitutional, and Republican Governments are the transition of these different degrees of the maturity of the genius of nations [illegible] Nations are as they feel themselves capable of being more or less they demand more equality and democracy as they are inspired with more justice and love for the people. It is a question of time. A nation loses itself by anticipating the hour of its maturity as it [illegible] to retard it. Nothing is escape without seizing it. Monarchy and Republic are not, in the eyes of real statesmen, absolute principles that combat one another to death; they are tests that contrast and may live face to face, by understanding and respecting one another.

War, therefore, is not the French Republic's principle, as it became for evil and glorious reasons, in the years between 1792 and 1848 there is half a century. To revert after half a century to the principle of 1792, or to the principle of conquest of the Empire, would be not to advance, but go back in time. Yesterday's reaction is not to-day's watchwords. The world and its ideas do not march to transform and cause.

If the mission of the French Republic in 1792 accounted for war, the differences existing between that period of our history and the present period account for peace. Strive to understand these principles, and cause them to be understood around you.

In 1792 the nation was not use. Two people existed on the same soil. A terrible struggle protracted itself between the classes stripped of their privileges and the classes who had just conquered. Equality and liberty, the stripped classes united with equality and liberty, and with the foreigners, to deny France her Revolution, and repudiate on her not [illegible]thy, aristocracy, and theocracy by invasion. There are now more modern and unequal classes. Equality before the law has levelled all. Fraternity, of which we proclaim the application, and the blessings of which the National Assembly is to organize, is about to unite all. There is not a citizen in France, whatever class he belongs to, that will not before all join the principle of the country, and, by that very union, render it inexpugnable to the attempt and anxieties of an invasion.

In 1792, it was not the people that had taken possession of the Government, it was the middle class only that wanted to exercise and enjoy liberty. The triumph of the middle class was then selfish, as the triumph of all oligarchy always is. It wanted to reain for itself alone the right conquered by all. For that purpose it must effect a strong diversion to the accession of the people, by making them rush to fields of battle, in order to prevent their entering its own Government. That diversion was war. War was the thought of the Monarchiens and Girondins; it was not the thought of more advanced democrats, who wished, as we do, the sincere, complete, and regular reign of the people themselves, including in that term all classes, without exclusion or preference, of which the nation consists.

In 1792, the people were but the instrument of the Revolution; they were not its object. The present Revolution has been effected by and for them; they, entering it, they bring with them their new want of labour, industry, instruction, agriculture, commerce, morality, welfare, property, cheap life, navigation, and civilisation, which are the wants of peace! The people and peace, it is a same name.

In 1792, the ideas of France and Europe were not prepared to understand and accept the grand harmony of nations between them in the benefit of equality. The thought of the age that ended was but in the heads of a few philosophers Philosophy is now popular. Fifty years of freedom of thinking, speaking, and writing have yielded their result. Books, journals, and tribunes have established the "apostolat" of European intelligence. Reason, radiating everywhere across the frontiers of nations, has created between minds that great intellectual nationality which will be the finishing of the French Revolution, and the consolidation of the international fraternization over the globe.

Lastly, in 1792, liberty was a novelty, equality a scandal, and the Republic a problem. The title of nations, scarcely discovered by Fénélon, Montesquieu, Rousseau, was so completely forgotten, concealed, profaned by the old feudal, dynastic, sacerdotal traditions, that the most lawful intervention of the people in their affairs caused a monstrous thing to the statesmen of the old school. Democracy made both thrones and the foundation of society tremble. At present, thrones and nations find themselves to be on the same ground. Giving it to the regular agitations of liberty exercised in various proportions in all states, even the Monarchic one. They will accustom themselves to the Republic, which is its complete form among the many governments. They will recognise that there is a Conservative liberty. They will acknowledge that there may be in the Republic not only better order, but that there may be more real order in that Government of all for all, than in the Government of the few for the few.

But besides these disinterested considerations, the sole interest of the consolidation and the duration of the Republic would inspire in the statesmen of France the thought of peace. It is not the country that runs the greatest danger in the war, it is liberty. War is almost always a dictatorship. Soldiers forget in [illegible] men. Thrones tempt the ambitious. Glory dazzles patriotism. [illegible] of a glorious name will be the attack upon the sovereign right of the nation. The Republic desires glory, without doubt; but it wishes for it for itself, and not for Cæsars or Napoleons.

Do not deceive yourselves, nevertheless. Those ideas which the Provisional Government charges you to present to the powers as a pledge of European safety have not for their object to obtain forgiveness to the Republic for having had the boldness to create itself, and still less to ask humbly the place due to a great right and a great people in Europe. They have a more noble object: to make sovereign [illegible] and not to allow them to deceive themselves involuntarily as to the character of France by the language and respecting one another. The Republic desires glory, without doubt; but it wishes for it for itself, and not for Cæsars or Napoleons.

Do not deceive yourselves, nevertheless. Those ideas which the Provisional Government charges you to present to the powers as a pledge of European safety have not for their object to obtain forgiveness to the Republic for having had the boldness to create itself, and still less to ask humbly the place due to a great right and a great people in Europe. They have a more noble object: to make sovereign [illegible] and not to allow them to deceive themselves involuntarily as to the character of France by the language and respecting one another. The Republic desires glory, without doubt; but it wishes for it for itself, and not for Cæsars or Napoleons.

[illegible] resolutions of war are laid down to the French people, it will accept [illegible] The thoughts of the men who at the present moment govern France are [illegible] It will be fortunate for France if war be declared against it, and if it be constrained thus to increase its strength and its glory, in spite of its moderation. It will be a terrible responsibility for France if the Republic itself declares war without being provoked to it. In the first case, its martial genius, its impatience of action, its strength accumulated during so many years of peace, will render it invincible within its own territory, and redoubtable, perhaps, be and its frontiers. In the second case, it would turn against itself the recoil action of its conquests, which diminished the affection of nations, and it would compromise the first and most universal alliance—the spirit of nations, and the genius of civilisation.

According to these principles, sir, which are the cool principles of France—principles she can present without fear, as without suspicion, to her friends and to her enemies,—you will have the goodness to impress upon yourself the following declarations.

The treaties of 1815 exist no longer as law in the eyes of the French Republic; nevertheless, their territorial circumscriptions of these treaties are a fact which it admits as a basis, and as a point de départ in its relations with other nations.

But if the treaties of 1815 do not exist any longer excepting as facts to modify a common understanding, and if the Republic declares openly that its right and its mission is to arrive regularly and pacifically at those modifications, the good sense, the moderation, the conscience, the prudence of the Republic exist, and are for Europe a better and more honourable guarantee than the letter of those treaties, so often violated and modified by Europe itself.

Enfouraz, sir, to make this emancipation of the Republic from the treaties of 1815 be clearly understood, and try to show that that freedom has nothing in it which is irreconcilable with the repose of Europe.

The treaties of 1815 declare it openly. If the hour of the reconstruction of some nationalities oppressed in Europe or elsewhere should appear to us to have sounded in the decrees of Providence, if Switzerland, our friend and ally since the time of French [illegible] were constrained or threatened in the advance which she is effecting in her Government, in order to lend additional strength to the facies of democratic governments,—if the independent states of Italy were invaded, if any limits or obstacles were imposed on their internal transformations,—if the right of alliance among themselves, in order to consolidate an Italian nation, were contested by main force,—the French Republic would believe itself entitled to arm itself in order to protect those legitimate movements of the greatness and the nationality of states.

The Republic, you see, by its first step, repudiates the era of proscriptions and of dictations. She is decided never to veil liberty at home. She is equally decided never to veil its democratic principle abroad. She will never permit any one to interpose between the pacific radiation of its liberty and the regard of nations. She proclaims herself the intellectual and cordial ally of every right, of every progress, of every legitimate development of the institutions of nations, who wish to live on the same principle as herself. She will not endeavour any immoderate or incendiary propagandism amongst her neighbours. She knows that there is no durable freedom but that which grows of itself on its soil. But it will exercise by the light of its ideas—by the spectacle of order and of peace which it hopes to give to the world—the sole and honest proselytism of esteem and of sympathy. That is not war; it is nature. That is not the agitation of Europe; it is life. That is not to embroil the world; it is to shine from its place on the horizon of nations, to advance them and to guide them at the same time. We desire, for humanity, that the peace to be preserved, the war which it had given rise to for Europe, by the entirely personal ambition of its family alliances in Spain. Thus that domestic policy of the fallen dynasty, which weighed for seventeen years on our national dignity, weighed at the same time, by its pretensions to another crown as Madrid, on our liberal alliances and on peace. The Republic has no ambition. The Republic has no nepotism. It inherits not the pretensions of a family. Let Spain govern itself—let Spain be independent and free. France, for the solidity of its natural alliance, counts more on the conformity of principles, than on the successions of the House of Bourbon.

Such is, sir, the spirit of the councils of the Republic. Such will invariably be the character of the policy, frank, firm, and moderate, which you will have to represent.

The Republic has pronounced at its birth, and in the midst of the heat of contest not provoked by the people, three words which have revealed its soul, and which will call down on its cradle the blessings of God and men: Liberty, Equality, Fraternity. She gave immediately thereafter, by the abolition of the punishment of death for political offences, the true commentary of those three words at home; do you also give them their true commentary abroad. The sense of those three words applied to our external relations is this—the breaking by France of the chains which weighed on its principle and on its dignity; the recovery of the rank which it ought to occupy in the scale of the great European powers; in fine, the declaration of alliance and amity to all nations. If France feels conscientiously its part in the mission of freedom and civilisation in the present age, there is not one of these words which can cause her fear. It is prudent and just, there is not one of those words which does not signify peace.

Receive, sir, the assurance of my high esteem.

(Signed) LAMARTINE,
Member of the Provisional Government of the Republic, and Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Paris, March 2, 1848.

BELGIUM.

The injurious effects to peace and order in Belgium, which were at first anticipated from the French Revolution, have not had any existence. King Leopold is in very powerful and constitutional contact with a country which had been called out has cheerfully responded to the call, to defend, if assailed, the nationality of their country. The Chambers have passed a law of electoral reform, relieving the poorer classes for the elective franchise by a lower scale demanded by the reformers, viz., the payment of twenty florins annually.

In every respect the aspect of affairs in Belgium is tranquil.

SPAIN.

According to accounts from Madrid of the 1st, General Narvaez had applied to the Chambers for extraordinary powers to prevent a revolution, and these were granted; but private letters state that the feeling in favour of the Progressists was very strong, and that it would be impossible to prevent a revolution if Espartero should declare himself that way.

The Queen-Mother Christina is described as being in despair at the Revolution in France: she is perpetually in tears, and it is supposed meditates flight from Spain, but whither no one knows.

ITALY.

The accounts from Italy are still of an alarming character. The Austrians insulted in the streets of Milan and the other towns of Lombardy whenever they appear. Some of the principal mercantile firms have refused to trade with Trieste. The prima donna declines every offer from a German theatre, and it needs but a blow to set the whole population in a blaze. At the theatres the Austrian officers in the boxes were seized by the people in the pit.

A private letter from Milan, published in an Italian journal, states that one of the sons of the Viceroy of Lombardy had been placed under arrest by order of his father. The Viceroy, Archduke Rainer, is married to a sister of the King of Sardinia.

Austria has now 110,000 troops d'elite in Italy, and 700 pieces of cannon.

The Risorgimento, a Turin journal, has the following accounts from Milan of the 27th ult. The events of Paris were not received in Lombardy, nevertheless considerable agitation continued to prevail throughout the country. At Milan, the prison of Santa Margherita was so overcrowded that the police was obliged to remove a number of prisoners to the House of Correction of Porta Nuova, and several omnibuses were employed for the purpose

The appointment of Count Strassoldo to the Viceroyalty produced a great sensation in that city. The son of the Duke of Parma and Prince Solagno being found too liberal, had been summoned to Vienna by the Austrian Government.

In Lombardy, even the mercenary soldiers in the pay of Austria appear indisposed to execute the orders of their Emperor with blind submission.

At Magenta there was a collision on the 26th ult., between the Croatians and the Hungarians. The latter, generally speaking, display a favourable disposition towards the Italians. Oppressed at home, they regret to be compelled to tyrannize over foreign nations.

There is also a great difference, as far as the Hungarians are concerned, in the conduct of the Lombards towards the Imperial troops. These symptoms augur well and if Radetzky put his part skilfully, it may be said that all the chances are in favour of the Liberator of Italy.

Advices from Palermo, of the 19th ult., state that Lord Minto had addressed an official note to the Sicilian Government, declaring that he would give a satisfactory termination to the affairs of Sicily—1st. That Ireland must become a separate kingdom, independent from that of Naples. 2d. That it must have a Government and Parliament of its own. 3d. That the Marquis of Normanby may be King of Sicily. 4th. That as to the common expenses of the two kingdoms, such as civil list, diplomatic body, &c., they should be settled by a mixed commission of Sicilians and Neapolitans. The Minister has answered evasively, giving to understand that the King would at least refuse the latter proposition; and, above all, he would not permit the army of Sicily to be composed of Sicilians. But, in a private audience, Lord Minto received from the King himself a favourable answer, and was referred to the Ministers.

Letters from Rome of the 28th ult. state that the committee appointed by the Pope to prepare the constitution was actively engaged in that task. There are to be two chambers—the one composed of Cardinals and clergymen, and the other of representatives of the people.

SWITZERLAND.

A revolution on a minor scale has occurred in this country. The Canton of Neufchâtel, which owned, in some respects, the sovereignty of the King of Prussia, has now declared itself independent, and proclaimed itself in every respect an integral portion of the Swiss Republic.

PRUSSIA.

In a cabinet council held at Berlin on the 26th ult., it was decided that the 4th, 7th and 8th divisions of the Prussian army should immediately march to [illegible] and orders to that effect were issued. On second thought, however, these orders were recalled, and commands issued instead to the different commandants to be ready to march at two days' notice. Amongst the many reports in circulation respecting the alliance between Austria and Prussia, one generally credited is, that in case of a serious outbreak in Lombardy, Prussia is to occupy the kingdom of Bohemia, so as to enable Austria to draw off her troops to the south. This rumour may, however, arise from the fact that the sixth division of the Prussian army has been ordered to the Bohemian frontier. As might have been expected, the greatest excitement prevails in the Grand Duchy of Posen. The Poles look anxiously forward to the course of events, and their hearts throb with new hopes, though they dare not give loud utterance to them.

It appears from the debate on the 3rd inst. we learn that the King had summoned [illegible] in order to discuss the question of constitutional concessions to his [illegible]

GERMAN STATES.

The Revolution in France has already stirred the stagnant pool of German politics. At Frankfort, a numerous meeting of the Burghers took place on the evening of the 3rd, when the following heads of a petition to the Senate were agreed on, as being "the concessions which are still wanting to that territory."

"1. The abolition of all the exceptionable laws passed since 1815.
"2. Entire liberty of the press.
"3. Trial by jury.
"4. General arming of the people.
"5. A German Parliament.
"6. Equality of political rights, for all citizens, without distinction of creed.
"7. Right of holding free assemblies
"8. Political amnesty, and complete institutions for the security of civil rights."

The Grand Duke of Baden has already effectually given a definite assurance to his assembled states of the arming of a popular force, the liberty of the press, and the trial by jury, and has thereby officially restored that "harmonious co-operation" of his government and his people, which the Supreme Diet deems so indispensably necessary.

The same is hourly expected in the Grand Duchy of Hesse and the kingdom of Wurtemberg by the popular representatives at this moment assembled in both States.

Each state in Germany, it is said, will have its "movement," and obtain concessions, and the great point of attraction will be the Diet at Frankfort The Diet has already given up the idea of a universal law of the press for all Germany, leaving it to the option of each respective state to examine for its own judgment in the matter. This decision of the Diet, which was made known on the 3rd, caused great joy. The decree, however, adds that it is granted under the guarantees which protect as much as possible the other federal states and the whole confederation against an abuse of the freedom of the press.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Papers from the Cape of Good Hope to the 16th of January have been received. The great interview of the Kaffir chiefs with the Governor, Sir H. Smith, took place as announced on the 7th of January. All the chiefs of British Kaffraria were present. His Excellency addressed the assembly in a most curious and interesting speech (adapted to the understanding of his auditors), wherein he exhorted them to live for the future in submission to Queen Victoria. Sir H. Smith afterwards exacted an oath from all the chiefs to obey the laws and commands of the "Inkosi Inkulu" (the great representative of the great Queen), to compel their people to do the same, to abolish witchcraft, to abhor and punish murder, to make their people honest and peaceable, to hold their lands from the Queen of England and not as a matter of right, to forbid the sale and purchase of wives, to acknowledge the Queen of England and her representative as supreme; and, lastly, to bring to King William's Town, on the anniversary of this solemn occasion, one fat ox, in testimony and acknowledgment of the land held from her Majesty Queen Victoria.

A most satisfactory sensation ensued between the Governor and the chiefs, who behaved with great humility, and seemed to be sincerely contrite for their past offences.

The ended one of the most exciting scenes that can possibly be imagined, as well as the most eventful and important to the future destiny of this country. As far as could be judged from appearances, the Kaffirs seemed to act with perfect sincerity; and the general impression upon all present was, that if the measures now in course of adoption be carried out with energy and promptness, future peace will be maintained in this country.

UNITED STATES.

By recent advices from New York we learn that in Congress, on the 18th ult., Mr. Gass repudiated any desire on the part of the Government to absorb Mexico; such a course might be forced on them, but it was not intended.

[illegible] President has returned the following reply, dated Feb. 10. "No communication has been received from Mexico containing propositions from the Mexican authorities or Commissioners for a treaty of peace, except the 'counter project' presented by the Mexican Commissioners to the Commissioners of the United States, on the 6th of September last."

A question of great interest has arisen in Congress, which will be likely to create much discussion. The question is, whether Congress will recognise slaves as property, and pay for it when it shall be lost or destroyed while in the service of the United States. Property in slaves, for certain purposes, is frequently recognized by law, and it has been very recently proposed in the House to impose a direct tax upon slaves, as personal property. But, singular as it may seem, Congress, though frequently asked to pay for slaves lost in the military service, has never complied with the request, except in one single instance. In the year 1828 this question was discussed in the House very fully, and with great warmth.

A bill passed the House of Representatives on the 17th, authorising a loan of 15,000,000 dollars at 6 per cent. at 20 years, with a restriction that the stock shall not be negotiated under par. A variety of reports were current in New York at the time. We would take the loan at 15,000,000. The house of Messrs. Rothschild was mentioned, but the rumour is contradicted by the American papers. It is stated that the Emperor of Russia was prepared to advance bullion to the amount required, but this was scarcely believed. A different impression was that the loan could not be negotiated at par at 6 per cent. stock.

The New York Herald, of February 20, states that agents of Louis Philippe were in New York, investing property in land. In case his family should after the death be driven from the throne of France, and it was estimated that his Majesty has 1,000,000 dollars invested in houses and American stocks, in anticipation of some outbreak in France.

The all-absorbing topic at New York was the election of President, in the room of Mr. Polk. The election was to commence on the 22nd.

WEST INDIES.

The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company's ship Clyde, W. Symonds commander, arrived at Southampton on Sunday night

She delivered 830,000 dollars on merchants' account; platina, value £500; 149 casks of coffee, 3 bales of tobacco, 561 packages of sarsaparilla, 43 serons of indigo; precious stones, value £1600; 397 packages of sundries, and 50 passengers.

From the advices brought by her we learn that the West India Islands were generally healthy, and the weather seasonable.

The trade of the British West India Colonies is represented to be in a sad state of depression, and shippers are recommended to use the utmost caution in sending supplies of goods.

SOUTH AMERICAN STATES.

From the Spanish Main we have advices also by this arrival.

A revolution had taken place on the 24th of January at Caracoas, the capita of Venezuela, where the Congress was in session. A violent debate occurred, and a tumult arose in the Chamber of Deputies, in which five members were killed. Some fighting afterwards took place in the city, which ended about nine in the evening; but fresh outbreaks were expected.

MEXICO

In the last advices we learn that the United States troops were by degrees [illegible] the mineral and other important points around that city, and that the [illegible] were being rapidly collected for the benefit of the army.

We have no further intelligence relative to the peace negociations.

The United States troops had taken possession of Orizaba.

San Luis Potosi, and other interior cities, had issued a pronunciamento, repudiating the Government assembled at Queretaro, and proposing to carry on the war with vigour.

So far as the operations metals are concerned, Mexico appears to be benefited rather than impoverished from occupation by the American forces; large quantities of specie are constantly being despatched for payment of the United States' troops, which specie is of coarse spent, circulated, and left in the country.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE LOSS OF HER MAJESTY'S SHIP "SNAKE."—A Court-Martial was held on Monday on board her Majesty's ship Victory, to try the officers and crew of the late sloop Snake. The Court was composed of Rear-Admiral Prescott, Captains William Fanshawe Martin, Richard Augustus Gates, Charles Eden, the Hon. Richard Saunders Dundas, C.B., Horatio Thomas Austen. The Court, pursuant to a Commission from the Right Honourable Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, dated the 2nd day of March, 1848, and directed to the President, proceeded to try Commander Thomas Bourmaster Brown, late in command of her Majesty's sloop Snake, and the officers and ship's company of the said sloop, on the following charge, viz. "For that the said Thomas Bourmaster Brown, Esq., when Commander of her Majesty's late sloop Snake, and the officers and ship's company of the said sloop, on the twenty-ninth day of August, 1847, by want of care, caused the loss of the said sloop on a reef on the east coast of Africa, five miles and a half from Mozambique." After hearing all the evidence pro and con, which was of a very [illegible] character, and not at all conclusive as to the actual cause of the wreck, which occupied the greater part of two days, the Court agreed—"That the charge of not using sufficient care, by which the loss of the said sloop was caused, has been proved against the said Commander Thomas Bourmaster Brown, and Mr. Peter Chown, and do adjudge the said Commander T. B Brown to lose one year's rank as a Commander in the Royal Navy, and the said Mr Peter Chown to lose one year's rank as a Master in the Royal Navy; and the remainder of the officers and ship's company of the said sloop Snake to be fully acquitted."

ABERDEEN ELECTION OF LORD RECTOR FOR MARISCHAL COLLEGE.—More than the ordinary excitement exhibited on such occasions has been manifested among the students for some days, regarding the appointment of a Rector to their University for the current year. At twelve o'clock on Wednesday (last week) the election took place in the College, and the result given by the Precentors in the Senatus was that Lord Robertson had a majority of votes in each of the four nations. The other candidate brought forward was B. Disraeli, Esq., M.P. The students who were favourable to Lord Robertson were so elated with their success, that they formed themselves into a procession, and marched through the principal streets of the city, headed by the military band of the regiment at present lying in the barracks. It is understood that Lord Robertson will go [illegible] inaugural address to the students before the expiry of the present session.

ALEXANDRE DUMAS BORNE IN TRIUMPH BY THE PEOPLE.

THE five accompanying Engravings may be received as faithful episodal Illustrations of the recent Revolution, having been sketched for this Journal by Artists residing in Paris, and who were eye-witnesses of the scenes they have here depicted.

First, is one of the most characteristic incidents of Thursday, the 24th ult., when M. Alexandre Dumas, being recognised in the streets, was caught up by the enthusiastic crowd, and carried in triumph—that is, in the unstable position shown in our Engraving have the security of triumph. The scene is all French; even the boy has caught the political furor, and is shouting with all his might and main; and the fervour of the gentleman who has clambered up the barricade is we assure the reader, no artistical fiction.

THE CHŒUR DES GIRONDINS.—THE ORPHEONISTES IN PARIS.

THE Singing-schools in Paris have contributed in a great degree to promote the patriotic feeling of the population, since the late Revolution. Not only have they taken a prominent part in all public processions and ceremonials; but every evening they promenade the streets and public places, singing their national airs amidst the enthusiastic greetings of the populace. Our illustration represents a body of Orphéonistes in the Galère d'Orleans of the late Palais Royal, singing the chorus of the "Girondins," composed by Varney, for the Théâtre Historique, in Dumas's revolutionary drama "Le Chevalier de Maison Rouge," a piece which has had no small share in inducing the late Revolution. The Orphéonists have rich sonorous organs, and they sing in parts, first and second tenors, first and second basses. Their voices blend beautifully, and they sing with an intensity of feeling that gives to their national effusions an indescribable charm and solemnity.

THE BOULEVARD MONTMARTRE.—THE BARRICADES.

THE three Illustrations, from the pencil of Valentin will convey an accurate idea of the Barricades and their builders.

A contemporary thus graphically describes the latter:—

The men looked pale—but resolute and fearless. Some uttered not a word, but silently and rapidly worked at getting up paving stones. Some mounted on the lamp-posts, waving their hats and exciting the mob. Some laughed, and seemed to act under the effect of an excitement more or less pleasurable. Amongst them I noticed the most opposite extremes, in point of aspect, amongst fresh handsome faces appeared visages the most scowling and sinister I ever beheld. Some were well armed, and had abundance of ammunition. One man told me he had passed the whole of the previous night making cartridges—relying on the pillage of a gun-shop to supply him a gun. The majority were, however, scantily supplied—on the average, I think, they had not enough for a dozen rounds. Several were mere boys of 15 or 16; these were amongst the most active and eager, if not the most resolute. I had but a few minutes for observation, for a troop of horsemen galloped down the street, sweeping everything before them. In the Rue [illegible] St. Martin murderous conflicts took place across the barricades. [illegible] were marched up to them to destroy them, and received the fire of the mob at [illegible] retreating [illegible] was.

The Boulevard Montmartre was the scene of many a hot conflict. In the first [illegible] portion of a barricade. A contemporary, writing from Paris, says:—

[illegible] those popular checks on miscalculating [illegible] idea of one by an illustration, that will be [illegible]. Suppose the Commissioners of Pavements [illegible] Fleet-street across the way instead of along it, inserting [illegible] the top with a few [illegible] and half [illegible] Temple-gardens [illegible] finish, that would be a barricade [illegible] been raised in [illegible] movement. They [illegible] but most formidable [illegible] troops can do [illegible] are quite useless as they are placed at all the intersections of the streets

SINGING THE "CHŒUR DES GIRONDINS," IN THE GALERIE D'ORLEANS, AT THE PALAIS ROYAL.—DRAWN BY VALENTIN.

SKETCHES FROM THE BARRICADES.—BY VALENTIN.

whichever way a battalion turned, it would find itself in a cul de sac. And they are formed with a rapidity truly marvellous. I have examined a hundred of them with more interest than I should feel in the pyramids.

The Boulevards have certainly presented a terrible proof of that recklessness of destruction common to all kinds of battle. The trees which were the ornament of these splendid streets, under which the Parisian was wont in the summer to sip his coffee while selecting his theatre for the evening, are all cut down. They were all severed about three feet from the ground, and formed a line of posts neither useful nor ornamental. The unsightly stumps have been rooted up, the trees themselves dragged down from the barricades, the branches cut and bound into faggots, and the trunks sawn into lengths convenient for burning. They were mostly elms, some of them of goodly girth.

The very spirited portraitures, by Gavarni, upon the front page of the present Number, are faithful types of the Defenders of a Barricade.

BARRICADE ON THE BOULEVARD MONTMARTRE.—DRAWN BY VALENTIN.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Subscribers to the Opera, and the Public are respectfully informed that SACCHINI'S FAVOLA D'ORFEO will take place on THURSDAY NEXT, March 16, when will be performed (for the second time in this country) Verdi's celebrated new opera, ATTILA. Odabella, Mdlle. Sofia Cruvelli; Foresto, Sig. Gardoni; Ezio, Sig. Ouzioni; Uldino, Sig. Gallli; and Attila, Sig. Beneli. After which, a Divertissement, in which Mdlle. C. Rosati and Mr. M. Barrett will appear.

To be followed by the Second Act of IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA.

To conclude with the highly successful, new, and original Musical Ballet, in Four Tableaux, of M. Paul Taglioni entitled PROSCITA ET LA REINE DES ELFFRIDES. The Music composed by Signor Pugni, the Scenery (entirely new) by Mr. C. Marshall. Principal Parts by Mdlle. Therese Heberle, Mdlle. Adeline Dumilatre, Mdlle. Louise Rousset, Pugni, and Mr. Marie Taglioni. MM. D'Or, Gosrier, Di Matteis, and Venafro.

Applications for boxes, stalls, and tickets to be made at the Box office of the Theatre

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, MARCH 12 First Sunday in Lent. The Moon enters her first quarter at 4h. 41m. A.M.

MONDAY, 13. The Sun rises at 6h. 20m., and sets at 5h. 56m. Jupiter and the Moon are in conjunction.

TUESDAY, 14. The length of the day is 11h. 44m., being 3h. 59m. longer than it was on the shortest day.

WEDNESDAY, 15. Ember week. Venus rises at 6h. 19m. A.M.

THURSDAY, 16. Jupiter sets at 7h. 9m. P.M.

FRIDAY, 17. St. Patrick. Mars sets at 6h. 59m. P.M.

SATURDAY, 18. Ember day. Saturn rises at 3h. 3m. A.M.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 18.

| Sunday | Monday | Tuesday | Wednesday | Thursday | Friday | Saturday |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| M. A. 0 30 | M. A. 1 0 | M. A. 1 30 | M. A. 2 0 | M. A. 2 30 | M. A. 3 0 | M. A. 3 30 |
| 6 55 | 7 20 | 7 55 | 8 30 | 9 15 | 9 55 | 10 40 |
| 11 20 | 11 58 | 0 0 | 0 39 | 0 55 | 1 35 | 1 40 |

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Query."—Search for the will at Doctors' Commons.

"Kokorem." a Subscriber—We cannot undertake the recommendation.

"Nigel."—To obtain a certificate to practise as a conveyancer, the party, though not called to the Bar, must usually have kept his or her Court the number of Terms required for his call. This rule is, however sometimes departed from.

"Berkley-square."—A newspaper unstamped is liable to postage as a letter.

"Ida." Louis XVI. had two brothers—Louis XVIII. and Charles X.

"R. J. H."—The Duke of Berri was the second son of Charles X. He married Caroline, daughter of Francis I., King of the Two Sicilies

"S. M."—Louis Philippe is a distant cousin of Charles X., the one being descended from the elder son of Louis XIII., who was Louis XIV., and the other from the younger son, who was created Duke of Orleans

"Helen."—The Gregorian Chaunt is by Gregory the Great, by whom Chaunting in Churches was introduced into the Roman Catholic Service, in 600

"F. B. A." Clapton. We do not remember to have received the M.S.

"D'Orsay." Dean-ston, as recommended to consult Gilbert's "Etymological Dictionary," for the 11 definitions in question. We cannot spare room for such matters. Her Majesty's names are Alexandrina-Victoria

"D. W. H."—A work descriptive of the various Regnants of the English Army is in course of publication. It may be seen at Parker and Co's. Charing Cross

"A Norfolk Curate."—A Volume, detailing the Charities in the gift of the Public Companies of London, has been published by Mr. C. Knight

"Neptune." The list of Lighthouses may be obtained at the Trinity House

"Milo," Windsor.—We have no fault in "The Austria: Distributio"

"Reece" may, in our opinion, succeed. He should apply to some Lithographer.

"W. R. S." should see the list of the publications of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. Paul's "Mercantile Correspondence" will be found useful on shipping matters

"A Subscriber" is thanked for the Sketch of Landwade Church; but we have not room to engrave it

"A. H. G.," Liverpool. Declined

"Alpha Beta."—Anglo "Self-instructing French Grammar."

"Endymion" may obtain the Engraving of the "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian" from Messrs. Smith, Pentonville, Islington. The other point in question is, doubtless, from an illustrated edition of Scott's Novels.

"J. C.," Hampstead.—We cannot spare room to repeat the question.

"Felix." Widnes.—There is no law to aid your humanity.

"E. H." Leicester, should order the late edition of our Journal.

"S. M." Swansea.—The Prize Essay may be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"J. B." Bury. No further index can be given for Vol. XI.

"Arthur." Liverpool, must excuse us. We have not room for such matters as he proposes

"J. S." Wrote to Messrs Smith, Pentonville, Lash-street, Leicester-square.

"W. F. Burden, had better consult a solicitor

"A Subscriber." Jermyn-street.—The Illustration is in the Engraver's hands.

"Oscar." Cupar.—The probable depends upon circumstances not given

"F. B." Kent, is desired to explain to that the Engraving was executed with a Durant Coranet, though in the Seal of the late Archbishop of Canterbury it is incorrect

"Edmundson, who wrote to this enquiring as "a practical Horse-keeper who can occasionally ride a race now and then, but not a regular jockey," is informed that we cannot answer the question

"An Admirer."—We believe, until the restoration of the Stuarts, in 1814.

"A Young Lady." The Duchess of Orleans is daughter of the late Frederick, Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and sister to the present Duchess. The Princess Clementine was married 20th April, 1843, to the Prince Augustus of Saxe Coburg and Gotha

"A. L."—The pay of a Full Colonel in the Line is £1 5s. 3d.; that of a Lieutenant-Colonel, 18s. 1d. per diem.

"A Constant Reader."—The date of Sir H. V. Webster's death was 20th April, 1847.

"A Correspondent" is thanked for the pencil sketch of the Commodore, but we have not room to engrave it.

"Henry," Barkenhead, could not be liable to be drawn for the Militia if entered in the Victory Corps. We cannot inform him as to admission to the latter. A letter to the Secretary of the Amateur Musical Society may obtain a reply to the third question

"Gryphon."—Boer and Co., Keppel-street, are the publishers of Mendelssohn's works. The Secretary of the Handel Society may be addressed at Cramer, Beale, and Co., Regent-street. The cheapest edition of Handel or those now in progress by Alfred Novello; but the price of the Handel Society are the most volumin

"Alison."—This contralto is in her 24th year, and is unmarried

"W. W."—Great made her first appearance in London in 1838, in the character of Amelia, in "Gustavus III." Grand Duchess.

"T. W."—No better work for the Violin can be studied than that by Spohr

MENDELSSOHN'S MONUMENT.—Subscriptions may be addressed to the Committee of the Sacred Harmonic Society.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS, AND OTHER PURCHASERS OF THE DOUBLE NUMBER.—We are sorry to find that some dishonest persons, in selling the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of last week, withheld one of the Sheets or Numbers, notwithstanding every precaution was taken to guard the public against such an imposition. Some vendors, not content with this deception, actually charged 1s. 6d. for a single number, instead of 1s. for a double one! The Newsmen are, generally speaking, very correct in their dealings; and we regret having to notice these practices of the dishonest exceptions.

 The two-fold exertion attendant upon the production of the Double Number, some of the Illustrations to which were transmitted from Paris, drawn and engraved in an unprecedentedly short space of time, coupled with the extraordinary demand for the paper, were the causes of the delay; and to some of our Subscribers not receiving their copies at the usual time—an inconvenience which all the foresight employed on our part could not, unfortunately, guard against.

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.—Next week we shall give a large Engraving of the impressive spectacle of the funeral procession, at Paris, of the persons who fell in the late Revolution. We shall likewise continue our Illustrations of this great event, with several other Engravings.

ERRATA.—In the Chronology of the Reign of Louis Philippe, last week, the date of the Abdication should be Feb. 24, not Feb. 23, as there given. In the Engraving on the front page, (in part of the Impression,) for "Count of Eu" read "Duke of Chartres."

BOOKS, ETC., RECEIVED

Marie von Arnhelm.—Patterson's Zoology. Vol. 2.—Parlour Library. Vol. 13.—Queen de Sauvé.—Two Miller Tales.—Poems of Allan Park Paton.—Dr. Conquest's Letters to a Mother.—Starling's Noble Deeds of Women.

MUSIC. Three Songs, by Haydn.—"The Gold Amulet," and "The Spell."—"The Convent Bell."—"The Old Oak Tree."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1848.

THE EFFECT which a country in Europe in which the existing influence of the recent extraordinary events in France has not begun to produce its effects. This is not only natural, but it would be unaccountably strange if it were otherwise, so closely united in the bonds of civilisation are the respective members of the great European family, however varied may be the aspect which each individually presents. Availing themselves of the general tone and temper of men's minds, created by the bouleversement in Paris, they have each, according to the wants or wishes of their respective communities, demanded a greater instalment of political freedom, and have in general obtained what they sought from their rulers.

The most remarkable feature in all this is the great moderation evinced by both governors and the governed. A calm, dignified reliance upon their own strength, and unfailing confidence in the common sense and justice of their rulers, have characterised the movement of the people, while "the Powers that be" have not falsified the expectations that had been entertained of them; and, from all that has occurred, satisfactory results for public order and true rational freedom may be anticipated. These remarks apply more especially to the German States and Central Europe, and furnish matter of gratulation to every lover of the common weal not only of Great Britain, but of every nation in Europe. The contrast which such a state of things presents to what the experience of former Revolutionary epochs might lead us to expect, is the most complete imaginable, and is the clearest indication of the vast progress mankind has made within the last half-century in the science and practice of genuine civilisation, which consists in the most keen and delicate appreciation of what is due to the dignity of man in every one relation of society, and the harmonious working of society thoroughly imbued with that feeling.

Perfectly free, and comparatively contented and happy as we are at home here in this country, the week has not passed by without letting us perceive that even here a slight whiff of the violent storm that has just burst with such rapidity over France has for an instant attracted attention; but, if evidence were needed to show how stable and irremovable is the "existing order of things" amongst us, we might point to the sorry attempts at disturbance with which this week has been visited in our commercial metropolis. Public meetings were held in the week; but which they have failed to carry beyond disorderly assemblages of thieves, pickpockets, costermongers, and that nameless crew of wretches whose only holiday is a day of execution, whose only occupation is to prey upon society. "The People," both in the metropolis and in the other localities which have been the scenes of riot, have stood aloof, in attitude of disgust and contempt at the hideous aspect of the canaille, who, after a brief display of their unsightliness, have skulked back to their dark dens of iniquity.

If it were not that a few of those misguided men who call themselves Chartists were amongst the herd, its appearance in the thoroughfares of the metropolis (notice of which appears in another column) would not have called for observation; but even the Chartists at last seemed thoroughly ashamed of the associates they had plucked up in their ardour to display their sympathy with the new French Republic, and having made some vapid speeches in a few localities, withdrew from the scene, and the police soon dispersed the chevaliers d'industrie.

In Glasgow we regret to find that some unemployed operatives, having their numbers increased by the accession of similar bad characters as those who thronged the streets of London, assembled on Monday and Tuesday, and made such demonstrations of violence as called for the interference of the authorities, when, unfortunately, two individuals were shot dead, and some five or six wounded: some property also was destroyed; but, according to the latest accounts, tranquility was completely restored.

THE WEATHER.

THE WEATHER, during the first four days of this week, was equally, and rain was frequently falling; and during the last three days it has been chiefly fine. The temperature during the week has been somewhat below the average for the season.

The following are some particulars of each day:—On Thursday, March 2, the sky was chiefly overcast, and rain was falling occasionally; the direction of the wind was N.W.; the average temperature of the air for the day was 41°. Friday, the sky was mostly about one half covered by cloud; at half-past twelve a shower of rain and hail fell, during which the temperature of the wind from 46° to 39°; the direction of the wind was N.; the temperature for the day was 41°. Saturday, the sky was variable in appearance, being at times nearly free from cloud, and at others entirely clouded; the direction of the wind was N.W., and then N.E.; the temperature of the air for the day was 37½°. Sunday, rain was falling throughout the day; the directions of the wind were S. and W.N.W.; the average temperature for the day was 40½°. Monday, the sky was principally overcast till 9h. P.M., and chiefly clear afterwards; the directions of the wind were N.W., S.W., and E.; the average temperature for the day was 41½°. Tuesday the sky was for the most part till 4h. A.M. clear, and overcast afterwards; the direction of the wind was E.; the average temperature for the day was 42°. Wednesday was a fine day, but the sky was principally cloudy; a thin haze was falling in the evening; the direction of the wind was W. by S.W., and the average temperature of the air for the day was 38½, and that for the week ending this day was 39½°.

The following are the extreme thermometrical readings for each day:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Thursday, March 2, | the highest for the day was 44 deg., | and the lowest was 38 deg. |
| Friday, | March 3, | 46 | 36 |
| Saturday, | March 4, | 47 | 27 |
| Sunday, | March 5, | 42 | 39 |
| Monday, | March 6, | 45 | 38 |
| Tuesday, | March 7, | 50 | 30 |
| Wednesday, | March 8, | 46 | 33 |

Barometer, Thursday, March 9, 1848. J. G.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

ON Saturday, his Royal Highness Prince Leopold, Count de Syracuse, had an audience of the Queen, at Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness was attended in his Excellency General Count Neipperg, the Neapolitan Ambassador, and the Chevalier de Collona. His Royal Highness was introduced by Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B., her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and conducted by the Hon. Sir Edward Cust, K.C.H., her Majesty's Master of the Ceremonies. The Queen was attended by Lord Elphinstone, Lord in Waiting, and Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Robert Boyle, Groom in Waiting. Viscount Palmerston had an audience of her Majesty. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen and Prince Albert. His Royal Highness Prince Alfred took an airing in the Royal gardens. In the course of the afternoon His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Colonel Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting, went by special train to Claremont, to visit, upon their arrival in this country, the Count and Countess de Neuilly, which title the ex-King and Queen of the French have assumed. His Royal Highness returned to Buckingham Palace in the evening.

On Sunday, the Queen and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the Household, attended divine service in the private chapel in Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated.

On Monday, the Queen walked during the morning in the Royal gardens of Buckingham Palace. The Count and Countess de Neuilly visited her Majesty at Buckingham Palace in the afternoon. His Royal Highness the Duke Augustus of Saxe-Coburg visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, at her residence, Clarence House, St. James's. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, took their walking and pony exercises. Her Royal Highness the Princess Helena was taken an airing in the Royal gardens. His Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent dined with her Majesty and Prince Albert in the evening at Buckingham Palace.

On Tuesday, the Queen walked both morning and afternoon in the gardens of the Palace. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, attended by Colonel Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting. Viscount Palmerston had an audience of her Majesty at Buckingham Palace. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal took their accustomed drive. Her Grace the Duchess of Kent dined with her Majesty and Prince Albert in the evening, at Buckingham Palace.

On Wednesday, the Queen and Prince Albert took an airing in an open carriage and four. The Equerries in Waiting, Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps and Colonel Bouverie, were in attendance on horseback. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, and visited his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge at Cambridge House.

DEPARTURE OF THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF SAXE-COBURG.—Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Coburg, attended by Major the Baronne de Wangenheim and Baron Fritsch, left Buckingham Palace at twenty minutes before eleven o'clock on Saturday morning for the London-bridge station, en route to the Continent.

THE DUCHESS OF ORLEANS.—The unfortunate Duchess and her two children arrived on the 3rd instant at Ems, in Prussia. The party, accompanied by a French nobleman, escaped from Paris in a one-horse vehicle, with which they reached Aix-la-Chapelle. There they took the railway to Cologne. After passing the night at Deutz, opposite the latter city they took the steamer next day to Coblentz, and thence proceeded to Ems, where at the last accounts they remained. Shortly after their arrival they were visited by Madame Sthle, the wife of the commanding general of the district.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

VACANT STALL IN DURHAM CATHEDRAL.—The stall in the Cathedral of Durham, which has become vacant by the elevation of the Bishop of Chester to the Archiepiscopic of Canterbury, has hitherto had an income attached to it of £2284; but, under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, it will hereafter be limited to £1000, the surplus going to the augmentation of small livings, and the office (which is in the gift of the Bishop of Durham) must be filled by a professor in Durham University. It is probable that the Rev. Temple Chevallier will receive the appointment.

CONSECRATION OF TRINITY CHURCH, HOXTON.—The Lord Bishop of London consecrated another new Church in the parish of Hoxton on Saturday afternoon. The ceremony in question was performed by the Archdeacon of London, the Rev. A. P. Kelly, the Rev. John Saunders, the Rev. J. Hill, the Rev. C. W. Lane, and a large number of parochial clergymen, all of whom were in full canonicals. The new Church, which is dedicated to Holy Trinity, is a neat and convenient structure, in the Gothic style of architecture, containing upwards of two thousand sittings, all being unappropriated and entirely free. The new Church has an ecclesiastical district assigned to it, forming part of the parish of St. John's, Hoxton. The new Church was opened for the performance of Divine service on Sunday morning.

THE WAKEFIELD LECTURESHIP.—The Campden Lectureship of Wakefield, which was founded at the parish Church of All Saints, in 1652, by the worshipful company of mercers, London, conformably to the will of Lady Elizabeth Hungerford, the foundress, was established in 1641 to St. John's church, in that town. It has now, however, in accordance with the recommendation of the Bishop of Ripon, and with the full concurrence of the Mercers' company, been restored to the parish church, by the Rev. Dr. Sendor, Head Master of Batley Free Grammar School, and Campden Lecturer of Wakefield.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE INCOME TAX.

THE agitation against the Income Tax continues. On Monday one of the largest and most influential meetings ever held in the City of London took place at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, for the purpose of affording the electors an opportunity of expressing their strong disapprobation of the re-imposition of the Income Tax, and of representing the necessity of immediately devoting the earliest session of Parliament to a thorough revision and reform of the whole principles and details of the taxation and expenditure of the country. P. A. Taylor, Esq., was called to the chair, and was supported by J. Pattison, Esq., M.P.; Dr. Bowring, M.P.; Colonel Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., M.P.; the High Bailiff of Southwark (Mr. Pritchard), Sidney Smith, Esq.; J. Ingram Travers, Esq., D. W. Wire, Esq., &c. Baron Rothschild, M.P., was prevented from attending. Mr. J. Pattison, M.P., proposed the following resolution:—"That the circumstances of the times demand from Parliament the most rigid investigation of the national expenses, and the most strict and rigid economy; and that this meeting sees in the re-imposition of the property tale for the year 1848 a direct impress the nation, except in a large deduction from the estimates." He (Mr. Pattison) assured the meeting he was heart and hand in their cause. Although he did not like the tax, he should vote for its continuance for one year, in order to give the Government money, it must be paid, and he was afraid that if the tax were withdrawn at the present time, one more obnoxious would be imposed. He should support Mr. Hume's motion for one year, in order to give the Government time to turn itself round. Still he feared that Mr. Hume's motion would be lost, for there was a majority against him. Dr. Bowring, M.P., seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously. Mr. Anderson, M.P., moved the next resolution:—"That this meeting is of opinion that the country will not any longer submit to the inquisitorial, unequal, and oppressive provisions of the present Income Tax, but that it is quite prepared to support, as an adjustment of the public burdens, or the plan of an extension of the principle of direct taxation, as shall assess upon each subject of the state such a contribution to its income as shall be fairly proportionate to his means." The resolution was seconded and carried, and several gentlemen having spoken against the imposition of the tax, a petition to Parliament, founded on the above resolutions, was adopted, and the meeting separated.

AT the Marylebone vestry, on Saturday last, Mr. Standford moved the adoption of a petition to the House of Commons, praying the unqualified abolition of the Income Tax, and a revision of the whole taxation of the country, so that, without embarrassing her Majesty's Government, or compromising either national credit or honour, the taxes may be equally proportioned according to the wealth of the parties taxed. After a slight discussion, the petition was adopted.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

PRINTERS' PENSION SOCIETY. The annual general meeting, and 26th election, of this society was held on Monday, at the London Tavern, for the purpose of transacting the usual business, and of electing twenty pensioners on the present funds, and the candidate ninth on the roll to the Whittingham pension: Richard Taylor, Esq., in the chair. Mr. Hodson, the secretary, read the Report, which, after the usual preliminaries, proceeded to give the particulars of the printing business, the annual subscriptions were but a few pounds short of the previous year. After the last election the number of pensioners was raised to 81, of whom 19 died during the year, leaving 62 on the books. The yearly sum thus raised in 9 months to nineteen years, and that the subscriptions had not only been equal to the pensions, but left a surplus of £20. As regarded the anniversary dinner, the Committee had to announce that Lord Lincoln had, on the occasion, it was announced that his Royal Highness Prince Albert had consented to become, the patron of the society, and had accompanied this consent with a handsome donation of fifty guineas. The additional contribution of £50, making the entire amount of his subscription £100. The report next alluded, in highly flattering terms, to the exertions of Lord Dudley Stuart, M.P., in behalf of the society, to the benefits it had derived, to the decease of a few noble authoresses of his acquaintance, the total receipts of the anniversary being £330 4s. The funded property of the society had also been increased £250, making the present capital £3,000. The funded property of the special fund also showed the total receipts, with the balance of last year, to be £1878 1s. 9d.; and the expenditure, £1250 9s.; leaving a balance of £117 12s. 9d. The Report was received, and, after a few observations by the pensioners having been transacted, the chairman announced the result of the poll for pensioners, which was as follows:—Samuel Hedgeland, 5017; John Case, 3571; John Rose, 3329, Thomas Goode, 3095; Charles Rowley, 3035; Henry Hilyard, 3019; Jemima M. A. Bullock, 2245; Elizabeth Campbell, 1982; and Elizabeth Arnold, 1642, the Whittingham pension. It was also announced that Mr. Brettell, late of Repton-street, had left a legacy of £100. Mr. Wilson, Hon. Sec. to the funds of the society; and that the Marquis of Northampton, President of the Royal Society, had consented to take the chair at the next anniversary meeting. The meeting was then dissolved.

THE MEDICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—On Tuesday evening the seventy-fifth anniversary meeting of the members and supporters of the above Society was held at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street; Walter C. Dendy, Esq., President, in the chair. The usual annual oration was delivered by F. Herd, Esq., which embraced the recent discoveries made both in medicine and surgery, the present position of the profession, medical reform in general, and the sanitary measures necessary to prevent the fatal effects of epidemics in the metropolis and large manufacturing towns. The learned orator was greeted, when he concluded, with loud applause. The President delivered the usual address, presented the "Fothergillian Medal" to Dr. Lever, of Guy's Hospital, for his prize essay "On Blood Tumours obstructing Parturition." A silver medal was also presented to Mr. J. A. Smith, surgeon, the secretary to the society, on his retirement from office, as a proof of esteem by the members for his valuable services. The president and other officers for the ensuing year were elected, and the meeting separated.

IRELAND.

THE Kerry Post of the 1st instant says:—The landlords of Trughenackmy have applied for loans under the Landed Property Improvement Act to the amount of £24,000, pursuant to the 13th of December last, of which sum the expenditure of £24,000 has been already sanctioned by the Board of Works. But until yesterday we had not heard of a single penny having been made available for the employment of the people round Tralee, and the consequence is that the applicants for aid in this barony was George Day Stokes, Esq., J.P., of Tralee, who asked for £500 for a small property near Tralee, and £1700 for a highly improvable estate near Castleisland. He has not as yet received an answer about the larger application, but the £500 has been sanctioned, and an instalment of the money sent down to him, with which he commenced operations on Monday last. Mr. Stokes is the first proprietor for Trughenackmy who has availed himself of the measure of relief for the labouring classes practically into operation in this barony.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—A new spirit seems to have been infused into the Repeal movement. Contributions still keep pouring in from all parts in crowds to excess, and the excitement and enthusiasm of 1843-44 seems to live again. That the French Revolution is beginning to operate on the popular mind in Ireland, is unquestionably manifested by the meeting of Monday last, and the general improvement in the prospects of the Repeal Association. Several members of Parliament and a large proportion of the Corporation attended, and the ladies' galleries were densely occupied. On the motion of Mr. M. O'Connell, M.P., the chair was taken by the Lord Mayor, who briefly addressed the meeting. Mr. M. O'Connell commenced the business of the day by submitting to the association a letter from the Very Rev. R. Kirby, Castleconnor, county Kilkenny, enclosing £28, the subscriptions of an equal number of Roman Catholic clergymen. The proceedings were pretty much of the usual kind, the Landlord and Tenant Bill was denounced by the majority of the speakers, and was generally condemned. The rent for the week was announced to be £77 13s. Previous to vacating the chair, Mr. J. O'Connell called on the people to refrain from exhibiting any revolutionary symbols, and to abstain from all infraction of the law.

THE ENGLISH WORKMEN EXPELLED FROM FRANCE. On Monday the Mayor of Portsmouth (Mr. Owen) received instructions from the Secretary of State relative to the disposal of the people brought to Portsmouth by the Brighton and Continental Steam Packet Company from Havre on Saturday and Sunday, and such others as may follow. His Worship is directed to pass each person to his own home at the Government expense. A number left on Monday, and nearly all the residue on Tuesday, for their respective destinations, with food and money, by the Brighton and South Coast Railway, in accordance with arrangements made by Mr. Sutton, the superintendent of this station. The Brighton and Dieppe steamers left Portsmouth on Tuesday, on their return to Havre for fresh passengers.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

There Lordships having met as usual at five o'clock, and sat for a short time, adjourned, after the despatch of some trifling routine business.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at four o'clock.

The Penzance Water Works Bill was read a second time and committed.

Lord MILTON took the oaths and his seat for Wicklow.

WINDOW-BREAKING.—Mr. Alderman SIDNEY said he yesterday presented a petition complaining of the offence of window-breaking in the metropolis. He now wished to give notice that, on the 23d inst., he should move for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the subject alluded to by the petitioners.

THE INCOME TAX.

The adjourned debate on Mr Hume's amendment was resumed, when

Mr. WILSON, in a very long and able speech, defended the principles of Free Trade, as exemplified in our present commercial legislation, and contended that if the House should, as he thought they ought, persevere in that course, they were wrong in not accepting the original proposition of an increased Income Tax for five years, which the Government had originally proposed, and declared that he had been prepared to support that proposition, and that he would now support their modified plan of a three per cent. for three years, that that was the only means of enabling them to try the great experiment of Free Trade, and that this House and the country would, ere long regret having offered any opposition to the Budget

Mr. G. H. SMITH, on the other hand, condemned the Government proposition, and declared his intention to vote for the amendment of Mr. Hume for one year.

A lengthened discussion followed, in which the Government proposition was generally condemned.

Mr DISRAELI assailed the Free Trade policy of Sir R. Peel, and attributed the present state of commercial affairs to it, while

Mr GLADSTONE, with great ability, defended it; and the debate was then adjourned to Monday.

CONFIRMATION OF THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

The confirmation of the Right Rev John Bird Sumner, D.D., who had been appointed to the Primacy, and who had been elected without any dissent by the Very Reverend the Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of Canterbury, took place yesterday (Friday), at Bow Church, in Cheapside. At half-past 11 o'clock the church doors were opened, and a crowd of persons who had been collecting for some time, immediately poured into the church, which was in a very short time completely filled

At eleven o'clock the Archbishop elect entered the church, and took his seat in the Consistorial pew; the Archbishop of York, and the Bishops of London, Lichfield, Winchester, and Oxford, also entered at the same time, together with the Advocates and Proctors, the Vicar-General, and other persons officially connected with the ceremony. The service of the day was then performed by the Venerable Archdeacon Hamilton

At the conclusion of the service the above-named Bishops, the Queen's Commissioners, quitted the pews they had at first occupied, and took their seats at the tables, the Archbishop of York presiding, and the ceremony of Confirmation was proceeded with. The Royal commission having been read, the opposers of the Confirmation were called, but none appeared, and the Archbishop elect assumed his appointed place at the foot of the table, and took the customary oath. The ceremony was precisely analogous to that employed at the recent Confirmation of the Bishop of Hereford; but there being no opposition, came more speedily to a termination. At its conclusion, the Archbishop and the Commissioners retired, and the congregation quitted the church.

LANCASTER ELECTION.—The following is the state of the poll: Armstrong, 536; Stanley, 620. Majority, 16.

THE Archbishop of Canterbury has appointed John Divett, Esq., of Bovey Tracey, Chudleigh, to be his Grace's Secretary

THE LATE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.—The stamp duty paid on the probate of the will of the late Archbishop of Canterbury, as the personal estate of this venerable prelate in England and Scotland, amounts to £30,000, which is exclusive of his income.

CONVERSION TO THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.—We understand that the Rev Mr Thomas, an Anglican clergyman, formerly of Trinity College, Cambridge, has received into the Roman Catholic Church the Rev Edmund's College, Herts, and confirmed by Dr. Wiseman on Sunday last DISTURBED STATE OF THE COUNTRY.—According to advices from Glasgow, received yesterday (Friday) evening, the operatives of that city have determined upon a demand for higher wages. The strike was to commence that morning, by the men refusing their work.—Manchester continued tranquil up to a late hour yesterday (Friday). Disturbances were, however, calculated upon, and provided for by the police.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE

A letter from Toulon announces that a steamer, bringing both the Duke d'Aumale and the Prince de Joinville from Algeria, has cast anchor at the distance of a few leagues from Toulon, near to Cape Sapet. The Princes were waiting there for the orders of the Government, which, it was said, was about to place a steamer at their disposal to convey them to whatever destination they chose.

GERMAN STATES

The Cologne Gazette of the 7th inst. announces that the King of Bavaria has recognized the French Republic, and has confirmed the envoy of the Republic at the Court of Bavaria

At length the excitement created by the recent events in Paris continues very great. The Augsburg Gazette of the 4th states that, in order to satisfy the demands of the people, the King of Bavaria has dissolved the Chambers, and that the new elections are to take place immediately. The estates of the Kingdom are convoked for the 31st of May. The King has abandoned his right to exclude public functionaries who may be elected.

BELGIUM

The Moniteur Belge says:—"The Prince de Ligne, Ambassador of his Majesty the King of the Belgians, had his first interview with M. de Lamartine on the 5th inst. The Prince communicated to him a despatch from his Government, which authorised him to announce to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Provisional Government, that the Government of his Majesty the King of the Belgians desired to maintain official relations with the French Government on an amicable footing."

AUSTRIA

Advices from Vienna to the 1st inst. mention that the news of the events at Paris has caused a consternation at Vienna difficult to be described, not only in high quarters, but in every class of the population. A grand Council of all the Ministers was immediately held. The rumour of the retirement of Prince Metternich was repeated, and generally believed to be correct.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE REV. GEORGE LEONARD JENYNS, OF BOTTISHAM HALL, CAMBRIDGE.

THIS venerable divine, who at the period of his decease had completed his eighty-fourth year, was son of John Harvey Jenyns, Esq., and cousin of Soame Jenyns, of Bottisham Hall, M.P. for Cambridgeshire. The well-known writer; and was of the last century—whose estates he eventually inherited

The immediate ancestor of the family of Jenyns, of Bottisham, was Thomas Jenyns, Esq., of Hayes, father of Sir John Jenyns, K.B., whose son, Richard Jenyns, of Saundridge, was father of two eminently distinguished sisters, Frances (Mrs Soame Jenyns"), married to Richard Duke of Tyrconnel; and Sarah, the celebrated Duchess of Marlborough.

The gentleman whose death we record married, in 1788, Mary, daughter of the late William Heberden, M.D., and has left three surviving sons, and as many daughters, viz. George, Charles, Leonard; Mary Harriet (wife of the Rev. J. S. Henslow, Professor of Botany at Cambridge), and Elizabeth.

COLONEL DURMAS

THIS officer who, up to a late period, held the Governorship of Gravesend and Tilbury Fort, died on the 4th inst. at Lewisham. He had been connected with the British army for a period of fifty years. His rank of Colonel he obtained in 1838. The Colonel served at the blockade of Malta in 1799, and in Egypt in 1801, where he received a medal for his gallantry. He was also at the battle of Maida, in 1806. He has been on half-pay since 1832.

COLONEL CHENEY, C.B.

COLONEL CHENEY, a Waterloo officer, who was formerly connected with the 7th Dragoon Guards and the Scots Greys, has died recently. He entered the army as a Cornet, in 1794, and rose to a Colonelcy in 1838. The deceased served throughout the late war with the 2nd Dragoon Guards in Flanders, Holland, and other parts of the Continent. On the memorable 17th, June, 1815, the command of the regiment devolved on him, when he had no less than five horses shot under him: he was also, as stated, at Waterloo.

MR. VALE

SAMUEL VALE was for many years a favourite comic actor at the Surrey Theatre. His powers of humour and burlesque, though sometimes vulgar, were not without force and merit. Mr. Vale, who earned a competency during his dramatic career, died, for some time, retired from the stage. His death, which has recently occurred, will be much lamented in the dramatic profession.

FATAL OCCURRENCE AT CALAIS.—On Saturday last, the Honfleur steam packet-boat had been lying off this harbour, waiting for the mail to be sent out to her for Dover. While she thus plied on and off the shore, she unfortunately grounded on the sands about one mile eastward of the pier. The wind was very high (south-west), and the sea equally so. All efforts to float her were unavailing; the wind pressed her heavily down, and the tide was falling. In this state, unhappily, five persons, Lieut. Coombe, R.N., Englishman, one German, and three Frenchmen, took a boat; it upset, and all were drowned. This morning, Lieut. Coombe was interred: the British consul and other English subscribers attended his funeral. It is understood that he has left a widow and three young children. The Honfleur still lies on the sands.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The whole of Louis Philippe's family, it is at present understood, will assemble and remain at Claremont.

His Excellency the Austrian Ambassador, and the Countess Dietrichstein, have postponed their departure for Vienna, sine die, in consequence of the unexpected Revolution in France.

Lord Brougham is detained at Cannes by indisposition.

Her Majesty has nominated the Earl of Dalhousie to be a Knight of the Thistle, vacant by the death of the Earl of Moray.

The memorial of the electors of Manche-ter to Messrs. Milner Gibson, M.P., and Joh- Bright, M.P., which has been adopted at a meeting at the Electric Commercial-rooms, yesterday, protesting against the increasing expenditure of the country, and against the unfairness of the Income Tax in its present form, received, in one day, the signatures of 5030 electors (nearly half the constituency), including persons of all political opinions.

Lord and Lady John Russell left town on Saturday morning for St Leonards, Hastings.

Colonel Herman is appointed Vice-Consul of Great Britain, at Rennes, in Tripoli, in place of Mr. F. H. Gibert, promoted to be her Majesty's Consul at Alexandria.

The Paris Academy of Sciences has had communicated from Mr. Walsh, the Consul-general of the United States in Paris, a letter from Lieutenant Maury, the Director of the National Observatory of Washington, giving an account of a warm stream which arrives on the north-west coast of America, apparently from the coast of China. Its rate of speed appears to be about sixty miles per day

The Right Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons gave his fourth parliamentary dinner at his mansion in Eaton-square, on Saturday last.

The Donegal, Brown, from Hartlepool for Margate, was wrecked near Calais, on the morning of the 3rd instant; crew saved.

The "Sarsfield" Repeal Club of Limerick lately illuminated in honour of France, and has arranged an address to M. Ledru-Rollin.

The Charing-cross Hospital has been benefited by a legacy of £500, bequeathed by the late Miss Ann Colyer, of Farningham, Kent, who also left to the Westminster Hospital £2000, to the London Hospital £2000, and to the King's College Hospital £1000.

The tunnel of the Cork and Dublin Railway, only recently commenced in the vicinity of Cork, is progressing rapidly. The greatest depth of surface over any part of the tunnel will be about 90 feet.

On Saturday, Charles Dixon, Esq., forwarded the sum of £500 to the secretary of the University College Hospital, for the use of that institution The same gentleman, about a week since, presented £500 to the Hospital for the Cure of Consumption, at Brompton.

The treasurer of the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels has received a donation of £163 in aid of the funds, from an individual assuming the initials of "R. S." The same person has also forwarded £100 for the Additional Curates fund.

So numerous are the applications to the Provisional Government at Paris for places, that the large area before the Hôtel de Ville is absolutely blocked up with petitioners. The Charivari of Saturday proposes that an order be issued commanding all solliciteurs to form in the Place de la Madeleine, and to march from that place abreast to the offices of the Government

The Princess Alexander of Wurtemburg was safely delivered of a son on the 7th ultimo, at her palace at Stuttgard. This Prince is, at present, heir-presumptive to the Wurtemburg throne.

A tuscany, which has been in the possession of a gentleman of Lympne upwards of sixteen years, has, within the last few days, had an egg

The Speaker's Levees are to take place on the 11th, 18th, and 25th March.

The Elizabeth Mary, of Leith, for Clarente (with coals), got on the main shore during thick weather on the night of the 3rd inst., and bilged soon after.

The Princess Lieven has arrived in town from Paris, and is staying at the Carendon Hotel.

Sir De Lacy Evans supported Mr Horsman's amendment against the Income Tax as at present assessed; having parted with Sir J. Y. Buller, who was in favour of the Government measure.

A New York paper mentions that the man who cut the first tree in the wilds of Ohio is still alive His name is Daniel Cashwell. He resides on a small farm in Oneida county, New York State.

In our haste to find work for the Court, at the late Lancaster Assizes, the Grand Jury, after they had been sent to their business, returned into court with what the foreman described as a "true bill," but which turned out to be a list of themselves.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, attended by Lady Fanny Howard and Sir George Couper, went on Sunday afternoon to Claremont, to visit the Count and Countess de Neuilly, upon their arrival in this country.

The Drogheda Railway Company make no dividend for the last half-year, owing to the decline of their business

The Cashel Railway Company have called in the tenth and eleventh instalment of 50s. per share.

Mr. Henderley, Q.C., the Chancery Barrister, will be the new Master in Chancery, in place of Sir Giffin Wilson, resigned

Three hundred and fifty-six labourers on the estate of the Knight of Glin, whom he had employed under the Drainage Act, have been idle the week, owing to some novel stringent regulations adopted by the Grand Jurors

The charge for emigrant passage to America is raised at Limerick to £5 per head.

On Thursday, the 24th ult., the interesting ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of a new castle as a residence, half-way between Glenarm and Cushendall, on the maternal estates of the Marchioness of Londonderry, took place, in presence of a large assemblage of the tenantry and of the clergy and gentry of the neighbourhood

The number of prisoners in the county of Antrim gaol is thirty-four; there being but one for murder, and one for manslaughter: the other cases being chiefly arrestes and felonies of a minor description

The first anniversary of the French Republic was greeted at Lanarkin [illegible] with a salute of 101 guns

It is reported that Prince Metternich has resigned the presidency of the Austrian councils.

Lord John Russell has stated, in reply to an application from the rate-payers of the Dunmanway Union, that a parliamentary inquiry shall be instituted on the subject of poor-law town-land rating in Ireland, and to ascertain whether any change can be beneficially made in the unions or in the electoral divisions

The Emperor of Russia is seriously indisposed.

In Sydney Gardens, Bath, the Gothic Hall was sold on Friday by auction, by Mr. Frederick Morris, to the proprietors, for the low sum of £63 The building originally cost £700

Saturday's Bath Herald contains the following rather remarkable advertisement: "Edmund Gibson, Bishop of London, died in Bath about the year 1715. Any person who can give information as to the place of his burial, will receive a reward of ten shillings, on applying," &c [The address appears in our provincial contemporary's columns.]

Dr. Graham, of Cambridge, well known as an able scholar and eminent divine, will be selected to fill the vacancy on the episcopal bench, caused by the translation of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

At a meeting of the Marylebone vestry, on Saturday, a series of resolutions for the admission of the Western Gas Company was proposed. Much confusion ensued, and ultimately the debate was adjourned.

Letters of the 12th ultimo, from Melilla, in Morocco, describe a terrific earthquake, which took place there on the preceding night, spreading ruin amongst the fortifications, churches, larger edifices, &c. It was accompanied by a violent hurricane; it does not appear that any lives were lost.

Among the proclamations issued by the Provisional Government of France, one abolishes the punishment of death for political offences.

The Rev. W. F. Williamson, M.A., of Oriel, lately theological tutor with Cooper and Charnock, has been instituted by the Archdeacon to the Rectory of St. Werburgh's, Derby

On Tuesday morning a fire, resulting in the total destruction of the Crown Tavern, and the partial demolition of several other buildings, occurred in High-street, Kensington; there was no loss of life

The only ladies admitted by the ex-Queen of the French to an interview with her at Newhaven were Lady Mary Abdy and Miss Augusta Gregory, daughter of the Sir Augustus Stafford, Admiral Sir Robert Otway. The bouquet the Queen held in her hand was presented to her by Miss Gregory.

A very considerable number of Catholic priests have recently died in different parts of England from fever caught while in attendance on the sick poor. Among the latest victims to a sacred sense of duty are, the Rev. Wilfrid Lescher Brownbill, who had been assisting the clergy in Newcastle on Tyne, and the Very Rev. F. J. Perron, of Everlingham-park, Yorkshire, both of whom died last week of fever.

In the vicinity of Loch-Carron, in the north of Scotland, the seat of destruction, murrurous are as rife among the poor now as ever they were; and it seems a much easier matter to get a wife than a bolt of meal.

M. Duchâtel, who left Paris on Saturday, on passing through Metz, was stopped and his papers demanded. Fortunately his disguise was complete, and he was allowed to pass on, though not until he had been informed that, had he proved, as was suspected, to be the Duke de Nemours, he would inevitably have been shot.

RIOTOUS ASSEMBLAGES IN THE METROPOLIS.

During the greater part of the week riotous meetings of the lowest and most disorderly characters, in various localities of the metropolis, have kept the police on the alert The exciting cause was, no doubt, the recent Revolution among our neighbours across the Channel; but the immediate commencement arose from an abortive attempt, on Monday last, at a demonstration against the Income Tax, which a Mr. Charles Cochrane, who has for some time past made himself conspicuous in Westminster, in matters of parish meetings and the like, had proposed to organise in the shape of an open-air "Monster Meeting" in Trafalgar-square; but having received an intimation from the authorities that it was illegal to hold such an assemblage within a mile of the Houses of Parliament, during the sitting of the Legislature, the would be agitator—no admirer, we may presume, of the constancy of masters prudently stayed at home, and let his followers assemble to do the parade without him, which they accordingly did after their own [illegible] March [illegible] most [illegible] [illegible] the French Revolution, [illegible] "saints of the Charter," &c.; at the close of which the mob (the [illegible] sort of them being pickpockets, thieves, &c.) assuming a very tumultuous aspect, the police endeavoured to clear the square, and a row immediately ensued, resulting in many broken heads. During the evening riotous bands of from the nearest rabble—moved from one locality to another in the "West End," particularly about Pall-mall, the Park, and Regent-street; and before they were [illegible] pleased to indulge in breaking some lamps and doing other mischief of a similar kind in the street. There were also disturbances in Clerkenwell

On Tuesday and Wednesday, also, large groups of disorderly young fellows crowded into neighbourhood of Charing-cross, and very much impeded the traffic of the streets; and, in collisions with the police, several were rather roughly treated; some were sent to Charing-cross Hospital, others to the police-stations, the latter furnishing rather busy occupation to the magistrates in Bow-street. On the latter day the crowds of miserable wretches who thronged the streets were completely dispersed towards night; and little or no damage was done with the exception of the breaking of some panes of glass in a few shops which happened not to have their shutters put up when the ban is of canaille, thieves, pickpockets, and ragamuffins were passing through the streets. In the evening there was a numerously attended meeting of Chartists held at Stepney, at which resolutions, and a petition to Parliament founded on them, in favour of the "People's Charter," were unanimously adopted. The assemblage was orderly and peaceful.

On Thursday the streets were almost freed from the abominable nuisance created by the inundation of the living mass of combined filth and crime, and yesterday they perfectly resumed their wonted orderly, busy, industrial appearance

SERIOUS RIOTS IN GLASGOW.

On Monday afternoon an émeute on a large and at one period very alarming scale, took place in Glasgow.

About twelve o'clock a meeting of unemployed took place in the Green, when a number of noisy persons assembled.

About two o'clock a portion of the assembled, in accordance with a resolution passed at the meeting, left the Green, and proceeded to the police-buildings, in the Saltmarket, where sitting, and demanded food or employment. The police-rates, who were engaged preparing soup tickets for the evening, replied that these would be ready immediately for distribution Not satisfied with this answer, the mob proceeded down Nelson-street, and commenced the work of destruction by breaking into the shop of Mr. Anderson, Key, Trongate, from which they carried off a large quantity of bread, &c., and broke two windows

[illegible] the appearance, a number of unemployed navvies and other parties, evidently strangers to Glasgow, having joined in it

In London-street, a baker's shop was broken into, and all that it contained carried away

About three o'clock a vast mass, consisting of men and boys, amongst whom were found many women of the lower classes, came along Argyle-street, smashing the windows, and plundering where any provision shops of their contents.

Passing the Cross, the mob broke into the shop of Mr. E. Musgrove, cutler, in and tool maker, and nearly emptied it, as we are told, of its stock of guns and pistols, swords, &c. At the spot of Candleriggs, the shop of Mr. Lindsay, gunsmith, was ransacked. Henceforth another element entered into the character of the riot, which now assumed the aspect of a regular emeute. Luckily, no murder was search, otherwise serious damage, and even loss of life, might have been the consequence. A few shots, however, were fired, as the crowd proceeded on its onward course

In Buchanan-street, the shop of Findlay and Field, jewellers, was robbed of watches and trinkets of all sorts, to the value of nearly £2000. The windows were besides smashed to pieces

Among the cries raised by the mob were, "Bread or Revolution;" "Vive la Republique!" &c. We question if they understood the meaning of the latter

By this time the alarm had very widely spread, and the citizens began to take measures for the protection of their property. The shops generally were closed in every part of the town

The police were nowhere to be seen. Neither Captain Pearce nor any of his men were visible anywhere

About five o'clock the military were called out; and a strong body of infantry, followed by a troop of cavalry, marched along the principal streets.

The Riot Act was read in front of the Exchange, by Bailie Orr.

After doing all the mischief they could in Buchanan-street, the mob returned [illegible] and made an inef[illegible]ctual attempt to break open [illegible] shop. Both [illegible] which were shut upon them at both ends. They then proceeded to the Cross, firing shots as they went along. The crowd at this time had become immense, and filled the whole street

They next proceeded to the Main-street, Gorbals, and plundered different provision shops on their way. Casks of butter, chests of herrings, &c. were appared in all directions

Upwards of fifty of the rioters have been taken into custody. About 100 guns and pistols, besides cutlasses and pikes, had been taken by the authorities

On Tuesday the disturbances were renewed, and about noon a body of four or five thousand of the mob, assembled in the suburb of Bridgeton, having commenced throwing stones at a small detachment of fifteen or eighteen police, who had been called out, compelled the latter to retreat, and, following up the advantage, pressed so closely upon them that the pensioners were obliged to take on the walls, at the top of Main-street, when six or seven of the rioters fell, one of them killed, the others more or less dangerously wounded.

The mass then wandered a little, and a body of dragoons coming, up completely dispersed them

During the rest of Monday a very respectably attired woman was shot dead in the Cowaddens district of the town.

The killed and wounded are said to have been only spectators; the rioters, who belonged to the criminal scum of the population, having always run away when the authorities appeared. Plunder seemed the main object of the wretches, in general quantities had been recovered from them and brought to the police-offices for recognition by the owners.

The latest accounts mention that tranquility had been restored.

Some disturbances, but of a less violent kind, marked the commencement of the week in Edinburgh, but they only resulted in a few broken panes of glass

POPULAR MANIFESTATION AT MANCHESTER.—The [illegible] of men, of the lowest order, assembled at Newton Heath (Hulme of Manchester), on Thursday morning, and, having adjourned to St. George's fields, at the instigation of a young would-be patriot, formed themselves into detachments to visit the various mills and workshops, to claim the sympathy of the workmen in favour of what the Chartists deem to be liberty

DOM MIGUEL DE BRAGANZA AND LOUIS PHILIPPE.—Dom Miguel having been invited on Thursday last, by a note to be conveyed by her Majesty's Consul, to one of the best boxes in the house, immediately declined it in these words:—"No! not at present. Although Louis Philippe has done me all the harm he could, I never failed, and, besides, he was the near relation of my mother. I could not enjoy the opera while thinking of the personal danger to which I might be at the very moment be exposed." In conformity with this feeling, the Prince was not at the theatre.

[illegible]

At Corfu, the wife of Lieutenant Colonel [illegible] Pole, Deputy-Quartermaster-General in the Ionian Islands, of a son.—At Stanks House, Surrey, the wife of the Rev. S. Marlborough, of a daughter.—At Hatfield, Herts, the Lady of Captain [illegible] Esquire, 7th Dragoon Guards, of a son.—At Bradenham Rectory, Bucks, the wife of the Rev. W. H. Bailey, of a daughter.—At York, the wife of the Rev. William Reed, M.A. of a son.—At Isleworth, the wife of Captain [illegible] Esq., of a daughter.—At Langley Park, Beckenham, the wife of Charles [illegible] Esq., of a daughter.—At [illegible] the wife of [illegible] Esq., of a son.—At [illegible] the wife of Frederick [illegible] Esq., of a daughter.—At [illegible] the wife of [illegible] Esq., of a daughter.—At [illegible] the wife of [illegible] Esq., of a daughter.—At [illegible] the wife of

LOUIS PHILIPPE LANDING AT NEWHAVEN.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

In the late edition of our Journal of last week, we briefly announced the safe arrival of the ex-King and Queen of the French at Newhaven, on Friday. We are now enabled to present our readers with some very interesting details of the route taken by the Royal fugitives; with the accompanying Engravings of their arrival and sojourn at Newhaven, whither one of our artists journeyed to make the requisite sketches.

It will, however, be first as well to retrace the course of the King and Queen from the château at Dreux, previously to leaving which a farmer procured disguises for the Royal party; the King habiting himself in an old cloak and cap, having first shaved his whiskers, discarded his wig, and altogether disguised himself so as to defy recognition.

Long before daylight, the party started on their way to La Ferté Vidame: taking the road of Evreux, twelve to fifteen leagues from Honfleur. They travelled chiefly by night, and reached Honfleur at five o'clock on Saturday morning. They remained at Honfleur, in the house of a gentleman whom the King knew, for a short time, and then crossed to Tronville, a short distance from the town. It was their intention to embark at Tronville, but owing to the boisterous state of the weather they were compelled to remain at the latter place two days, when finding they could not set sail, they returned to Honfleur, with the intention of embarking from that place; but the sea still continued very rough, and the King fearing that the Queen in her exhausted condition would be unable to bear the fatigue of a rough passage, deferred his departure till the weather changed on Thursday. In the meantime information was secretly conveyed to the Express, Southampton steam-packet, that they would be required to take a party from Havre to England.

On Thursday afternoon, the gentleman who sheltered the dethroned Monarch and his Consort at Honfleur engaged a French fishing-boat to convey the party from Honfleur to Havre; and, fearing that in this small vessel the features of the King might be recognised, the gentleman engaged an interpreter to interpret French to the King, who, to render his disguise more complete, passed as an Englishman. Nothing of moment transpired on the passage to Havre where the Express was waiting with her steam up; and at nine o'clock on Thursday evening, the Royal fugitives and suite set sail for England.

A little before seven on Friday morning, the Express steamer arrived off Newhaven harbour. Here she lay to, and her commander, Captain Paul, pulled off for shore in a boat with General Dumas, who proceeded to the Bridge Inn, to bespeak accommodation for the voyagers. Having made due arrangements, he started for London, leaving the hostess in perfect ignorance as to the rank of her expected guests. The Captain returned to his ship shortly after. About eleven o'clock a boat pulled up to the shore, containing an elderly gentleman attired in an old green blouse and travelling-cap, and a rough great coat; a lady of similar age, plainly dressed in a black bonnet, and checked black and white cloak, attended by a young female, and three other persons.

The Royal party having landed, were conducted by Mr Sims the distance of 200 yards, where a fly was in waiting, into which the King and Queen, with the female attendant, had stepped, and were about to proceed, when Mr. Sims involuntarily betrayed his recognition, and exclaimed "Welcome to England King Louis Philippe! welcome welcome!"

THE HARBOUR OF NEWHAVEN.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

The party were then conducted by Mr. Sims to the Bridge Inn, where every preparation had been made by Mrs. Smith to secure the comfort of her anticipated but unknown guests. The truth, however, was immediately disclosed; and the worthy hostess, her daughter and assistants, confirmed the welcome which had already been pronounced, and conducted the Royal exiles up-stairs. On reaching their apartment, the emotions of the worn-out and harassed travellers overpowered them, and found vent in a flood of tears.

The accommodations of the Bridge Inn are not so limited as has been stated. The Royal party, which consisted of seven persons, occupied two sitting and six bed-rooms, independent of a large room 60 feet in length which was appropriated to the attendants. The dining-room occupied by their Majesties is about 20 feet long by 15 feet wide, having a large bow window, affording additional space.

The news of the Royal arrival soon spread among the inhabitants. Immediately on receiving the intelligence, Mr. Catt, of Bishopstone (who had the honour of an introduction to Louis Philippe at the Chateau d'Eu some two years ago), repaired to the Bridge Inn. The King at once recognized Mr. Catt, and received his congratulations on his escape with much emotion, shaking hands with him with great empressement, and expressing the most undisguised pleasure at meeting with him. In the course of conversation the ex-King exclaimed, "Ah, Mr. Catt, we have had a fearful time of it. We have been eight days in flight, and have been, it may be said, within two hours of being murdered. But, thank God, here we are safe on your hospitable shores." He also added, "It is not the first time, Mr. Catt, that I have experienced the generous hospitality of England. I am always proud to come to England." On Mr. Catt proffering the use of his house, Louis Philippe declined the offer, expressing his thanks, but observing, "The good people of the inn have done everything to render us comfortable, and we shall do extremely well." Mr. Elphick and Mr. Cole had, in a like spirit, both volunteered to place their residences at the disposal of the King and suite.

THE BRIDGE HOTEL NEWHAVEN.

LOUIS PHILIPPE AND PARTY AT BREAKFAST AT THE BRIDGE INN, NEWHAVEN.

The Royal party comprised, in addition to the King and Queen, a female German attendant on her Majesty, a confidential valet, a private secretary (M. Pauline, Officier d'Ordonnance), and two other gentlemen. Considerable anxiety was at first observed as to the names and rank of the retinue, who, however, have since proved to be Generals Dumas and Rumigny, M. Thuret, the King's private valet, and Mdlle. Musor, attendant on the Queen.

We omitted to state that in the interview with Mr Catt, his Majesty enquired for Mr Packham, and finding that he was at Brighton, expressed his joy that he was safe in England, and his wish that he should be sent for, which was accordingly complied with.

One of the first steps taken by Louis Philippe after his arrival at the Inn was to write a letter to her Majesty Queen Victoria, which he entrusted to Mr. Irons (the active secretary of the Brighton Railway and Continental Steam-Packet Company), who had waited on his Majesty, and offered, on behalf of the company, every facility of transit. Mr. Irons immediately started on his mission; leaving directions in passing through Lewes, that a special train should be sent down to Newhaven, to be placed at the disposal of the Royal exiles.

In the course of the morning, several of the inhabitants of Newhaven paid their respects to his Majesty, and offered their services in various ways. On Mr. Packham's arrival, he was charged to proceed to Brighton, in order there to repair the deficiencies of the Royal wardrobe; "for," said the ex-Monarch pithily to Mr Packham, "we are very short of clothes." The King also handed over to him several bags of silver coin, for the purpose of getting it changed into English money.

In the course of the afternoon the Editor of the Sussex Advertiser was honoured with a private interview with Louis Philippe and his august Consort. "We found," says the Editor, in his Journal of Tuesday, "Louis Philippe dressed plainly in black, without his wig, and looking cheerful and refreshed. The Queen, however (who was sitting at a side table), appeared much worn and fatigued. The ex-King intimated his wish that the names of his attendants should not transpire, observing how desirous he was not to compromise in the eyes of their countrymen those faithful friends who had exposed themselves to danger for his sake in the hour of peril and need. In this feeling the Queen shared.

"In alluding to recent events, his Majesty patiently disclaimed any feelings of animosity or resentment against those who had helped to hurl him from the lofty position he had lately occupied. His observations on this point were made with a calm and dignified composure of voice and manner, which certainly gave the strongest impress of sincerity and truth. Without attempting to exculpate either one party or the other, it may be truly said that, had a far different tone pervaded the observations of the dethroned Monarch, the moment and the occasion might well have been pleaded in excuse. During this most interesting interview, there were no other persons present save General Rumigny. It was an interview not easily to be forgotten."

During the afternoon, several gentlemen had the honour of an interview; amongst others, G. Molineux, Esq., and the Rev. Dr Cary, of Lewes. On learning the name of the former, the ex-King, after replying to that gentleman's congratulations on his safe arrival, observed that "he well remembered the name of Mr. Molineux, when at Lewes many years ago."

Soon after this, a special train arrived at Newhaven, conveying the Hon. Captain Hotham (one of the directors), who immediately had an interview with Louis Philippe, and despatched for town a letter Queen Amelia had written to Queen Victoria. The Royal party thus resolved not to quit Newhaven until next day, and dinner was served at half-past five.

Towards eight o'clock, General Dumas arrived at the Inn from town, accompanied by Count de Jarnac, of the French Embassy, who had an interview with the King. At a later hour, Mr. Irons returned from London, having delivered his despatch to Prince Albert, and being charged with a private message from Her Majesty, through Prince Albert, for the exiled Monarch.

On Saturday morning, before eight o'clock, several ladies and gentlemen had arrived, anxious to pay their respects to the Royal party. Amongst these were Mr. Lawrence and Lady Jane Peel, and the Rev. T. Cooke, with Miss Augusta Otway, who came from Brighton; and the Rev. Mr. Brookman and his lady, of Rottingdean. Count Duchâtel, Minister of the Interior, who also arrived from the Bedford Hotel, Brighton, had an audience of his Royal master. Large parties likewise arrived from Brighton and Lewes; and an address from the latter place was presented by a deputation, headed by Edward Blaker, Esq. Towards ten o'clock, a number of ladies had assembled in the large room of the Inn, whither the King proceeded to pay his respects. The Royal party then prepared to take their departure, but their progress down stairs was intercepted at every step by fresh comers. In the passage were stationed the scholars of the Lewes Free Grammar-school, on whose behalf the Rev. Dr Cary (principal) presented two addresses, one in Latin and the other in French, bearing the signatures of the pupils. His Majesty received these marks of youthful attachment and sympathy most graciously, and having placed himself in front of his young auditors, addressed a few sentences to them expressive of his appreciation of the feeling which had prompted them to approach him, and assuring them he would read and retain the addresses they had presented to him in his misfortunes. This concluded, the signal for departure was given, and the King, assisted by the Count de Jarnac, and her Majesty, conducted by the honourable Captain Hotham, and followed by Generals Dumas and Rumigny, M. Pauloe, M. Thuret, and Mdlle. Musor, descended the stairs as quickly as the crowd permitted. Just before leaving, the King emphatically conveyed his thanks to Mrs. Smith, the landlady; and the Queen, who had been attended by Miss Skinner and Miss F. Stone, of Newhaven, embraced them, thanking them for their attention; the King shaking hands with them, and adding his earnest thanks.

The Royal party then proceeded to the railway station, and at eleven the train took its departure. On reaching Lewes a number of persons congregated, who warmly greeted the Royal exiles. The King acknowledged their greeting, stretching out his arm and shaking hands with those nearest his carriage window.

ARRIVAL OF LOUIS PHILIPPE AND PARTY AT THE RAILWAY STATION, CROYDON.

At fifteen minutes past twelve the train reached the Croydon station, which had been selected as the point where their Majesties were to proceed by carriage to Claremont.

At Croydon the Duke and Duchess of Nemours, who had arrived from town, had been waiting the arrival of the special train from Newhaven since ten o'clock.

In the meantime, the following directors of the Brighton Railway, who had left London by a special train at a quarter past eleven, arrived at Croydon — C. Pascoe Grenfell, Esq., M.P., chairman; J. M. Parsons, Esq., deputy-chairman; Joseph Thompson, Esq., Leo Schuster, Esq., John Rix, Esq., Edward Crowley, Esq., and Edward Wigan, Esq.

In due season the approach of the Royal train was perceived, and notified to the party waiting in a state of anxiety. As it came to a standstill, Captain Hotham had his hand on the carriage-door and immediately opened it. On perceiving her children, the Queen gave a stifled scream. In a moment Louis Philippe was locked in the embrace of his son, the Duke de Nemours. He next pressed the Duchess Clementine of Saxe-Coburg to his bosom with deep emotion, and the convulsive sobs of father and child irresistibly overpowered all who were witnesses of this painfully exciting meeting. Her Majesty had quickly followed the King, and on leaving the carriage found herself in her son's arms. The Royal party were then conducted into a private room, and in a short time the Count de Jarnac was announced, and it was determined that the ex-King and Queen and their illustrious relatives should proceed direct to Claremont, in carriages which were in waiting for that purpose.

Her Majesty Queen Victoria had offered to send her private carriage to East Sheen, to convey the Royal party to Claremont; but the ex-King declined the proffered courtesy, preferring to travel in a post-carriage to their place of destination, and a message to that effect was accordingly despatched to Col. Phipps, by request of Count de Jarnac.

Before his Majesty left Mr. Majesty thanked the directors of the railway for the unremitting attention which had been shown to him. On reaching the railway station doorway, his Majesty recognised the editor of the Sussex Advertiser, and, giving his hand, grasped and retained it firmly in his own, saying, with great impressive tone and manner: "My friend, recollect this: Charles X. was dethroned for having sought to abolish the Charter of the Constitution: I have been dethroned because I constantly strove to uphold it. Recollect this. You mark the difference." The Royal party then entered their carriages, and were loudly cheered on their departure.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS

We have annexed two Pictures—the Landing of Louis Philippe, and the Royal Party at Breakfast at the Inn. Appended, too, is the exterior of "the Bridge," and a view of the Station, and the impressive scene at the Croydon Railway Station.

The town of Newhaven lies on the Sussex coast, seven miles S. from Lewes, four miles W. of Seaford, and nine E. from Brighton. It has a good trade, harbour (the Ouse), capable of great improvement, having considerable natural advantages, and situate midway between Portsmouth and Dover. The mouth of the harbour is to be shifted Eastward, where, from the great depth of water and excellent anchorage, &c., a breakwater has been recommended by the Harbour of Refuge Commissioners, at an estimate of £1,250,000. Newhaven has an improving town: a railway has recently been opened to the port, affording direct communication, viâ Keymer, to the metropolis, now only fifty miles distant; and it is also the nearest port to the metropolis. An important continental traffic is likely to take place here, when three first-rate steam-vessels will ply to Dieppe and Havre.

It is intended to widen the piers of the harbour. On the east side of the river a large hotel has been erected by the London, Brighton, and South-Coast Railway Company, near which are the Station-house and other buildings of the company. The town and locality have become possessed of historical note by the landing and stay of the Royal fugitives.

MUSIC.

MR. STERNDALE BENNETT'S PIANOFORTE SOIREES. On Tuesday evening, Mr. Sternndale Bennett gave his second pianoforte performance at the Hanover-square Rooms. Mr. Sterndale Bennett is not only one of our most distinguished pianists, but he is a composer of several first-rate works, which have properly placed him in the first rank of living composers. He has been during his career a warm upholder of the claims of genius, and has exercised its powers originality and consistency have been his principle of action, although, perhaps, his worldly interests may have suffered from his uncompromising spirit. Such a character, and such an artist, is deserving of support and sympathy from the true professor and independent amateur. Every season he gives a series of interesting meetings, at which he interprets with eloquence, the inspirations for the chamber of the mighty masters, and for the admirable execution of his own fine and original stamp collect at these soirées, listen: e with enthusiasm to the intellectual development of high art. The programme of Tuesday comprised Weber's pianoforte and clarionet duet, in which Mr. Bennett was assisted by Mr. Williams, whose delicious tone and neat execution are always admired; Beethoven's sonata for pianoforte and violoncello, op. 69, in which the valuable co-operation of M. Rousseau was secured; and Beethoven's second trio, in E flat, op. 70, with Messrs. Banister and Rousseau; besides pieces by Handel, Sebastian Bach, Mendelssohn, and by himself. Miss Duval and Miss Stewart sang vocal pieces between the instrumental pieces. The third and last meeting will take place on the 28th.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY. The first rehearsal of the season takes place this day (Saturday), at the Hanover-square Rooms, for the opening concert on Monday next. During the season, a new concerto by Spohr will be played, directed by the composer himself, who visits this country. The music to Meyerbeer's "Struensee" will be produced for the first time in this country, conducted by Costa, who is the permanent conductor for the series.

SACRED CONCERTS.—Under the able direction of Miss Mounsey, an accomplished organist, a series of Sacred Concerts, which has for its object the gratification to amateurs and professors, by the production of such excellent music, was recommenced on Monday night at Crosby Hall. There was, as usual, a selection compiled with much taste and judgment from the works of Graun, Haydn, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Sebastian Bach, Vogler, Kent, &c. The solos were sung by the Misses Steele and Collett, Messrs. Lockey and Kench. Miss Mounsey, between the parts, performed on the pianoforte.

M. THALBERG'S CONCERT.—This famed pianist, who is the son-in law of Lablache, gave an evening concert on Monday night at Exeter Hall, which was so most decidedly crowded that there was some discontent, but on the restoration of order the programme was listened to with great attention. The lion of the scheme was immensely applauded in his capriccio in the "Don Pasquale" a reminiscence of Rossini, sung so divinely by Mario, and in his fantasia on themes from the "Sonnambula" and "Don Juan." Thalberg's style, based on the writings of Czerny and of Clementi, is of course now well known to every pianoforte player continuing much that is varied and shared in the composition, yet the grace, ease, and precision of Thalberg's executive power render his performances charming and entraînant. In the vocal department he was aided by Madame Tulkins, Miss Wallace, Miss Miran, the Misses Williams, Miss Bassano, Signor Calzolari, and Mr Reeves

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC. The first Concert of the twenty-sixth season was given on Saturday last, in presence of many distinguished amateurs. Mr. Lucas was the conductor, and Sabilon led the band. In the first part were gleanings from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," very creditably performed; the solos sustained by Miss Hansford, Miss Holroyd, and Miss Salmon, Messrs. Reed and Lutter. One of Handel's trios was well executed by Hill (violin), H. Chip. (violoncello), and Mount (double bass). In the second part, Miss Hansford sang Purcell's "Lord have mercy" with excellent judgment and taste. Miss Taylor exhibited signs of promise in "With verdure clad." Miss Lincoln and Miss Owen, in Mendelssohn's duo, "I waited for the Lord," and Mr. C. H. Rodwell, in the bass song, "Mine is the Nam," by Collicott, were applauded. The first movement of Sterndale Bennett's pianoforte concerto, in F minor—a beautiful production was brilliantly executed by Mr. J. W. Smith; and Mr. Gilbert, in the movements of Beethoven's pianoforte concerto in C minor, won the admiration of amateurs. We quite agree, however, with the remarks of a contemporary, that the Royal Academy of Music ought not to permit the works of the great masters to be given in a mutilated form

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS

The benefit of Madame Pauline Garcia Viardot, on the 24th ult., at the Royal Theatre in Berlin, was brilliantly attended, tickets being sold at quadruple the ordinary price. The King and Queen of Prussia, the Princes and Princesses, and the Princess of Liegnitz were present at this performance, as also the Earl of Westmoreland, the British Minister. The entertainments commenced with the last two acts of Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," in which Mdme. Viardot sustained her celebrated part of Valentine, she then sang Desdemona, in the third act of Rossini's "Otello," and finally the last scene of Bellini's "Sonnambula." Her energetic and passionate acting, and astonishing vocalization, were never before so enthusiastically appreciated and greeted. She was compelled, despite of the fatigue of her night's exertions, to repeat the "Ah non giunge" in the last opera, at the conclusion of which the stage was strewed with bouquets, laurel-wreaths, &c. Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable" has been produced at the Italian Opera in Berlin, with Pardini as Robert, Labocetta as Bertram, Lablache as Raimbaut, Lablache as Isabella, and Mdlle. Lemercier as Alice. Massol, the baritone, has been singing in Brussels with great success, in Enrico in "Lucia," and Raimbaut in Rossini's "Count Or"

A three-act operetta, called "Gille Ravisseur," the libretto by Samuel [illegible] by Grisar, has been successfully performed at the Théâtre de Nouveautés in Paris. The composition is not equal to the "Eau Merveilleuse" by the same composer, but it is comic and clever, comprising an overture, finely-scored overture, a nice trio, a spirited duo, and some pretty airs. Montaubry, Mdlle. Sainte Foy, Herman Léon, and Mdlle. Lemercier were included in the cast. The latter pointed events have been most disastrous for the theatres. Closed for several days, they were reopened only on the condition of bestowing their first receipts for the benefit of the wounded. It is anticipated that all exclusive privileges, [illegible] enjoyed by the ci-devant Académie, now called the Théâtre de la Nation, the Italian theatre, the Français (Théâtre de la République), &c., will be abolished. Mdme. Pleyel, the famed pianiste, gave a concert in Herz's rooms, on Tuesday last, for the benefit of the wounded, aided by Ole Bull, the great Norwegian violinist, and by Mdme. Jullien and M. Bartenbieb, as vocalists. Heyneberr still remained in Paris, preparing his "Prophète." The sisters Milanollo, the violinists, were to give a concert at the Théâtre de la Nation (Académie Royale). At the Opéra National, a local piece called "La Bonguerière des Barricades" has been produced.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S

"Il Barbiere di Seviglia" was repeated at this theatre on Saturday night, and its performance was marked by decided improvement. Mdlle. Cruvelli and Gardoni, who on Thursday evening were both labouring under cold and hoarseness, had recovered, and displayed more than their wonted brilliancy of voice. The young prima donna each time she is heard establishes herself more firmly in the good opinion of her audience. Her [illegible] good looks, and expressive acting are admirably adapted to the part of Rosina, whilst her fine low notes tell with wonderful effect throughout the music, which must, indeed, have been originally written for a contralto, or low mezzo soprano, and which, therefore, loses much of its due effect when sung, as is often the case, by an artist who possesses but the soprano register of voice. It is seldom, however, that we are fortunate enough to find one who combines the two voices to such a degree as Cruvelli; for, whilst she sings so charmingly music like that of the "Barbiere," and other operas belong ng to the same class, she yet soars into the regions above with a [illegible] ease, and, at the same time, power, which is truly surprising. Of Gardoni's portion we of Count Almaviva we have already spoken, and need now only reiterate the favourable impression he produced on the first occasion. Belletti was, if possible, even more admirable than before; indeed, we scarcely remember to have seen the part of Figaro filled by a singer whose acting was more spirited and animated. There is no eminently qualified than for it; Belletti is an artist of first-rate order, and all lovers of music may congratulate themselves on the acquisition the management of her Majesty's Theatre has made in securing his services. As we said before, the "Barbiere" went off much better on Saturday night. There was much more ensemble; all the singers seemed to be more at their ease, and to have become more accustomed to each other. F. Lablache's portrait of his father—excited continual merriment, and the wonder on all sides was that, having attempted to act a copy of so illustrious a predecessor, his performance, instead of being a complete failure, should have been attended with so much success.

On Tuesday "Ernani" was repeated; and, as is always the case with Verdi's operas, which require to be heard several times in order fully to enjoy them, was more duly appreciated than on the occasion when it was first given. There are several encores; amongst others, "Oh se de verdi anni miei," the conclusion of the recitative sung by Gardoni in the catacombs. This charming morceau has been always overlooked until now in many cases, indeed, omitted; but fortunately for the sake of art, and for the credit of our countrymen, it is now duly appreciated, as are many other points once overlooked.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

This great lyric establishment was opened for the season on Thursday night. It was originally intended to have commenced on Tuesday evening, but Thanne yo posen, Deus dapse—the recent [illegible] in Paris, and the temporary breaking up of the Northern Railroad, caused the late [illegible] of the artistes, and Costa would not risk the musical reputation of the theatre with hurried rehearsals. During the recess various alterations have been made to add to the comfort of the visitors. The construction of a vast amphitheatre, which will hold nearly 700 persons, is an important improvement on the close and confined amphitheatre and more recently erected last year. The main object in this change appears to have been to secure to amateurs of every grade in society, an opportunity of hearing music at prices on a sliding scale to suit all purses. Now there is a commodious and well-ventilated gallery, at half-a-crown; amphitheatre stalls at five shillings, box stalls at 7s. 6d., and 8s.; a pit at 8s., and orchestra stalls at a guinea. The pit saloon has been fitted up for a cloak-room. The stage-door in New-street, which interfered with the ingress and egress of visitors to the grand entrance, has been removed to Hartstreet. The entrance to the pit and to the Bow-street boxes also be greatly improved. On the [illegible] by a novel machinery, additional space has been gained at the wings. For the increased numbers in the band, it has been found requisite to enlarge the orchestra a [illegible] the distribution of the instruments Costa has introduced a new arrang ment. The players sit now, not in straight lines as formerly, but in curves, the first and second violins and the tenors being placed next to the conductor, and the violoncelli double basses have been brought more [illegible] and at each extremity. On the left of the conductor are Sainton and Blagrove, the first violins, with the leader's desk between them; on his right are Mr. Hill, the first second violin, with the oboes, bassoons trombones, &c. The effect produced by Costa's magnificent band is wond rful: the most finished piano can be heard and taken part in by those, whilst the crescendos and sforzandos in their deve lopment are perfectly exact.

Mozart's opera of "Il Flauto Magico" with a new libretto called "La Regina della Notte," by Count Pepoli, was announced to be the opening piece, with the entertainments for the opening night. "Il Tancredi" was composed by Rossini in 1813, for the Fenice, in Venice. Although in the previous year the facility of this composer's style had produced "Aureliano in Palmira," and "Elisabetta," it was in the "Tancredi," that his fame was stamped, and that it became at once European. His exquisite musical organisation and dramatic impulse were at their zenith, and the pervading poetic character of the music is its chivalric grandeur, and the romance [illegible] in the part of the hero. It was in this opera that Rossini established his school. Lorenzi will be remembered as the librettist who constructed the "Di tanti palpiti" for Aldini; the duo "Parmi che intorno" between Persiani and Alboni; and the finale, "Ciel che fea," with its scenes and quartetto, a matchless beauty. In the present representation the two principal airs, were it was in the "Tancredi." That

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The New Zealand Government Bill was read a third time and passed. Their Lordships shortly afterwards adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE INCOME TAX.

On the motion that the House resolve itself into a Committee of Ways and Means,

Mr. HUME asked the Government how they intended to make up the deficiency occasioned by the abandonment of the proposal to increase the Income Tax. The House ought to be informed of this before it voted a single tax.

Sir R. PEEL observed, that for four years before he last came into office taxes had been voted, although no estimates existed.

The House then went into Committee of Ways and Means

On the motion that the tax be continued for a period to be limited,

Mr. HUME opposed the motion, expressing his regret that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had accidentally become deaf.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER was understood to say that, after resorting to the balances for the expense of the Kaffir war, and for naval excess, if they found it necessary to resort in the same source to make up the deficiency of about £1,800,000, which would still remain, he had reason to believe that, taking the average income and expenditure of the next three years, they would be equalised, when any draft made upon the balances would be replaced.

Mr. HERRIES said that the reply was altogether unsatisfactory. By the first budget presented to the House complete provision had been made for the expenditure by the enhanced Income Tax. But now that the proposal to increase that tax had been withdrawn, no parliamentary provision for the deficiency thereby occasioned had been forshadowed. A part of the deficiency was to be made up from the balances in the Exchequer, but the rest remained wholly unprovided for. Besides, although they might appropriate the balances ad interim, they had no right to treat them as a provision for the deficiency

Mr. HUME thought that the course proposed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer was, if he understood it, one which, in the present circumstances of the country, would precipitate us upon national bankruptcy. There was no way of settling out of our difficulties but by a large reduction of expenditure He moved as an amendment, that, for the words "for a limited period," the words "for one year" be inserted in the resolution.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER observed that it was with a view to maintaining the public credit that the Government had shaped for itself the course which it had proposed, and he wished the Committee distinctly to understand that the question on which they would be called upon to divide was whether the Income Tax was to be continued for three years or for one year If the House now refused him the means of making the income equal to the expenditure, it would be the first step towards repudiation, and he would be no party to such a step

After a few words from Mr. Spooner, Captain Townshend, Sir W. Clay, and Mr. Robinson,

Mr. LABOUCHERE observed that the Committee had two questions to decide—the first, whether, under the present circumstances of the country, they would sanction the renewal of the tax; and the second, whether, if they sanctioned its continuance, they would renew it for a period of three years, as proposed by the Government, or for a period of one year, as proposed by the amendment. With regard to the first question, it was unnecessary for him to say anything, all parties seeming to concur, under existing circumstances, in the necessity which pressed upon them for the renewal of the tax. With respect to the second, he would regard it as a great misfortune if, by agreeing to Mr. Hume's proposition, they refused to place the credit and finances of the country on that basis on which the renewal of the tax, for the term of three years at least, would also replace them. Consistently with its sense of duty, the Government could not recede from its new proposition, confident as it was that on an average of years, as stated by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the income and expenditure of the country would be equalised.

Mr OSBORNE denied that there was any danger in the amendment to the credit of the country, and insisted upon the practicability of making the tax fair, equitable, and comparatively palatable.

Sir R. PEEL observed that the question of the further continuance of the Income Tax could not be separated from a consideration of the circumstances which had led to its imposition in 1842 and its renewal in 1845, which circumstances he proceeded to recapitulate, in vindication of the Government which had sanctioned its imposition and renewal. It had been recommended to the House by commercial as well as financial considerations. Had direct taxation not been resorted to in 1842, the accumulated deficiency of years in 1845 would have been about ten millions sterling It was chiefly to avoid this deficit that the tax was imposed in 1842, and mainly with a view to lay the foundation of a better system of general taxation that it was renewed in 1845. When it was renewed, his wish was that its renewal should be for a period of five years, of which he ventured to express a hope that it could be dispensed with altogether, from the buoyancy of the ordinary sources of the revenue. The right honourable gentleman then adverted to the great change in our commercial policy which had been based upon the continuance of the tax, and declared that as long as he lived he would never repeal the share which he had taken in the introduction of these changes. It had been predicted, when the Income Tax was imposed, that other sources of income would give way, and that the assessed taxes, for instance, would fall off, a prediction which had been falsified, the receipts from the assessed taxes being, in fact, about £100,000 greater than in 1842, before direct taxation had been resorted to. He did not agree with those who would substitute direct for indirect taxation, and thought that in times of peace they could not safely carry the principle of direct taxation much further than they had carried it. He had found it impossible to assent the other night to Mr. Horsman's proposition. There might be cases of individual hardship under the Income Tax, but he did not assent to the injustice of its principle. Whilst the tax existed, it should, in his opinion, be a tax on income, no distinction being made as to the different sources whence incomes were derived. If we desired to make a great national exertion, they might substitute capital for income, but their present business was to meet annual demands by annual exertions, and income, in so doing, should be substituted for capital. This was the principle on which all their taxation was based. He was not prepared to recommend an increase in the direct taxation of the country, or a departure from the principle on which our direct taxation was at present founded. As to the question raised by Mr. Hume's amendment, he would give his decided support to the Government in maintaining the tax for three years more. He was fully sensible of the great difficulties with which the Government had to contend, in the shape of calamities, which were of rare occurrence, and which necessarily disturbed the financial policy of the State. He must admit that he was alarmed at the great increase of the estimates, and sincerely trusted that, in the course of time, some useful reductions would be made. But these reductions must be made with due consideration, or they might ultimately occasion largely increased expense. In the present state of the country he could not look for any immediate reduction in our great establishments. He would also give his support to the Government because he was deeply sensible of the necessity which existed of maintaining the public credit. The right honourable Baronet then proceeded to justify the commercial policy which he had adopted in 1842, and declared that in these days of commercial depression he did not repent, and never would so long as he lived, the part which he had acted in the establishment of that policy. He was also bound to say that he was influenced in his support of the Government on that occasion by a consideration of the wonderful events which had lately occurred abroad. Those events furnished good reason why this country should, now at least, run no risk of any deficits He would make no detailed reference to those events; but of this he was confident, that the true policy of this country dictated the most complete and absolute abstinence from all interference in the internal affairs of that country in which no extraordinary a convulsion had taken place. (Great and earnest cheering from all sides of the House, which lasted some time.) He trusted that this country would still be able to exercise all the duties of hospitality. It was of importance to the interests of humanity that this country should continue to be, as it had formerly been, the refuge of the unfortunate. But he had always deprecated the conversion of this country into the scene of intrigue against neighbouring monarchies, and was prepared equally to denounce such a course with regard to a monarchy or a republic. He had heard with satisfaction that the Government had determined to abstain from all interference—(hear, hear)—and were convinced that that determination would be faithfully and honourably observed.

Lord G PENTINCK said, that the question was not whether they were to endanger the credit of the country, but whether the House would retain in its hands the power to revise our system of taxation at the end of a year As Sir R. Peel had fought his battles over again since 1842, he would go back to that further, for the purpose of showing how, in 1841, he had deceived his friends. If the right hon. gentleman would never repeal the changes which he had effected in our commercial policy, he (Lord George Bentinck) would be with them around him, if they would cease to repent, as long as they lived, the misplaced confidence which they had reposed in him. (Great cheering from the Protectionist benches.) The noble Lord then proceeded to review in detail the commercial changes of the last six years, to show that our Free Trade policy, which enriched the foreigner at our expense, was the dearest policy after all, and that the money which we might save by our financial measures would be under Free Trade, have to be expended in armaments to keep our ruined colonies in subjection.

On the motion of Mr. WILSON, the debate was then adjourned till Friday [illegible] House went, after some opposition, into Committee on the bill, and on clause 4, which requires that there shall be a surgeon on board each emigrant ship.—Mr. LABOUCHERE having stated that the Government would leave to the shipowners the remuneration of the surgeons, taking care that they were duly qualified, the remaining clauses were agreed to, and the bill ordered to be reported. Adjourned at a quarter past two o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

ROYAL ASSENT. The House met at half-past four o'clock, when the Royal Assent was given by commission to the following bills, viz.:- The Consolidation Fund Bill and the New Zealand Government Bill. The Lords Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and Lord Campbell.

Their Lordships adjourned at a quarter past 5 o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

LYME REGIS ELECTION.—Lord ASHLEY reported from the Committee, in the case of the Lyme Regis petition, that the Committee had declared Thomas N. Abdy, Esq., to have been duly elected. The Committee had struck the names of Cock, Drake, and Puddicombe, voters of the borough, off the polls, it having been proved that they had received money on loan to influence their votes [illegible]

TENANT RIGHT (IRELAND).

Mr. S. CRAWFORD moved for leave to bring in a bill to secure the rights of occupying tenants.

Sir G. GREY would not offer any opposition to the introduction of this bill. Government had given their best consideration to the subject, with the view to propose some measure of legislation; but he thought it would be advisable to leave the hon. member's bill before them, seeing the great attention he had paid to the question, before the House was called upon to discuss it. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. P. SCROPE remarked that if the House wished to secure the loyalty of the people of Ireland, and prevent them taking the matter into their own hands, it was absolutely necessary the question should be settled without delay. The repeal agitation was now becoming an agitation for tenant right

Col. CONOLLY complained that those who promoted discontent and outrages amongst the tenantry of Ireland on this subject of tenant right were rewarded with more mischievous and turbulent order of things than had previously existed.

Mr. BRIGHT expressed it as his opinion that the [illegible] was justified in bringing this question of tenant right before the House, for they must lose their position, and their property be transferred to other hands. A large number of persons had died of starvation in Ireland during the last year than had fallen in any war.

Mr. TRELAWNY was opposed to the bill altogether, and should divide against it.

Mr. HUME reminded the House that every attempt which had been made to interfere between master and workman had been followed by greater injury to the workman than to the master He believed the same result would follow any legislative interference between landlord and tenant. (Hear, hear.) Though he should be glad to secure payment to tenants for their improvements, it was necessary at the same time to provide that such improvements should be made with the sanction of the landlord, and by previous agreement, and not by any compulsory act of that House. Looking at the varying customs in different parts of the country, he was of opinion that any law which should impose one rule for all would be most injurious. (Hear.)

Sir W. SOMERVILLE concurred with the honourable member for Montrose, that a law compelling the adoption of any particular custom for every district would be injudicious and injurious; and any law which should give rise to litigation in Ireland between the landlords and tenants, would be the cause of misery to the country (Hear.) But, by giving leave to bring in this bill, the House would not be pledged to it; and seeing the great attention this hon. member for Rochdale had paid to this subject, he thought it would be scarcely treating him with respect to refuse him that permission.

Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL reminded the hon. member for Montrose that the law of Ireland did already interfere between landlord and tenant, but in a way that took part with the strong against the weak.

Dr. BOWRING hoped his hon. friend, Mr. Trelawny, would allow the bill to be introduced without a division

Mr. TRELAWNY, out of respect for the hon. member for Rochdale only, consented to forego his intention of dividing; and the bill was ordered to be brought in

FREE ROOT IN TRAFALGAR-SQUARE. Mr M. MILNES wished to put a question to the right hon. gentleman (Sir G. Grey) as to the collision which took place yesterday in Trafalgar-square between the people and the police. ("Oh," and a laugh.) A meeting was, as he had been informed, held yesterday, called together by a certain individual, which meeting was allowed to take place, and the proceedings were carried on in a perfectly peaceable manner; many speakers were heard, and perfect decorum and tranquility were, on the part of the people, observed. But, after the speaking had ceased, and when the meeting was about to disperse, a collision took place between the people and the police, which resulted, as he understood, in grave consequences. He thought, under these circumstances, it was desirable the House should know what were the directions which had been given to the police in respect to this meeting (oh, oh), because he believed, on the one hand, that the freest discussion by the people of all public matters was the best security for the public peace in this country (hear, hear), and on the other, he believed the police force of the metropolis were always anxious to do their duty in the best and most satisfactory manner (Hear.)—Sir G GREY: The meeting to which the hon. member had referred was convened by an individual, as he had stated—that individual being a Mr. Cochrane, who had, by advertisements in the public papers, and by handbills issued by him, summoned a public meeting in Trafalgar-square, for the purpose of considering the propriety of petitioning Parliament against the Income Tax. The Commissioners of Police becoming aware of this, called Mr. Cochrane's attention to the Act, the 57th George III., which prohibited any public meeting being held during the sitting of Parliament at any place within a mile of Westminster—Hall, except in the parish of St Paul, Covent-garden. Mr. Cochrane replied to the communication that his purpose was to petition against the Income Tax, and that he was not before aware that such object was illegal. The Commissioners rejoined that they had no doubt that to meet to petition against the Income Tax was illegal: but that it was illegal to hold any public meeting during the sitting of Parliament within the limits they had before stated. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Cochrane then gave the pledge, and intimated publicly to the public that the meeting would not be held. Some persons, however, assembled at the place mentioned, but with regard to the collision between the police and the people, and the grave consequences which had followed it (ought he believed they had all been comprised in the breaking of some lamps, which the police most effectually but most temperately suppressed. (Cheers.)

PASSENGERS BILL. On the bringing up of the Report on this Bill, Mr. LABOUCHERE intimated that he had amended the bill in accordance with the suggestion made to him on the previous night, by providing that sick passengers landing on any part of our shores should have the right to be conveyed back to the place of embarkation, and that in case of persons landing in consequence of sickness, the passage money should be returned. The report was then received, and the bill ordered to be read a third time.

The House adjourned at a few minutes after six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon to six o'clock.

ROMAN CATHOLIC RELIEF BILL.

On the motion of Mr. ANSTEY, the House went into Committee on the Roman Catholic Relief Bill.

Sir R. INGLIS renewed the omission of certain words from the first clause, the effect of which omission would be to render the bill in reality of no effect After some discussion, the amendment was negatived, and the clause sustained by a vote of 94 to 38.

Mr. HENLEY then moved an amendment to the clause, to prevent the act of [illegible] both from being repealed by the bill.

After some discussion, the Committee again divided, when the amendment was negatived, the numbers being 61 to 14.

Mr. NEWDEGATE then moved an amendment to the clause, to leave out certain words, which legalise the introduction, under particular circumstances, of certain bulls from the see of Rome; which amendment, after some further discussion, was agreed to without a division, in order to enable the Chancellor of the Exchequer to move to insert words confining the introduction of bulls to such as were not of a reasonable character.

To the motion to insert those words, Mr. LAW moved as an amendment that the Chairman report progress, and ask leave to sit again

The Committee divided, and the amendment was negatived by a vote of 175 to 104.

The Chairman shortly afterwards reported progress. The committee to sit again on Wednesday next.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Their Lordships only sat for a very short time, and transacted no business of importance.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

EXPULSION OF ENGLISH LABOURERS FROM FRANCE. Mr STAFFORD wished to know [illegible] right hon. friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department, whether he had received any information with respect to the expulsion of the English labourers from France; and if so, whether the Government had taken any means to forward these persons so expelled to their respective homes. He (Mr. Stafford) had also been requested to ask whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to retaliate.

Sir G. GREY said, that, in answer to the latter part of the question, he would state that the Government had not the slightest notion of retaliation. (Hear, hear.) With respect to the former part of the question, he would state that, early on Sunday morning last, he received a letter from the noble Lord the Secretary for Foreign Affairs (Lord Palmerston), enclosing to him a communication which that noble Lord had received from the British Consul at HAVRE, stating that a number of French workmen employed in the factories at [illegible] had demanded the immediate dismissal of all English men and women employed in those factories These persons had been in consequence compelled to leave Rouen suddenly, and had taken refuge on board a steam-boat, which fortunately happened to be in the port. So suddenly had these persons been compelled to leave, that they had not had the means of obtaining the payment of the wages due to them, and in many instances they were only paid a portion of their arrears at last. They were in most destitute condition, and the British Consul there had taken means to forward them to this country, after having provided them with all that they stood in need of. The Commissioner of Police, who had been communicated with, had stated that he should do all in his power to prevent a similar occurrence; and, further, he had taken upon himself to guarantee, on behalf of the Provisional Government, compensation to those poor persons who had been expelled from France

THE IRISH POOR-LAW.—Mr. S. CRAWFORD then rose to move for leave to introduce a bill to amend the "Irish Poor Relief Extension Act," with a view to the repeal of the 10th section, called the "quarter acre clause," which precluded from obtaining poor relief all persons who possessed more than a quarter of an acre of land.—A short discussion followed, in which Sir W. SOMERVILLE (the Secretary for Ireland) and Sir G. GREY opposed the motion, and on a division it was negatived by a majority of 114 to 21.

The House then adjourned.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Novice." The error is not in the Problem, but in your inaccurate mode of expressing it. Our Diagram gives a Black Pawn at Black's Q R 3d; you, in your description, persist in giving a White one. Set the position up as we published it, and you will find on diligently re-reading it with the solution. We never heard of "log-mate." Stalemate is a drawn game

"F. E. S." 1. With much pleasure, if the diagram is sent. 2. Mr. Bolton has not quite abandoned the chequered field. We have just had the gratification of receiving one of those beautiful stratagems from him, on the constructions of which he stands unrivalled.

"H. S.," Preston.—We are very glad to hear from you again. They shall receive immediate attention

"Woodstockensis."—The idea is ingenious. It shall appear hereafter.

"Novice Master."—Diagram No. 373 is perfectly free from error. The solution is now of "two-mate." Stalemate is a drawn game

"A Tory." A novel mate of many years' service

"Potter and Clark."—A Pawn reaching the 8th square can be exchanged for a second Queen, and the player of it thus have two Queens on the board at once.

"J. R. R.," Manchester. Very true.

"J. K."—It shall be given as due time. Your solution is correct.

"G. P." They shall be examined. Some address must be given, or where can any one desirous of playing you direct his challenge?

"S. B."—The previous ones were so faulty, that it was out of the question to thank a publishing them. We hope you have devoted more time to the present; in that case we have no fear of them.

"C W C" It demands more time to examine than we can give to it at this moment. We shall probably hear from the author on the subject.

"Honorary Secretary," Reading The subject is treated of in Carrara's work. In which there is a translation by Mr. Lewis, price about 10s.

Solutions of "G. W. C.," "C. J. B." "Eos," "J. H. W.," "C. A. H.," "F. G. R.," "A. L. M.," "Woolstockensis," "Sprocalia," "Q. Q." "Susan," "Brightonian," "Romeo," "R. C. P." "A. D. J." "Pen," "A. D. J." "J. R." "P. E. V." "M. D.," "Miles, and "M. P." are correct. Those by "L. L. T." "J. F." and "R. H." are wrong.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM NO 215.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. Kt to Q B 5th | K takes B | 3. Kt to K 8th | P to K Kt 3d |
| 2. Kt to Q 7th | K to B 3d | 4. Kt mates | |

PROBLEM, NO. 216,

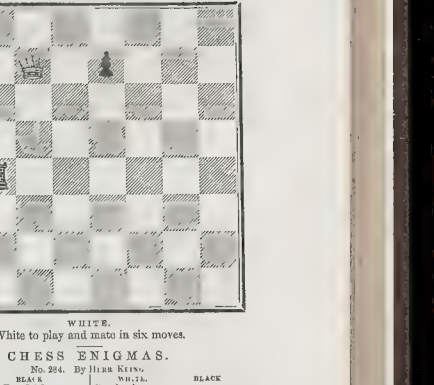
By HERR KLING.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play and mate in six moves.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 284. By HERR KLING.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at his B 2d | K at Q 5th | P at K 2d | |
| Q at her B 7th | P at K Kt 5th | P at K Kt 5th | |
| Kt at K 3d | | White playing first, mates in 3 moves | |

No. 285. By Mr. F. H. DREW.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at his R 5th | K at Q 4th | R at K Kt 3d | and 6th, and Q B |
| Q at her B 8th | Ps at K 5th, Q 6th | Kt at K 8th | 4th |
| | White to play and mate in three moves. | | |

No. 286. By the same.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at his R 3d | K at his Kt 4th | B at Q 3d | B at Q B 4th |
| Rs at K R 4th and Q at K B 8 q | | P at K Kt 3d and P at K R 3d | |
| Q 6th | B at K R 4th | K B 8th | |
| | White to play and mate in four moves. | | |

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THERE is no such thing as good without alloy in human affairs. Of this the latest modern instance of account is that furnished by the Revolution which has just flashed Europe from its propriety. A Frenchman has appointed for its social elements Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity; but what has become of that noble equestrian tournament that was went at Easter to delight the citizens hard by [illegible] Champs Elysées? It has gained a Republic, but the world has lost the [illegible] Derby.

This sport of steeple chasing has achieved a great popularity, partly because of what it exhibits, and partly because of that which it conceals The hoddin groups scattered in the vicinity of the winning post, are watched with the noble horsemanship of the soldiers of the aristocracy, and the thrilling moment of the finish" and saved the offence of seeing the noblest animals in creation put to death by torture, for their amusement, by an arrangement which places such fences as ensure a casualty—[illegible] where broken backs and necks and thighs are incidents which only mark them in the shape of rumour. Horsee, in his "Ars Poetica" explains the different effects of seeing and hearing. But a truce with intellectual feeding; the sporting world has now arrived, and would man only not be "to man unjust," there is goodly matter in store

The Sheet Calendar, published on Wednesday, among other announcements, puts forward a handicap to be run for at the Newcastle-upon-Tyne Meeting, for which six hundred and thirty-nine horses are weighted, -beginning with the Hero 9st. 10lbs., and finishing with the Brandy Bet colt 4st. 7lbs.—a pretty extensive field for speculation! The present state of the market, however, is the no means on an average with the material offered for competition In many cases the prices quoted are merely nominal even the favourites have few friends. Surplice, for long at the head of the Derby list, and still rated at 9 to 1, has not been publicly backed at all latterly; while, as we hinted it would be, Springy Jack has advanced, 12 to 1 having been taken about him. Green's "lot" is still under a cloud. Some will have it that Assault is not so sound as he might be; most probably his present attack is an affection of the legs. Fern, a son of Venison, has been in the ascendant. He is in good hands, and can command a large capital at [illegible] few great points in favour of a horse. He is also in the Two Thousand, and, if near the mark, will scarcely keep the stable while such a stake is being run for. The Chester Cup has had a fair share of trouffle, but for the present the great steeple-chases engross much attention This month will see them out, however, and then the Turf will be itself again. Should it escape the political and social blight which now too generally prevails, we [illegible] count upon a prolific season.

TATTERSALL'S

THURSDAY. A day of unparalleled dullness, and only one alteration, viz., in Jericho, whose lameness appears to have been a "[illegible] invention" of certain parties desirous of "getting on." The prices [illegible] will be found to embrace almost as many events as favourites

NAEWS [illegible]
Even on [illegible]
2 to 1 agst Ball-and
LEAMINGTON STEEPLE CHASE
8 to 1 on the field | 15 to 1 agst Alexander | 15 to 1 agst Chandler
The Carats and St. Lawrence are the favourites
NOTTINGHAM [illegible]
13 to 1 agst Thistledown | 15 to 1 agst Monarch Dove(t) | 15 to 1 agst Joe Lovell
METROPOLITAN HANDICAP
9 to 1 agst Jericho | 12 to 1 agst R. I Trap (t)
9 to 1 — Dutfinnaker | Even on [illegible]
TWO THOUSAND GUINEA STAKES
7 to 2 agst Blaze.(t) | 9 to 1 agst Surplice
CHESTER CUP
35 to 1 agst Lightning | 10 to 1 agst Herman Pistol' c | 50 to 1 agst Ballinafad
40 to 1 — Glen Buddal | 40 to 1 — Lady Hyde | 1000 to 15 — Copyright(t
DERBY
13 to 1 agst Glendower | 10 to 1 agst Springy Jack (t)

THE TUBULAR RAILWAY BRIDGE OVER THE RIVER CONWAY.

THE IRON TUBE ON THE PLATFORM ON WHICH IT WAS BUILT.

The Tubular Bridge, which is constructed to carry the Chester and Holyhead line of railway over the river Conway, is one of the most unique examples of engineering skill ever imagined or carried into execution. Though inferior in length and weight to the Britannia Tubular Bridge, now in course of erection over the Menai Straits, for the same railway, yet, being built on precisely the same principles, and raised to its destined site by the same power, it may, from the circumstance of its being the first erected, be deemed a first idea, to be carried out in its fullest extent in its mighty contemporary. As the floating and erecting this singular construction is a most important event in engineering annals, fraught with interest to the scientific world, and wonderful to the unscientific, we have devoted some space to its complete illustration.

We are happy to add, that on Monday last the labour of raising this vast tube was very nearly accomplished. The tube, which at first was resting on part of the platform on which it was built, was raised eight inches by pumping the water out of the pontoons, which had been placed under it. At about eleven (the tide still on the flow) the whole fabric was got under weigh, and slowly drawn down by means of hawsers attached to various convenient places, and worked by capstans, until it arrived within a few feet of its proper position at the north side, and in its right position at the south, or Conway side, when, owing to the pontoons on that side touching the bottom, it could be got no farther, and, the tide receding, the tube was left unsupported on the two temporary stone-beds, built inside the abutments. With this single, and, indeed, trivial, exception, the whole operation was performed in a most satisfactory manner, and the tube will, doubtless, be in its place in the course of the week. Standing on the tube were Messrs. G. and R. Stephenson, Mr. Brunel, Mr. Rendel, Mr. Fairbairn, Mr. Bidder, Mr. Frank Forster, Captain Claxton, Captain Moorsom, and the contractor, Mr. Evans. At the conclusion, three hearty cheers were given by the workmen and spectators, Captain Claxton giving the signal, and finishing by smashing his speaking-trumpet, and pitching it into the Straits. A great number of professional gentlemen were present to witness this great engineering work.

The tube was floated to the piers on six huge pontoons, three at either end, constructed near the spot where the tube was erected; and in the view we give, representing the tube on the platform where it was built, one of the pontoons occupies a prominent place in the foreground. The pontoons are 100 feet in length, 25 feet in width, and 10 feet high.

The pontoons were floated under the platform on which the tube rested at low water; and the piles supporting the platform being taken away, the whole mass of the tube rested upon two stone piers, temporarily erected at either end for that purpose; but as the tide rose, the pontoons lifted the tube from these piers, and transported it to the shelf prepared for it below the presses on the permanent piers.

In our view of the floating the tube, the buoys are shown which were fixed in the stream to guide the mighty fabric in its course; and the appearance of the tube on its pontoons, shored up to steady it, forms a singular and impressive picture.

The bridge had not been lifted to its place at the time of our going to press, or at least no intelligence of the event had reached our office at that time; but through the kindness of R. Stephenson, Esq., the chief engineer, we are enabled to describe the apparatus prepared for the lifting, and to illustrate it completely by diagrams; and these we now proceed to describe.

On a piece of land projecting into the Conway, about 100 yards from the site of the piers to the Bridge, an enormous platform was raised on piles, and on this the work of erecting the tube has been carried on. The tube has been twelve months in construction, and the novel manner in which it is arranged and built is worthy of the eminent engineer who planned it. One of our representations shows it, as completed, resting on its platform previous to its being lowered on the pontoons destined to bear it to the piers of the Bridge.

The idea furnished by the word "tube," however, gives no idea of its form, inasmuch as that is suggestive of a circularly-formed tunnel, whereas in fact the Bridge is like a huge chest, such an one as the genii of Eastern romances might be supposed to fabricate.

The Tube is made of wrought-iron plates, varying in thickness from ½ inch to 1 inch, riveted together, strengthened by T irons; and, to give additional strength to the whole, a series of cells is formed at the top and at the bottom of the tube, between an inner ceiling and floor and the exterior plates. In our sectional engraving (Fig. 1) the peculiar construction of this wonderful specimen of engineering skill is fully elucidated, and it will be observed that T irons strengthen the top and sides, and that the iron plates which form the cells are riveted and held in their places by angle irons. The upper cells, eight in number, in the transverse section, are nearly square, being 1 foot 9 inches high, and 1 foot 8¼ wide. The lower cells, six in number, are FLOATING THE TUBE TO ITS DESTINATION.

THE TUBULAR RAILWAY BRIDGE OVER THE RIVER CONWAY

THE TUBE AT THE PIERS JUST PREVIOUS TO BEING RAISED TO ITS PLACE.

THE CONWAY TUBULAR BRIDGE AS IT WILL APPEAR WHEN COMPLETED.

2 feet 3½ inches wide, by 1 foot 9 inches high. The space between wall and wall, if we may so speak, of the tube, is 14 feet, and the height of the whole, inclusive of the cells, is 22 feet 3½ inches at the ends, and 25 feet 6 inches at the centre. The total length of the tube is 612 feet. One end of the tube will be fixed to the masonry of the pier, but the other end will be so arranged as to allow for the expansion of the metal by the action of atmospheric variations, and will, therefore, rest upon eleven rollers of iron, running on a bed plate; and, that the whole weight of the tube may not be carried by these rollers, six girders are carried over the tube and riveted to the upper parts of the sides of the tube; and these side portions rest upon 12 balls of gun-metal running in grooves, which are fixed to iron beams let into the masonry. In the Engravings, transverse section (Fig. 2), and longitudinal section (Fig. 3), the arrangement of the rollers and gun-metal balls are fully shown, whilst in our small diagram (Figs. 4 and 5), the latter is developed on a larger scale, to explain it more fully. In the tranverse section (Fig. 2), showing the lifting apparatus and tube, the iron girders and balls are seen at g, and the rollers are marked h h. The other portions of beam-work in the tube, which are those relating to the lifting apparatus, and not therefore shown in our section of the tube itself, are the lifting beams i i, riveted into the tube for the purpose of carrying the chains, but which, when the tube is placed in its destined bed, will be taken out.

In the longitudinal section (Fig. 3), the ends of the lifting beams are shown at c c; the lifting chains, a a; and b b, the beam for strengthening the bottom of the tube. The other references are A, the interior of the tube; B, B, B, are the ends of the expansion rollers; and C, C, C, the ends of the cross girders, and the gun-metal expansion balls, for taking part of the weight of the tube. Our small diagram (Fig. 6), gives an idea of the appearance of the exterior of the tube.

The machinery for raising this stupendous piece of iron-work consists of two hydraulic rams, one at either pier. As may be seen by reference to our transverse sectional representation (Fig. 2), the rams are fixed on massive bearing girders, which are firmly bedded in the masonry of the piers. A is the bearing girder; B B the sides of the piers; C, another iron girder, fixed into the piers, about 18 feet above the bearing girder; and into this the guide rods D, D, from the press, to steady the cross-head when in action, are fastened; a is the press, or case of the ram; b, the cylinder; c, the ram carrying the cross-head d; e, e, e, e, e, e, are the wheels which turn the screws of the clams or vices for clipping the chains f f: the upper clams being used for "clipping," or holding fast, whilst the ram is rising and lifting the chams, and the lower ones, after the ram has risen, to hold the chains in their places, and prevent them from slipping, whilst the cross-head comes down to take a fresh lift. The chains are of wrought iron, each link six feet in length from centre to centre of pin-holes; and they have shoulders at the end of the links, into which the clams fit when closed, and thus they are effectually prevented from slipping down. The sides of the clams, or vices, being moved by right and left screws, they require but one man to each pair of wheels to open or close them. At each lift the tube is raised six feet. The cylinder, within which the ram works, is 3 feet 1½ inches in diameter, outside measure; and the hollow for the ram is 1 foot 8 inches in diameter

The cross head is 9 feet 10 inches wide, and 2 feet 5½ inches deep; the apertures for the guide-rods are 6 inches in diameter, and those for the chains are 2 feet 1 inch long, by 1 foot 1½ inch wide. The guide-rods are 11 feet 3½ inches long between the cylinder of the ram and the cross head.

The case of the cylinder is not square in plan, but is longer than broad, being 5 feet 2 inches in length, by 3 feet 9 inches in width; and strong ribs spring from the corners and longest sides to strengthen it, as shown in our delineations.

The space allowed for water is very narrow all round the ram, and there is a deep collar at the top of the cylinder, at which part the space for water is stopped, and a water-tight joint is formed by means of a leather packing in it.

The apertures for the entrance of the water into the cylinder is bored through the collar, and is only three-eighths of an inch in diameter; and the quantity of water each cylinder will hold is 66 gallons.

Each press, being 18 inches diameter, equals 324 circular inches; and, being worked under a pressure of three tons per inch, will lift 972 tons; but it is calculated they would bear four tons per inch, and be capable of supporting the enormous weight of 1296 tons. The Conway tube is about 1300 tons weight, and each ram, therefore, has to lift but 650 tons.

The water is forced into the cylinders by means of steam-engines fixed between the vacant piers, on which the second tube will ere long be placed. The engines are on the high-pressure principle, with the cylinder placed horizontally. The piston-rod passes through stuffing boxes at each end of the cylinder; a cross-head is connected to the piston-rod, giving motion, by side rods and cranks, to two fly-wheels, one placed on each side of the engine. Into the piston-rod, at each end, the plungers of the forcing-pumps are fixed, having a stroke equal to the stroke of the steam piston. The steam piston is 17 inches in diameter; the plunger of the pumps 1 inch and 1-16 in diameter; and the length of the stroke is 16 inches. The boilers are on the tubular principle, somewhat like those of the locomotive engine, but without circular fire-places. The whole being very portable, is fixed on a frame-work of wood with very little trouble.

To Robert Stephenson, Esq., the engineer, our best thanks are due for the readiness with which he granted us permission to copy his plans; and to Edwin Clark, Esq., assistant engineer, for his kindness in revising our description, we offer our warmest thanks; and also to Messrs. Easton and Amos, the engineers to whom is entrusted the task of lifting the tube by their hydraulic rams, we are greatly indebted for much valuable information.

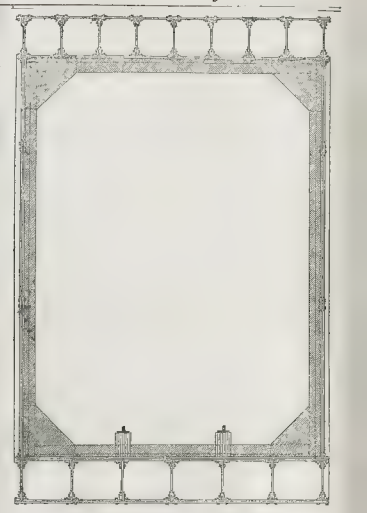

FIG. 1.—TRANSVERSE SECTION OF THE TUBE.

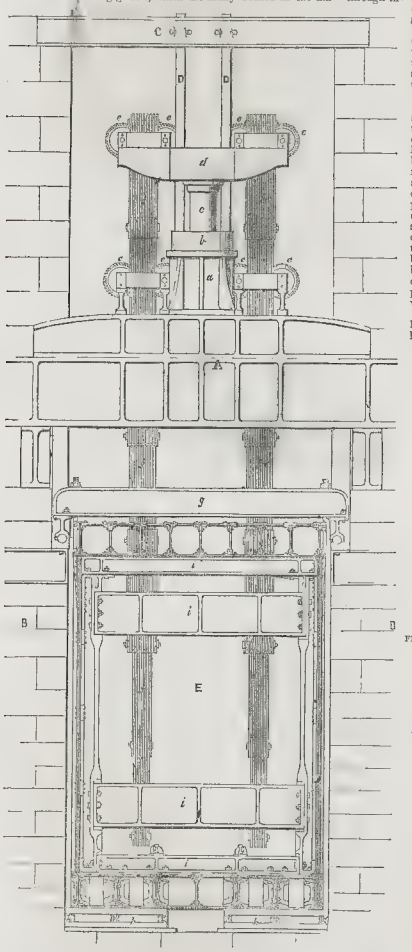

FIG. 2.—TRANSVERSE SECTION OF THE TUBE AND LIFTING APPARATUS.

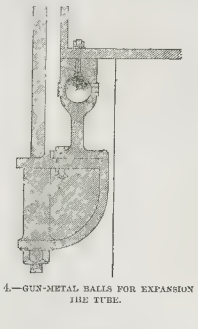

FIG. 4.—GUN-METAL BALLS FOR EXPANSION OF THE TUBE.

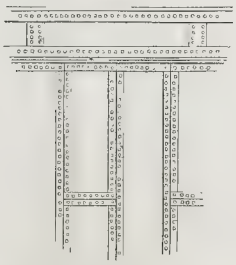

FIG. 5.—EXTERIOR APPEARANCE OF IRON PLATES RIVETED TOGETHER.

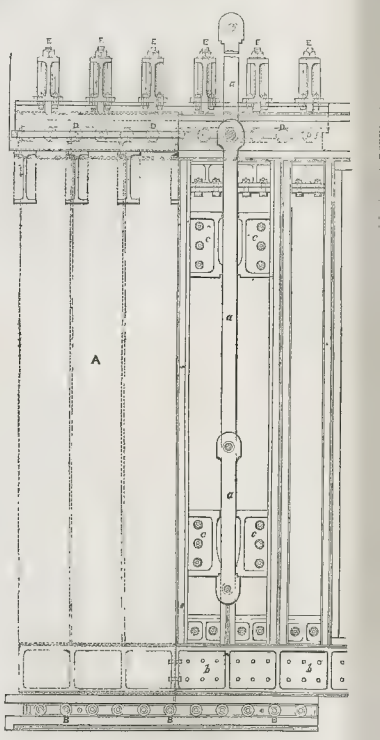

FIG. 3.—LONGITUDINAL SECTION OF THE TUBE AND LIFTING BEAMS.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The supply of English wheat fresh up to-day was very small, and the samples were rather poorly filled with samples of both red and white, old, and the week's arrivals coastwise have amounted to 6856 quarters. Selected qualities were in very moderate request, at Lilly Monday's currencies. In the middling and inferior kinds very little was doing, a late rates. There was no improved demand for most kinds of foreign wheat, but we have no variance to notice in value. The supply on offer was not to any large. Fine malting barley moved off steadily, at full prices. Grinding and distilling sorts were neglected. There was a better inquiry for malt, but no improvement was noticed in values. Oats were quite as dear, with a steady demand. All other articles remain as before.

ARRIVALS: English wheat, 6856 qrs.; barley, 3965 qrs.; Irish oats, 700 qrs.; Foreign wheat, 4380 qrs.; barley, 3960 qrs.; oats, 4760 qrs.; flour, 6056 sacks.

English Wheat.—Kent and Essex, 42s to 50s; North and Suffolk, ditto, 40s to 48s; Scotch, 42s to 50s; Rye, 32s to 34s; Grinding barley, 22s to 24s; Malting ditto, 28s to 30s; Distilling ditto, 24s to 26s; Beans, 30s to 34s; Pigeons, 32s to 36s; Harrow beans, 30s to 34s; Oats, Potato, 20s to 22s; Poland, 18s to 20s; Feed, 16s to 18s; Flour, per sack, 38s to 40s.

Foreign.—Wheat, Dantzic, 44s to 48s; Konigsberg, 44s to 48s; Pomeranian, 44s to 48s; Marianopoli, 44s to 48s; Polish, 44s to 48s; Barley, 24s to 26s; Oats, Dutch, 18s to 20s; Flour, per barrel, 30s to 32s.

Beasts.—The market has ruled exceedingly heavy this week, and in some instances the quotations are almost nominal

Linseed, English, sowing, 56s to 60s; Baltic, crushed, 44s to 48s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 42s; Rape seed, 48s to 52s per quarter; Coriander, 20s to 22s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 6s to 8s per bushel; White, 5s to 6s 6d. Tares, 36s to 40s per quarter. Hempseed, 32s to 34s per quarter. Canary, 60s to 70s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra ditto, —s to —s. Foreign ditto, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s. Carraway seed, 24s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7½d to 8d of household do. 6d to 7d per 4lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 48s 11d; barley, 30s 8d; oats, 20s 5d; rye, 30s 5d; beans, 35s 9d; peas, 34s 8d.

Tithe Commutation Average.—Wheat 50s 10d; barley, 30s 11d; oats 20s 8d, rye, 31s 1d beans 37s 11d; peas 33s 6d.

Potatoes on Farrows Corn.—Wheat, 7s; barley 2s 6d; oats 2s 6d; rye, 2s 6d; beans, 2s 6d; peas, 2s 6d.

Provisions.—The best parcels of Irish butter are in moderate request at full prices; other sorts of middling and inferior kinds, 1s to 2s per cwt less money. Bacon, Waterford, Limerick, and Cork, 50s to 56s. Carron, and Cork, 50s to 56s. Waterford, 48s to 50s. Belfast 48s to 50s. Limerick, 46s to 52s. Tralee, 46s to 48s; and Sligo, 46s to 48s, per cwt. On board for future delivery very little is doing. Fine new Limerick butter—is sold at —s per cwt. Secondary, at 76s to 78s per cwt. Other parcels are a dull inquiry. Fine Limerick, Waterford, and Cork, 44s to 46s per cwt. Fine kind may be quoted 76s to 78s. Inferior ditto, 72s to 74s per cwt. There is no new provision inquiry for the new Irish bacon. Waterford, singed, 50s per cwt. Other parcels are a dull sale. Irish bale and tierce pork are selling at 50s to 56s, and middling ditto at 44s to 48s. Mess ditto, 48s to 52s. Fine kind may be quoted 56s to 58s per cwt. Hams and lard

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Although at the close of last week the English Market had assumed a greater [illegible] ment of the previous week. Consols on Monday fluctuated between 82¾ ⅞ and 82¾ ⅞. On opening, Tuesday's prices were 82¾ ⅞; at which quotations they remained until the middle of the day. A gradual reaction then commenced, [illegible] Finance Minister, M. Goudchaux, through a feeling of inability to contend with the difficulties of his position, was the principal cause of the depression; to which may be added the failure of the Lanking-house of Louis and Company, as well as the delay in the opening of the Bourse at Paris during the present week. On Wednesday, however, an improved feeling was manifest, and the opening prices were at an improvement of ¼ per cent, quoting 83 ⅛ ⅜. From these prices a further improvement to 83¾ ⅞ was made, and some heavy sales for the fall later in the day again, depressed prices to 83¼; and, after the close of regular business, a further depression occurred. This downward tendency existed at yesterday's [illegible] on Thursday, continental advices being regarded as serious, not merely political, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

"MOURIR POUR LA PATRIE."

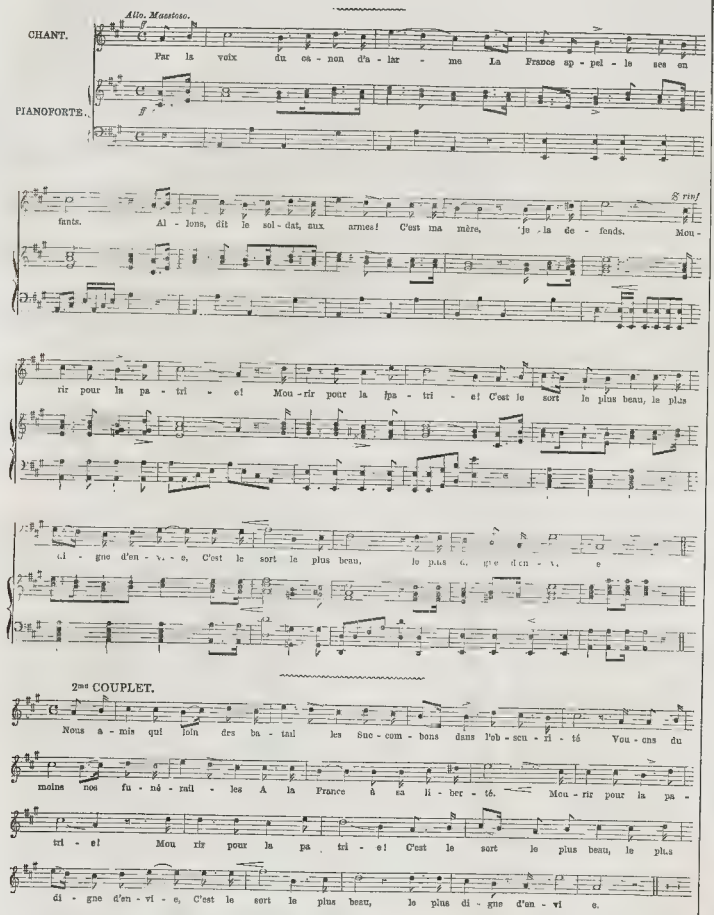
MUSIQUE D'ALPHONSE VARNEY.



CLAREMONT.—THE CARRIAGE FRONT.

"MOURIR POUR LA PATRIE."

I.

By the cannon's voice appealing,
Our country sounds the alarm.
"'Tis a mother's call!" says the soldier;
"Arise, brothers!—arm—let us arm!"
For our country to fall is a privilege high—
The noblest of deaths is for freedom to die!

II.

Ev'n we in obscurity pining,
Afar from the fields of their fame,
To France and to Liberty offer
Our hope, and our life, and our name.
For our country to fall is a privilege high—
The noblest of deaths is for freedom to die!

CURIOUS CLOCK.

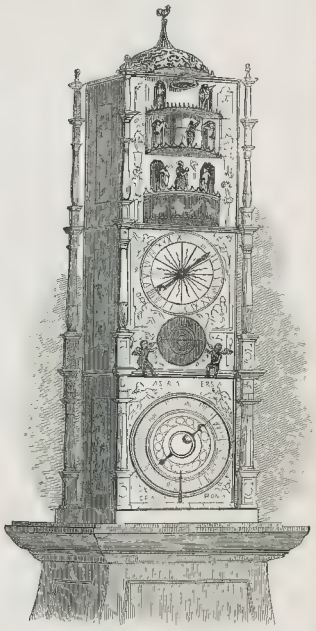
THE Marquis of Northampton, as President of the Royal Society, gave his first soirée for the season on Saturday. The company included, besides the Fellows of the Society, several other distinguished persons. Among the specimens of scientific construction exhibited in the rooms, the Clock we have engraved attracted considerable attention.

This ingenious piece of workmanship was for more than two centuries in the possession of the Court of the Popes of Rome; and was subsequently the property of William the First, King of the Netherlands.

Its construction is very interesting, as showing the state of clock-making towards the close of the sixteenth century, as well as, by the original airs it performs, affording an idea of the taste for music in those times.

The entire fabric bears decided proof of having been produced by manual labour, without any other assistance than the bench of the turner and the file. It had the ancient motive power; the pendulum being a later invention of the celebrated Christian Huygens, a native of the Netherlands, who applied it to the movement of clocks in 1657; and it has since been added to the present Clock.

The design consists of a tower, divided into three stories, with doors of strongly gilt copper, tastefully chased and ornamented, and supported by twelve columns of strongly gilt copper. In front of the lower story, within a square chamber, is a large dial plate, which moves round its whole circuit only once a year: it shows, also, the date of the month, and all the Catholic feasts and holy days throughout the year. In the centre is a small plate, very curiously chased, representing the twelve signs of the zodiac, with the sun and moon pursuing their course, so that at one glance we can ascertain in what sign of the zodiac they are at the time. Within this circle is a small globe, pointing out the proper phases and aspects of the moon; and within all this are the fixed stars setting, namely, the Serpent, Orion, the Great Bear, Cassiopeia, &c. The four corners of this chamber are emblematically engraved with the names of those nations who have conquered kingdoms at an early period.



CLOCK CONSTRUCTED BY ISAAC HABRECHT, ANNO 1583.

In front of the second story are the minutes and minute-hand, and on each side are two silver figures, one hand of these figures pointing to the minutes, the other hand being set in motion by mechanism: during the striking of the Clock, the one figure turns the hour-glass, as an emblem of time, the other wields the sickle of death. Above each of the silver figures is a Latin verse, and in the middle of the plate is a simple yet correctly mathematical representation of how the globular form of the earth is perceptible to the eye. Above, the minute-hand describes a circuit of 24 hours, each half of the dial plate containing 12 hours; the day hours being marked with the image of the sun, and the hours of the night with the image of the moon. On the four corners of the plate are engraved the four seasons of the year.

The third story also consists of four divisions, which project in the manner of a balcony. Round the centre of the lower division move the seven silver figures of heathen gods, in chariots: every deity makes its appearance once in seven days, exactly in front, where it remains for 24 hours, when it is relieved by the next; these godheads represent the seven days of the week.

In the centre of the second division is an image of the Virgin, holding her son Jesus in her arms; two angels are seen placing crowns and garlands on her head; and during the performance of the bells several angels make their appearance, making their obeisance before the image of Mary and the Saviour.

Within the centre of the third division is a metal bell, pending on a gilt plate of copper, on which is represented the Judgment day. Round this metal plate move four silver figures, set in motion by mechanism, representing the four states of social life. These images point out the quarters of the hour by striking the bell: the first quarter is represented by a youth, the second by a grave citizen, the third by a Roman soldier, and the fourth by a priest.

In the fourth division is likewise a metal bell, on the sides of which there are chambers; on the left side is the representation of Death, proclaiming the hours of day and night by striking the bell; above it is seen a Latin inscription, from Romans, chapter 7th, verse 23rd. To the right side is the image of the Saviour, stepping forward, with the globe in his hand, and above it the cross. The figure proceeds, every two minutes, in a slow manner, and then, for a moment, hides itself from view: above it is a Latin verse from the prophet Hosea, chapter 13th.

These two figures are of massive silver; behind the bell is inscribed the name of the artist, and the date 1589.

The whole is covered with copper, beautifully worked in filagree; on the extreme top is stationed a cock, which, at the close of the chiming of the bells, spreads its wings, opens its beak, and crows; after which it resumes its former position.

On the side doors are painted and gilt figures of the Virtues, with flowers, obelisks, and other ornaments, and within are figures of the Fates. These exquisite figures are stated to have been engraved by the pupils.

This clock is also stated to have been made by Habrecht for Pope Sixtus V., and in many respects resembles the famous Strasburg Clock.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand aforesaid. SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 308.—Vol. XII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1848. [Sixpence.

EQUALITY AND FRATERNITY.

The state of affairs in France continues to excite the liveliest interest, even though the Government is shaking at home. Prospects have scarcely brightened for the new Republic since last week; all parties were stunned into a species of torpor by the suddenness of the blow, and it was not in the first moments of surprise that the full extent of the change was felt. But it begins to be, and at the present moment the sensations are of a very mingled kind. There is a general joy at the complete riddance made of the old system, increased by the courageous exposition which has just been made of its financial profligacy, which was perfectly hideous and incredible. Even without a revolution, six months more must have plunged it into bankruptcy. The debt Louis Philippe has left as a legacy to the Republic is enormous; not a source of revenue exists that has not been exceeded almost twice over. It is said, too, that the private debts remaining unpaid on his account are enormous; left so, not from personal extravagance or inability to settle them, but from calculation and parsimony! The Republic has sequestered his private property, on which these debts are of course the first lien, and will doubtless be paid. But the money pressure in other respects is terrible. The sale of the Crown jewels is decreed; but no one will purchase them: in a time of convulsion what can men do with mere stones, which are either rich or poor "as fancy values them"? and diamonds are no more in themselves than very bright petrifactions. The Regent diamond, one of the Crown jewels of France, is worth, nominally, an inconceivable sum: but it is perfectly useless, and indeed valueless, save as a natural curiosity: only a state could buy it, and all the states in Europe are in the position of borrowers. The Crown jewels, then, will remain the Republican jewels, till affairs are more settled. The gold and silver plate is more easily disposed of; it is to be melted down forthwith, and coined into money. The Crown lands are seized, being the property of the State, and it is proposed to sell some of the forests; but men are shy of buying from a possessor with nothing but a political change to show for its title to them. They "like not the security," and remember that fallen dynasties have had an unaccountable knack of rising again. The few proposals of purchase that have been made are on condition that only a third of the money is to be paid, the rest to be left dependant on time and events. All this is very unsatisfactory to a Government that cannot work the machinery of the State without cash. An appeal is made for a year's taxes in advance, and they are paid with a good will; but this only amounts to a loan, and they are paid with a heavy countenance.

MARIE, MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. GOUDCHAUX, LATE MINISTER OF FINANCE. SUBERVIE, LATE MINISTER OF WAR.

BETHMONT, MINISTER OF COMMERCE. CREMIEUX, MINISTER OF JUSTICE. CARNOT, MINISTER OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION

result would, it was supposed, determine the question of moderate or ultra-republicanism as far as Paris was concerned; it was generally expected the modérés would be in the ascendant.

The Paris papers of yesterday bring the important intelligence of the suspension of cash payments by the Bank of France. The Moniteur publishes a decree of the Provisional Government, latet the 15th of March, to the following effect: "From the date of its publication the Bank of France's notes are to be received as legal money by the government and private individuals—until further orders, the Bank of France is dispensed from the obligation of paying its notes in specie. In no case shall the issues of the bank and its 'comptoirs' exceed 350,000,000f. The suspension of payments is applicable equally to all the provincial 'comptoirs.' The Bank is to publish its situation in the Moniteur every eight days." This decree is founded on a report from the Governor of the Bank of France, also published in the Moniteur. It is to the following effect:—"From the 26th of February to the 15th of March," says the Governor, "the Bank has discounted, at Paris, to the amount of 10,000,000f; of 119,000,000f. it used to the Treasury, it has paid 75,000,000f; we do not include 15,000,000f. placed at the disposal of the Treasury in various 'comptoirs,' to provide for urgent wants of the public service. Moreover, the Bank has discounted 43,000,000f in the towns where it has 'comptoirs' by its discounts at Paris it has endeavoured to prevent the suspension of payments of the banks of Rouen, Havre, Lille, and Orleans. The promptitude and extent of the Caisse operations induced the hope of surmounting the crisis. It has battered itself of such a result until this day, and would probably have succeeded, had it not been for the demand provoked by extraordinary events, and magnified by fear. From the 26th of February to the evening of the 14th of March, the Paris 'caisse' has decreased from 140,000,000f. 70,000,000f. This morning, the 15th, panic seized itself. The possessors of notes have presented themselves in crowds at the [illegible] and new 'guichets' have been opened to accelerate the service. Above 10,000,000f have been paid in specie. This evening there remain at Paris but 30,000,000f. To-morrow the crowd will be more considerable; in a few days more the Bank will be completely stripped of specie. In such serious circumstances we must have recourse to your vigilant and energetic solicitude, and that of the Government. The Bank's Council, deliberating on the state of things, proposes," &c. The propositions are those made into law by the above decree.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday

Under the name of "Musée National," instead of "Musée Royal," the old Louvre has opened its portals this day for the annual Exhibition of the Works of Living Artists. Determined to carry out the principle of "égalité," which is one of the three which the new Republic has solemnly accepted, the Minister of the Interior, disposing with any Jury of Selection, ordered that every picture, good, bad, and indifferent, which was sent in, should be exhibited—a decision which caused the long-haired artists of the bad and indifferent class to shout [illegible] enthusiasm. As well as one can judge [illegible] the immense gallories, "égalité" there is no room for complaint as to expectation, by no means lowered the general character of the Exhibition. As in previous years, there are some excellent pictures, some good, some middling, some bad, and some which are most atrocious daubs. But the excellent and the good are not fewer, the middling, the bad, and the abominable are not more numerous, in proportion to those of previous years. Each person—every impartial person who may be able to make a comparison between the present and past Exhibitions will, I think, coincide in my verdict.

Notwithstanding what the French call préoccupations politiques nearly absorb public attention, it is impossible not to notice the great falling off which has taken place in fashionable gaiety. Pass along the streets at any hour after midnight, and you will not hear the strains of music nor see the blaze of lights in any house: no trains of carriages will be found to obstruct the way; no dashing equipages will be met with. Grand dinners, grand balls, grand soirées grand concerts, grand fêtes of all kinds, have now become almost as scarce in Paris as in the most obscure of obscure country towns. The rich have fled, or are preparing to fly, or, at the very least, have cut down their establishments. No pomp, no display, little rejoicing, strict economy—such are the orders of the day among the favoured of the earth. This may not be unnatural after the tremendous convulsion which we have just witnessed, and still less unnatural in presence of the dark, unknown, mysterious, threatening and lowering future which opens before us. But, nevertheless, it ought not to be; and if the higher classes of French society were actuated by ordinary patriotism, it would not be. Old down expenses—save money—diminish labour—[illegible] perhaps ruin commerce at such a moment as this. Why the bitterest enemy of France could not desire more fully to be crushed with the heel of Antichrist, as we have said, that is the very thing which the French aristocracy of money, and the French aristocracy of birth, are now doing! Verily they must be mad! They are not, for, if not, mad persons do not add to their folly the hatred of the mob, and yet that, at this moment, the mob is the supreme master of property and of life! If they have no feeling for the people, can they expect the people, with overwhelming power in their hands, to feel for them?

PRUSSIA

The arrival of Citizen Circourt, the new French Minister, at the Prussian Court vice the Marquis of Dalmatia (now Citizen Soult), resigned, or superseded, has been announced at Berlin. The King has nominated the Prince of Prussia to the command of the 4th d'vision of the army; Charles to the command of the 2nd. General Hedemann succeeds Prince Charles. No less than 54 staff officers (many of them actually in command of regiments) had been superseded in the course of a few days. An address to the King, signed by 1,800 persons, was held at Berlin on the evening of the 9th. It was numerously attended, but principally by curious spectators. Occasion was taken from it, however, to forbid all such meetings for the future. Measures had been adopted to prevent their recurrence—by force if necessary.

Numerous copies of a circular, breathing the deepest hostility to Russia, were distributed amongst the inhabitants of Königsberg on the 7th instant, from whom also an address to the King was been forwarded, which, amongst other matters, state "It is through a real representation of the people—one springing from all classes of society—the establishment of a free constitution, and through unconditional freedom of the press, that Germany will acquire the power of opposing all its enemies if we are animated by a true love for fatherland. May your Majesty place confidence in the people, and not in princes, who alone serve self."

The united authorities of Elbing have resolved to forward a deputation to Berlin, in order to obtain an audience of the King and give over (einleiten), to express the wishes of the people. The head burgomaster is appointed the head of the deputation. The garrison in Magdeburg has been nearly doubled, and the inhabitants have the option either of having the additional soldiers billeted on them, or of paying a certain sum to be dispensed from such "angel visits."

The King has met a most exasperated unlimited liberty of the press in all respects; but we learn, from a Royal decree in the Prussian State Gazette, that after recapitulating the resolution of the Germanic Diet, by which freedom of action in what relates to the press is left to the individual States of the Confederacy, his Majesty declares that he has instructed his Minister at Frankfort to urge the Diet to the adoption of a further resolution directing the simultaneous introduction of freedom of the press into all the Germanic States. It also enforces, or should prove unavailing, the King pledges himself to abolish the censorship at once in the Prussian dominions, and to refer the details of the law, as regards the press, to the Prussian Diet at its next meeting.

A letter from Berlin, of the 7th March, announces that the Polish Deputies, to the number of fifty, purpose giving in their resignations, not wishing to form a part of the German States Congress, as affected Polish nationality. This resolution is, it is said, based on the treaty of 1815, which guarantees the national institutions to all the Polish provinces.

AUSTRIA

From Pressburg, in Hungary, we learn that the greatest agitation prevails in that kingdom. Events had taken a serious turn, so much so, that the Archduke Stephen had proceeded to Vienna, to ask for new instructions suited to the extraordinary and unexpected circumstances. An address had been forwarded by the States of Hungary to the Emperor, of so unusual a character, that the monarch cannot be master of ourselves, it demands the sanction and maintenance of the ancient Hungarian Constitution, and the appointment of a separate Ministry, the members of which shall be responsible to the people of Hungary.

Bohemia has not lerried in following the example of Hungary. Count Frederick Deym, the Kossuth of Bohemia, and twenty of the most eminent members of the Opposition, have proposed the immediate convocation of the Bohemian Diet. They give two reasons for taking this step:—First, "To express their loyal and true sentiments to the Throne, and to make any sacrifice that may be necessary, compatible with the interests of the State;" and secondly, "to send their joyful co-operation to a development of the representation of the country." An address to this effect has been forwarded to Vienna. Bohemia is most indefinitely represented at the Diet, which is sufficiently proved by the fact that out of 300 towns, only four return representatives, and these four are often appointed by the King, instead of being elected by the people. Notwithstanding this, Bohemia has taken a firm position towards Austria, and the spirit of progress, which has so suddenly spread itself over the Continent, is felt there as elsewhere

GERMAN STATES

The Frankfort journals of the 11th instants intimate that the Germanic Diet, sensible of the necessity of revising the federal constitution, is busy with a plan to be submitted to the Governments of the different states which compose the Confederation.. It is also convinced that to ensure a favourable reception to the plan which may be ultimately resolved on among the body of the people, it is necessary to invite the concurrence of individuals connected with

"RELIEF FOR THE WOUNDED."

PICTURES OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

THE first of these scenes is of a more humanizing character than its companion. The physical conflict is over, the wounded are lodged in ambulances, and alms are begged for their relief at every turn. A few stones are heaped together, perhaps taken from the nearest barricade; and upon them is placed a tronc pour les blessés, to receive the contributions of the public. Our Artist's Sketch is from the life: a woman, of middle station, is dropping her mite into the treasury. The persons around her are very characteristic; the little girl looks on in sorrowful sympathy, which extends to the boy, though he is learning thus early to wield the weapon of death. The man in the frock, bearing a bayoneted gun, is imploring alms: he is listened to by the seated guard, but the raw recruit is not so moved. The boy with the shouldered sword and the cockade, and the man behind him in cap and blouse, belong to a class of the people who must be regarded as not the least efficient agents in the recent Revolution.

SCENE AT THE BARRIER OF ST. DENIS.

THE Quarters of St. Martin and St. Denis, it is well known, were the hot-beds of the late Revolution; and the Illustration shows one of the early stages of the conflict, at the Barrier of St. Denis, with the approach of a band of the Revolutionists.

The Barrier of St. Denis is at the entrance into Paris, from the Boulogne road; and this was a point of considerable importance in the struggle, since this gate is the nearest to Vincennes, whence supplies of ammunition were expected to arrive.

A Correspondent, who was among the first English visitors after the Revolution, states that "at the Barrier of St. Denis was a powerful and striking illustration of the character of the revolt. The houses of the Corps de Garde and the Octroi were entirely in ruins, and exhibited the effects of a most violent conflict; and, judging from the walls, cannon had been employed. Here might be seen curious specimens of the powers now in possession of Paris; and citoyens had entire control over all that passed either way through the Barrier. The crowd was by no means great, and, considering the state of things, exceedingly orderly and polite."

A Correspondent of the Times bears the following testimony to the honesty of the people of this Quarter:—

"And those men of the barricades—those grim-looking, terrific men of Wednesday and Thursday last—those unwashed, ill-dressed, tattered men of the Quarters of St Martin and St. Denis, and of the Halle, and of the Hôtel de Ville, and of the Faubourg St. Antoine, whose appearance and whose cries were appalling—where are they? They have returned modestly to their hard labour—to the practice of their admirable industry—to their privations and their endurances.

"Let those men be known to the world. The great mass of the combatants of the 22d, 23d, and 24th of February were the poor hard-working classes of the Parisians. They were labourers at the ports, shoemakers, sawyers, carpenters, shoe-blacks; in a word, the operatives and labourers of the capital. What did they? They believed that the late Government had cheated them of the fruits of their Revolution of July. They waited the proper moment for reconquering their rights, and they went at it without arms, taking their chance of finding a dead enemy, and of arming themselves with his weapons. And when, by a succession of miracles, their courage and their constancy were rewarded by the most splendid victory ever achieved by insurgents, what did they?—'rob,' 'pillage,' 'murder?'

"Search the columns of the newspapers, demand of the thousands of English and other foreign residents of Paris during the severe struggle, and they will tell you that those men, so hideous and so terrible in the streets and at the barricades, so infuriated by the slaughter of their friends, seized the earliest opportunity for leaving the chose publique to be looked after by honest competent men, and returned to their workshops, their hovels, and their poverty, proud—for that too should be known—proud of having once more conquered liberty for their country."

CONFLICT AT THE BARRIER ST. DENIS

IRELAND.

The eddy of the great Revolutionary wave has extended to Ireland, and "sympathy" with the French Republic has become the motto of the more violent or earnest of the Repealers.

Yesterday (Friday) being the anniversary of the National Patron Saint, had been for some time past fixed upon as the day on which aggregate Repeal meetings should be held in every parish throughout the country, while in Dublin a demonstration on a gigantic scale, consisting of a procession, public meeting, &c., was to take place. The violent language of the leaders and the journals of the Young Ireland party have created some apprehension that the tranquillity of the city would be disturbed: but we trust these fears may be shown to have been groundless.

The provost and board of Trinity College met on Sunday after divine service, when an address to his excellency the Lord Lieutenant was unanimously agreed to, expressive of confidence in his Excellency's wisdom, and a determination to uphold the peace of the city. His Excellency returned a suitable reply.

Every arrival from the north of Ireland brings reports of the meetings at Orange lodges, and of addresses of confidence in the Lord Lieutenant, with assurances of readiness to come forward whenever required and render every support to a Government determined to maintain the peace and order of the community.

The Government have taken measures to suppress disturbances, should, unfortunately, any attempt of the kind be made. Besides the garrison of Dublin, which is about 4000 strong, 2000 more are being called in from the surrounding districts. Twelve troops of cavalry have arrived from Drumdalk, Newry, and Newbridge, some of whom have been quartered in our cavalry barracks, and the remainder furnished with temporary accommodation in our large livery establishments. Four regiments of infantry—79th, 89th, 55th, and 2nd—have either arrived or are moving in the city, and the artillery corps at the Pigeon-house has been strengthened. All the infantry have been served with ninety rounds per man—sixty in carcase-box, and thirty in knapsack.

At a Privy Council held on Saturday, the Lord Chancellor issued commissions of the peace for the borough and county of Dublin to the following staff officers of the garrison:—Lieutenant-Colonel Forster, K.H.; Lieutenant-Colonel Graves; Colonel Cochrane, C.B.; Colonel Frith; Colonel Gordon; Major Draper, and Captain Leycester Smith.

THE petition for tenant right at Carrickmacross has received the immense amount of 20,000 signatures. In a rural district, and within so brief a time, this is never employed.

CONCILIATION HALL. The Repeal Association received an acquisition on Monday at its usual weekly meeting in the person of the Earl of Miltown, who, though a Liberal and Radical, has now for the first time assumed the Repeal colours. His adhesion was quite unexpected, and excited much enthusiasm. His Lordship spoke at considerable length, and forcibly dwelt upon the moral force principle as the true sword of combat. The Association would take no part in the street proceedings on Friday. The Old Ireland force would attend the ward meetings, which would have the effect of diminishing the processional crowds and keeping down their fervour. Rent for the week, £42 3s. 7d.

KINSALE ELECTION.—Mr. Hawes has been returned by a majority of three, the numbers being:—Hawes, 97; Clinton, 94.

A MYSTERY. Some weeks since, it appears, an individual, who refused to give any name, called on Lord Auckland, as Vice-President of the Council of University College, and announced his intention to give £5000 to the College, to be a fixed fund at the disposal of the Council, on condition that the Council should consent to give to the fund such ordinary English surname as he should prescribe at the time of paying the money. In the event of this condition being accepted, the Council were to advertise their acceptance in the Times on two successive days, which Z. A. named. The Council did not, it would seem, consider that there was anything in the terms for which £5000 was not a good and sufficient equivalent. The advertisements were accordingly inserted; but nothing more was heard of Z. A. for some days after the second had appeared. On the 29th of February, however (the rarer day the rarer deed), Z. A. made his appearance at the Admiralty, and handed over to Lord Auckland £5000 in Bank of England notes—intimating at the same time the fund was to be called "The Andrews Fund." We believe an understanding exists that no attempts are to be made to trace the donor—and his name is not to be divulged if by accident it should be discovered.

NAPLES.—THE CHIAJA, OR QUAY.—FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH.

NAPLES.

Letters from Naples of the 9th state that the King had appointed a Provisional Ministry, composed of Prince Cariati, President of the Council; Commander Spinelli, Minister for Foreign Affairs; M. Capomazza, formerly Attorney-General in the Court of Cassation, Minister of Justice; and M. della Valle, Minister of Finance. Sicily was more determined than ever to separate from Naples, and King Ferdinand was then preparing an expedition against that island. Messina had been bombarded during five days. The proclamation of the Republic in France had produced the greatest enthusiasm in Naples.

Lord Minto was at Naples. Admiral Sir William Parker and two ships of the line and two war-steamers were on the bay, as well as a French and Austrian man-of-war.

The annexed Sketch, by an Artist resident at Naples, shows "the Chiaja," or Quay, which lies between the hill of Saint Elmo and the point of Pizzofalcone, and affords a carriage communication between Toledo and the western crescent, or new portion of the town. This part, which is much contracted between the hills and the sea, extends in length about a mile and a half between the hill of Pizzofalcone to the east, and that of Posilipo to the west. A fine road runs all this length, parallel to the sea-shores, and between the public gardens on one side and a row of fine houses on the other; it then turns round the base of Monte Posilipo, and gradually ascending it, leads to the other side of it towards Pozzuoli.

English Workmen at Boulogne.—A correspondent at Boulogne requests us, at the desire of many of the authorities of that place, to contradict a statement going the rounds of the papers, that all the English employed at the factories and otherwise, in Boulogne, have been discharged. Such, it appears, is not the fact. Not one has been discharged up to this moment from any of their employments in or near the town; and nothing can be better than the feelings that exist between the whole body of English and French inhabitants.

Passengers to Boulogne.—The number of passengers to Boulogne during the week ending the 5th of March was 1323, of which 369 were from England to Boulogne, 864 from Boulogne to England. The excess of the latter this week is remarkable. Of those from England 230 were from Folkestone, 100 from Dover, and 30 from London. Of those from Boulogne 680 were to Folkestone, 67 to Dover, and 197 to London. The total number of passengers between England and Calais was 264.

LOUIS PHILIPPE AT CLAREMONT.

The Illustration shows the Count and Countess de Neuilly domesticated in one of the principal saloons of Claremont, which, by the way, has all the appointments of a palace. These personages formed the Royal party on the first day after their arrival at Claremont.

The Count and Countess remain here in retirement, surrounded by the members of their family circle. During the past week the Count has received visits from very many of his personal friends, including several members of the aristocracy. M. Guizot has been to Claremont more than once since his arrival in this country. The Duke de Montebello and M. Duchâtel have also paid personal visits to their late Royal master in his retirement. Both the Count and Countess are said to be in good health. The terrible change in the fortunes of the ex Royal pair appears to affect them less (as far as may be gathered from outward appearance) than might have been expected. The Count takes occasional airings in a private carriage in the vicinity of his retreat, and is everywhere received with marked respect by the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. This observation also applies to the younger branches of the exiled family. The ex-Royal family again attend divine service at the Catholic Chapel, Weybridge.

LOUIS PHILIPPE AT CLAREMONT.

CALEND. FOR THE WEEK

SUNDAY, March 19 Second Sunday in Lent. Full Moon at 9h. 11m. P.M.
Total eclipse of the Moon
MONDAY, 20.—At 11h. 10m. A.M. the Sun enters the sign Aries, and Spring commences. Vernal equinox.
TUESDAY, 21 St. Benedict
WEDNESDAY, 22 The Sun rises at 5h. 59m., and sets at 6h. 16m
THURSDAY, 23 —The length of the Day is 12h. 21m., and the Day has increased 4h 36m. Since its shortest Day
FRIDAY, 24,—Day breaks at 3 [illegible] and Twilight ends at 8
SATURDAY, 25 [illegible] Lady Day.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE MORNING OF MARCH

| Sunday | Monday | Tuesday | Wednesday | Thursday | Friday | Saturday |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| M. A. | M. A. | M. A. | M. A. | M. A. | M. A. | M. A. |
| 0 m. 1 h. | 0 m. 1 h. | 0 m. 2 h. | 0 m. 2 h. | 0 m. 3 h. | 0 m. 3 h. | 0 m. 4 h. |
| 2 0 | 2 21 | 2 42 | 3 3 | 3 25 | 3 46 | 4 10 |

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Columbia," "Love and Learn," and "J. R. W.," London.—In answer to these correspondents relative to the family of Orleans, we have inserted all the information we have in our possession on the subject. Further particulars will be found in Mr. Burke's "Patricians," for September 1847.

"Xenodoxus."—The titles of the Princes of the House of Orleans have usually been chosen from names of note in the history of the family. The Sieur de Joinville was the champion-in-arms and historian of St. Louis, from whom the House of Bourbon and that of Orleans sprung. The Prince of Joinville is most probably so called from the ancient seigneurie; and the style of Prince, instead of that of Duke, was given to him because there was no Dukedom called Joinville.

"A Constant Subscriber," Brighton.—The reasons we have hereto assigned for adopting a tubular bridge over the river Conway, in preference to a stone one, are the great depth of the stream, and consequent prodigious outlay of money required to erect a stone bridge.

"J. T. L." We regret.

"P. B." should apply to one of the Secretaries to the Art Union.

"J. V.," Lancaster.—Lonsdale.

"A Subscriber," Liverpool.—Your's is the only objection we have received.

"Lincoln."—The agreement will suffice.

"An Ambitious Youth" whose first read "Real Life in India," just published!

"P. P. P." See the Population Census published in Vol 3 of our Journal

"J. R."—The matter does not seem to require explanation.

"R. S." Queenhithe, Thames.

"J. S. S., Strand.—Inclosed.

"A. B.," Preston.—Lord John Russell fills the office of Premier for the first time.

"A Subscriber ab initio," Bognor.—A work on Church facilities, &c., is published by Bell, Fleet-street

"A Constant Reader, O." The marriage will be valid.

"W. E.," near Bromsgrove.—We cannot advise you.

"Wirescrew" should consult the work lately published on Pests to Agriculture.

"J. E. F." Paddock.—We cannot advise you.

"Scrutator" —The circumstance was accidental.

"F. A. D.," Devonport. The Sketch, &c., has been returned to Greenwich Hospital.

"Hiram" may rest assured of the safety of the savings' banks.

"Cornelius," Camden Town, should advertise.

"H. D. A." New York, is thanked.

"T. H. F. G." We have not room for your letter of three folios.

"M. L. A." Stamford "O. M." "F. S.," Dublin; "X. Y. Z." "Sophia;" "A Constant Reader" "B. T.," Ross; "An Inquirer." "H. B. C." "Laburnum;" "Sour Martin;" "R. A. G." "J. S.," Dublin." "L. L." "Spectator;" "H. E." Gloucester; "V. T.," Brighton; "Dubitas." "Mr. Parker." "J. C. Lees;" "J. S.," Edinburgh;" "P. R." Wolsley;" "R. J. M." Stockton.—Your questions are not of a clear meaning to be replied to in a newspaper We may add that matters of derivation and pronunciation belong to the antiquary.

"A Correspondent." —Mr. Milner Gibson. M.P., was born in 1809 or 1810.

"A Veritable Ignoramus."—Charles X. died in Germany, 6th Nov., 1836.

"Pearson."—We are inclined to think that the motto being upon an heralds' garter would subject the person who used it on his seal to the tax for armorial bearings.

"Job Cutbush" Error is propagated with the best intentions

"P. M." There is no remedy in such a case as yours at present

"Mariner," who supposes a friend to have left some money in the Three per Cent. Consols, should apply to the principal of the Consol Office, at the Bank of England, who, upon the production of the probate of the will, and some account of the residuality of the party reserving the information, will afford every facility for pursuing the investigation

"P. M.," Chelmsford.—The salary of the Prime Minister is £5000 per annum

"W. J. V.," Middenhall.—Dr. Golding Bird's "Natural Philosophy" is a sound work. "Lardner on the Steam engine," and the "Treatise on Mechanics," by Lardner and Kater, are also useful works

"E. G.," Oxford. We have no room for Foreign Letters.

"J. R. H.," and J. S., Leeds.—Accepted.

"J. T. R." We regret we have been anticipated by Sir M. Leonard

"Transactions of the Society of Arts." A work on "Tuzuleu'ns" is published by Van Voorst. We believe the "Manual for Mechanics' Institutions" is out of print.

"A. C." Preston.—Declined

"W. M.," St. Alban's.—The practical instructions will be given in the 4th and concluding part of the "History of Wood Engraving."

"Amicus Sacer" is thanked, but the suggestion arrived too late.

"J. D. H."—We have not room for the Sonnet.

"A Novice"—Declined. Apply to any dealer in hard woods.

"E. C.," Wandsworth.—The copies shall be exchanged, if sent to our office

"Piston." —The Office for the Registration of Designs is at No. 35, Lincoln's Inn Fields.

"A Reader."—Watts's Logic.

"W. S. J.," Sheffield, is thanked

"Omega," Northwich." The "History of Wood Engraving," now publishing as a separate form, originally appeared in Vol. 4 of our Journal. The latter portion has, however, been revised and extended, and several Illustrations added. See Pitman's work on Phonography.

"Macaroni," Newport In any large collection of French Songs

"A New Subscriber" had better send his "View" to a bookbinder.

"D. W" will be liable.

"D. A." We have no means at hand of ascertaining.

"D. S." Declined

"A Constant Reader." Certainly

"Elsie," Montreal, is thanked; but we have not room.

"A Subscriber," Liverpool.—Our "Fine Arts" Illustrations will be resumed shortly

"Rusticus" can compel payment by the party making himself responsible by letter.

"Shrew," Ireland, should consult a solicitor.

"A Constant Reader."—Albani did not sing in "Norma," last season, at the Royal Italian Opera.

"B. B."—The natural compass of Mdlle. Lind's voice extends to D in alto, down to E on the first line treble clef.

 Several notices are unavoidably deferred

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1848.

THE Income Tax is permanently saddled upon the country. The large majority on Monday night against Mr. Hume's motion for restricting its duration to one year does not, at least so far as the Legislature is concerned, the question of its re-imposition for three years certain; and we fear beyond that period, for any length of time the Minister of the day may think fit to demand it.

That there will always be found specious reasons by any future Government for the renewal of a tax that yields so readily the large amount of five or six millions sterling, its history since 1842 proves clearly enough; and the man who expects that at the end of the next three years this odious impost will be abandoned, as a fund of sanguine hope at his disposal that may hardly be realized, is not much a happy mood: and we would, therefore, in the belief that the tax will ultimately become an established source of revenue to the Treasury, point to the absolute necessity there exists of remedying its present inequalities, so as to render it less oppressive and intolerable in its operation. If it were apportioned in a fairer and juster manner,—not confounding, as it does at present, the remuneration of personal labour, by the one manual, with that of revenues derived from real property, the general odium with which it is regarded would in all probability be dissipated, and the public become reconciled to the burden. Mr. Wilson, in the debate on Friday night, correctly observed—" A conviction of its injustice had sunk deep into the minds and hearts of almost all classes of the community; and he apprehended that if some attempt were not made to secure greater equality, the discontent which the persuasion of its injustice would engender could not fail to endanger—at least to some extent—the whole finances of the country."

The danger is obvious enough. If large bodies of those who are subjected to the tax become fully impressed with an idea that the assessment of it is arranged in a spirit of unfairness and injustice, they will deem every means of evading its payment legitimate; they will in a thousand ways smuggle their incomes through the tax-collectors' rules and regulations, as successfully as the contraband trader does his wares through the custom-house officers: and when the Minister, having [illegible] sums of the public revenue, fancies that he may safely rely on a large return from this head, comes to meet his estimates of the national expenditure, he may, in the moment of his greatest need, find himself Lord of an empty Exchequer, and the credit of the country perilled.

To obviate such a danger is the bounden duty of the present Government; and no difficulties in the way of so desirable a measure should, for a moment, weigh with them in the consideration of the subject.

THE WEATHER.

The weather, during the past week, has been unsettled, and in fact frequently, [illegible], has been chiefly covered by cloud, and the temperature has been somewhat below the average for the season

The following are particulars of each day: Thursday, the clouds were broken frequently during the day: a misty rain was falling during the afternoon; the direction of the wind was W.S.W.: and the average temperature of the air for the day was 47°. Friday, the sky was clear early in the morning, and chiefly cloudy afterwards, a slight rain fell in the evening; the direction of the wind was S.W.; and the average temperature for the day was 48½°. Saturday, there were frequent squalls of wind and rain, and considerable variations of temperature took place during their continuance; the sky was mostly overcast; the direction of the wind was S.W.: and the average temperature for the day was 41½°. Sunday, the sky was overcast, with the exception of a few breaks in the clouds, to a small extent, in the afternoon; there were occasional slight showers of rain, at noon a considerable gloom prevailed; the direction of the wind was S.W.; the highest temperature during the day was 47°; the average for the day was 41°. Monday, at about noon, there were considerable portions of the sky free from clouds, at all other times it was overcast; rain was falling heartily from 6h. 7m. to 7h. 30m., and occasionally afterwards; the direction of the wind was N.W. and then N.: the average temperature of the air was 45°. Tuesday, the sky was chiefly covered till late in the evening, when it became almost cloudless, but a thick haze still prevailed; the direction of the wind was W.; the average temperature of the air for the day was 42½°, and that for the week was 44½°

The following are the extreme thermometrical readings for each day

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Tuesday, | March 8, the highest during the day was 54 deg., and the lowest was 33 deg | | |
| Wednesday, | March 15, | 47 | 30 |
| Saturday, | March 18, | 45 | 27 |
| Sunday, | March 12, | 43 | 30 |
| Monday, | March 13, | 42 | 34 |
| Tuesday, | March 14, | 43 | 29 |
| Thursday, | March 16, | 47 | 29 |

Hackney, Thursday, March 16, 1848. J. G

COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Saturday the Queen and Prince Albert took their usual early walk. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback in the morning, attended by his Equerry in Waiting. The Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice took their accustomed airings. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent dined with her Majesty and Prince Albert in the evening.

On Sunday morning the Queen walked out in the garden of the Palace. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household attended divine service in the private chapel. The Rev. Dr. Hamilton and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated. His Royal Highness the Duke Augustus of Saxe Coburg visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent at her residence, Clarence House, St. James's.

On Monday the Queen and Prince Albert took their accustomed early walk in the gardens of Buckingham Palace. His Excellency Count Colonna, attended by his horse-black attended his Excellency in Waiting, Colonel Bouverie. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty and Prince Albert at Buckingham Palace.

On Tuesday the Queen and Prince Albert took their usual early walk. Her Majesty again promenaded in the afternoon. Lord John Russell had an audience of her Majesty, and shortly afterwards left town for St. Leonard's on Hastings. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, attended by Colonel Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting. His Royal Highness visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent at her residence, Clarence House, St. James's. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice took walking and pony exercise in the Royal gardens. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent dined with her Majesty and Prince Albert at Buckingham Palace

On Wednesday her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen at Buckingham Palace, and remained with her Majesty for some time after the departure of Prince Albert. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, attended by Colonel Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, took their accustomed airings.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS DE MONTPENSIER.—The Court Newsman mentions that the Duke and Duchess of Montpensier left England, on Thursday (last week), for Ostend, on their route to Germany.

ARRIVAL OF VISCOUNT HARDINGE.—This distinguished officer arrived in London on Wednesday forenoon, after an absence of four years, during which period he has filled the high and responsible office of Governor-General of India The noble and gallant Viscount, having chosen the Trieste route for his return home, embarked at Ostend on Tuesday in the General Steam Navigation Company's steam ship Sir Edward Banks. His Lordship is accompanied by his two sons, the Hon. C. B. and the Hon. Arthur Hardinge, and Colonel Robert Wood, late of the Governor-General's staff. We are glad to add that both his Lordship and his two sons are in excellent health. In the course of the evening several members of the nobility and gentry called and left their cards at his Lordship's mansion

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. March 14.

UNIVERSITY REFORM.—A memorial, numerously signed, of which the following is a copy, has been presented to the Vice-Chancellor, heads of houses, and proctors, in order that it may undergo a grave and serious discussion, previous to its being proposed in congregation, or decreed in Convocation:—"The undersigned tutors of colleges and halls beg respectfully to represent to the Rev. the Vice-Chancellor and the heads of houses, the necessity which they see exists for the extension and better arrangement of the University studies They wish particularly to call attention to the case of those who are not candidates for honours, and to the evil effects which are produced by the want of an adequate object for academical exertion in so large a portion of the younger members of the University. They conceive that the evils alluded to may be at least partially remedied by an alteration in the existing examination statute. They would beg leave respectfully to recommend: 1. An examination corresponding to the present examination for responsion, but an earlier period. 2. A second examination in the books, or part of the books, required at present from candidates for the degrees of B.A., at some period intermediate between the first and final examination. 3 A final examination for the degree of B.A., which shall comprise Theology, Moral Philosophy, History (Ancient and Modern), or Mathematical and Physical Science.

ON Sunday, being the Sunday next before the Annunciation, the Archdeacon Rebendam, the Master of the Temple, brought the claims of the Society for Providing Additional Curates in Populous Places before the benchers of the Society of the Temple. Sir Robert Peel, with many other members of distinction, were among the congregation. The preacher stated that this society supports upwards of 200 curates in the poor and populous mining, manufacturing, and metropolitan districts, and has aided in the endowment of the seven poor livings. Fifty-seven cases, however, remained unaided, and many of the existing grants are in danger of being withdrawn, through want of funds.

WESTMINSTER, March 11. The Queen has been pleased to order a congé d'elire to issue to the Dean and Chapter of the collegiate church of Chester to elect a Bishop of that see, the same being void by the translation of the Most Reverend Father in God, John Bird Sumner, late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury; and her Majesty has also been pleased to nominate and appoint the Reverend John and Chanter, John Graham, Doctor in Divinity, to be the person in whose favour the said congé d'elire is to be granted.

We regret that in our paper of last week we were led into an error in announcing that John Divett, Esq., of Bovey Tracey, Chudleigh, had been appointed Secretary to the new Archbishop of Canterbury. The gentleman on whom the office has been conferred is Jacob Knyvett, Esq., of the city of Chester, who held a similar appointment from his Grace while Bishop of Chester for a period of ten years

THE IRISH COLLEGES.—NEW STATUTES.—The Tablet has learned that new statutes for the Irish provincial colleges have been prepared and are on their way to Rome. It is expected such are the preparations already made in the Holy City that these new statutes will give the utmost satisfaction; and at the earliest possible moment a new rescript, practically at variance with the former, is confidently looked for.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

CHARTIST DEMONSTRATION IN THE METROPOLIS.

On Monday last the Chartist Demonstration, which was to have been on so grand a scale, took place on Kennington-common, but it was a most complete failure. "The meeting" itself numbered scarcely more than 5000 persons, were, on the outskirts of the common, about a like number of spectators, who had come, attracted by curiosity, but taking no part whatever in the proceedings, which did not last above two hours, and merely consisted of a few speeches of the ordinary Chartist fashion

Between three and four o'clock in the afternoon it commenced raining with great violence, and in less than a quarter of an hour the common was left nearly deserted.

Preparations on a large scale had been made by the police to prevent disturbances should any attempts of the kind be made, but their services were not required, the rain having most effectually anticipated them.

It should be mentioned that the shops in the neighbourhood of Kennington, Walworth, Camberwell, &c., were closed throughout, from an apprehension of the disgraceful scenes of window breaking which occurred on the previous Monday, on the occasion of the meeting at Charing-cross, might be renewed. We have not heard that a single shop was broken into, with the exception of the breaking of a pawnbroker's window, at Peckham, from which articles of value to a considerable amount were abstracted. The police, however, immediately apprehended some ten or twelve of the delinquents.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PROPRIETORS OF THE LIVERPOOL COMMERCIAL BANK. The fifteenth anniversary meeting of the shareholders of the above-named Bank was held on Saturday at the Clarence Rooms. Mr. J. C. Jack, Chairman of the Board of Directors, called upon the manager, who read the report: "The fifteenth annual meeting of the proprietors of the Liverpool Commercial Banking Company has been called in pursuance of the provisions of the deed of settlement, to receive the report of the directors, and three directors in the place of those whose term in office now expires. The directors have to present to the proprietors their report for the year terminating on the 31st of December last. The profits of the business for the year, over and above all expenses, amounted to £43,122 0s. 2d., from which two half-yearly dividends of 5 per cent. each, or £40,000, were declared, and the balance, £3,122 0s. 2d., has been carried to the reserved fund for losses. The fund was in credit £3765 16s. 9d., in consequence of reversions to that amount having been received from debts which had been written off. The combined sum, £13,027 16s. 11d., now stands to meet the contingencies of the past year, and will, the directors hope, be sufficient for the purpose. The directors have the property in which the reserved surplus fund is invested, taken on the 31st December last, and according to the provisions of the deed of settlement, reduced the value of those houses to the sum of £8,000. To the reserved surplus fund, which, on the 31st December, 1846, was £200,721 13s., at present amounts to £185,439 1s. 0d., certainly a large reduction in value; but as there is not any class of security in regard to which more precautions could be taken, it has increased. The business of the directors will be given to the business of the Bank, and the protection of the property of the shareholders. The directors whose term in office now expires are Mr. Robert Mackrell, Mr. William Hayes, and Mr. John Ewart. JOHN C. JACK, Chairman." The report was agreed to CHEESEMONGERS' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—On Tuesday evening the annual meeting of the supporters of the above Institution, established for giving pensions to necessitous members of the trade, was held at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street; Mr. E. Corderoy in the chair. The report (read by Mr. Sampson, the secretary) congratulated the friends of the institution that the affairs of the Society were not in a satisfactory state, the subscriptions of the past year being less than those of the preceding year by £70. Since the formation of the Society, in 1835, the number of pensioners had been 57, of whom 30 were now dependent on the funds. Within that period the sum expended in pensions had been £5464. The receipts of the past year amounted to £705, and the expenditure left a balance of only £2 3s. 8d. On the motion of Mr Crab, seconded by Mr. James, the report was received; after which the committee and other officers were elected, and the meeting separated.

ALLEGED PREMATURE CONSIGNMENT TO A COFFIN.—The most extraordinary reports are in circulation in the neighbourhood of Red Lion square It appears that on last Sunday the deceased, shortly after his return from church, fell down and expired in a fit. The next day the undertaker attended, and placed the corpse in a coffin, the lid of which was fastened down. Shortly afterwards a noise, which was attributed to the bursting of the body, was heard in the coffin, but of which no further notice was taken. Some time afterwards the lid was unscrewed, and the body in such a position as left no doubt that suspended animation had returned, and that a death struggle ensued after the body was enclosed in the narrow house.

MARYLEBONE VESTRY.—On Saturday, at the meeting of the vestry of St. Marylebone, the Rev. Dr. Spry in the chair, the adjourned debate on the resolutions submitted by Mr. Lindsay and the Imperial Western Gas-light Company, was resumed. The resolutions, after some slight amendments, were adopted. It was then moved to submit the resolutions to the solicitor of the vestry, in order to draw up a memorial to the House of Commons, praying that the bill might be opposed, and the motion having been carried, Sir James Hamilton said he begged to give notice, that on Saturday next he should move the non-confirmation of the whole proceedings.

BIRTHS, DEATHS, &c., FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 11.—The number of births during the above week, recorded in the Registrar-General's return, was 1480, of which 750 were males and 730 females. This number exceeds that of the preceding week by 74. The total number of deaths was 1076, of which 524 were males and 545 females. This number exceeds the weekly average for the last five winters by 87, is less than the deaths of the preceding week by 44, and less than the births of the week by 404. The excess over the average is chiefly under the heads of typhus fever and bronchitis. The deaths from the first are this week 62, the average being 35. Those from the second are 95, the average being 61.

DOCKYARD BATTALIONS.—A return has been laid on the table of the House of Commons of the number of men in her Majesty's several dockyards embodied in the dockyard battalions. The total number is 9246, which are thus divided:—At Portsmouth, 2000; Devonport, 1784; Chatham, 1360; Deptford, 1037; Woolwich, 984; Sheerness, 896; Pembroke, 817; Gosport, victualling-yard, 1st, Plymouth, victualling-yard, 129. These numbers are exclusive of the officers, drill-sergeants, and the police of the yards. The days of exercise at all the yards are two in each week, from the 1st of May to the 3.st of August.

THE EX-ROYAL FAMILY OF FRANCE.—The reception of the Royal Family of France in this country has been marked by sound judgment and good feeling. LOUIS PHILIPPE has been forgotten, even if they have fallen from the summit of human greatness to a condition so dejected that the interest animosity must be disarmed in contemplating it. In common with the rest of the world, we were under the impression that the Comte de Neuilly had prudently amassed and secured sufficient funds to support his family in affluence and comfort, but we regret to find that this notion is the reverse of the truth. Louis Philippe, it now appears, whether from an ill-grounded confidence in the stability of his Government, or from motives of nationality and patriotism—possibly from a mixture of both—had entrusted the whole of his wealth to the institutions agreed to by the committee on Monday, the 14th of February, and communicated to those petitioners whose addresses were appended to the petition. A delay of a week had been already granted in addition to the fortnight especially allowed on the 14th of February, to enable them to furnish the committee with more specific particulars with regard to the charges against Earl Ellesmere, which the statements of the petitioners afforded matter for inquiry before them. The committee were therefore of opinion that they ought not to grant any further postponement, and that the petitioners having failed to comply with the requirements of the committee, it was not expedient that they should proceed with the inquiry, and came to a resolution that the case had been made for equity

THE LATE MR. CURREY, THE PRINCIPAL DEPUTY CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS.—We feel the greatest sorrow in having to announce the sudden death of Mr. Currey, the most appointed principal clerk of this House of Lords, will took place on Monday, shortly after four o'clock. Mr. Currey was in his place in the House of Lords in the morning, having then for the last time been employed in the discharge of the duties of his new appointment. In the early part of the morning he appeared cheerful as usual, and about twelve o'clock went to his private room to transact some business connected with his office, accompanied by one of the gentlemen of the House, when he was seized with apoplexy, and immediately expired. Mr. Currey had sailed for many years the office of second clerk of the Parliament. On Wednesday an inquest was held on the body at the House of Lords, before Mr. Manning, Coroner of the Queen's Household, when a verdict was returned, "that the deceased died by the visitation of God in a natural way."

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

PASSENGERS' BILL.—This bill was read a third time and passed.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—FRIDAY.

THE INCOME-TAX.

On the motion of the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, the House having gone into Committee of Ways and Means, the

Mr. B. HALL moved that the Income-Tax, as levied in England, should be extended to Ireland.

A long discussion ensued, and the Committee, on a division, decided against the motion by a majority of 218 to 38.

The House then resumed, and shortly afterwards adjourned.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

WURTEMBURG.—REVOLUTIONARY PROCEEDINGS.

We regret to [illegible] that Wurtemburg has broken out in Germany. The horizon [illegible] is already turts from [illegible] ry fires.

The [illegible] ng disturbance [illegible] ng in the [illegible] ners in residences of the Princes of Hohenlohe, have been burnt to the ground. Nor have the boors respected the ancient castle of Jaxthausen, on the Jaxt, which for centuries has been in the [illegible] of the Berlin house of that family, and has been immortalized by Goethe, in his description of its defence by iron-fisted Gotz, who then headed the insurgent [illegible]. The village belonging to it also has been [illegible].

The castle of Assumstadt, the family residence of the Barons of Ellrichshausen, and the castle of Schwagenheim, the residence of Count Neippers, son-in-law of the King of Wurtemburg, have been razed to the ground. The lives of the inhabitants have been spared, but an organized system is visible

The stewards of the castles in question were compelled to throw the archives into the flames with their own hands, and some men of education are evidently in the ranks of the peasants, as the device of the Hohenliches, ex flamma oriar, was ironically changed into ex flamma moriar

Two thousand men have been ordered, in all haste, from Ludwig-burg and Heidelburn, to quell this insurrection.

FRANCE.

Great distress at first had been caused in the granaries and light companies of the National Guards by that portion of M. Ledru-Rollin's circular which related to their being disbanded, and united indiscriminately with the other companies, and they accordingly met in a body, to the amount, it is said, of 30,000, and sent a deputation to the Government on Thursday, to remonstrate on the matter.

The reply of the Provisional Government to the deputation was considered of a favourable nature. The composition of the National Guard is to remain as the same until its definitive re-organization, when the compagnies d'élite are to be suppressed.

The object M. Rollin had in view by his measure was to lessen the influence of those companies who are composed of moderatés in the approaching election of their officers, which, in the meantime, has been postponed from this day (Saturday) to Saturday next, the 25th instant.

A very violent scene, which took place in the council of the Provisional Government on Tuesday night, was the subject of general conversation. In the course of their deliberations a proposition was made by M. Ledru-Rollin, which, not being approved of by his colleagues, was rejected. Upon this, M. Ledru-Rollin threatened that, if his proposition were not agreed to, he would call in the people assembled in the court, and force the Government to accede to it. M. Garnier Pagès upon this immediately rose, and, drawing a pistol from his pocket, declared that if M. Ledru-Rollin attempted to put his threat in execution, he would shoot him through the head. The affair went no further; but when such scenes take place in the Council, it cannot be expected that the members of the Government will work long together

The National Guards were preparing to petition the Provisional Government for the dismissal of M. Ledru-Rollin from the office of Minister of the Interior.

A great crowd was assembled round the Bank of France on Thursday, and there was a company of the National Guards on duty to keep order. The decree suspending the cash payments not having been generally known, a deputation to create distrubance at first showed itself, and the excitement throughout the day was very great. No one was admitted into the Bank who could not show that he had actual business.

COUNTRY NEWS.

The accounts from the country generally are of a peaceful nature. From Scotland, too, the news is reassuring.

A LARGE open-air meeting of Chartists took place on Monday evening, behind the Salford Town-hall, the numbers congregated on the occasion being at least 4000 or 5000. The main object of the meeting was to congratulate the people of France "on the grand and victorious achievement in the cause of democratic principles." There had been a fear of this meeting leading to a renewal of the late disturbances, and the authorities had prepared a grand muster of the civil forces to keep them in check, but the result showed that this preparation was unnecessary. An address to the people of France was unanimously agreed to. A resolution, pledging the Chartists to keep a watchful eye on the bearing of our own Government towards the new Republic, and further pledging them to renew and continue their agitation for the people's charter, was supported by a Mr. Leach, the principal speaker on the occasion. He referred to the distress which has existed in Manchester for the last eighteen months, stating that the weekly average of paupers receiving out-door relief was something like 17,000, while all the workhouses and hospitals were full; and he told shopkeepers, that if they did not see to the amendment of the present state of things, the reduction of working-men's wages would ruin their business and profits, and bring them to bankruptcy. The speaker congratulated the meeting on its peaceable demeanour, and exhorted every one to depart in order and peace. He then began proceeding to talk of Republicanism, and the final triumph of the world over it; and advising the heroes who had died in the late revolution in France, called on every man present to show his reverence for the departed by taking off his hat. The whole meeting uncovered, and shortly afterwards separated quietly.

GLASGOW.—The body of the female that had been presumed to have been shot during the riots in Cambridge-street, Glasgow, has been subjected to a post mortem examination. It was found that the immediate cause of death was apoplexy, and the wound the result of a fall at the instant of the attack. The body has since been claimed, and turns out to be a Miss Trotter, a dressmaker; and from the circumstance of her going out occasionally to sew in the houses of private families, where she remained a day or two, her absence occasioned no surprise, and led to the delay in her recognition.

A MEETING of the Chartists of Birmingham, to sympathize with the French Republic, was held in the Town Hall there on Wednesday, at which resolutions, and an address congratulating the French people on the recent triumph of democracy in their country, were agreed to with acclamation. Fortunately, the meeting passed off peaceably.

In Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and other places in the north of England, Chartist meetings have been held during the week, without any breach of the peace occurring.

LINCOLNSHIRE ELECTION.—CLOSE OF THE POLL.

This election took place on Thursday. The numbers were:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Heathcote .. .. .. .. .. .. | 534 |
| Humphrey .. .. .. .. .. .. | 531 |
| Majority .. .. .. .. .. .. | 3 |

DESTRUCTION OF THE VIADUCT OVER THE RIVER NIDD AT KNARESBOROUGH.—On Saturday, about half-past eleven, A.M., the entire viaduct, which was nigh being completed, fell in with a tremendous crash. It consisted of four arches (the centres of which had not been removed), fifty feet in span and eighty feet high. The cause of so great a catastrophe remains a mystery yet to be explained, but it is thought it has arisen in a great measure through the heavy rains which have prevailed for the last two months. Fortunately, no lives were lost. It was intended for the use of the Leeds and Thirsk, York and North Midland, and East and West Yorkshire Junction Railways.

MUSICAL STORMS.—About three miles from Pottstown, in the United States, there is a place to which the name of the Singing Valley is given. There is in this valley a large mass of ill-shaped stones, which appear to have been thrown together by some terrific convulsion of nature. From the appearance of the stone it is judged that at some former time a volcanic eruption must have occurred there. By striking on these stones the most varied sounds imaginable are produced. The chime of the finest bells in the world does not exceed in variety the sounds produced, from the common bass to the most delicate treble, the gradations of which are exquisitely fine. No such phenomenon is to be found in any other part of the world.

ALEXANDRE DUMAS is the first specimen of the Negro blood, and exhibits, in an almost equal degree, the qualities of the indefatigable slave and the brilliant Frenchman. With an insatiable lust for notoriety, he contrives that his sayings and doings shall occupy the gossips of France. Not only as a writer—but simply as le roi du feuilleton, the facile princeps of the circulating library, but also as a "gentilhomme," as a "grand seigneur," and as a man, must he always "astonish" the public. If not noble himself, he at least ostensibly, incessantly talks of Marquis Davy de la Pailleterie; and talks with easy familiarity of his friends the Princes. If not an accomplished duellist, he is at least very great on the theory of duelling. His pen is the instrument which enables him to give magnificent rivalling in splendour the oriental lavishness of his own Monte Christo. He has not "amelt powder" but, to see him on a grand review day, at the head of a company of National Guards, you would fancy him the very Cæsar, Alexander, Attila, Napoleon, and Wellington of private life. He breaks in a place of orders. The objects of his existence seem to be two: firstly, to make enormous sums of money to spend with princely prodigality; secondly, incessantly to astonish the world. Above all things, he courts notoriety, scandal, and the power to set men wondering. He began life as a daring innovator—as a romanticist. Racine, and the whole traditional style of French art, he attempted to replace by effective melodrames, which he audaciously asserted were modelled after Shakespeare; his audacity was crowned by a loud but fugitive success. Since then his restless activity has exhibited itself in many ways, and of late the author has almost been eclipsed by the artist attached to the man.—From the British Quarterly Review, No. 13: full of clever and spirited writing, especially a paper on "The Public Men of France."

THE OLD UMBRELLA.—Louis Philippe left his umbrella at Paris. We suppose he had no use for it when the reign had ceased.—Puppet Show, No. 1.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Alpha." Stalemate draws the game, and is your match such a game does not exist

"J. E. C." must be good enough to send a solution. We never look at Problems which come without solutions.

"Alpha." It is, of course, possible for Black, in the position cited, to do as the game, or even win it, if White plays ill enough to permit him; but, with the best play on both sides, the game should be White's.

"J. S."—1. You can demand any piece you choose, except a King, for every Pawn advanced to his 8th sq, and this without reference to the pieces still on the board 2. A King cannot be moved, under any circumstances, into a square commanded by A's Knight. 3 You may have two or more Queens on the board at once.

"Q. Q." Should the multiplicity of communications we receive, it is impossible for us to remember any part calculation. To what England do you refer? If you will be good enough to write out the position, we will solve it for you

"F. Q. R."—The moves will most probably be given every week. There seems to be some mistake as to the conditions in the Problem you mention Are you quite sure it is accurately copied?

"Verbena." Bare mate play has King as a penalty for the mate move.

"A. Z. B." It is ingenious, and shall appear by-and-by. 278 can be solved, [illegible] three ways.

"J. L." We do not remember receiving the note to which you allude, but it is quite possible, amidst hundreds of others, it was overlooked. With respect to Enigma 2.8, it appears to us a perfectly correct and an extremely beautiful position, but if any supposed flaws were pointed out to us, we should, as in all similar cases, where we felt a doubt upon the subject, refer it to the author. He is the only person who occasionally observes.

"Wondsworth." Your note shall be duly attended to.

"Beta," St. Neot's.—Many thanks. They are always acceptable.

"C. S." We quite agree with you, that at the first blush White gets the advantage of your mate

"A. B." Gray's Inn.—It must have miscarried. Favour us with another copy.

"W. K." They shall be played over, but we are a good deal pressed for space.

"M. H. C."—Pray try again. So simple a mate should never be given up in despair.

Solutions by "Sigwartlite," "R. M.," "T. G. D.," "S. J.," "Parkside," "P. R.," "T. R.," "Alfa," "Eos," "G. A. H.," "Woodstockensis," "Miles," "J. L.," "Hastings," "F. F.," "I. H. S." are right.

 Several answers to Correspondents are unavoidably deferred.

MATCH OF CHESS BY CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE DEPUTATION OF CHESS CLUB AND THE AMSTERDAM CHESS CLUB FOR £100

This interesting contest has now begun. The Amsterdam players won the move, and opened the fight with P to q 4th. The following are the moves at present made:—

| WHITE. (Amsterdam.) | BLACK. (London.) |
|---|---|
| 1 P to Q 4th | 1. P to K 3d |
| 2 P to Q B 4th | And London has to play |

 Any one desirous of playing a game of Chess by correspondence may hear of an opponent by addressing H. J. C. Andrews, Esq., Harder's-row, Peckham.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 216.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. Q to Q B 3d (ch) | R to Q K 6th | 4. Q takes P (ch) | K to Q Kt 5th. |
| 2. Q to B 5th (ch) | R to Kt 6th | 5. Q to Q 6th | K to Q Kt 6th |
| 3. Q to K 3d (ch) | R to Q Kt 6th | 6. Q to Q 3d—Mate. | |

PROBLEM, NO. 217.

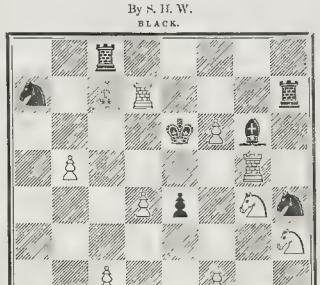
By S. H. W.

BLACK.



WHITE,

White playing first can mate in five moves.

MR. HARRWITZ AND THE BERLIN PLAYERS.

The following games will be studied with peculiar interest, from the circumstance of their being among the first which have taken place in the long-desired contest between this excellent player and the athlete of the Berlin Chess Club His chief competitor during his short stay in Berlin was Herr Mayet, unquestionably one of the strongest players of the Club. With this gentleman Mr. Harrwitz had five sittings, the result of which was, that in all he won 3 games, lost 2, and 3 games were drawn. It is much to be regretted that he was unable to find an opportunity of playing with Mr. Hanstein, the President of the Club. In addition to the games mentioned, Mr Harrwitz won two games of Von Hannecken, and three of Mr. Cubitz, and very unexpectedly lost one to a young member of no considerable force.

BETWEEN HERR MAYET AND HERR HARRWITZ.

| BLACK (Mr. M.) | WHITE (Mr. H.) | BLACK (Mr. M.) | WHITE (Mr. H.) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 P to Q 4th | P to Q 4th | 13. K takes B | Kt takes K P |
| 2 P to Q B 4th | P to K 3rd | 14. Kt to K R 3d | P takes K P |
| 3 Q Kt to B 3rd | K Kt to B 3d | 15. P takes P | Q Kt to K B 3d |
| 4. Q B to K 5th | P to Q B 3d | 16. Kt to K 5th | Kt to K R 4th |
| 5. P takes P | P takes P | 17. Kt to B 7th (ch) | K to his 2d |
| 6. Kt takes P (a) | Kt takes Kt | 18. Kt to K 8th | B to Q 2d |
| 7. B takes Q | B to Q Kt 5th (ch) | 19. K Kt to K Kt sq | P to K Kt 3d |
| | | 20 B to Q B 2d | Q R to Q sq |
| 8. Q to Q 2d | K takes Q P | 21. K to his 2d | K Kt to K 3d |
| 9. P to K 4th | K R to K sq | 22 P to Q 5th | K Kt to K 4th |
| 10. P to K B 3d | P to K B 4th | 23 K to Q 4th | P to Q Kt 3d |
| 11. B to Q 3d | Kt to K B 5th (b) | 24 P to Q Kt 4th (c) | Kt to Q Kt 2d |
| 12. K to Q sq | B takes Kt | 25. Q R to K B sq | P to Q B 3rd |

Winning the game in a few moves.

(a) After this miscalculation, which costs Black a Piece, the game is of course lost against the player of Mr. Harrwitz's strength Mr. Mayet, however, is not easily discouraged.

(b) A masterly manœuvre The Black King must move, or another Piece is lost. The K Kt cannot be saved

(c) Black's Pieces are all in full action, but White cannot be prevented from developing his also; and the former must succumb to superior numbers.

BETWEEN THE SAME PLAYERS

| BLACK (Mr. M.) | WHITE (Mr. H.) | BLACK (Mr. M.) | WHITE (Mr. H.) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. P to K 4th | P to K 4th | 19. Q R takes P | K Kt takes B (ch) |
| 2. P to K B 4th | P takes P | 20. Kt takes Kt | B takes Q R (b) |
| 3. B to Q B 4th | Q checks | 21. Kt to K 6th (ch) | |
| 4. K to B sq | P to Q 3d | (a) | Q takes Kt |
| 5. P to Q 4th | K Kt to K 2d (a) | 22. P takes Q | B takes Kt (ch) |
| 6. K to B 3d | Q to K R 3d | 23. K to R 2d | B takes R |
| 7. Q Kt to B 3d | P to Q B 3rd | 24. K takes B | B to K P 4th |
| 8. K to K Kt sq | B to K Kt 5th | 25. P to K Kt 4th | P to Q B 4th (d) |
| 9. P to K R 3d | B to K 3rd | 26. Q to K 4th | K to B 2d |
| 10. P to Q 5th | B to Q 2d | 27. Q takes K R P | Kt to Q B 3d |
| 11. P to K Kt 3d | K Kt to Kt 3d | 28. Q takes Kt P | Q R to B sq |
| 12. P to K B 4th | P to K B 4th | 29. B to Q 4th | K to Q sq |
| 13. Q to her 3d | P takes K P | 30. P to K 4th | B to B 7th |
| 14. Q takes P (ch) | K B to K 2d | 31. K to Kt sq | Kt to Q 5th |
| 15. B to Q 2d | K to Q sq | 32. P to K R 5th | K to K 7th (ch) |
| 16. Q R to Q sq | K R to K B sq | 33. K to R sq | Kt to Kt 6th (ch) |
| 17. Q Kt to K 2d | Q B to K B 4th | 34. K to Kt sq | R to K 7th |
| 18. Q to Q 4th | B takes Q B P | 35. B to K 3rd | |

And Black announced mate in four moves.

(a) The drfe wo dey stict considerably from the theory of this opening; but it is hardly to be objected to ags ed so practised a player.

(b) Instead of this, which gives his adversary an opportunity of making an advantageous sacrifice White should have taken the B with K B.

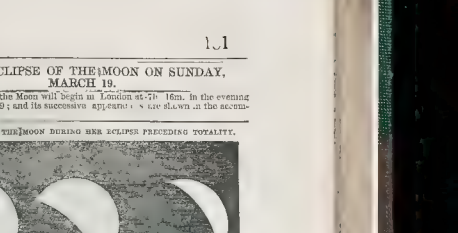
(c) Taking the Kt with K R is not to good as the (d) This move costs two Pawns, but it enables Black more speedily to develope his forces.

TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE MOON ON SUNDAY, MARCH 19.

This fine Eclipse of the Moon will begin in London at 7h. 16m. in the evening of Sunday, March 19; and its successive appearances are shown in the accompanying Diagrams.

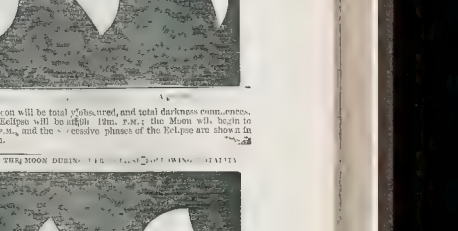
APPEARANCE OF THE MOON DURING HER ECLIPSE PRECEDING TOTALITY.



At 7h. At 8h.

At 9h. 21m. the Moon will be total throughout, and total darkness commences. The middle of the Eclipse will be at 9h. 42m. P.M.; the Moon will begin to emerge at 10h. 3m. P.M., and the successive phases of the Eclipse are shown in the annexed diagram.

APPEARANCE OF THE MOON DURING THE [illegible] OF TOTALITY.



At 10h. 9m. P.M. At 10h. 33m. P.M. At 10h. 51m. P.M.

The end of the Eclipse will be at 11h. 5m. P.M. Although the Moon will be full, she will not shine at all for a period of one hour and forty-two minutes.

At places situated west of Greenwich, the times of the several phases of the Eclipse will be earlier than at London; and at places situated east of Greenwich, the times will be later than at London by intervals in time equal to their longitudes. Thus, at Dublin the times will be 50m. earlier; in Cornwall and Devonshire, by about 20m. earlier; at Edinburgh and Liverpool, by about 12m. earlier; at Durham, by 6m. earlier; at York, by 4m. earlier; and at Dover and Norwich, the times will be about 8m. later.

J. C.

THE FRENCH PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT.

WE resume this week our Portraitures of the most remarkable of the characters whom the Revolution has called to the Administration of Public Affairs in France

CREMIEUX.

The Provisional Minister of Justice, is a celebrated Member of the French Bar, and has long stood high both for eloquence and energy in the ranks of the Opposition in the ex-Chamber of Deputies, to which he was returned by the Electoral College of Chinon, where, in 1843, he was unsuccessfully opposed by M. Pasquier, the Diplomatist.

M. Crémieux is by religion a Jew From his first entrance into public life, he has proved himself a staunch friend to the people and to political freedom. To the Guizot Cabinet he was a most galling opponent losing no opportunity to assail its iniquitous policy, and to proclaim the necessity of radical reform in every department and institution of the State. He was ever most energetic in supporting M. Duvergier d'Hauranne's annual motion for the exclusion of paid functionaries (the Ministers excepted) from the Chamber; and he advocated the broadest and most comprehensive principles of Free Trade. When the Game Law, initiated in the Chamber of Peers, came on for discussion in the Chamber of Deputies, Crémieux gave it his most vigorous opposition; but, finding that the Ministers were resolved to carry it by means of their iniquitously packed majority, he fought hard to procure the suppression of the clause which exempted Crown lands from the provisions of the measure In this aim he was successful; but the Peers restored the obnoxious paragraph. When M. Duchâtel, the late Minister of the Interior, made his memorable declaration a short time ago, to the effect that no reform would be granted, and that the Government had resolved to put down the banquets, Crémieux called out, "There is blood in this!" and he prophesied truly. On the day when the Revolution was as yet undecided, he proceeded to the Chamber of Deputies, where, rejecting the appeal made on behalf of the Count of Paris, he advocated, nay insisted upon, the formation of a Provisional Government. Thus, consistent to the last, Crémieux used all his influence to lead France to the fulfilment of her highest destinies in the establishment of a Republic.

GOUDCHAUX.

The late Minister of Finance in the Provisional Government, is a highly-respectable banker at Paris; and, though a man of much cleverness in questions appertaining to his profession, he is destitute of the energy required for so critical a period as the present. Feeling the weight of the task he had undertaken oppressive, he wrote, a few days ago, to his colleagues in the Ministry the following letter, resigning his office:—

"Gentlemen, I have to demand from you the execution of the promise which you made to me, and which alone determined me to accept, even for a very short time, the functions which I have filled up to this day The public wish called to these important functions one of the members of the Provisional Government whom his special studies pointed out to the confidence of every one. You are aware that my repugnance was overcome only by the difficult circumstances which required the presence of all the members of the Provisional Government at the Hôtel de Ville. At present, thanks to your energetic activity, order is re established, and men must resume their natural position. My Republican sentiments are known to you, and you cannot doubt my very sincere devotedness to my country. If it were proved to me that my services were indispensable to you, I should, notwithstanding my want of ability, continue in the post in which I have been placed for some days past But necessity not existing in any respect, I have to request you to restore me to liberty. I shall not the less remain at the disposal of the Provisional Government in all that it can demand from me within the narrow sphere of my faculties."

CARNOT,

The new Minister of Public Instruction (including the administration of religious affairs), was born in 1801, and is a son of the famous conventionalist of that name. He is a devoted partisan of democratic ideas, and belongs to the extreme left. He voted against the Prichard Indemnity Bill, and for M. Remusat's project of Parliamentary Reform "He would," says a writer in 1846, "support a large and complete reform which would have the effect of restoring sincerity to the Government, and all their rights to the citizens."

MARIE.—BETHMONT.—SUBERVIE.

MARIE is Minister of Public Works. He was formerly batonnier of the order of advocates of Paris; and his high standing at the bar is considered to be well earned. He for some time held a distinguished position in the Chamber, in the foremost rank of the Opposition. He has justified the hopes which his talent and character had raised, especially in the discussion on the 24th of February, in which he was the first to repudiate the proposition for a Regency, and to demonstrate the necessity of establishing a Provisional Government. Public works, we learn, have already been resumed with considerable activity in Paris. No fewer than 4000 or 5000 labourers have been employed in filling up the fosses round the Champ de Mars

BETHMONT, Minister of Commerce, is one of the people by sympathies, as well as by birth: he is an able advocate, a clever logician, a man of wit and extensive learning, all which qualities he has displayed in the French tribune; and it is expected that he will also shine as Minister of Commerce.

GENERAL SUBERVIE, Minister of War, is one of the oldest officers of the Empire who, contrary to the general conduct of Napoleon's Lieutenants, has always been a Liberal, and devoted to the principles by which the Revolution has triumphed Subervie was, at first, stated to have accepted the office of Minister of War provisionally; and it is now considered certain that he will shortly vacate that post, on account of his advanced age. His successor is not yet known. Generals Cavaignac and Lamoricière have been talked of; but the latter, it is said, has refused to accept the War Department, unless the effective force of the army be immediately increased by 100,000 men. The National, whilst it admits that General Subervie has given proofs of independence and patriotism, considers that at so advanced an age he should be relieved by the appointment of a younger General, of more energy, and more competent to accomplish the reforms demanded by the new order of things

LOUIS BLANC

Is known to the public as a writer of great ability There are few persons conversant with the affairs of France in those latter days that are not acquainted with his "History of Ten Years" of the reign of Louis Philippe. His post in the administration of affairs in the new Republic is that of President of the Commission for the Organisation of Labour, which is now sitting in what had been the Chamber of Peers, in the Palace of the Luxembourg. From this body have emanated the decrees for shortening the hours of labour, increasing the wages of workmen, &c., which have created such dismay amongst that large class of the community who hold the opinion that masters and workmen should be left free to make their engagements on whatever terms they may deem best

LOUIS BLANC, PRESIDENT OF THE OPERATIVES' COMMISSION. GARNIER PAGES, MINISTER OF FINANCE. ALMAND MARRAST, MAYOR OF PARIS.

GARNIER PAGES,

Who at first was appointed Mayor of Paris by the Provisional Government. M Garnier Pagès, from his first appearance in the political arena, has well sustained the reputation of his family name for great ability His late brother was one of the most distinguished among the political characters of his time The subject of the present notice sat in the late Chamber for Versenil, to the electors of which place he was introduced by M. Dupont (de l'Eure), the present President of the Provisional Government. From his first outset in public life, he declared himself a staunch adherent to Republican principles, which he advocated on all possible occasions. In the Chamber he was favourably known by his able speeches on questions of finance, political economy, and railways.

ARMAND MARRAST,

Who was, on the formation of the new Government nominated one of its Secretaries, has long been known as the principal Editor of the National. He is of diminutive stature, and very thin, of a light, graceful figure, and a pale, pensive countenance, and his age borders on forty. He married, some years ago, an English lady—the daughter of M. Berli Ambrosse, the author His talents are of the highest order, and the vigour of his style is appreciated by every one who is accustomed to peruse the leaders in the National. A stern and unflinching Republican, he has suffered prosecution, persecution, and exile, on account of his opinions, during the sway of Louis Philippe He has just been appointed Mayor of Paris.

"BEHIND THE BARRICADE."

DRAWN BY GAVARNI

This Engraving may be considered as a companion to the Illustration, given upon the front page of our Journal of last week. "DEFENDERS OF THE BARRICADE." Both Pictures are rife with the vigour of Gavarni's characteristic pencil; and they present vivid portraits of the classes by whom "the Great Revolution" has been achieved

The Barricade is formed of overturned omnibuses, &c.; upon its summit, a workman is planting the new standard some of the men are firing, another handing up a musket, and others loading; whilst, also, behind this novel "wooden wall," are women attending a wounded National Guard.

The attack and defence of a Barricade, "the great act of the drama," is thus pictured in the Reforme:—

"A majestic barricade was erected at the corner of the Rue de Valois, which it intercepted, as well as the Rue St. Honoré. On the other side of the Place du Palais Royal, a mass of citizens grouped themselves, and were soon joined by the men who were not able to obtain the muskets of the company of the 14th. Some shots were discharged, as if to manifest the first agitation of the anger of the people. To these shots the guard replied, and soon from both sides of the place, and on the side of the soldiers, a terrible fusillade was engaged. Here many brave citizens fell whose admirable courage was worthy of a better lot. During two hours the combat continued with the warmth and vivacity of a siege and an assault. To state the episodes of this feat of arms is a thing which we will not undertake at this moment, for ten journals would not suffice to record what was accomplished during two hours. Here were children, with shirts already bloody, who seemed to demand new wounds; there were National Guards alone, or accompanied by citizens in blouses or in vests, who remained bravely in the midst of the place, and fired without retreating, under the shower of balls which poured on them."

BEHIND THE BARRICADE.—DRAWN BY GAVARNI.

FUNERAL OF THE VICTIMS OF THE REVOLUTION.

IN our Journal of last week we briefly described the spectacle of the funeral honours decreed by the Republic to the victims of the conflict that has destroyed the dynasty of the Bourbons. We are now enabled to present our readers with the accompanying Engraving of the arrival of the procession at the Column of July. The whole ceremony has been ably described by a Correspondent of the Times, and as his communication differs in most respects from the account given last week, we shall quote it nearly entire:

It is difficult to deli ate the impression it produced; it was too brilliant for solemnity; it evinced no sorrow for the dead, for al. was excitation; there were no emblems of grief, no mourners, save the few who weep in secret for a lost; nothing met sight, and they are scarcely thought of in the absorbing excitement of the hour. The pomp, the martial music, the songs and shouts amidst which the procession passed along, leave behind the idea of a rejoicing, of the celebration of a victory. It was indeed a popular triumph; an ovation, such as we can imagine the march of a Roman in general may have been to the Capitol. In that, too, death was mingled with the pomp; and the living captives led to their doom in the train of the conq ror were probably as little thought of by the mass, whose genius was flattered by the display of a power, as the dust of those who were borne to-day to the silence of the tomb will, such magnificence. The impression is created, perhaps, by all the religious part of the ceremony having passed unseen by the populace. To the public eye, little or nothing was visible indicative of the occasion. The funeral cars were decorated with the colours that will soon wave as gilly over crowds of the living—tempora mutantur—but the same at all times, and there was no attempt to give to the scene the solemnity which is so impressive in a soldier's burial, though, as the victims died in combat, the music have been the same. All the symbols were absent, as there would any civic or political ceremonial. The chariot of the Republic, the most pre- [illegible] in the display, and the emblems of its power, the classic [illegible] were as appropriately for the inauguration of the first President as when [illegible] elected. And, lastly, the masses of people, the crowd that, from its immensity, gave such sublime of sublime to the scene, was an exulting one. From the moment the bodies were carried from the church, the procession took the character of a pub e triumph.

Along the whole line of the Boulevards, from the Madeleine to the Column of July, with a few interruptions, a tricoloured band was extended on e side, from tree to tree, or lamp to lamp; at intervals, black lozenge-shaped shields were placed, with the inscription, "Respect aux mânes des victimes de Février, 23, et 24 Février." The exterior walls and portico of the church were hung with black cloth, with decorations of tricoloured flags and funeral wreaths Over the doorway was inscribed, "Aux Citoyens morts pour la liberté." A portion of the steps to the right of the entrance was fitted up as a choir; no other preparations were visible. From ten till twelve o'clock the space around it b to fill, and the crowd was occupied in watching the troops that went past, consisting of troops, now a detachment of the National Guards, or a body of the newly enlisted citizens in their blouses, with numbered cards in their hats. All that distinguishes them of the regular army at present. A detachment of the lancers, cavalry, cuirassiers, that rode along with their band playing the "Chant du Départ" (nearly the same air as our "Death of Nelson"), caused the first sensation. As time wore on the crowd increased, and at twelve the space for some distance down the Boulevard to the right, and in front almost to the Place de la Concorde, was a compact mass of people. * * * The day was beautiful, and a brilliant sun shining on the sharp, clear outlines of the white Grecian church, on the lofty old-fashioned houses around it, so picturesque in their complete contrast with it, and glancing from the forest of bayonets bristling among hundreds of tricolored flags, above the surface of the native and closely packed crowd, of which no end was to be seen as far as the eye could reach, formed a spectacle that no city save Paris could furnish, and Paris only on such an occasion.

While the authorities were with difficulty pushing their way into the church, the choir under the portico, drawn from the three operas, and conducted by MM. Gérard and Laty, contributed its part to the proceedings. The arrival of the Provisional Government was hailed by the "Marseillaise," splendidly sung, with the accompaniment of a military band. The instrumental piece that followed, a funeral march, by Cherubini, was comparatively weak; little of it was heard above the hum of the crowd. This was succeeded by the "catechisms from Guillaume Tell, by pieces from the "Comédie" ("the people are talking"), and the "prayer" from "Mose in Egitto." The selection seemed to alternate mourning and supplication with the notes of triumph, the effect was sublime. As the ranks opened, cars on which the coffins lay, twelve in number, had been placed, were ready to proceed. As the first of the six moved onward, the "Marseillaise" was repeated; one verse was sung by the female voices alone, the next by a chorus of "Aux armes, citoyens!" at the close of which strain arose, the whole crowd uncovered and remained so till the last of the cars, which were open, showing the forms of the coffins under the black palls, had passed. The dramatic effect of this burst of the feelings of the people, its fierce invocation to battle, the stillness of death, all uniting, made the hearts of all beat quicker with excitement. The scene for that moment was grand, almost overpowering; but the pause was brief, and for the five hours the ceremony lasted it did not rise again above a spectacle

I borrow a description of the interior of the church during the solemn service —It was hung with black, and by fifteen hundred lamps. Between the choir and the nave was placed an immense sarcophagus, in the Egyptian style, on a platform with eight steps; in this were deposited the fifteen coffins; on the side of the sarcophagus was the inscription, "Morts pour la liberté." Several bodies had been placed in the vaults beneath the column during the previous night. Those claimed by the families or friends had of course been given up for private interment.

At half-past twelve o'clock the National Guards and volunteers, who had assembled on the Place Vendôme, moved forward and proceeded to take the stations assigned to them on the Boulevards and in the streets through which they lined on both sides. The volunteers were commanded by pupils of the military school of St. Cyr, officers and non-commissioned officers of the line, and appeared to have adopted the tricoloured flag—black, red, and yellow—as a distinction. Nothing could surpass the order observed by the people, and the absence of police and Municipal Guards was nowhere felt

The bands of the first six heroes of the National Guard—one next, and were followed by forty-eight companies of the Line and National Guards marching alternately. Behind these advanced a numerous body of volunteers, the association of Belgian patriots, with the national flag—black, red, and yellow—and a motley multitude, amongst whom were the letter-carriers, dressed in their uniform. Then came the female relatives of the victims, attired in deep mourning, surrounded and escorted by National Guards and pupils of the Polytechnic School. These were followed by a troop of the cavalry of the National Guard, preceding 8 in mourning carriages, containing the clergy of the Church of the Madeleine. Four hearses, each drawn by two horses, and decorated with tricoloured banners, came next, accompanied by relatives of the deceased, amongst whom was an old German, carried with deep emotion the son had fallen in the collision. Everywhere on the passage of the hearses, the people took off their hats, and many stepped forward to deposit bunches and crowns of immortelles on the coffins

After the hearses advanced the orphéonistes and the musical bands of the different theatres of Paris, and the members of the Musical society, singing in turns verses of the "Marseillaise" and the "Chant du Départ."

A fifth hearse was likewise followed by the families of the victims, and a mu rous band of Enfans de Paris, singing the "Chant du Départ." Next rode a squadron of National Guard on horseback, then marched the Provisional Government, the Ministers, and the civil authorities of the capital. The members of the Government were dressed in black, and were tricoloured sashes. Their presence excited no enthusiasm, and they were saluted with deafening cries of "Vive la République!" to which they responded by waving their hats. After them advanced the patriots condemned for political offences by the Court of Peers of Louis Philippe, whom was the celebrated Hubert, who, being ill from long confinement, was unable to walk, and had hired an open carriage to accompany his friends "These were escorted by a company of National Guards, dressed in blouses, and after them came an immense mass of citizens, of every class of society; old soldiers attired in the uniform of the Republic and Empire; deputations from the Northern, Rouen and Havre, and other railroad companies, professors of the University in their costume; clergymen, members of literary and scientific societies, the staff and pupils of the Polytechnic School, members of the National Institute, Judges of the Court of Cassation, of the Courts of Appeal, other tribunals, preceded by their maces; general officers and their aides-de-camp; the Freemasons of Paris; the directors and servants of the insurance companies; deputations from all the trades, &c.

Next marched several lines of men, bearing the faisces of the Republic, and behind them was a car, drawn by eight white horses, simply caparisoned, and bearing the symbol of the Republic, adorned with crowns of laurel and tricoloured banners. The corners of the pall were borne by representatives of the laboring classes, the National Guard, the press, the army, the Invalides, the schools, &

Behind the car, which was everywhere saluted with enthusiastic acclamations, moved another multitude of citizens, National Guards, pupils of the l [illegible] and workmen, shouting the "Chant des Girondins," and crying "Vive la L. ..publique!"

The Polish emigrants came next, carrying their national banner (red and white) mixed with the tricoloured flag; and the enthusiasm which their presence excited among the crowd cannot be described

A body of about 5000 volunteers, marching in admirable order, followed; and the procession was closed by twenty-four companies of the National Guard, a body of horse artillery without their guns, a squadron of dragoons, another of cuirassiers, and a detachment of the cavalry of the National Guard

Having seen the cortége set out from the Madeleine, I proceeded to the Place de la Bastille, its destination. The space round the column was kept clear by troops From the summit dropped two flags of black crape, one large triangular column itself, spangled with silver stars, symbolic of mourning and tears. Before the entrance to the vault beneath it were erected two immense pall [illegible] altars, each surmounted by a tripod and clump with black cloth. It was only five o'clock ere the funeral cars arrived at the column; the coffins were then borne into the vault, while the "sacred fire" was kindled on the altars. The rest of the procession then slowly filed past, and the people dispersed: all was over. Every part of the Boulevards was as crowded as that from which the procession started; all the windows and balconies, the parapets of the houses, every "buttress and coin of vantage" were occupied. The people at all points uncovered as the bodies passed; at intervals the "Marseillaise" was sung by the people joining the procession, and the military bands played. But to watch the filing past of troops, hour after hour, becomes somewhat monotonous Military parade has a great sameness of splendour. There was a manifest difference in expression between the soldiers of the army, both cavalry and infantry, and the National Guards: the former looked serious and reserved, as if under a shadow or cloud; the Nationals were in excellent spirits, though their duty at present is very severe

On no part of the route was public peace or order for a moment disturbed.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Earl of LUCAN called attention to the operation of the POOR LAW (Ireland) Act, especially to the mode of rating leases, which led to a conversation, in which the Earl of St. Germans, the Marquis of Landsdowne, and Lord [illegible] took part

Some returns were ord [illegible], on the motion of the Earl FITZWILLIAM, and then Lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

EXPULSION OF E[illegible] LANDOWNERS FROM FRANCE.—Sir G. GREY stated, [illegible]NAFORD, that he had received from the [illegible] May [illegible] rooms who had been expelled from France [illegible] as stated in the papers, and [illegible] of the losses they had sustained: those had been forwarded to the Foreign office. In order that they might be set to the Provisional Government a [illegible] Other persons who [illegible] arriving at London and other places, been consulted to leave [illegible]

TENANT RIGHT IN DERBYSHIRE.—In answer to Mr. GLADSTONE, Mr. LABOUCHERE said it was [illegible] that the coalwhippers of London had unanimously offered their services as special constables, the moment they found that attempts were made to create disturbances in the metropolis. Two thousand one hundred of them had proffered their services, which had been accepted by the Government; three hundred had been sworn in on Saturday, and the remainder were at their offices, to swear in as many more as might be required.

Sir G. GREY remarked that the attempts made at disturbance had elicited from the great body of the inhabitants of the metropolis, and of all the large towns in the country, a resolute determination to discountenance disorder, and to preserve the public peace In Manchester, between ten and eleven thousand persons, the great proportion operatives, had been sworn in specially [illegible]

Lord MORPETH postponed to Friday week the Health of Towns Bill, intimating that he hereby pledged himself to bring forward in the course of the session measures, whether he could go on with the bill on that day or not

THE INCOME TAX.—ADJOURNED D[illegible]

On the order of the day for Committee of Ways and Means

Mr. HUME said he rose for the purpose of addressing a few words relating on the question of Free Trade, and to confine their observations to the simple question of the Income Tax.

Mr. BANKS was observed, that, as it had pleased Sir Robert Peel to commence the discussion on his Free Trade measures, it could not be expected that other members would allow the matter to drop

The House resolved itself into a Committee of Ways and Means, and the adjourned debate on the resolution that the Income Tax be continued "for a time to be limited," and on Mr. Hume's amendment, that the Income Tax be continued "for one year," was resumed by Mr. M'GREGOR The hon. member said that he would take Mr. Hume's advice, and say very little about Free Trade; and he kept his word. He opposed the proposition for continuing the tax for three years, but was willing to consent to its continuance for one year.

Alderman Sidney and Mr. Sandars supported Mr. Hume's amendment; Mr. Headlam, Mr. Rice, Mr. Lennard, and Lord Drumlanrig supported the proposition of the Government.

Mr. BUCK was not prepared to give a three years' extension of the tax to the Government. When originally imposed, the House was told that it would relieve the country from its financial difficulties

Mr E B ROCHE called upon all Irish members to refuse to go into the lobby with the Swiss guards of those Ministers who were imitating the Guizot policy, and marshalling artillery and soldiery on Ireland, to put down the expression of public opinion. Lord The hon. member supported the amendment.

Mr. HENLEY said that if he had any doubt relative to the vote he should give, the speech of the honourable member would have set that doubt at rest. Looking at the present state of the country and of Europe, in refusing to give the Government the amount required for the maintenance of the national credit

Mr. MOWATT invited the House to place confidence in the Government, of whose conduct he said he was, as a Liberal, perfectly ashamed and disgusted. The trade and commerce of the country were in a state of paralysis, and the Government showed an utter want of capacity in devising measures for the relief of finances. He supported the amendment.

Mr. HUTTON felt compelled to reject the proposal made by the Government, from a conviction that their scheme was not equal to the exigency of the crisis, and by a hope that by so doing he would force them to make the income and expenditure equal, thereby putting the finances of the country in a satisfactory state. The hon. member, in showing that the reduction of duties on imports had not benefited the consumer, but went into the pockets of the foreigner, stated the various duties on articles of food and raw materials. Several bodies had been placed in the vaults beneath the column during the previous night. Those claimed by the families or friends had of course been given up for private interment.

Mr. CORDEN refused to discuss the question of Free Trade, and announced that he would not discuss it unless some measure for the re-establishment of Protection was brought regularly before the house. The hon. member insisted that we should not, while obliged to keep up the present amount of Protection, but we should be forced to increase direct taxation in order still further to reduce indirect taxation. On the score of trade and of justice to the masses of the people, he would not consent to any further reduction of the Income Tax, except by a corresponding reduction of indirect taxation. His own reason for voting for Mr Hume's amendment was to make the Income Tax equal, in order to render it a permanent tax. Referring to what had taken place in the last session, he said that the Corn Bill of 1846 was not from abroad but from within—from the votes of a House of Commons, elected by a faction, and the majority of whom did not represent the opinion of the country.

Lord J. RUSSELL said the amendment before the House was a very simple one, though it was made very complex by the variety and diversity of opinions advanced in support of it. He was the more thankfulness with which Mr. Hume had framed his amendment, that he had contrived to gain supporters from the ranks of opposite parties. It was, in fact, a motion of mere embarrassment, of distrust, and of want of confidence. Contingent on the most adverse views would go an motley minority into the lobby, and there one might say to another, "Ah, I find you vote for great reduction in our establishments; I'm glad to see that." "I, Sir!" the person addressed would reply; "on the contrary, I think the establishments are too small, and should be increased rather than reduced" A third might say to his neighbour, "Oh! so you are at length a convert to the necessity of putting an end to the Free Trade experiment." "An end to Free Trade, Sir, the gentleman so accosted would answer; "why, I am a most decided Free-trader." Such were the heterogeneous opinions by which Mr. Hume's amendment would be supported. The noble Lord declared that Free Trade measures, and said that it would be madness in Parliament to retrograde, or to do anything that would enable those interested in exciting the people to say that Parliament will not carry out the Income Tax. No living man could have foreseen what had taken place in a neighbouring country. No one could have over-rated the strength of the portion of the noble Prince's people, as well as those wherein he declared his resolution to preserve our colonies entire, and uphold our national defences, were vehemently and enthusiastically cheered by the great majority of the House.]

Mr. Wakley, Colonel Sibthorp [illegible]son, and Mr. F arson supported the amendment

Mr. MUNTZ also supported it, and declared that, if the Irish members assisted the Minister in forcing on the people of England a tax from which Ireland was to be exempt, he would assist, by all the means in his power, in extending this and all other English taxes to Ireland

The committee divided—

| | |
|---|---|
| For the original resolution | .. .. |
| For the amendment | .. .. |
| Majority for the Government .. | 22. |

The Chairman [illegible] ported progress, and obtained leave to sit again. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Audit of Railway Accounts Bill passed through Committee, on the motion of Lord MONTEAGLE

The Passengers Bill was read a second time.

Their Lordships adjourned to Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

HARWICH ELECTION PETITION.—The Chairman of the Harwich Election Committee reported that the election of Mr. J. Attwood was void, and that he was guilty of bribery by his agent. The report charged the borough with bribery and corruption

Mr. WOOD presented a petition complaining of the interference of the M [illegible] of Exeter in the borough of Stamford, and gave notice of a motion [illegible] subject

RIOTOUS DISTURBANCES.—To a question from Sir W. CLAY, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL explained the nature of the law with respect to the claims of persons whose windows have been broken by disturbers of the peace. From the opinion of the learned gentleman, it would appear that those persons who have suffered by the late disturbances are without remedy for compensation.

In reply to Mr. HUME, Lord PALMERSTON said he would have no objection to furnish an account of the additional expenses caused by our late interference at Athens

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.—Mr. HINDLEY inquired if the report was true that a treaty offensive and defensive had been concluded with Prussia?—Lord PALMERSTON replied that it was not true. The Prussian Government had informed the British Government that they were determined to pursue the same policy of non-interference in the affairs of France as ourselves, and forbidden from saying or doing anything that could be construed into an indication of hostile intention.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, L. answer to a question, said that he was obliged to postpone the present session, the measure he had in preparation with the object of obtaining correct agricultural statistics. The expense would be between thirty and forty thousand pounds a year; and, as the information would be valuable in the country at large, the expense of collecting it should be paid out of the Consolidated Fund. But the Chancellor of the Exchequer objected, in the present state of finances, to sanction even this expenditure, and, therefore, he (Mr. Labouchere) was obliged to postpone his measure for a time

ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Mr. EWART moved for leave to bring in a bill for the total abolition of the punishment of death

Mr. HUME seconded the motion.

Sir GEORGE GREY said he would not consent to give up the only safeguard against the commission of the worst crimes, murder. If the hon. member had contented himself with asking for a modification of the criminal code, the Government might have respected his efforts But he has asked for the total abolition of the punishment of death, which was too much. The Irish Judges, with the exception of two, all the Scotch Judges, and a majority of the English Judges, were against the total abolition of capital punishment

Sir C. BURRELL, Sir B. Inglis, Mr. Pease, Mr. Wyld, Mr. Drummond, and Mr. Napier opposed the motion; Mr. Leonard, Alderman Sidney, Lord Nugent, Mr Hume, Mr. Bright, Mr. George Thompson, Mr. Brotherton, and Mr Muntz supported it

Mr H Osborne, Mr. Roupell, and Mr. F. O'Connor, though favourable to the abolition of the punishment of death, and unwilling to oppose the introduction of the bill, were not prepared to abolish it in the case of wilful and deliberate murder

The House divided

| | |
|---|---|
| For the motion .. .. | .. .. 90 |
| Against it .. .. | .. .. 122 |
| Majority against the motion .. | .. .. 32 |

Sir H. VERNEY moved an instruction to the Select Committee on the Navy, Army, and Ordnance estimates, that the employment of discharged sailors and soldiers in subordinate offices of the public departments would be advisable.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER recommended the withdrawal of the motion, leaving to the committee the discretion of inquiring into the subject

The motion was withdrawn

Mr. LAMB LAWS (SCOTLAND) Leave was given to Mr. F MACKENZIE to bring in a bill to enable persons qualified to kill hares in Scotland to do so without game

Mr. HUME moved an address to the CROWN, praying her Majesty, in all future pensions to public offices, to compel the parties to take them subject to [illegible]ever diminution of salaries Parliament may think fit to make—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER objected to an address to the CROWN, but had no objection to the principle of the motion, which the Government would carry out in all possible cases.—Mr. LABOUCHERE and Lord PALMERSTON likewise assented to the spirit of the motion, though they could not consent to the address to her Majesty.—Mr. HUME withdrew the motion, with the intention of bringing it forward on Tuesday next, when he hoped the Prime Minister would be in his place to give him a more distinct pledge on the subject

On the motion for the Speaker leaving the chair for the borough of Harwich, Mr. BLACKSTONE brought the report of the Harwich Election Committee under the consideration of the House, which disclosed a shocking state of bribery and corruption. The hon. member moved, as an amendment, that the writ be not issued for Harwich before the 10th of April, by which time the minutes of evidence would be in the hands of Members.—Sir GEORGE GREY suggested the postponement of the writ for the next Tuesday, writ as the more regular course.—Mr. BAGGE withdrew his motion.

The Queen's Prison Bill passed through committee.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House assembled at noon, and sat till six o'clock.

HARWICH ELECTION.—Mr. BAGGE renewed his motion for the issuing of a new writ for the borough of Harwich. Mr. BLACKSTONE moved, as an amendment, that the issuing of the writ be suspended until after the evidence taken before the Harwich Election Committee should be printed.—After an animated discussion, Sir JAMES GRAHAM moved the adjournment of the debate.—The motion for adjournment was withdrawn; and, on the suggestion of Lord PALMERSTON, the original motion and amendment were withdrawn; and a motion was carried to the effect that the evidence be printed, and that, in the meantime, no motion should be made for the issuing of a new writ for Harwich [illegible]ont special notice.

[illegible]ION RECOGNIZANCES.—Mr. WALPOLE moved the second reading of the [illegible] Recognizances Bill, which was to remedy the informality of [illegible]ices of certain election petitions which the Examiner of Recognizances [illegible]nerously signed without having examined.—Mr. SPOONER moved, as an amendment, that the orders referring to the petitions presented against the return of Members to this House for the Boroughs of Bodmin, Cheltenham, Leicester, Walsall, the city of Dublin, and the county of Longford, to the General Committees of Elections, which petitions are manifestly referred to in the said bill, be discharged, and that no further proceedings be taken on the said petitions. The Hon. Member objected to the bill as an ex post facto law.—Sir G. GREY, as a private member, supported the second reading of the bill, and especially objected to the amendment, as a resolution that would overrule the Act of Parliament.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL supported the bill. Mr. LAW and Mr. BERNARD opposed it.—Sir R. INGLIS objected to both the bill and the amendment. He would have the law remain as it is, at least until the end of the session.—Mr. ANSTEY spoke in favour of the amendment.—The House divided on the question, that all the words after "that" in the original question be omitted.—

| | |
|---|---|
| Ayes .. .. | .. .. 21 |
| Noes .. .. | .. .. 104 |
| Majority .. .. | .. .. —2 |

House divided on the question that Mr. Spooner's words be inserted.—

| | |
|---|---|
| Ayes .. .. | .. .. 78 |
| Noes .. .. | .. .. 165 |
| Majority against this motion .. | .. .. —87 |

The only word, therefore, remaining of the main question, was the word "that;" and the hour of six having arrived, the House stood adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Lord CAMPBELL laid on the table a bill for establishing a court of appeal in criminal cases

PASSENGERS BILL.—This bill passed through Committee, and was ordered to be reported Adjourned

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY,

MEDICAL RELIEF.—Lord ASHLEY moved the adoption of resolutions founded upon the evidence taken before the Medical Relief Committee of 1844, with the view of providing medical aid for poor women in labour at the cost of the union, should they apply for it. The resolutions suggested certain modifications in the present system of medical poor relief. The resolutions led to a somewhat lengthy discussion, in the course of which Mr. C. BULLER, the President, and Lord EBRINGTON, the Secretary of the Poor Law Board, opposed the first and principal resolution, the former moving "the previous question" as an amendment. On a division the resolution was lost by a majority of 50 to 37. The discussion occupied the greater part of the evening, and at its close, the House adjourned

THE FRENCH EMBASSY.—His Excellency the Count de Jarnac is at length relieved from the duties as French Minister at this Court. On Friday last M Cottu, whose name will be familiar to the readers of the memoirs of the Duchesse d'Abrantes, as one of the attachés to the former Embassy, arrived at Hertford House from Paris, charged with instructions from the Provisional Government to receive from Count de Jarnac the archives and seals of the Embassy. His Excellency, having delivered over the seals, took his final departure from Hertford House, and is now residing in London until he has been staying during the past fortnight) at the house of his noble brother-in-law, Lord Lyons, in Grosvenor-square. M. Cottu is not accredited as Minister at this Court, although charged for the present with the superintendence of the affairs of the Embassy. As a proof of the economy practised by the Provisional Government, M. Cottu, whose duties, we may state M. Cottu has also taken the duties of his office for the small stipend of £400 per annum, a yearly cost of the late Embassy being, something between £14,000 and £20. M Cottu, when attached to the Embassy under the late high-salaried ambassador, the Comte de St. Aulaire, was one of the unpaid officers. He left England some time since to undertake the duties of Secretary to the French Embassy at Brussels, at other ties to which, however, he had not been appointed up to the date of the late Revolution. The Count de Bearn and M. de Rehenaly have resigned their posts in the Embassy. The Count Louis de Noailles was also understood to have done so some days since, but, although the Count left Hertford House for a short period, he has since returned, and is at present residing there.

VILLA AT EAST SHEEN, NEAR RICHMOND.

THIS commodious Villa has been hospitably placed at the disposal of part of the ex-Royal Family of France, by its proprietor, Joshua Bates, Esq., father-in-law of his Excellency M. Van de Weyer, the Belgian Ambassador. The house was offered by Mr. Bates to the Duke of Nemours, as a retreat, where he could receive the other members of the Royal Family as they should arrive, and where they might remain until it was determined what course they should pursue. The Duke of Nemours and his illustrious sister-in-law, the Duchess of Montpensier, first arrived here, and were joined by the Duchess of Nemours and the Duke of Montpensier.

The Villa was formerly the [illegible] Hope, Esq., [illegible]

At his death the property was purchased by the Marquis of Aylesbury, from whom the late Earl Grey rented it, and resided there while he was Prime Minister. In 1841, the property was purchased of Lord Aylesbury by Mr. Bates, the present owner. The house is large, which circumstance, coupled with its proximity to the metropolis, led to its being chosen in preference to similar [illegible] as a means of testifying the respect and sympathy for Louis Philippe and his family. This will be perfectly understood, when it is considered that, while King of France, Louis Philippe was remarkable for his courtesy to strangers; and there are few people of station who have visited Paris who have not been admitted to his "receptions."

The Duke and Duchess of Montpensier, we should add, have left Sheen for certain [illegible]

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE first Concert was given for the season on Monday night, at the Hanover-square Rooms, and the attendance proved that the deserved popularity of these intellectual entertainments is still maintained in full force.

Monday's programme comprised a Symphony in B minor, by Hesse, an organist of Breslau, now Chapel Master at Breslau. The symphony has been for some time in the Philharmonic library, and its performance was suggested, we presume, in obedience to the cry for novelty. It is of little avail to enter into an analysis of a work which, in all probability, will never be heard again; let it suffice that the movements were Haydnish in idea and Spohrish in treatment, exhibiting nothing novel in forms, but contrived and wrought according to the accepted canons with simplicity, and here and there a touch of elegance, especially in the slow movement. Its reception proved that as to effect it was a complete failure; and when the colossal conceptions of Beethoven were heard in his magnificent Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, played with taste, feeling, and intelligence by Mrs. Anderson, the auditory were awakened into enthusiasm, as if from a sleep.

In the second part, we had the restoration of Mendelssohn's second symphony in A, which the lamented composer intended to have revised in the two latter movements. Now that Mendelssohn has ceased to exist, we feel that already there are converts to his undying fame. Living, we should have heard this symphony severely canvassed by the Perruques—those who call innovations freaks, and changes absurdities; but dead, we hear of an opposite criticism, and the genius is awarded to the past which was coldly refused to the present.

Sainton's violin concertino began well; the opening movement was succeeded by a commonplace slow one, and wound up with downright rubbish of which the great player seemed so conscious, that he lost his head. How such a great and conscientious violinist, like Sainton, can persist in playing his own compositions, is to us inconceivable. His concertino was a mistake that his powerful executive powers could not retrieve.

Beethoven's "Men of Prometheus" overture closed a Concert of great attraction despite of its contradictories. The vocal gleanings were an immensely difficult scena from Spohr's "Azor and Zemira," quite beyond the vocal attributes of that interesting singer, Miss A. Williams, who, by a similar error, was placed beyond her powers in the "Sonnambula" duo with Alboni. The great contralto gave Cherubini's air from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," "Voi che sapete," with such delicious sweetness and simplicity as to command an encore; and, in Rossini's celebrated "Pensa all' patria," from the "Italiana in Algeri," narrowly escaped a similar compliment, for her marvellous compass of voice and flexibility.

The next Concert will be on the 27th of March. An excellent alteration has been made in favor of subscribers by having their places reserved for them. We may also notice that Sainton is the first violin in place of poor Tom Cooke, of facetious memory; and that Mr. George Budd, the Secretary of the Western Madrigal Society, a well-known and respected amateur, is now the Secretary to the Society

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

Mendelssohn's "Paul" was performed on Wednesday night at Exeter Hall; Mr. Perry, the lists leader, acting as conductor, in place of Mr. Surman. The solo parts were sustained by Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Mr. Lockey, Mr. A. Novello, and Mr. H. Phillips, who have been long habituated to this music, and were, therefore, quite at home in their respective parts. We cannot praise the general execution of the chorus in steadiness and the band in precision leaving almost everything to be desired. This Society, which began under such bright auspices, and has been a source of such real pleasure to the amateur, is now under a cloud from internal divisions, which have arisen from a praiseworthy desire to improve the performances. Mr. Surman, the late conductor, we are free to confess, was certainly an obstacle to such improvement; but in his dismissal consideration ought to have been paid to the really great services he has rendered in the early days of the organization of the society. It was scarcely just to fasten upon him in his natural position as a music trader "serious and grave charges," from which a Committee of seceders, now styling themselves the London Sacred Harmonic Society, has just exonerated him. We hope there will be room for both Societies; but one of the first conditions of effective execution must be the presence of a conductor of great professional experience and tact, and of moral weight with the orchestra, even when composed chiefly of amateurs, who ought not to be admitted unless they submit to the strongest rules for discipline and rehearsal. We perceive that the Sacred Harmonic Society has announced for the 29th Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Handel's "Dettingen Te Deum." The London Sacred Harmonic Society has elected the Rev. G. Roberts President, and the Rev. Dr. Worthington Vice-President; and we trust that the accession of such men of peace may put an end to virulent controversy.

MR. LUCAS'S MUSICAL EVENINGS.—On Wednesday night these classical meetings commenced for the season at Mr Lucas's residence in Berner's street. This Professor, who is the conductor of the Royal Academy Concerts, one of the Directors of the Philharmonic Society, and violoncello performer next to Lindley in the Royal Italian Opera band, is much respected in the musical circles. His musical evenings for the performance of Chamber Music attract a numerous [illegible] of full artistic amateurs. Wednesday's scheme comprised Spohr's Quartet in B flat from Op. 74, Mozart's Seventh Quartet in D, Mendelssohn's duo for Piano and Violoncello, and Beethoven's Quartet in C, Op. 18. Sainton, Bagwell, Hill, and Lucas were the exponents of the Quartuors, and Sterndale Bennett and Lucas of the Duet.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.—On Friday night, the thirteenth of the third concert for the ensuing week took place at the Hanover-square Rooms, conducted by Mr. Lucas. A new symphony in F, composed by Mr. Henry Leslie, the Hon. Secretary of the Society, and an accomplished amateur who has already earned distinction as a composer, was performed. We shall report progress next week. At the second concert, the scheme comprised Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, Lithe's "Solabella" overture, Locke's Music in "Macbeth," Beethoven's Symphony in E No 8, and adaptations of themes from Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable" and Rossini's "Siege of Corinth" were performed.

THE BEETHOVEN QUARTETT SOCIETY.—On Monday next the Beethoven Quartett Society will hold its first meeting in Hanley street, under the direction of M. Rousselot, the composer and violoncellist. Molique, the celebrated violinist and composer, the Chapel Master of the King of Wurtemburg, has expressly visited this country to play in the quartetts. Sainton will alternate in the first and second violins with Molique, Hill being the viola, and Rousselot the violoncello. It is expected that Sivori will arrive in time from the United States to take a part in these fine performances.

MR. LINDSAY SLOPER.—The third soirée of pianoforte music was given by this accomplished pianist on Thursday night at Willis's Rooms.

ANCIENT CONCERTS.—On Monday morning the rehearsal for the first concert, on Wednesday next, will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S

The past week's performances at Her Majesty's Theatre have been more than usually brilliant; in fact, we never remember any ante-Easter entertainments at this establishment given in such excellent style, or attended with such signal success. Before passing to the production of "Attila," which was the event of the week, we cannot forbear noticing the admirable manner in which the "Barbiere" was given on Saturday. Often as we have seen Rossini's delightful chef-d'œuvre, we never relished its drollery, or delighted in its rich and varied melodies and admirable instrumentation, more than on that evening.

The production of "Attila," however, deserves our greatest attention. This is one of Verdi's more recent operas, and met, in Italy, with the success the works of this, almost the only composer of eminence left to that land of music, can scarcely command. The work itself possesses the beauties and defects peculiar to Verdi—a certain grandeur of conception and power of dramatic effect is even more striking here than in many other of the maestro's compositions. There is a warmth, spirit, and energy in the music which carries away the listener, which excites and inspires; at the same time, there is a want of softness and repose, which is, in this opera, more than usually perceptible. The too frequent use of the drums and the brass instruments is the great fault we have to find with this work

We now come to the plot of the opera.

The scene is placed principally at Aquileja, a Roman colony on the Adriatic, which from its grandeur was honoured by the ancients with the appellation of "Roma Secunda." Attila, having overcome and devastated this great city amidst his rejoicings after the event is surprised by the appearance of a band of Aquileian virgins, led by Odabella, daughter of the Lord of Aquileja, who has been killed in the battle; she defies the conqueror, who, touched by her beauty and her courage, asks what boon he can confer on her; she replies "A sword," and he gives his own. The object of Odabella is to enact towards Attila—the scourge of her country—the part of Judith towards Holofernes, and avenge her father and her countrymen; but when the moment of execution comes she hesitates, and remains in the barbarian camp—the object of Attila's admiration. When her lover, Foresto, the chief of the remaining Aquileians, and Ezio, the leader of the defeated Romans, re-appear—the one disguised, the other feigning treachery to his imperial master—when they compass the means of poisoning Attila at a feast, and of assailing his camp in the confusion of the hour, Odabella, at the very moment of the catastrophe, is touched with pity, and saves the life of the tyrant of her country. Attila now insists on sharing his throne with Odabella; but hardly are the nuptial rites celebrated than Foresto finds means of penetrating once more into the camp, and upbraids Odabella with her perfidy and her forgetfulness of all her vows and duties. At the thoughts of the wrong of her lover, her father, and her country, her heart is steeled to the execution of her first resolve of vengeance, and she stabs Attila to the heart

Gardoni sings charmingly the music allotted to Foresto—his first aria and duet with Cruvelli especially. His voice seems to have gained wonderfully in fulness and power, while it has lost nothing of its sweetness and peculiar charm. In a dramatic point of view, the part is not very striking, except in the last quartet which precedes the death of Attila, in which he and all seemed inspired by the situation.

Cuzzani gives in this opera a far more favourable specimen of his powers than he has yet done. He sings with far more strength, and with the excellent musical taste and skill we had before discovered in him; and he likewise acts the part of the Roman General with great spirit.

Mdlle. Cruvelli, however, made the great hit of the evening. She is incomparably greater in the part of Odabella than in any other in which we have seen her. This is evidently the character of part in which she excels. In her [illegible] rage and movements, her impassioned gestures, and almost inspired energy, she enacts the proud Amazon to perfection. Her first warlike air, "Donne Italiche," created a tumult of enthusiasm. At the conclusion of the opera, she was greeted by unanimous cheering. The scenery, which we have not space to criticise in detail, is excellent; on the whole, it is impossible for an opera to be better got up, or performed with more ensemble and spirit, on the part of orchestra, chorus, singers, and all engaged; and we must not conclude without a well deserved compliment to Mr. Balfe, to whom, doubtless, much of this perfection is owing

A grand night will be given on Thursday next, for the benefit of the distressed artistes of the metropolis. It is given with the sanction of her gracious Majesty Amongst the patrons are the Queen Dowager, and many of the most illustrious personages of the kingdom.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Rossini's "Tancredi" has been given three times, and will be repeated this evening (Saturday). On Tuesday night the house was fully and fashionably attended, and the opera was received with the greatest enthusiasm, Alboni being rapturously encored in "Di tanti palpiti," and also with Madame Persiani in the slow movement of the duo "Lasciami," in the second act. Although between the first and third performances of Tancredi by Alboni there has been an immense improvement, we still think that the part is not adapted for her powers Alboni, with one of the most lovely and sympathetic voices ever given to an artiste, essentially excels in passages of pathos. She can play with infinite vivacity and spirit half-comic half-serious characters; but when she has to depict the grand and heroic—when she has to develop the varied phases of impassioned and lofty feeling, Alboni fails. We have seen this result in Paris, and we have now had it confirmed in London. Every artiste has her speciality, and histrionic genius is not that possessed by Alboni: she is naturally indolent on the stage, and for a vocalist of her extraordinary powers, we never witnessed so little disposition for exertion if she can possibly avoid it. In the duos and concerted pieces she scarcely sings at all: it is only when she arrives at her solo that she is roused, and then startles her hearers by her delicious, pleasing, and perfect intonation, her overwhelming vocal volubility, and her showers of graces.

It must also be recollected that the music of Tancredi lies in the weakest portion of Alboni's register, namely the medium notes; and since the first night "Di tanti palpiti" has been transposed for her, great increase of brilliancy and power being thus manifested

The great triumph of Madame Persiani in the part of Amenaide has been the universal subject of admiration. In the three evenings that she has sung, her marvellous vocalisation and artistical feeling have provoked unbounded signs of [illegible] The rapturous expression of joy that she poured forth in the prison scene, [illegible] and dazzling feats of execution, has been nightly received with [illegible] and the accomplished performers in the orchestra, who are capable of [illegible] her accomplished confrères, are scarcely able to restrain the [illegible] in the accompaniments

Tamburini, Salvi, and Lavia are expected to arrive from St. Petersburgh this [illegible] and Rovere, the eminent buffo-comico, will be here from Barcelona early next week Corruli Setti, the new baritone, is already in town At the end of this month the incomparable Grisi, Madame Ronconi, and Mdlle Corbari, Mario, Tagliafico, and Ronconi will arrive from Paris Mdlle Steffanoni and Marini, are on their way from Florence. Madame Pauline Garcia Viardot, the gifted sister of the lamented Malibran, has reached Paris, after her most triumphant season in Berlin, and will be here in April

ADELPHI.

On Tuesday night, this theatre was opened for operatic purposes, under the musical direction of Mr. Tully, with Mr Fitzball's English version of Donizetti's "Furia del Reggimento," sustained by Miss Poole, Mr. Donald King, [illegible] rell, Mr. S. Jones, Mr. Horncastle, &c. The performance was received with the [illegible] demonstrations of satisfaction. Miss Poole was in good voice, and [illegible] and acted her popular character of Marie with the greatest spirit and intelligence. Bartoni succeeded H. Phillips as Sergeant Sulpice, and played with [illegible] heartiness. Mrs Leman Rede was the Countess The chorusses and band were [illegible] on the whole the music effective. After the opera, an extravaganza, [illegible] Cromulens, or the Riches Recovered," followed, and the farce [illegible] were performed; besides a divertissement, in which Mdlle Louise Blanch and Mr. Smith danced a pas de deux The management has engaged a very great comedian, Mr. Oxberry and Mr. Robert Romer, for [illegible] so that a hearty laugh will not be wanting, after the musical assault on the

OLYMPIC.

To judge from the exhibition of Monday evening, the "legitimate" spirit at the Olympic appears to be rapidly approaching its decline; for never was anything so disconcerted as the manner in which "The Merchant of Venice" was attempted to be performed for the début of Mr. Brooke in Shylock.

Antonio is but insignificant, and Salerio and Solanio both broke down, and then endeavoured to exculpate themselves by explanations to the audience that rendered the state of affairs still more deplorable. Of Shylock we shall say nothing, we must have another opportunity of witnessing the performance before we offer a shade of an opinion respecting it.

Some amends were, however, made to the patrons of the theatre on Wednesday evening, when Mr. Brooke appeared as Master Walter, in Mr. Knowles's play of "The Hunchback." To our thinking, it is his best performance: it was quiet, dignified, and impressive. There was none of the wearying rant that has, with the exception of Othello, marred all his previous impersonations, but the part was played throughout in a manly, sensible style, that enlisted the sympathies of the audience. It is not going too far to say that we never saw the character better acted, and especially throughout the fifth act.

Some sensation was created by the début of a Miss E. M. Durot, as Julia, who made a most favourable impression, and is likely to take a very good position. She has an elegant figure, a clear effective voice, fine eyes, and a most expressive face, although not in its first youth; and the announcement in the bill, that she was "of great provincial celebrity," could readily be believed. Indeed, seeing how really clever she is, and what a perfect mistress of stage business, the only wonder is that she has never been in London before. Her scene with Clifford, in the fourth act, was in the highest style of impressive acting; and, but for an unpleasant catching in of her breath after her sentences, would have offered nothing to find fault with. She was, during the progress of the play, [illegible] with thunders of applause, some of which was as vehement as, if not greater than, that awarded to Mr. Brooke. We have rarely seen a more satisfactory first appearance of a provincial actress; and was fully entitled to all the approbation she elicited. Miss Kate Howard, who played Helen, contrived to make the character as coarse as possible. The other performers call for no remark in any way. At the conclusion, when Miss Durot appeared, with Mr. [illegible] before the curtain, she was rewarded with a shower of bouquets. We should like to see her in Lady Macbeth.

PRINCESS'S

A Mrs Barrett, "from the United states," appeared at this house on Tuesday evening, as Lady Teazle, in the "School for Scandal," and has added another name to the list of unattractive mediocrity of talent which the manager of this theatre has of late been pleased to bring before the public, in the absence of "stars"

Following upon the remarks we have made above, in speaking of the Olympic, it may be conceived, when we find fault with the Princess' management, that we are writing in a splenetic and fault-finding humour. But such is not the case; it is so pleasant to praise, conscientiously, where praise is due, that only going out of his way when called upon to deprecate the style of performances at this or that theatre. But, on the "off-nights," the hopes of the management of the Princess's appear to be so rapidly sinking, that every straw is caught at thought capable of sustaining them in ever so little a degree

Miscrable vaudevilles—one of which, something about Michaelmas, and trans lated from the French, "C'est Michaelmas qui paie," was condemned last week; and another, called "Mammon and Gammon," which ought to have been on Tuesday are the chief novelties; or, if other entertainments are given, unknown performers are allowed to try experiments upon the judgment of the public

The lady who came out on Tuesday evening is not calculated to take any very great position. She has evidently been used to the stage, and read the part sensibly and correctly; but her appearance is somewhat against her, lacking the grace and fashionable air required for Lady Teazle She has, however, a most common share of liveliness, and we think, would succeed far better in lighter characters, than in the difficult one she chose for her début. Mr. Compton was Sir Peter. He cannot play anything badly! We have seen him in greater servitude, Sir Visling and Mr. Oxberry was Sir Oliver—what mature for Charles and Joseph Surface. We should add that the supporting cast which greeted the new actress was unusually good, and appeared to be cordial.

MARYLEBONE

It would seem that the standard drama, unaided by other sources of attraction, is not in itself sufficient to fill the well-conducted house, Sadler's Wells appearing to be the only theatre that has contrived to stand alone with this object. Mrs. Warner has brought out a fairy extravaganza, written by Mr. Charles Selby, called "The Enchanted Tower, or the Adventures of Prince Headstrong and the Princess Bloomingbell," and being written in the ultra-comical vein, which characterises Mr. Selby's extravaganzas, and excellently well put upon the stage, is tolerably successful

We do not know any story on which it is founded: the plot partakes of the nature of a pantomime opening, and appears to be a concoction from the "Arabian Nights," the "Countess d'Aulnis," "Mother Bunch," and other fairy and supernatural repertoires; there being, of course, a Prince and Princess in love with each other, a King, a chamberlain, and a tribe of physicians, most liberal spirits, and other accessories, whose adventures, with the aid of nice costumes and really beautiful scenery, are received with great relish

The piece is capitally played. We have before had occasion to speak most favorably of clever, quaint little Miss Saunders, and this young lady proved herself as great an acquisition to a burlesque troupe as she is to a legitimate one. Miss Huddart, Miss Parker, and Mr. Webb also deserve a word of praise

Mr Sterling Coyne has a farce in preparation at the ADELPHI, in which the pantomimists, M. Paul Legrand, is to appear as a deaf and dumb person. We shall then have an opportunity of forming a better opinion of his acting than in Perrot.

Mr. Dance has a new piece, to embrace all the company, in rehearsal at the LYCEUM: so also has Mr Buckstone

A new and splendid ballet, arranged by Mr. Benjamin Bates, is to be brought out on Monday at the SURREY.

Nothing is settled about the SURREY, which has arrived at the lowest state of vacillating management. Mr. Phelps and Mrs. Warner are each spoken of as likely to become the lessees

THE NORTH AMERICAN MAILS.—The following important notice as to the days of sailing of the mail steam packets between Liverpool and North America was issued by the Post-office on Tuesday at the General Post-office, St. Martin's-le-Grand:—"During the ensuing summer mails will be transmitted between Liverpool and North America once a week by the British Contract Mail Steam packets, which will leave Liverpool for Boston and New York alternately on every Saturday, and will be despatched from Boston and New York alternately, on their return voyage, every Wednesday. This weekly service will commence with the 8th day of April, and with the homeward packets in May, and will continue until the end of November; after which time and during the following four months mails will be conveyed to Boston and New York only once a fortnight instead of weekly. The following table will show the dates upon which the first six packets will be despatched during the summer both to and from North America, and will form a guide for the remainder of the year:—The [illegible] leave Liverpool for Boston on Saturday the 8th of April, Saturday the 22nd, and Saturday the 6th of May; for New York, on Saturday the 15th of April, Saturday the 29th of April, and Saturday the 13th of May. The packets will leave Boston for Liverpool on Wednesday the 5th of April, Wednesday the 3d of May, and Wednesday the 17th of May; New York for Liverpool, on Wednesday the 19th of April, Wednesday the 10th of May, and Wednesday the 24th of May. The branch packet for Newfoundland will be despatched from Halifax on the arrival at the latter port of the homeward packet from Boston; and the branch packet for Bermuda will be despatched on the arrival at Halifax of the outward packet from Boston." The next mails for British North America and the United States will be made up on the evening of the 24th instant, to be forwarded by the Britannia steamer out Liverpool, Halifax, and New York. Next packet due, the Britannia steamer, on the 26th inst., at Boston.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

MR. CHARLES COWAN.

Mr. Charles Cowan, M.P. for Edinburgh, is one of the many members of the present Parliament who belong to the manufacturing class of the community. The hon. gentleman is the eldest son of Mr. Alexander Cowan, merchant, of Edinburgh, and is a large paper-manufacturer in partnership with his father.

He was first returned to Parliament at the general election, in autumn last, when he succeeded in throwing out Mr. Macaulay, the Paymaster-General of the Forces, but, having been engaged at the time in the performance of some Government contracts, his election became void, and he was unable to take his seat in the House of Commons immediately on the assembling of Parliament, in November last. He, however, freed himself of that source of disqualification, and, having again presented himself to the electors of his native city, was a second time elected their representative.

Notwithstanding his manufacturing engagements, Mr. Cowan has found time to devote himself to literary pursuits, and matters connected with the administration of the affairs of the Church of Scotland. He is the author of the article on the manufacture of paper in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and also of some pamphlets. He was an Elder of the Established Scotch Church from 1830 to 1843, when he took part in the great Secession, and is at the present time an acting Elder of the Free Church. In his mercantile capacity he is a member of the Merchants' Company of Edinburgh, and one of the Directors of the Chamber of Commerce of that city.

In politics Mr. Cowan is a Liberal; he has taken an active part in the proceedings of the National Anti-Excise Association, being desirous to strike the fetters of the Excise from all useful trades and manufactures. He has declared himself opposed to the Bank Restriction Act of 1844, and a supporter of the Scotch banking system. He is also adverse to the endowment of the Roman Catholic clergy by the State.

Mr. Cowan received his education at the High School and University of Edinburgh, and at the Auditoire of Geneva. Whether he may prove an effective speaker in "the House," there has as yet been but little opportunity of judging: the recollection of the brilliant oratorical displays, which his eloquent and accomplished predecessor in the representation of Edinburgh has so often made before the assembled Commons, may operate somewhat to whet the criticism of an auditory always fastidious, and tend to excite invidious comparison, which we will not here anticipate; but his habits of business warrant the expectation that he will be a good "working member," and therefore an useful accession to the representative body. Not having taken any prominent part in politics prior to the last general election, his return is attributable not more to the gradually declining popularity of Mr. Macaulay in Edinburgh for some considerable time previously, than to the high respect entertained by the constituency there for both the hon. gentleman and his father.

Mr. Cowan has married a daughter of the Rev. W. Menzies, Presbyterian Minister of Lanark.

MR. C. COWAN, M.P. FOR EDINBURGH.

DRURY-LANE.

We last week described the clever performances of the Cirque National troupe at Drury-Lane. The achievements of the female riders are by far the most attractive; and among the most graceful feats is that of Mdlle. Palmyre Anato, illustrated in our Engraving.

We are glad to learn that the performances of the troupe have attracted numerous and fashionable audiences. Among the visitors on Monday and Tuesday were—the Duke of Wellington, the Marquis and Marchioness of Douro, Count de Montemolin, the Marquis and Marchioness of Douglas, the Marquis of Donegal, his Excellency the Brazilian Minister and family, Earl Fitzwilliam and family, Count D'Orsay, Lord Chesterfield, Earl of Munster, Earl Fitzhardinge, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Lords A. and G. Lennox, Lord Templemore, Lord John Hay, Lady Louisa Ramsay, Sir G. Wombwell, Sir Bellingham Graham, Lord Somerton, Lord Canterbury, Miss Burdett Coutts, Lord G. Paget, &c.

American Theatricals.—New York, Feb. 15.—Mrs. Sharp, a cantatrice well known here, was a few days ago on her way to Washington in a steam-boat to fulfil an engagement, when she accidentally fell overboard, and though immediately picked up was found to be irrecoverable. Collins, the Irish comedian, has just concluded a very successful engagement at New Orleans. He cleared 800 dollars by his benefit. Edwin Forrest is playing at New Orleans. The theatre at Vicksburg was totally destroyed by fire on the 26th of January. The Ethiopian Serenaders are giving concerts at Boston. The Viennoise children have been performing at Mobile. Professor Risley and Sons are performing at the St. Charles, New Orleans. Tableaux Vivans, or, as they are called here, Model Artists, have been very successful, though great opposition to them is manifested in other parts of the States. A lady of fashion, in this city, recently hired a party to exhibit in her drawingroom before a very numerous party of her friends.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MARCH.

Are fashions of very great interest amid events like those we have been witnessing, at the very moment when the public mind has not recovered itself. No, most assuredly not; besides, no balls have supplied our usual informations, although our correspondents mention that French gaiety is far from being extinguished, and that the last of dancing parties will soon be at an end. The French Republic wishes for every one to enjoy themselves. This very week balls were intended to take place, and all kinds of festivities are projected, to honour and help the wounded of the three patriotic days. Notwithstanding the course of things, fashion cannot be forsaken. Whatever may pre-occupy ladies, they must always give a glance to their toilet; and we shall be welcome in mentioning all our glimpses of the new-fashioned dresses in Paris. If we believe the various reports that have already reached us, Louis XV.'s style will be put aside, and all its coquettish ornaments contemplated as no more becoming. Skirts are to be worn short and narrow, and the severe costume of the Roman Republic called to replace the luxurious and fancy dresses of La Pompadour. We really feel quite alarmed if such prophecies are to be realised. Short waists and narrow skirts can never be graceful; and we have only to look at the pictures of our mothers' youth to agree that we will oppose, as much as it is possible to oppose such a revolution. No doubt that our present long waists and immense wide skirts may appear very puzzling to the eyes of a future generation that will invent fashions of their own; but they must, nevertheless, agree that much grace, coquetry, and elegance mark our present century.

In a few days, Spring fashions in Paris will have settled all our doubts; and although nothing can be a wonder in revolution, it will allow us the liberty of keeping the most becoming fashions.

In the absence of trustworthy information, and not willing to mislead our fair readers, we only give this Number an Engraving of the last quiet family's fashion; and by whatever Republican fashions they may be replaced, we reckon them to be very tasteful and becoming.

A dress of green reps is trimmed in the front with green velvet band; the bonnet is of pink terry velvet lined with white satin; a long curled pink feather twisted around the form, and falls very low on the side. The small collar is in Valenciennes; and the cuffs, of plain gathered lace, are trimmed with a small flat Valenciennes.

Young ladies wear plain white muslin dresses; the three skirts are embroidered with coloured silks. The body, cut à la vierge, is also embroidered with a smaller garland than the one of the skirts. A bow of satin jaspé ribbon raises the third skirt on the left side. Long sash with a bow. A crown of white and pink camellias placed on bandeaux undulated, and covering the ears.

Taffetas Ecossais, is very fashionable for childrens' dresses: a muslin canezou à la Sevassca, with long sleeves, very full, and gathered on the wrist. The shoes are in peau de.

The most fashionable head-dresses are actually and in Marguerite de Valois, à la belle Gabrielle, à la Reine Margot. It is reported in stylish boudoirs that the new head-dresses will be à la Recamier, à la Follien; but we will not give their description until their appearance has been approved in high circles.

The hair-dress assumes entirely the style of Marie Stuart's century. The hair, twisted in a crown on the back part of the head, is fixed most elegantly by a tortoise-shell comb. For evening parties or balls, they add crowns of flowers, branches of green, with small flowers or coloured beads interspersed, held by very small string of little flowers or leaves crossing the forehead.

Brussels lace, Angleterre on satin, point d'Alencon on velvet, are in good taste. Ladies must never be induced to wear Valenciennes or Malines on evening dresses, however rich and beautiful they may be; they are only fit for morning dresses, and thus employed they prove extremely stylish and elegant. A most important change is about to take place in Paris: ladies, we hear, will leave off wearing boots to adopt again the shoes, so very becoming to the foot.

Mantles for evening parties are most elegant, and we may say comfortable; for the capuche added to them prevents any cold wind or injurious to health. This part of ladies' dress has most assuredly attained a great perfection; and, as our Engraving illustrates, mantles are very stylish and becoming. Evening mantles are generally made in satin or terry velvet, of light shades, lined with white satin: a splendid black lace flounce is gathered all around, and a wide ribbon plaited on the flounce completes the rich trimming. The plaited ribbon must be continued in front of the mantle, from the neck to the end of the lace. Mantles are worn shorter this season, and their shape is cut in such a manner as to form half sleeves falling on the arm.

The Algerian mantle, as sketched in the Engraving, is in green velvet, lined with light shaded pink satin. A rich embroidered garland in twisted silk adorns it. The capuche has long folds, ended by an Algerian tassel. The shape of this mantle is not, perhaps, so elegant as the first we described; but it is far more convenient, and especially suitable for elderly ladies.

A great change is proposed in gentlemen's dress: the shape of coats, paridessus, and pantalons will be thoroughly altered. If we may trust reports reaching us from Paris, wide pantaloons will be laid aside, and replaced by pantaloons tight on the ankle, and showing entirely the foot; shoes and silk stockings will be indispensable; and some very stylish young beaux even mention the culottes (small clothes) to be adopted for balls in this season.

We have been so engaged in directing our fair Subscribers in their choice for silks, shades, and the making of their dresses, that we have hitherto omitted the most important foundation of all dressing, stays. No dress will suit if the figure be not improved by stays properly fitted, and all ladies will acknowledge that one of the greatest difficulties they meet with is to provide a clever stay-maker. A patent has been recently obtained in France, Belgium, and Great Britain by an ingenious Frenchman for a new corset. Its novelty consists in the [illegible] weaving an extremely fine elastic thread with the material of which the corset is made. Being formed on a purely anatomical model of the female figure, and its elasticity causing it to give way to every motion of the body, at the same time affording every support to the form, it allows the size of the waist to be reduced without the injurious effects of the tight lacing required by all other stays. We feel assured that when this improvement is known, it must necessarily supersede all other kinds of corsets. The agents for the patentee in this country are Messrs. W. Thomas and Brothers, of Cheapside.

FRANCONI AT DRURY-LANE.—MDLLE. PALMYRE ANATO IN THE CIRCLE.

FREE EXHIBITION OF SELECT BRITISH MANUFACTURES.

In our Journal for March 13, 1847, we detailed and illustrated the First of a Series of Annual Exhibitions of Select Specimens of British Manufactures and Decorative Art, given by the Society of Arts, with the view of contributing essentially to the progress of those objects for the encouragement of which it was originally instituted. Our readers may recollect that we regarded this display as a "move in the right direction," and the interest it has excited is sufficiently attested by the fact of no fewer than 20,000 persons having visited the Exhibition.

On Wednesday week, a private view of the Second Exhibition took place at the house of the Society of Arts, in the Adelphi. On the following day it was visited by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the President of the Society. The Prince having examined the subjects minutely, pronounced the Collection to be in every respect superior to that of last year; and on leaving, His Royal Highness gave instructions that copies of some of the most valuable articles should be procured for his private use.

On Saturday evening, the Society gave a second private view of the Exhibition. Their suite of apartments was brilliantly lighted for the occasion, and the Great Room, especially, presented a very superb appearance; the costly specimens were judiciously ranged around the [illegible] and were exhibited very advantageously by the abundance of light, which also showed Barry's magnificent pictures, and the enriched ceiling of the room, to great advantage. Among the noblemen present were the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Auckland, Lord Colborne, and several others. The visitors also included the Earl of Harrowby, Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P., Mr. Hume, M.P.; Chief Justice Park; Sir J. Clarke; Professor Cockerell, Mr. Ouldjo; the Marquis of Northampton; Sir George Staunton; Mr T. Wyse, M.P.; Mr. W. Tooke, Dr. Farr, &c.

The character of this Exhibition is, in every respect, superior to that of last year's display: the subjects are more numerous, more important, of improved design as works of art, and of improved quality, exhibiting [illegible] beyond those of last year. "Great Artists and the great Manufacturers have united themselves to co-operate earnestly with each other. The Sculptor has joined himself to the Machine Carver, the Painter to the Paper Stainer, the Designer to the Potter, the men of high art to the workmen in Brass, and Iron, and Silver, and Gold. The Chemist has associated himself with the Glass manufacturer, the Engineer with the Carver in stone, the Mineralogist with the Lapidary, the Geometer with the Tile manufacturer, the Architect with the Builder; and the result has been an advancement within the past twelve months, which exceeds the expectations of the most sanguine among the Society."

As the Catalogue comprises about 700 subjects, we shall only be able to notice comparatively few of them. In the centre of the Great Room a prominent position [illegible] by the merit of the work is the "Repose" Arm Chair, modelled by Mr. J. Thomas, whose productions in the New Palace at Westminster have been so much admired. This Chair is of highly poetic design; and combines the artistically enriched character of ancient art, with the convenient form of the modern easy chair. It is peculiarly graceful and flowing; and the floral and other ornaments are beautiful and appropriate. In the upper part of the back is a bas-relief—a charming bit of poetic fancy; the holy Seraphs seeming to tempt the wearied occupant of the Chair to slumber, with their soft hymns; whilst a Guardian Angel is attending, with his sword, [illegible] to the sleeper. Clusters of lilies are in the back of the Chair, and on either side of the group of Angels are [illegible] flowers, in high relief; their stems and tendrils running [illegible] on either side of the central compartment, interwined with lilies and ivy leaves. The arms of the Chair are [illegible] the space between them and the seat being filled up with [illegible] and leaves; and the adaptation of these flowers is worthy of great attention, from their picturesque mode of treatment, and richness of effect. Leaves of poppies are introduced on the under side of the arms, and cluster at the junction of the latter with the back of the Chair; whilst, on the fronts of the arms, sleeping figures of an aged man, and of a young mother with her child, are sculptured, terminating in bold foliage. The frame of the Chair is adorned with ivy-leaves, in [illegible] relief; and the legs, which are extremely original in character, are enriched with clusters of ivy and other foliage. The model has been made and exhibited by Holland and Co., and is to be executed in various ways—as in oak, wheat-tree, &c. We have engraved this very superb work of art. The figures, we should add, are by Horsley.

There are some beautiful specimens of modern Marqueterie and Wood work, by Seddon, Holland, and others; and the novel application of papier maché to screens, chairs, and even sofas, are in sumptuous taste, sometimes, however, luxuriating in an excess of ornamental glitter. We were especially pleased with a large and elaborate piece of carving by Jordan's machinery, which shows a great advance upon the specimens previously exhibited, the fineness of its foliage and feather-work reminding one of Gibbons's exquisite productions.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MARCH.

THE "REPOSE" ARMCHAIR.—DESIGNED AND MODELED BY THOMAS.

THE SHAKESPEARE CLOCK.—DESIGNED BY BELL.

The Works in Metal were numerous, large, and lovely, of fine form, and [illegible] Fire place Slabs, [illegible] Mimions, exquisitely coloured and ornamented. Their Tazzæ are, likewise, very successful; and a novel application of their brilliant Enamels has attracted much attention. Into cements in a radiating hearth of the Tiles, and upon the fluted margin of one of Chesterton's Fire Grates; the heated air passing through the flutes, under the Tiles, and by a pierced metal moulding, [illegible] Tiles, in most [illegible] highly burnished steel, with its massive brass enrichments, have [illegible] gracious effect. The price of the stove we saw is 18*l*.—[illegible], but the Tile hearth can be supplied to stoves of much less cost than the above.

A pair of "Twin" Brackets, in Terra Cotta, for soup fronts, &c., designed by J Bell, sculptor, and made at the Lambeth Works, and a specimen of a new Irish Terra Cotta, [illegible] are recommended, both for beauty of design and execution.

The Works in Colours:—Messrs. Minton Copeland, Chamberlains, and others are too numerous for mention at

The Statuary Porcelain is much [illegible]: there are three very pleasing Busts, side by side—Dr. Lind, in Parian, by Copeland; Pope Pius IX., in Carrara Porcelain, by Rose and Co.; and Jenny Lind, in Statuary Porcelain, by Lind. For beauty of colour we prefer the latter: the Carrara has too much the appearance of plaster from this Chief Prince Albert's series of Statuary works: A small Figure Cricket Player, and Virginia, by Chamberlain; Apollo and the Shepherd, after Wyatt; a bust of Flora; and the Arcadia Bottle; all in Copeland's Statuary Porcelain: and the Well Sprite, in Parian and Coloured Porcelain, by Rodgers; and the Summerly Prize Opal Glass, by the Richardsons. These specimens were sent to Buckingham Palace, by Eldred, of New Bond-street, on Saturday

Some of Los Castris's beautiful and artistic finish, approach the famed Bergan work, the Messengers, the Calibrookdale Company, and Deane and Co being the chief exhibitors: and the Dodecahedral Cupid, by Hamilton from Bell's statuette, may be regarded as the first contribution to a valuable collection and manufacture of British bronzes. We also noticed a series of Ornamental Keys by Chubb, reminding us of the taste which the olden workers in metal bestowed upon the key-handle.

In Stone there is "A Shakespeare Cup," surmounted with a statuette of the Poet, by J. Sharp; the body of the Cup embossed with scenes from one of Shakespeare's plays, surrounded by Elizabethan ornaments.

The Works in Glass will sustain the precedence of British manufacture for the attractive brilliancy of their fine cutting. Some specimens of a new [illegible] Cut Glass, and modelled by Pratt, and made in Paris by the Mintons: the works to be furnished by Vulliamy: the Dial by Drayton's silvering process, already mentioned. The Dial is placed between two figures representing Tragedy and Comedy, as typical of Time passing between Joy and Grief.

"Joy absent, grief is present for that time." Richard II.

"The time of life is short,
To spend that shortness basely were too long,
If life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour." Second Part of Henry IV.

The composition is surrounded by a statuette of Shakespeare, the likeness founded upon the Poet's bust in the chancel of Stratford Church. A full-length statute of the same [illegible] has been exhibited by the sculptor, in Westminster Hall.

We shall return to this very interesting collection next week. It should be added, that the Exhibition will be open to the public gratis until the 29th of April, every day, except Sunday, the admission being by tickets, to be obtained of the Members of the Society of Arts [illegible]: tickets will be dispensed with, and the admission will then be by payment of 1*s.* each person.

NATIONAL SPORTS

O Spring! of hope and love and youth, and gladness,
Thou art coming! thou art coming! I feel it in my bones;
Why else comes that old wish to roam after happiness,
That keeps me for ever at home?
SHELLEY.

When Byron had [illegible] console himself for the lack of a vintage with the contents of his cellars, he might have added that the defects of her climate were more than compensated by the means and appliances she possesses for extracting health and hilarity out of "dark winter." From the close of autumn to the ruin of spring, the poet's words and facts are in unison with strains in the heart-stirring hunting-song "the sunny land of song." Let them say what they please of "the dreary month of November" according to their philosophy the especial occasion of our insular fête-de-cœur but all the Carnivals that ever mounted motley nose, furnished spirits more bounding and able and than a Leicestershire cover side on "the morrow of all souls." Moreover, every season that comes round for our wintry pastimes, becomes more popular, as relates to the manner of their application, than it was wont to be. Steeplechasing all may partake of who have a taste that way, and the great [illegible] meetings are, so to speak, the nesting of the "off" months. Batting a few bottoms, still persisted in by those of the old school, who think that the days of date, are rural sports are essentially "[illegible]non," or exempt from the appropriation which formerly constituted them marks of privilege. Any man may shoot a pheasant now or get it from [illegible] and the Sandringham Estate has [illegible] subscribe to the crack pack of the [illegible] country, and he runs no risk of bad words from the master, or being told to "go home and be ——," should he object to [illegible] the process in the field. Indeed to be unmarked, but part with the winter that is past with memories full of the good things it has [illegible] and then welcome to the hills that come before the swallow dares, will, both in spirit as here, [illegible] in the verse of Shelley.

Tuesday was the opening of the racing turf season. The first scene is well laid, for Lambourn is, as it were, a suburb of Warwick, and the spa has hitherto become the favourite head quarters of a leading party of sporting men. His weather might have been more propitious certainly, but it will be seen from the returns the sport was both ample and [illegible]. The course has been considerably improved lately, but it still [illegible] much beneficial attention. It is position for a spring meeting is perhaps the best in England.

Dear the week, the first move in the season's yachting was made by the great [illegible] sporting society, the Royal Thames Yacht Club. The stewards of the forthcoming matches propose nearly to increase the amount of the prizes, and to alter the course. Inscription [illegible] and cases will start from Erith. Already several belonging to this Club are being "forwarded," and early in the coming month they will be [illegible]. In the betting market business is still slack. New favourites are rarely making their appearance—and the old ones are "left alone" in their glory.

Licensing day has passed by without any strong manifestation against the promised sweeping reform; but if people won't try their fortunes, they have only themselves to blame. We have enterprise and spirit enough, do worse in their investments, than having an account of how many inches of rain have fallen during the year, and thereon deducing the depth of the ground in reference to any event for immediate issue

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—Passing over all the sporting events in none of which did the betting excite much interest, or lead to any movements worth particular notice, we have to select a few items that came in for more than the usual degree of attention, viz. Glendower Spring-field, Fern, and Seaborough. The first three were really in focus, but the last [illegible] though backed for a "cool hundred," was not "all there." Our race current will be found to embrace seven distinct races—quite enough to confuse the books, and render it no easy task to make out the average:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 8 to 1 agst St. Leger | 1 MINUTE STEEPLE CHASE. | |
| 8 to 1 —— The Cub | 30 to 1 agst Herbert, 3 yrs | [illegible] |
| 8 to 1 —— Chandler | 10 to 1 —— Jarvis | [illegible] |
| | 10 to 1 —— Mr. Mytton | |
| | 1000 to 800 laid on the field against four. | |
| | WARWICK HALF STAKES. | |
| | [illegible] | |
| | SALOP DOUBLE HANDICAP. | |
| 3 to 1 agst B. Bumfield | 5 to 1 agst Lord Lyon | 5 to 1 agst Lord Lyon |
| | TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES. | |
| 7 to 2 —— Blaze (t) | 5 to 1 agst Flotsam | 10 to 1 —— Mountain Deer |
| | WARWICK DOUBLE STAKES. | |
| [illegible] | 3 to 1 agst Thistledown (t) | [illegible] |
| [illegible] agst Jerusalem | METROPOLITAN HANDICAP. | |
| [illegible] | 40 to 1 agst Mary, or Cervyne | 100 to 1 agst Vampyre (t) |
| | RAILWAY STAKES. | |
| | CHESTER CUP. | |
| 5 to 1 agst Bumfield | 10 to 1 agst Highflying (t) | 1000 to 12 agst Coryngham (t) |
| 30 to 1 —— Sartine | 40 to 1 —— Holmes Placid | 1000 to 1 —— Mountaineer (t) |
| 40 to 1 —— Glen Saddle (t) | 1000 to 1 —— Gemini (t) | 1000 to 1 —— Grimston (t) |
| | DERBY. | |
| 250 to 100 agst Jerusalem | 5 agst Hamilton | 40 to 1 agst Flotsam (t) |
| 100 to 1 —— Glendower | 20 to 1 —— Fern | 50 to 1 —— Whitestone (t) |
| | 25 to 1 —— Bolderwood (t) | 50 to 1 —— Revenue (t) |
| | 1000 to 1000 vs. Glendower aged Sydney Dacre | |

LIVERPOOL ON STEEPLE CHASE. [illegible] DAY.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Proceed | [illegible] | [illegible] |
| Spectator | [illegible] | [illegible] |
| St. Leger | [illegible] | [illegible] |

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday). Since Monday, the supply of English wheat fresh up for our market somewhat and by land carriage, has been very moderate, and, from the damp state of the weather, greatly out of condition. Selected parcels of both red and white steady to-day, at full prices, but the middling and inferior kinds were dull. For dry foreign wheats there was an improved demand, and some of the holders refused to sell except at higher rates. The business done, however, was by no means extensive. Barley was firm, but grinding and malt qualities were somewhat wanted. In prices [illegible] no change to notice. Beans and peas [illegible] steady. Flour was in [illegible] request, [illegible] Bonds, peas, and Indian corn very dull. Flax flour was held at extreme currencies. By the prices of Friday's market:—

ENGLISH.—Essex, wheat 52s@ [illegible], barley 32s@ 32s 6d; oats 28s@ [illegible] quarters. Irish, wheat [illegible], oats, 4300 quarters. Foreign, wheat, 850 quarters; barley, 1200; oats, 1,140 quarters. Flour 4120 [illegible].

[illegible] wheat, 46s
[illegible] wheat, [illegible]
[illegible] corn [illegible]
[illegible] red oats, 19s to 19s; potato oats [illegible]
[illegible] white, 38s to 39s; new [illegible]
[illegible] Hat maple, 38s to 40s; white, 36s to 38s; [illegible], 30s to 31s; per quarter.
[illegible] 30s to 35s; [illegible] 32s to 36s; Stockholm tar [illegible]; Archangel, 30s to 33s

Foreign. Danish red wheat [illegible] to [illegible]; white [illegible] beans, [illegible] to [illegible] per quarter. Flour, American, [illegible] [illegible] to [illegible] per 196lbs.

The Seed Mercury.—This market still continues exceedingly dull, and prices are almost nominal.

Linseed, English, sowing, 56s to 60s, Baltic, crushing, 44s to 46s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 44s; hempseed, 32s to 36s per quarter; coriander, —s to —s per cwt., brown mustard seed, 8s to 10s; white ditto, 9s to 10s; tares, 6s 6d to 8s per bushel; English rapeseed, 22l to 23l per last of ten quarters, linseed cakes, English, 11l 10s to 12l 10s; ditto foreign, 10l to 10l 10s per 1000; rapeseed, 12l to 13l per ton; canary, 60s to 72s per quarter; [illegible] Lisbon clover-seed, red, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; white, 40s to 44s; extra, 50s to 56s; [illegible] —s to —s; extra, —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s per cwt.

Hops.—The prices of Pockets of the new crop have ranged from 72s to 86s; of household ditto, 6l to 7l per 6th load.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 50s 2d.; barley, 32s 4d.; oats, 20s 3d.; rye, 34s 4d.; beans, 36s 8d.; peas, 35s.

The Irish Markets are dull.—Wheat, 50s 7d.; barley, 30s 10d.; oats, 20s 7d.; rye, 31s 6d.; beans, 37s 6d.; peas, 41s 4d.

Scotch Markets.—Wheat, 7s 6d.; barley, 3s 6d.; oats, 2s 6d.; rye, 2s 6d.; beans, 3s 6d.; peas, 3s 6d.

Flour.—[illegible] cargoes have been offered at public sale this week. The holders have relied heavily, and only about 4000 packages have sold at late prices. Privately, next to nothing is doing.

Sugar.—All kinds of raw sugar have met a very dull inquiry, at a reduction in prices of from 6d to 1s per cwt. for the fullest parcels of Bengal and Mauritius. Refined goods offer on somewhat easier terms.

Provisions.—We have to notice a steady trade for Irish butter, at fully last week's prices. Fine, Limerick, and Kilkenny, landed, 90s to 96s; fine, 80s to 86s; Limerick, [illegible] Cork, Dublin, 80s to 84s; kilgo, 80s to 84s, and Prime, 88s to 96s per cwt. Although [illegible] of English butter are good, sales progress slowly, at 76s to 78s per cwt. for Friesland and Devon. Fine to fine, middling dairy, 86s to 96s per cwt.; and fresh, 10s to 14s per dozen lbs. Foreign butter has advanced 4s to 6s per cwt. Fine Friesland, 90s; ditto, Baltic, 84s; ditto, 100s to 108s per cwt. Choice cream is in demand. Prime Waterford, Landon, 86s to 87s per cwt. Irish bacon is dull at 50s to 52s per cwt.

Tallow.—The market is very firm, at 56s 6d to 58s per cwt. for P. Y. C. on the spot.

Oils. Neat is nothing doing in linseed oil. Rape, [illegible] nearly supported.

Lime and Linseed.—[illegible] sidow bay, 22 10s to 23 15s; clover ditto, 42 15s to 54 15s, and straw, 21 5s to 21 15s per load.

Potatoes.—All kinds [illegible] ranging from 80s to 140s per ton.

Spirits.—Only a moderate business is doing in rum, yet prices are well supported. Brandy is a slow sale, at late rates. Geneva quiet.

Coals (Friday).—Hudson's Hartley, 15s 6d Stewart's, 17s; Adelaide Tees, 17s. Holmes, 19s; Bewicks and Co., 19s per ton

The Cattle Market.—Although the hope to-day was very small, nevertheless the demand for them was on a very sluggish state, at barely last week's quotations. In other markets prices were little variation, but prices were somewhat lower. Sheep realised 4*d* to 6*d* per 8lbs. Calves, 4*d* to 6*d*, and pigs, 4*d* to 6*d* per 8lbs.

Smithfield (Friday).—In to-day's market the supply of beasts was [illegible] average qualities. The primest Scots, Devons, &c., commanded a steady sale, at late rates; but secondaries [illegible]. All other breeds were slow to move, yet prices were unchanged. The show of foreign stock was small, viz., 34 oxen and cows, 232 sheep, and 40 calves. With the [illegible] were again scarcely supplied. On the whole the trade to-day was dull, with a downturn in the currencies. Prime small calves sold at very full prices; otherwise, the veal trade was in a sluggish state. In pigs, somewhat [illegible] business was transacted, at late figures. Milk cows were dull, at from £14 10*s* to £17 15*s* each, including their small calf.

To-day's [illegible] of 6,[illegible] oxen, and [illegible] beasts, 3*s* 6*d* to 3*s* 8*d*; second qualities, 3*s* 2*d* to 3*s* 4*d*; prime large oxen, 4*s* 0*d* to 4*s* 2*d*; prime Scots, &c., 4*s* 4*d*; to 4*s* 6*d*; coarse and inferior sheep, 3*s* 10*d* to 4*s* 0*d*; second quality ditto, 4*s* 2*d* to 4*s* 4*d*; prime large ditto, 4*s* 6*d* to 4*s* 8*d*; small ditto, 4*s* 8*d* to 4*s* 10*d*; large coarse calves, 4*s* 0*d* to 4*s* 2*d*; prime small ditto, 4*s* 6*d* to 4*s* 8*d*; [illegible] 3*s* 10*d* to 4*s* 0*d*; [illegible] 4*s* 0*d* to 4*s* 2*d*; and prime ditto, 4*s* 4*d* to 4*s* 6*d*.

[illegible] quarter of [illegible] 18*s* to 22*s* 6*d*; [illegible] 24*s*; [illegible] 14*s*

[illegible] general demand was in a very sluggish state, on the following terms:—

[illegible] beef, 3*s* 6*d* to 3*s* 8*d*; middling ditto, 3*s* 2*d* to 3*s* 4*d*; prime [illegible] 4*s* 0*d*; [illegible] 100, large pork, 3*s* 8*d* to 4*s* 0*d*; inferior [illegible] pork, 4*s* 0*d* to 4*s* 2*d*; prime ditto, 4*s* 4*d* to 4*s* 6*d*; [illegible] 4*s* 6*d* to 4*s* 8*d*.

ROBT. HERBERT

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

THE proprietors of Bank of England Stock have reason to congratulate themselves upon an increased dividend, viz. to four and a half per cent for the year. The books for the transfer of stock will be closed from the 31st inst. to April 7th. Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents, Long Annuities, and Annuities for Terms of Years are closed. Bank Stock will open on the 14th of April, and the remainder on the 18th of April.

The Committee of Bankers have issued the following circular:—"A numerous body of the mercantile and trading interest having signified their approval of bankers issuing their notes for sums under 5*l*, the Committee is hereby given that, on and after the 1st of May next, the Bank of England, the City bankers, and Joint Stock Banks will close for the receipt and payment of money at four o'clock in the afternoon."

There exists scarcely any demand for money, trade continuing nearly stagnant, checked as it has been by events abroad. Good bills are scarce, and are readily discounted at per cent; lower class paper from 2½ per cent. to 3 per cent. when long-dated. The discount houses continue to reject large sums offered at "the call," and allow from 2½ to 3 per cent on the deposits they receive.

Consols have fluctuated during the week between 80½ and 81½. At opening the market has usually been buoyant, arising in a great measure from the purchases made by the Bank, which on Monday last were to the extent of ½ in advance of Consols for Account. Towards the close of the Market shutter rumours from the Continent have daily afforded room for bearing speculation, and prices have fluctuated accordingly. Throughout the week the tendency has been to maintain an upward tendency, as the following list of prices will show:—Consols, 80½; Long Annuities, 30 years, 8 7-16ths; India Bonds, £1000, 15 p; Bank Stock, for Account, 183½; Consols, for Account, 80½; Exchequer bills, £1000, 30 p; Ditto, Small, 28 p.

Attention continues to be unusually directed towards the Continent, not merely politically, but financially. Even in the leading cities in Europe, accounts day's arrive of the suspension or positive failure of firms hitherto regarded as beyond the reach of all ordinary circumstances affecting credit. The rapid decrease, however, in the values of the best Continental securities, accelerating a panic that had previously existed (although only to a limited extent), has decided severeful results as we even the wealthiest firms. To this may be added the heart of specie, a general almost universal withdrawal of balances, and general throughout Europe, wherever political agitation exists, or war appears probable. The effect is naturally to confine all payments from any extent to a paper medium, which rapidly depreciating, soon becomes worthless for all foreign banking operations. The subjoined list of failures proves the disastrous state of affairs already existing, and it is to be feared is only the forerunner of more calamitous ruin.

On Monday the stoppage of the well known banking-house of Messrs. Labitte, Blount, and Co. was announced. The cause which led to the failure was said to be principally very large. They were bankers for four lines of railway, viz., the Rouen, Havre, the Dieppe, and the Boulogne lines. Besides this, they were extensively engaged in railway shares, and their failure will probably entail loss on many of our countrymen resident in Paris.

The failure of Messrs. Bodman and Co., the bankers in the Place Vendôme, was announced on Wednesday. The cause which led to the failure was said by the state of the money mark".

The firm of MM. Ladenne and Thizo de la Charme has suspended payment from Amsterdam another failure of importance is announced, the firm being that of A. L. Van Harjen and Sons, this being the sixteenth house which has stopped during the week.

In bankers at Paris are understood to have declined a further issue as for the present are Messrs. Hottinguer, Delessert, Mallet Brothers, Rougement de Lowenberg, and Fould, Oppenheim, and Co.

From London the failure is announced of J. F. de Courte and Co., in the oil and grain trade

In the foreign exchanges there was no abatement of the difficulty which has been for some time experienced in negotiating bills, paper upon France, Vienna, and Italy being, with but little exception, unsaleable. The rate for Holland was rather higher to-day; in the cases of Hamburgh and Frankfort no material alteration occurred.

The state of the French finances becomes every day more complicated, and a cessation of public payments, either as due from the savings' banks or dividends on the Rentes, appears to be rapidly approaching. The government have undertaken in the first place that every able bodied man from 20 to 25 should be entitled to enter the National Guard, and is equipped, if required, at the public expense. This was followed by an enrolment of 80,000 men at 1*l*. 3*s*. per day, to constitute a moveable force. Then came the decree that all pawned articles under 8*s*. 6*d*. in value should be restored to their owners at the Government charge, with an order to the bakers and provision dealers of the city to supply food indiscriminately to the people, which is put to the debit of the Republic. All works on buildings and public edifices undertaken at the charge of the State are to be resumed at the same time various railway undertakings are to be pushed forward, for which the co-operation of the companies was to be "demanded." Then the convocation of the National Assembly was proclaimed, to consist of 900 members to receive 25 per day each during a session which, under such circumstances, is sadly to declare itself "in permanence." Finally, we have the announcement of a rise in the rate of interest on the entire 5 per cent debt of 31 millions sterling, from 4 to 5 per cent., making an additional annual charge of £310,000, together with an immediate further augmentation of the army by the formation of a legion of [illegible] before. However, one half of these decrees are attempts to be carried, the necessities of the working and middle classes caused an extensive run of withdrawals from the savings' banks. These notices were met by the following decree:—

"1. That all deposits of 100*f.* and less shall be repaid in full in cash

"2. That the deposits from 101*f.* to 1000*f.* shall be repaid as follows; viz. 100*f.* in cash, one half of the surplus in Treasury bonds at four months' date, bearing interest at five per cent., and the other in five per cent. Government Stock at par

"3. That those accounts which exceed 1000*f.* shall be repaid as follows; viz. 1000*f.* in cash, one half of the surplus in Treasury bonds at six months' date, bearing interest at 5 per cent, and the remaining half in 5 per cent. stock at par."

Now, in the last prices Treasury Bonds are not quoted, which is equivalent to their being unsaleable; and the first per Cents are 71*f.* 50*c.*, entailing a loss of 28*f.* 50*c.* on every 100

In addition to the undertakings already alluded to, Louis Philippe, after a reign of seeming prosperity, left the consolidated public debt of France just thirty-seven millions sterling greater than he found it. It amounts to 207 millions. The deficit for the year 1848 was computed at two millions sterling; although the entire amount of the credits placed at the disposal of the late Government for the year 1847 amounted to the amazing sum of 1,7,957,663 [illegible] 4,585,000 sterling. One of the greatest abuses of the late Administration was the inordinate extension given to the floating debt. It amounted, on the 30th of January last, to 670,0[illegible]00*f.*, or near twenty-seven millions sterling, in the shape of Treasury Bonds or Exchequer Bills. To meet such an expenditure, the revenue of France, at the most prosperous period, if doubled, would have proved inadequate. The last decree, therefore, suspending cash payments, is the natural little surprise. It matters not whether the Bank of France to refuse specie for its notes, declares them a legal tender, and permits circulation not exceeding 350,000,000 frs. This last act will only [illegible] ruin, to increase it. It can last act preceding a national bankruptcy.

The Foreign Market has been most depressed [illegible] security in which any buoyancy has existed. The prospect of peace caused a rise of 5 per cent, as already noticed, but this was followed by a reaction to 14 rapidly following; but the price has since advanced to 15. The other securities are all generally drooping, with the exception of Dutch, which advanced towards the close of the week. Brazilian Bonds, 76; Buenos Ayres, Northern Bonds, 70; Ditto, Small, 72; Ditto, New, 1829 and 1839, 70; Ditto, Small, 73; Equador Bonds, 2; Mexican, Five per Cent. 1846, 16; Ditto, Account, 15; Russian Bonds, 90; Spanish Five per Cent. Stock, 1840, 14; Ditto, Account, 14; Ditto, Passive, 3; Ditto, Three per Cents., 22; Venezuela Bonds, Deferred, 4; Bolgian Four-and-a-Half per Cent, 61; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 12 Guilds, 42; Ditto, Account, 42

Shares continued to recede in price, and the French lines cannot be sold unless at a ruinous sacrifice upon the nominal quotation. The state of the market will be seen by the following:—Caledonian, 5; Eastern Counties, 2; Brazilian Bonds, 70; Ditto, Small, 72; Ditto, New, 1829 and 1839, 70; Ditto, Small, 73; Equador Bonds, 2; Mexican, Five per Cent. 1846, 16; Ditto, Account, 15; Russian Bonds, 90; Spanish Five per Cent. Stock, 1840, 14; Ditto, Account, 14; Ditto, Passive, 3; Ditto, Three per Cents., 22; Venezuela Bonds, Deferred, 4; Bel

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Under the Patronage of HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN. Positively the last Season of the celebrated Vocalist THURSDAY next, March 23, A THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—CIRQUE ROYAL, on Tuesday next, March 21, and Every Evening during the week, at Eight o'clock. Doors open at Seven. Private Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets may be had at the Box-office, from Ten till Five. Prices of Admission: Boxes, 5s.; Pit, 2s. 6d.; Gallery, 1s. Children under Ten years of age half-price to the Boxes and Pit.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE. Great Success of the New Equestrian Drama, entitled

LOVE'S LENTEN ENTERTAINMENTS.—Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly. On Wednesday, March 22, and Every Evening during the week, at Eight o'clock, a musical and scenic entertainment, never performed at this or any other place, entitled LOVE'S LENTEN ENTERTAINMENTS, or THE BITER BITTEN, with Love's Lenten Lucubrations, and other Entertainments. Words by Mr. G. Rodwell, Esq., Music by Mr. Nelson, R. S. Mayo. Tickets 3s.; Gallery, 1s.—On Monday, March 20th, and Every Evening during the week, at 8, Mr. Nelson, R. S. Mayo,

THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

WORKMEN SCULPTURING THE BOSSES ON THE GROINED ROOF OF THE CENTRAL HALL.

roof, with its huge bosses of elaborate detail, rival any specimen of Gothic architecture in England, and are worthy of the great architect's renown. In plan the Hall is octangular, having [illegible] at the four cardinal points leading to the two Houses of Parliament, and above them large [illegible] will be introduced; whilst at the four corners, lofty windows, of beautiful tracery, 61 feet in height, admit light into the Hall. It is 60 feet high, and 63 feet wide, and the groins, springing from pillars of [illegible], two feet three inches in depth. At the angles of intersection of the groins are bosses, eight of them decorated with the [illegible] Richard the Second to Victoria, and thirty-two with badges and other heraldic insignia. There are also eight [illegible] shields of the four kingdoms alternately. One of the bosses—the [illegible] the badges of the Plantagenets—forms the background to the initial letter we have used at the commencement of our [illegible] of the windows and blank arches for frescoes is a bold moulding of roses having crowns at intervals. Many other architectural enrichments add to the beauty of this Hall, the [illegible] must reserve till we illustrate it pictorially; at present our aim being to elucidate the peculiar scene—the subject of our Illustration of the workmen busy sculpturing the bosses of the ceiling; and a more picturesque and striking scene it is impossible to imagine. A curb of [illegible] supported by upright baulks of timber, [illegible] and on these, in all imaginable places [illegible] contrivances to aid in giving them height, [illegible] such as old tables, [illegible] &c., the sculptors, forty in number, busily ply their [illegible] deeply-moulded ribs of the groins arching and meeting over [illegible] half unfinished beauties of some of the bosses, the rough masses [illegible] as yet uninvaded by the chisel, and the almost complete [illegible] variety of other bosses and shields of arms, all glowing in the warm light of gas—for not the least singular part of the scene is there being gas laid on for the convenience of workmen,—while the clear cold daylight streams through holes in the platforms, ringing the baulks and scaffolding far below with its bright light, renders the scene one of the most singular and piquant it is possible to imagine. The models of the bosses are by Mr. [illegible] do him infinite credit from their variety and richness of design [illegible] masonry of the whole is most beautifully worked, reflecting high praise to Mr. Grisell, the eminent builder, under whose orders it was executed.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

THE RIGHT HON. LORD GEORGE [illegible]

THE death of [illegible] took place at Brighton, on the 10th inst. At the period he was in his eighty [illegible] the [illegible] from [illegible] Baronet, [illegible] Francis, first Marquis of Hertford, being sixth in a straight [illegible] nobleman's eldest [illegible] mour.

Lord George [illegible] of the Hon [illegible] and had by her [illegible] Seymour, her [illegible] of Lisbon, and two daughters, Horatia, wife of the Hon [illegible] and Emily Henrietta, married to Richard Earl of Shannon.

ISABELLA CAULFIELD DOWAGER LADY CAWDOR.

[illegible]ly, whose death occurred at Twickenham, on the 8th inst., was daughter of Frederick, fifth Earl of Carlisle, sister of the [illegible] grand-daughter of Granville, first Marquis of Stafford. Her [illegible] for Frederick Howard, 6th [illegible] for 24 years in the "Chiltern Hundreds" of his late father-in-law, Lord [illegible] Lady Cawdor's marriage took place in 1769. Her husband, [illegible] M.P., was subsequently raised to the peerage, as Lord Cawdor, of Castlemartin. By him she was mother of two sons, John Frederick, present Earl Cawdor, and the Hon. George Pryse Campbell, Captain, R.N.

LIEUT.-COLONEL SIR WILLIAM YOUNG, BART., OF BAILIEBOROUGH CASTLE, COUNTY CAVAN.

SIR WILLIAM YOUNG died on the 10th inst., at his residence at Westbourne-crescent. He passed several of his earlier years in India, and held, latterly, a seat in the East India [illegible]. His family claimed descent from the ancient Scottish house of Young, of Aldbar, and was established in the sister island about the time [illegible] James I.

Sir William had, at the period of his decease, completed his seventy-fourth year. He was for some time previously in a very delicate state of health, so debilitated, indeed, that the result of the recent trial concerning the illegal sale of Cadetships, in which he was unfortunately implicated, was never communicated to him. He married, 20th Sept., 1806, Lucy, youngest daughter of Lieut.-[illegible] Charles Frederick, and has left [illegible] daughters and four sons, of whom the eldest, the present Sir John Young, Bart., held office as Joint Secretary of the Treasury under the Government of Sir Robert Peel.

The Baronetcy was conferred on the deceased gentleman 28th August, 1821.

SIR EDWIN LAWS LANGSHAM SANDYS, D.C.L., OF MISSENDEN CASTLE, COUNTY GLOUCESTER.

[illegible] gentleman, the eldest [illegible] Sandys, Esq., of West Layton [illegible] descended from a [illegible] and noble family [illegible], and [illegible]ted a Baronet 26th September, 1809. He had previously assumed, by royal [illegible] the additional name of Bayntun, in compliance with the will of [illegible]tun, Esq., of Grittleton.

Sir Edwin, born 16th July, 1774, married 9th May, 1799, Agnes, daughter of Michael Allen, Esq., of Coleridge House, Devon, and by her (who died just two years since) he had one son, the late Sir Edwin Windsor Sandys, Knight, and four daughters. The Baronet's decease occurred a few days since, at Tredegar, Cornwall.

LOSS OF THE "TWEED".—The labours of the committee have been brought to a close, and during the last week they have distributed the sum of £370, thus making a division of £1133 amongst the families of the sufferers who perished in the wreck of this unfortunate vessel. To a family of six orphans, the sum of £176 has been placed to the care of a magistrate, town-clerk, and minister of Greenock: to a widow and six children the sum of £144 has been awarded, and invested in the savings' bank in the name of trustees: to another similarly circumstanced, nearly the same amount has been allotted; and to others the like liberal spirit has been evinced, according to their several necessities. Great praise is due to the committee for their exertions in this work of real charity.

London: Printed and published [illegible], 198, Strand, in the Parish of [illegible] Clement Danes, by the Co[illegible], by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 309.—Vol. XII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1848. [Sixpence.

COMMUNISM.

It is becoming more than ever necessary to impress distinctly on the minds of the people what are really the powers and duties of a Government—to define what it can, and, still more, what it can not, do. The recent political convulsions have called out a whole host of regenerators of the world, "friends of humanity" by profession, fierce from excess of loving-kindness to all—the very fanatics of philanthropy, ready to compel every one to be their brothers on pain of death. Their affection is so violent, and so unwelcome, that they are grievously suspected of not being very disinterested. Fraternity may be followed as a trade by those who, possessing no skill in any other, wish to share the profits with those who have. A few phrases are all that is necessary to establish the theory of Equality; and, going a little farther, it is very easy

"To call the wants of rogues the rights of man."

The next step is, to require, as the first duty of a Government, that it shall do everything for everybody; even plunder and confiscate on an extensive scale if necessary. What business has any one to be so industrious as to shame the rest by being better lodged and clothed than his brethren? Let him restore forthwith, on pain of death, and have a care he does not sin in the like fashion again. This is really no exaggeration of the doctrines preached by some of the continental Communists. They think they are apostles of progress, while they are really going back towards old and exploded despotisms, which treated men not as free and independent beings, but as a property belonging to the strongest for the time.

The principle that all men were an absolute property of the ruling power, and had no right to engage in any pursuit of life, save for the benefit of the Monarch, was at the bottom of all the monopolies of trade and professions, the greater part of which the vigorous commonsense of Englishmen broke down in the seventeenth century, but of which fragments remain to the present day, not because they are admired, but because they have nearly ceased to have any effect. All these monopolies, or usurpations of the business of life, would, according to the new theories, be re-established. The Government is to build, to clothe, to teach, to manufacture, to buy and sell—and every one is to share the profits; the last condition is the only one in which the new monopolies differ from the old ones, and it has the negative merit of making the whole scheme impossible. When the Government shall be ready to undertake or span it was simple piece of robbery enough; but it at least made over the business and profits to some one who acquired an interest in the process, and managed it with advantage to himself and the public, which would have been greater for both but for the plunder of the Government. But if any Government, of whatever form, that of an Autocrat or a Republic, takes on itself all the business of a nation, it needs little foresight to predict the result. Everything will be a failure: it is proverbial that Government work is always the worst done and the best paid, and under the universal share system, the profits would be unscrupulously absorbed by the agents, accountable only to themselves, to everybody and nobody. The abuse would become still more gigantic if the Government were also to take on itself to be sellers and dealers as well as producers; for the improvers of society have declared war against all the agents who stand between the labourer and the consumer. It is scarcely possible to conceive the misery that would be caused by such a system, supposing it could be established. When portions of it have been carried into effect by the Government of France, it is time to protest against any advance towards it here. It is a mere reversion to barbarism; the fear of competition is the terror of the skilless idler, the coward or weakling who will not take his part in the great battle of life, and thinks all the honour or advantage gained by those who do as so much taken from himself.

SAINT PATRICK'S HALL, AT THE CASTLE, DUBLIN.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

There is another view of the question, which ought not to be lost sight of by the working classes themselves. By what means do men of energy among them rise? By the ability and talents that enable them by degrees to pass through those ranks in the great army of industry that stretch like a chain from the employer to the man who works with his hands. They have been created by necessity and convenience, not by fraud; if they are proscribed as unjust and abolished, the mass of workers becomes isolated, cut off from the means of elevating itself; the lower steps of the ladder, which must be secured first, are destroyed. And this evil will be inflicted without any beneficial result; the measure will not increase consumption, nor demand for labour, nor the wages of it. It will not even increase the proportions in which the present amount of them are distributed. Things will be certain, after a time, to return to the channel, necessity and all the arrangements of society have worn for them. By a kind of "self-levying ordinance," working men renounce these functions themselves, they will gradually fall into the hands of others.

There is, no doubt, much jealousy and ill-will excited among many trades by what our neighbours call the exploitation of his fellows made by some one of the body who takes a kind of contract, standing, as they term it, between the main employer and the labourer. But, if inquiry were made, a superiority of some kind would be found in the individual who combines others for any operation. All our railroads have been built by the system of contracts and sub-contracts, down to job-work and piece-work in infinitely small divisions. How many labouring men have laid the foundation of an independence by taking advantage of this system. It requires self-denial and application, which the dissolute and incapable will not exert, even with certainty of a superiority in another by any cause rather than the true one. Hence, these sub-employers are in France denounced as fraudulent sharpers, in short, thieves; and the law is invoked to regulate what law was never meant to apply to; and contracts of this kind are at present illegal, under the decree of the Republic.

How much better the working classes are for the measure, may be seen in the confusion which this meddling, though it has not caused it altogether, has been the means of increasing. While contending about the way in which work shall or shall not be done, work is disappearing, and there is none to do. It will soon begin to be a welcome blessing in any shape, by contract or in any other way. We believe, if the working classes of France were polled, the advocates of this crushing down of all competition would be found in the minority. It is not the able or the honest who feel aggrieved by the rise of a fellow-man in condition; it is the mean and envious. There is an abundance of love for equality in France which springs from the same root. Disappointed artists—disappointed because they have mistaken their calling—would, but for the manifest impossibility, petition the Government to decree equality of genius; and there may be literary cognizans who think it hard that a knowledge of spelling should be requisite in the career of letters, even under a Republic: they are the kind of men who have taken the universe under their protection, and would reform all abuses of Government and property by suppressing one and seizing the other. It is to be hoped they are not the largest in numbers, though they are at present the loudest in voice; for their interpretation of liberty is the worst and most ruinous resemblance of the worst of despotisms, and their idea of the duties and powers of a Government would take the world back into slavery.

SAINT PATRICK'S BALL.

YESTERDAY week, Saint Patrick's Day was celebrated by a splendid Ball given in Dublin Castle, with that princely hospitality for which the Viceregal circles are so eminently distinguished. The Drawing-room, the Presence-chamber, and the suite of apartments adjoining Saint Patrick's Hall, were thrown open for the occasion; and herein their Excellencies the Lord Lieutenant and the Countess of Clarendon received a brilliant assemblage of rank, beauty, and fashion. At half-past nine o'clock their Excellencies, attended by Mr. Comyn Comullan, the Hon. Gerald Punsonby, and a splendid staff, entered St. Patrick's Hall, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, and a numerous retinue of the nobility and gentry. These Excellencies ar[illegible] the Throne, exchanged courtesies with a great number of the company at either side of the corridor. Dancing was then commenced, and kept up with great spirit until an advanced hour in the morning.

Supper was served in the Round Room, the [illegible] were the Royal Artist has depicted. The means by which this lovely scene was constructed, were as ingenious as the design is meritorious. First, the billiard-table was converted into the base of a succession of festooned arcades, diminishing gradually from the approach, and terminating at the extreme end [illegible] creating effect [illegible] the whole an enchanting effect [illegible] ing stands and epergnes, orange and citron trees [illegible] in both corners, in which are [illegible] ed the illusion by [illegible]. At the table was placed a variety of beautiful exotics; and, amongst them, the azalea indica alba, and the azalea flammea, with many of flower, presented conical garlands of the richest hue. In the centre was a small fountain; and at either end of the table were large glass vases, in which sported brilliant gold fish: the whole being tastefully illuminated by jets of gas, the centre of the ceiling, and execution of this graceful work is due to Mr. Brophy.

Amongst the company were: Prince George of Cambridge, The Lord and Lady Mayoress, Lords Hotham and Fingall. Countesses: Charlemont, and Fingall. Marquis and Marchioness of Bothsdale. Lords—Gallmore, C. Russell, Taylour, Pelham Guards; Seymour, Compton, 85th Regiment; St. Lawrence, Castlemaine. Baroness Purbeck. Honourables: R. F. Wrottesley, Maxwell, J. Coughlan, D.L., R. H. Rutchinson. The Hon. Lady Lynch Blosse. Honourables: Mrs Plunket, Robert Plunket, Mrs. Robert Plunket, Mrs Robinson, Chief Justice Doherty. The Attorney-general, The Right Hon. Sheriff of Dublin Alderman Kinahan. Right Hon. Sheriff of the County Dublin. The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Staunton, Bart., D.L., County Galway. Sir E. Blakeney, D.L. [illegible] Bart., M.D. Massy, Bart.; W. Lesson, [illegible] Bart.; E. Borough, Bart.; D. Roche, R. Baker. Ladies: Blakeney, C. Plunkett, Palmer, Gullimore, Fitzsimon, Butler, H. Plunkett, Talbot, Shaide, Cuffe, G. Vandeleur, D. Massy, W. Barom, Hartry, E. Borough. Colonels: Turner, Graves, Vandeleur, Sir J. Rowland, Eustace, High Sheriff of Dublin. Lieutenant-Colonels: H. R. Farquhar, Pratt, Warren, C.B., 53rd Regt.; Jhas. 76th Regt.; Blackney Captains, R.N.: King, R. B. Crawford, Mansfield, Gordon. Majors: Blackburn, 85th Regt.; Wilson, R.A.; Hogart, Mrs; Dalzell, Bunbury, 17th Lancers; Cockburne, Vernon, R.E.; H. G. Edwards, Dillon. Lieutenants, R.N.: Brereton, J. Grant Raymond. Captains Macnamara, Lindsay, Gren. Gds.; Everard, 60th Rifles; W. Dillon, Royal Staff Corps; Mills, Stafford, Bunbury, Sackville, 85th Regt.; Adamson, 30th Regt.; J. W. Russell, Adj. Royal Dublin Regt.; Foley, R. Grange, Lucard, Royal Engineers; M. D. White, 6th Dragoon Gds.; Grange, Henderson, Routh, 83rd Regt.; Bunbury, Preston, Bunbury; Montgomery, Grant, Smith, Stuart, 49th Regt.; Annesley, 63rd Regt.; Adams, C. W. Grange, 1st West India Regiment; King, 56th Regt; G. M. Dawson, 14th Dragoons; Croker, J. G. Irvine, C. Massy, Evans, 76th Regt.; G. G. Perry, Hon. Hs; Dalzell, Burdett Riots had also taken place in Luxemburg on the 17th; the purpose of the demonstration appears to have been directed against the Bishop.

The peasant riots in Wurtemberg and Baden have taken a peaceful turn, owing to the judicious co-operation of the feudal lords, the Government and the people. The Prince of Hohenioch-Bechingen, who was reported to have fled, was quietly residing in that town. The reports of the cavalry burnt by the peasants were found to have been greatly exaggerated. The town of Constance was quiet, united with the rest of Germany against a Republic, but demanding "all their brethren of Switzerland."

The principle of the National Parliament has been acknowledged by the Committee of the Diet at Frankfort by a great majority, and the chief points of the national project are agreed to

PORTUGAL

Letters from Lisbon state that the country is quiet, but fears are entertained that with the approach of spring discord and confusion would be again renewed. The British fleet left the Tagus on the 9th, for Cork, leaving the Hove only for diplomatic purposes. The French war-steamer, the Salon, arrived at Lisbon on the 12th, having on board prince de Joinville and the Duke d'Aumale, but they sailed again the next day for England. No salute was fired on their arrival. The English Conservatorial Court has just been extinguished, but there is little doubt, under the altered circumstances of the French Republican Government, that the Queen will not only relax in her unfriendly disposition towards us, but also in the tyrannical oppression exerted upon her own population. It is said that negotiations have already been opened with the leading members of the Liberal party. What with the downfall of Louis Philippe, and the withdrawal of our fleet from the Tagus, the Queen and her favourites, the Cabrals, are described to be in an awful state of alarm.

SPAIN.

We have accounts from Madrid to the 14th. The bill for granting extraordinary powers to the Government passed the Senate on the 12th, by 84 votes to 12. The city was perfectly tranquil.

DENMARK.

The changes which have been for some time expected in the Danish cabinet were officially announced on the 14th instant. M. V. Stemen, Minister of Justice, and President of the Danish Chancery, is to be removed from all his functions on the 1st of April next, and has been appointed Minister of State. Count M. Oersted has been removed, as member of the Danish Chancery and Procurator-General, to the office of private minister of state, and member of the committee for revising the laws of the constitution. M. Von Bardenfleth, Minister of State, has been appointed Minister of Justice and President of the Danish Chancery; and M. Algreenvissing to the post of Procurator-General.

RUSSIA.

Advices to the 11th from St. Petersburg mention that the Emperor has given instructions to the Minister of War to place the troops on a war footing. His Imperial Majesty, it is said, feels bound to adopt the step by the terms of existing treaties with other powers, and, in the event of a necessity arising, for affording all the protection in his power to the claims of legitimacy against the destructive advance of revolutionists and anarchists.

INDIA.

Despatches in anticipation of the Overland Mail have been received; but there is no news of any interest. The country was generally healthy.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

Advices from New York to the 4th instant have been received. Two American men of war had been ordered to Venezuela, to prevent any further attempts at massacre in the Caracas. The Senate was still considering the treaty with Mexico, on which a final vote was to be taken on the 4th instant. It was thought it would be rejected, and commissioners appointed to negotiate the peace on a new basis. Trade was moderately active

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Lord HARDINGE took his seat for the first time.

An address of congratulation was then, on the motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, unanimously voted to her Majesty on the addition of another Princess to the Royal Family.

Lord CAMPBELL, in Lord Denman's absence, laid upon the table of the house a Bill for the Prevention of the Accumulation of Actions in Courts of Law

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY

Lord J. RUSSELL moved an address of congratulation to her Majesty on the birth of another Princess.—The motion, which was seconded by Sir R. PEEL, was carried unanimously.

WAYS AND MEANS.—THE INCOME TAX.

On the motion that the report from the Committee of Ways and Means be brought up,

Mr. HUME observed that he would offer no further opposition at present to the progress of the bill for continuing the Income Tax; but he hoped that, when it was read a second time, the Government would consent to refer it to a select committee, for the purpose of inquiring into the best mode of depriving the tax of its inquisitorial character.

Mr. SLANEY was in favour of the Income Tax on principle; and it was because he was so that he implored the Government to modify it in some way or other, so as to make it press more justly on all classes

Sir DE LACY EVANS concurred in the suggestion of Mr. Hume, and expressed himself to the effect that the Government had been intimidated into the proposal of the bill containing the tax in its present shape.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER assured the House that in no respect had the Government been intimidated into proposing the bill containing the alleged inequalities of the Income Tax. He (Sir J. Graham) had given the subject the best attention in his power. He did not mean to say that there was not something plausible in the scheme for its modification which had been adverted to, but the more that he had investigated into the whole subject, the less able was he to divine any plan which would not lead to injustices still more gross than those which were complained of in the present form. He was still ready, however, to give every consideration in his power to any plan for its modification which might be submitted

After a few words from Dr. BOWRING,

Mr. COBDEN, in reply to a remark which had fallen from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to the effect that the Income Tax was levied in this country in the same way as in foreign countries, observed that in no other country was there an Income Tax at all; in proof of which he cited the authority of M'Gregor. There were some foreign countries in which direct taxation was levied to a large amount, but where was other country but this in the civilized world, in which a tax was levied upon profits

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, on the same authority as was relied upon by Mr. Cobden, replied that in the State of South Carolina a tax upon trade and profits was levied.

Mr. HORSMAN said that the Government, in alleging that no plan could be devised by which the present vexatious features of the Income Tax could be removed, put itself in collision with the public at large. It was unnecessary for the satisfaction of the Government would listen to the suggestion to submit the bill to the inquiry of a select committee.

Mr. M'GREGOR admitted that in the state of South Carolina, for local purposes, a tax upon trades and profits was levied. In Frankfort the Senate had power, in certain cases, to demand a similar tax, and the same might be said of Hamburg, Bremen, and Lubeck. He admitted the difficulties which existed in the way of a proper modification of the tax; but there was no reason to believe that such modification was impossible, and he hoped that the Government would not shrink from attempting it

Mr. BERNAL next took the opportunity briefly to explain his reasons for supporting the Income Tax.

Lord J. RUSSELL would not then discuss the question of submitting the bill to a select committee, but he must remind the House that if it would soon present itself. If the objections to the Income Tax were so wide spread as Mr Horsman represented them to be, he much feared that discontent would not be put an end to, even were the honourable and learned gentleman's own favourite modification of it accepted.

Mr. S. CRAWFORD protested, in the name of his constituents, against the tax, in its present form

The report was then received, and leave was given to bring in a bill founded thereon.

SUPPLY. NAVAL ESTIMATES.

The House then resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. WARD, in moving a vote of £1,425,308 to cover the expense of a naval force of 37,500 men, 7,000 boys, and 13,500 marines 43,000 in all—addressed the Committee at some length, in vindication of the estimates of the present year, and held out hopes that reductions to the extent of £656,853 might be effected in framing them for the next and future years.

Mr. HUME treated the motion for any more money as a breach of faith on the part of the Government with the House, the understanding having been that no more money would be asked for until the Committee on the Estimates had reported to the House Besides, he was about to move as an amendment a reduction in the number of men; and he did not see how he could move such an amendment to a vote for a grant of money. The usual mode of proceeding was first to vote the number of men.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER observed, that it was not customary to vote the number of men in Committee. Mr Hume's course, in these circumstances, was to move for reduction in the sum to be voted for the wages of the men

Mr. GLADSTONE did not agree with the right honourable gentleman, and quoted the journals of last year to show that a vote of the number of men required had preceded the vote for the sum to be granted for their wages

Sir J. GRAHAM concurred with Mr. Gladstone, and expressed his surprise that the estimates, as this year presented to the House, involved a departure from the usual practice in framing them.

Mr. COBBETT confirmed the suggestion of Mr. Gladstone, by observing that the custom was to vote the number of men before a sum was voted for the wages

After some further conversation,

Mr. WARD admitted that a mistake had been committed, for which he alone was to blame, by accidentally submitting the one vote before the other

Sir JAMES GRAHAM then asked what the vote was which was really before the Committee?

Mr. BERNAL read to the effect, that 43,000 men be employed on sea service (Laughter.)

Mr. HUME observed, that that was as it should be, and proceeded to attack the estimates generally, and the vote in particular, maintaining that, as we were at peace with all the world, and as there was no immediate prospect of war, great reductions should and could safely be made. If the economists were far in favour of reduced expenditure, the conduct of Mr. Ward was more meritorious than a glorious, as he did, by disarming peace. Reduction, so far as our naval establishments went, depended upon a reduction in the number of men. A reduction of 15,000 men might be effected in all, but the most moderate which he then wished to submit was to reduce the number of men to 43,000 to 36,000. Had the estimates not been increased during the last few years, we might have done without the Income Tax altogether, and been now all the richer by its amount. He concluded by moving his amendment.

Mr. COBBETT defended the estimates of the late Government, and hoped that the Committee would support the motion submitted by the Government in preference to the amendment.

Mr. B. COCHRANE based his opposition to the amendment upon the present aspect of affairs in Europe.

After a few words from Mr. AGLIONBY and Mr. C. BERCH,

Sir JAMES GRAHAM observed, that the decision of the Committee on the occasion was fraught with great and mighty consequences, and he hoped that no passing considerations of minor importance would lead them to an erroneous decision. The right hon. gentleman then, in reply to some structures which he could had fallen from Mr. Ward, upon the administration of the Admiralty when he himself was First Lord, under the Government of Earl Grey, defended that administration, drawing a broad line of distinction between "prudent parsimony" and "prodigal expenditure." Mr. Ward seemed to contend that because the expenditure in former years had been large, it should be continued at a large figure now. But if it was large during the time when the late Government was in power, it should be borne in mind that Government found the Chinese war dragging its slow length along on coming into office, and also a serious misunderstanding arose with the Government of France; and that in 1846 a similar misunderstanding occurred with America. If the naval expenditure was then large, there were reasons why it had been made so. It was always the duty of a Government to state to the House all the grounds on which it required a certain amount of force. The vote of the force demanded was in some degree a vote of confidence. As to the circumstances under which he (Sir J. Graham) was demanded, he had no objection to giving his individual opinion as a private member of the House To France a large standing army was necessary as a means of defence, and her possession of it was not justly a cause of jealousy to Great Britain. But, on the other hand, great naval preparations, on the part of France, she having no distant colonies to defend, did not appear to him in the light of a defensive policy, but of an offensive one. He would remind the close attention of the Executive Government of this country, and the public attention of its representatives The misunderstanding which had arisen in 1844 between the two countries had ultimately, from a variety of circumstances, almost ripened into a national hostility. Immense additions were made to the outlays of France upon her naval force. In such circumstances he thought British Government would have neglected its duty if it had not made preparations of defence adequate to those of an offensive character being made on the other side of the Channel France had at this moment great means of attack. The assailant had always the advantage in concentrating his force, and unless Great Britain stood at the head of the maritime powers, at all times and in all circumstances, of being able to meet her national independence would not be fought on the seas, but within the limits of our native land. When Lord John Russell proposed the estimates a month ago, the force demanded did not appear to him to be excessive. Under the altered circumstances of the present moment, could it be considered so? But he entreated the Government not to be now dragged into a discussion of these circumstances If it would have been unwise a month ago to have diminished the naval force, this was certainly not the moment when the right arm of the country should be paralyzed or shortened in the slightest degree. He hoped the Government would not be driven to state all their reasons for resisting the amendment; but he was sure that if they (the Government) resisted it manfully, the House would support them. Whilst he had no hesitation in maintaining the present number of men, he was not willing to take Mr. Ward's view of the case, and say that large reductions might not be made in some departments of the Admiralty. Mr. Cobden and others had thrown out hints with the distribution of our squadrons, and particularly with the large squadron which had been lying in the Tagus. But they had the authority of Nelson himself to the effect that the Tagus was the best station for us to lay, even for the purpose of home defence. He (Sir J Graham) could not consider a fleet in the Tagus but as one equally available for the Channel as for the Mediterranean. Enormous expense was perhaps unnecessarily incurred on the coast of Africa, and expense had, in his opinion, been very unnecessarily incurred by the presence of a large squadron in the Rio Plata. He thought, on the whole, that, without endangering our defence, or dishonourable, a great saving might be effected. But, as to the present vote, he could not consent to a diminution of the number of men, when he considered the existing state of affairs, both at home and abroad.

After some observations from Lord SEYMOUR and Lord INGESTRE, in opposition to the amendment,

Mr. COBDEN entered his protest against the doctrine that the Executive Government was alone responsible for the estimates and expenditure on the navy. The responsibility lay with the House. He also protested against the proposition, that the House should not be informed of all the circumstances which induced the Government to demand a certain amount of force. Step by step had the expenditure been increased; the Government taking advantage of every opportunity for increasing it, but no opportunity ever occurred for a reduction The hon. gentleman then proceeded to expose what he termed the "stale pretence that our navy protected our commerce." The navy estimates were less than common which had all the profits made by our shipowners. As to the political part of the question, he observed that France, in measuring her naval power, took ours as the standard In this respect England, by the constant increase of her establishments, had impelled France, step by step, to increase hers, and when the Government here was called upon to reduce, it pointed to the conduct of France as an justification for enormous outlays. The two Governments were playing at a game of which children might be ashamed. The two Governments should arrest their progress in this respect, by dealing frankly with each other, and mutually reducing their armaments. He would be glad, even if there existed desire at head-quarters to reduce expenditure The whole expenditure of America, during a time of war, was only two-thirds of the expenditure of this country on the navy, army, and ordnance alone, in a time of peace. If the expenditure now meditated were voted, he was ready to impose [illegible] upon all those who had incomes of £150 a year and upwards; so that no further taxation should fall upon the working classes. The heavy burdens laid upon the people were the primary cause of the revolutions which were now sweeping over Europe. One great danger lay in our financial difficulties—a danger enhanced by the Bank movements carried on between the Government and the Bank of England. Our financial difficulties had nothing to do with a falling revenue, but with an inordinate expenditure.

Admiral DUNDAS, in reply to Mr. Cobden's sp[illegible]s at Manchester some months ago, reflecting upon the navy, and containing charges which he partly repeated in his speech just delivered, read a letter from Admiral Sir Thomas Hastings, set forth an explanation from Mr Cobden, in which he retracted his charges, and defied the Government to disprove them.

After a few words from Colonel TYNTE,

Lord PALMERSTON observed that he did not rise to defend the navy, as "the blood of Douglas could protect itself." In addressing himself to the question before the House, the noble Lord defended the Government from the charge of exacting an inordinate and unnecessary expenditure in proposing to maintain the force at present at the disposal of the Government. The extent of our commerce and of our colonial possessions was such as to require a large naval force for their protection; and he protested against the doctrine of Mr. Cobden, that the navy was of no material service in this respect. If the honourable gentleman's argument was correct, that the navy was useless, because our squadrons were sometimes lying apparently idle in certain ports, it would be equally so against the army and police whom we saw around us, and who were not always engaged in the avocations for which they were maintained. He would tell the honourable gentleman that the navy of this country was of great utility, not only to it, but to the interests of mankind at peace, although that navy was not always employed in hostile operations. And although the honourable gentleman seemed to think that there was no danger in the present state of affairs, because the ploughman and the weaver did not dread invasion, there were others, more competent to judge, who did; and in these circumstances it was most likely that this country would strip itself of its protection, and rely exclusively on the paltry pretences in this respect of Free Trade, the sound doctrines of which he had frequently defended. (Hear.) In adverting to the present state of Europe, the noble Lord observed that, if any reasoning man had thought, some weeks ago, that the force thus proposed was greater than the circumstances of the public service required, he could no longer think so The future was big with events, which he trusted would not be of a gloomy character; and whatever influence the British Government could exert, would be exerted in favour of peace. And so long as the future was big with uncertainty, he thought that no rational man could wish that our force should be reduced below its present standard. In attempting to influence others in favour of peace, they must show, not that they were seeking it out of timidity or fear, but that they sought it for its own sake, and for the interests of humanity it was the desire of the Government not only that this country should enjoy the blessings of peace, but that the whole world should participate in its advantages.

After a few words from Captain HARRIS, who [illegible] Sweden as the "Paradise of the Duke of Wellington,"

Mr. BRIGHT supported the amendment.

Mr. DRUMMOND said that if they listened to the advice of the free-traders, they would introduce into the army and navy those pernicious principles which had ruined us in every other way

After a few words from Sir H. VERNEY, and from Mr. HUME in reply

The committee divided, and the numbers were—

| | |
|---|---|
| For the amendment | 38 |
| Against it | 347 |
| Majority against | 309 |

The resolution was then agreed to.

The House resumed, and, after disposing of the remaining business, adjourned

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Encumbered Estates (Ireland) Bill went through committee

The Audit of Accounts (Railways) Bill, were also through committee

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

THE EX-ROYAL FAMILY OF FRANCE.—Lord PALMERSTON, in reply to a question put to him by Captain Charteris, observed that there was no foundation for the statement that a communication had taken place, on behalf of her Majesty's Government, with the Provisional Government of France, in regard to the reception given here to the Royal Family of that country. Lord Normanby had conveyed to him in a private letter the intelligence that some misapprehension and jealousy were likely to arise in France, in regard to the reception given, not to the Royal Family, but to the late Ministers of the Crown, in this country. He had, therefore, in another private letter, desired Lord Normanby, in case any feeling in reference to the matter should manifest itself, to assure the Provisional Government that the reception given to those parties would be such, and such only, as was always given by this country to man under such circumstances—a reception of hospitality, suitable to their condition, but that, in dealing with the French Government, her Majesty's Government would act fairly, honourably, and openly, and that in no circumstances would there be reason to suppose that it was engaged in any intrigues against the Government of France. The noble Lord then, in reply to a question put by Lord Dudley Stuart, said that no communication whatever had been made by the French Government to the Government of this country, in reference to any rumours which might have gone abroad as to certain intrigues in which the Duke and Duchess de Montpensier might have been engaged. Nor had he heard that any correspondence affecting the character or conduct of those personages had been discovered by the French Government, or by any other parties; at all events, no intimation of any kind to that effect had been made to his Government by this country. With regard to the departure of the Duke and Duchess, it was entirely the result of their own choice; and so far from that departure being the consequence of any communication made to them by her Majesty's Government, the House must see that there might have been many reasons why it might have been desirable that they had staid here instead of going away. To another question, put by Lord Dudley Stuart, the noble Lord observed, that the only information of which the Government was in possession from Vienna, was to the effect that Prince Metternich had ceased to be the Foreign Minister of the empire. Beyond that, the Government had received no information whatever

TREATIES WITH BRAZIL.—In answer to Lord G. Bentinck, Lord PALMERSTON stated that the last official despatches received from Lord Howden, from Rio Janeiro, informed the Government that the result of the negotiations with the Brazilian Government had led him to despair of concluding either a commercial or a slave treaty with Brazil. In a later written immediately afterwards, he observed, that he still entertained hopes that a change of opinion might yet take place in Brazil At the same time he (Lord Palmerston) could not hold out to the House any strong expectation of obtaining such treaties in the present state of feeling in Brazil The Brazilians seemed to be averse to entering into treaties with European powers, and seemed to think that Great Britain was so dependent upon the trade of Brazil, that she would submit to any terms as the price of a commercial treaty.

Mr. MOSCKTON MILNES then proceeded to call the attention of the House to the injuries alleged to have been suffered by Mr Bayard, an English merchant, from the Austrian authorities at Constantinople, but in so doing the House was counted out.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House of Commons sat from noon to six o'clock.

IRELAND.—Mr. F. SCROPE directed attention to certain transactions which took place in Galway, at the commencement of the year, attended with the destruction of several houses, the property of landowners, and the calling of several of the persons ejected. The Hon. Member asked if any proceedings had been taken against the parties who caused this unfortunate occurrence? Sir GEORGE GREY said that the parties were not open to legal proceedings, and therefore none had been instituted against them.

Mr. PUSEY postponed, for three weeks, the second reading of his Agricultural Tenant Right Bill, after a short discussion

LANDLORD AND TENANT (IRELAND)

Mr. SHARMAN CRAWFORD moved the second reading of the Outgoing Tenants (Ireland) Bill.

Mr. [illegible]ALWNY opposed the Bill, and moved, as an amendment, that it be read a [illegible] time that day six months.

Mr. [illegible] POWER supported the bill, which he believed would produce good results, [illegible] and in principle.

Mr. HUME also supported the bill

Sir W. SOMERVILLE opposed the measure, which he considered would prove unfair in its operation if carried into law, and which was calculated to hold out hopes that would not be realised.

Mr. E. J. BOOKER was willing to assent to the second reading of the bill, but without pledging himself to its details.

Mr. B. HALL said that such a bill would be unnecessary if the Irish landlords would do their duty. The honourable Baronet read the landlords and the Repealers one of his usual lectures.

Mr. SADLEIR had several objections to the bill, but would vote for the second reading, in order that it might be referred, together with the bill brought in by the Government, and that introduced by Mr. Drummond, to a Select Committee

Mr. CALLAGHAN supported the bill.

The debate was then adjourned.

DERBY ELECTION.—The Chairman of the Derby Election Committee reported that the Hon. Edward Stanley, and the Hon. J. Leveson Gower were not duly elected, and that they had been guilty of bribery by their agents

The report of the Committee of supply was brought up and received.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

CRIMINAL LAW.—Lord CAMPBELL laid upon the table a bill for the amendment of the criminal law. One of the objects of the bill was to enable the Coroner to admit parties charged with manslaughter to bail in cases in which he now deem it proper to do so.

NEW BISHOPS.—Lord STANLEY, in reference to the bill which had passed last session, authorising the formation of new Bishoprics, said that he believed the arrangement between the Government and the heads of the church was that four new Bishops should be appointed, and it was so stated in the preamble of the bill, as it was originally introduced into their Lordships' House, although the usual words had been struck out in the House of Commons, the Prime Minister having at the same time pledged himself to appoint three new Bishops in addition to the Bishop of Manchester, so soon as Lord should see funds for the endowment of those new sees By the recent decease of the Archbishops of York and Canterbury, a great addition had been made to the fund, and he asked, therefore, if the Government adhered to that arrangement, and if they intended to proceed to the appointment of the new Bishops without delay. The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said that the Government still adhered to the agreement alluded to by the noble Lord; and whenever the means appeared to be sufficient for the purpose, it would be for her Majesty to determine what new Bishop should be appointed. The noble Lord well knew that there were several Bishops whose incomes were lower than the sums fixed by the Ecclesiastical Commission, and certainly they had a claim to have their incomes raised to the average before any new Bishops should be appointed

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY

HORSHAM ELECTION.—Lord COURTENAY brought up the report of the Horsham Election Committee, unseating Mr. John Jervis

HORSHAM ELECTION.—Mr. MACKENZIE proposed "That Mr. Speaker do issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new writ for the electing of a burgess to serve in this present Parliament for the borough of Horsham, in the room of John Arkwright, Esq., whose election has been determined to be void."—Mr. BLACKSTONE moved, as an amendment, "That leave be given to introduce a bill to extend the limits of the borough, which is now a mere nominal right of election." (Hear, hear.) After a short discussion the House divided, negativing the amendment by a majority of 195 to 64. On the question that the writ do issue, the House again divided, affirming the motion by a majority of 192 to 73. The writ was accordingly ordered to be issued.

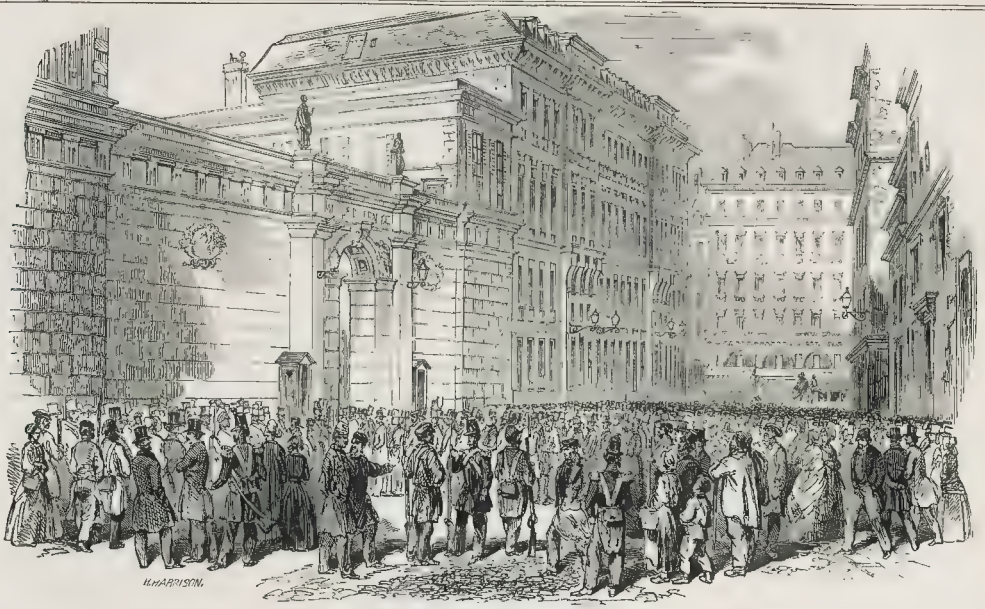
HORSHAM ELECTION. The issuing of the writ was postponed until the evidence of the Select Committee was laid before the House.

GAME LAWS.—Mr. BRIGHT moved for leave to bring in a Bill to repeal the Game Laws. Mr. COWAN seconded the motion.—In the course of a tedious debate which followed, Sir G. Grey opposed the motion. He thought that the Game Laws had been established; the evil was shown to be the undue preservation, and consequent accumulation of game; and if the hon. member had limited his measure to that object, he might have effected something, but in its present state the measure would not accomplish the object the hon. member had in view.—Mr. J. PAGE WOOD supported the motion.—Mr. S. THORNELY moved the adjournment of the debate, which, on a division, was lost by a majority of 87 to 82. Dr. BOWRING then moved the adjournment of the House, which was immediately carried, the effect of that motion being to defer the night's sitting on the question to a future day.

STEAMERS FOR THE TURKISH GOVERNMENT.—On Saturday last, two splendid steamers, of about 400 tons each, built for the Turkish Government, by Messrs. Wigram, launched from their building-yard at Cowes, in the presence of a fashionable assemblage, and many foreigners of distinction.

COAL-PIT ACCIDENT.—A man named Samuel Standing, a collier, died on Wednesday from the effects of being burnt at Lady Shore Colliery. It appears that, a short time since, Standing and his son, about, were at work in a portion of the mine in which there was a rope for the purpose of ventilation. Unfortunately, the man threw his shirt over the pipe in such a manner as to render it ineffectual. A quantity of foul air consequently accumulated around the parties, and, by the light of a candle, with which they were working, ignited, and [illegible] them severely. The lad is expected to recover

DARING ROBBERY. A robbery of a most daring kind took place on the morning of the 22nd instant, on the premises of Messrs. James Murray and Co., the chemical manufacturers, 36, Cornhill. The thieves having obtained entrance to the second flat, which is used as a manufactory, carried off a large quantity of ornamental work, consisting of gold and silver cases, &c., amounting in value to some hundred pounds, and although the premises adjoin on the premises, with so little noise was it managed, that he knew nothing of it until the morning



THE BANK OF FRANCE, RUE DE VRILLIERE, PARIS.

THE BANK OF FRANCE.

THE important intelligence of the suspension of cash payments by the Bank of France was given in our journal of last week. Our Artist has depicted "the pressure from without" (to use a phrase of our own) which beset the edifice during the run.

The Bank of France stands in, and occupies one side of, the Rue de la Vrillière. It was formerly the hotel of the Count de Toulouse, and was erected by Mansard, for the Duke de la Vrillière, in 1720. It is in the stately architectural style of that period: the entrance is under a gateway flanked with Ionic pillars, and surmounted by statues; and the general plan of the edifice is a court surrounded with buildings. It contains several spacious apartments, which were formerly gorgeously decorated. Some fine easel pictures of the Galerie Dorée, formed by the Count de Toulouse, were destroyed at the Revolution; but the ceiling, which is very beautiful, remains.

The Bank was formed in 1803, by a law which gave it the exclusive privilege of issuing notes payable to the bearer at sight, until the 31st of December, 1867. It has fifteen branch banks in the Departments, and one at Algiers.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

THE forthcoming election of officers of the National Guard, and the proposed changes in the distinctive character of that force, have suggested the annexed Illustration.

The National Guard of the department of the Seine consists of twelve legions of infantry, for the twelve arrondissements of Paris, and four legions for the banlieue; one legion of cavalry for Paris, and two squadrons for the first and second, and half a squadron for the third, of the banlieue. The total force of the National Guard, though variable, may be stated at fully fifty-six thousand men. The artillery of the National Guard, which was disbanded in 1832, has not been reorganised.

We perceive, by the Moniteur, that, taking into consideration the great services rendered at various times by the National Guard in defence of the country, the Government has come to the following decision:—"The commandants of the stationary and moveable National Guards of the Seine shall be allowed to have a seat and a voice at each meeting of the National Defence Commission, whenever that commission shall be called to deliberate upon questions relative to the service and to the employment of the National Guards."

The illustration shows the several ranks. The uniform is blue, with red braid, &c.

THE WEATHER.

WITH the exception of parts of Saturday and Wednesday, the week has been distinguished by rain falling very generally, once mixed with sleet. A dense fog prevailed on Sunday morning. The temperature of the air has been somewhat below the average for the season.

The following are some particulars of each day:—Thursday, the sky was overcast all day, and rain was falling generally; the direction of the wind was N., from N.N.E. to N.W.; the average temperature of the air for the day was 41½°. Friday, the sky was overcast throughout the day; rain was falling nearly all the day, and at times it was mixed with sleet; the wind was variable—it was first S.W., next S.S.E., and then E.S.E.; the average temperature for the day was 40½°. Saturday, the sky was, for the most part, covered by cloud, till towards the evening; it was free from cloud at night; the direction of the wind was E., with slight variations; and the average temperature for the day was 45°. Sunday, till near 10 A.M., a dense fog prevailed; after this time, the sky was cloudless for some little time; during the afternoon and evening, a large quantity of scud passed rapidly from the west; the evening was partially clear, and the several phases of the eclipse of the moon preceding totality were generally visible, during the time of totality, the sky was cloudy, and heavy rain was falling for a considerable time; after this, the sky was for the most part clear, and the several phases of the eclipse following totality were visible. The sky was partially clear for a few minutes before the moon began to shine out perfectly, but during the time her full orb was plainly visible, and it was of a deep red colour; the prevailing direction of the wind during the day was S.S.W., and its average temperature was 40°. Monday, the appearance of the sky was variable, and at times rain was falling heavily; some streamers of an aurora borealis were visible during the evening; the directions of the wind were S.W. and S.E.; the average temperature for the day was 42°. Tuesday, the sky was for the most part overcast till after noon, and rain was falling generally; the evening and night were clear; the direction of the wind was W. and S.W.; and the average temperature for the day was 38½°. Wednesday, the sky was cloudless till after noon, and for the most part cloudy afterwards, with occasional light rain; the morning was very fine; the direction of the wind S.S.W.; and the average temperature of the day was 42½°, and that for the week ending this day was 41½°.

The following are the extreme thermometrical readings for each day:—

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Thursday, | March 16, the highest during the day was 45½ deg., and the lowest was 3 | | | deg |
| Friday, | March 17, | 44 | | 36½ |
| Saturday, | March 18, | 55 | | 35 |
| Sunday, | March 19, | 51 | | 29 |
| Monday, | March 20, | 50½ | | 30½ |
| Tuesday, | March 21, | 44½ | | 32 |
| Wednesday, | March 22, | 53 | | 31½ |

Blackheath, Thursday, March 23, 1848. J. G

CAPORAL DE VOLTIGEURS. CHEF DE BATAILLON. SOUS-LIEUTENANT DE CHASSEURS. CAPITAINE DE GRENADIERS. CHASSEUR. GRENADIER.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

SKETCHES FROM THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.—BY GAVARNI.

GARDE MOBILE.

GARDE MOBILE.

PARISIAN TYPES, BY GAVARNI.

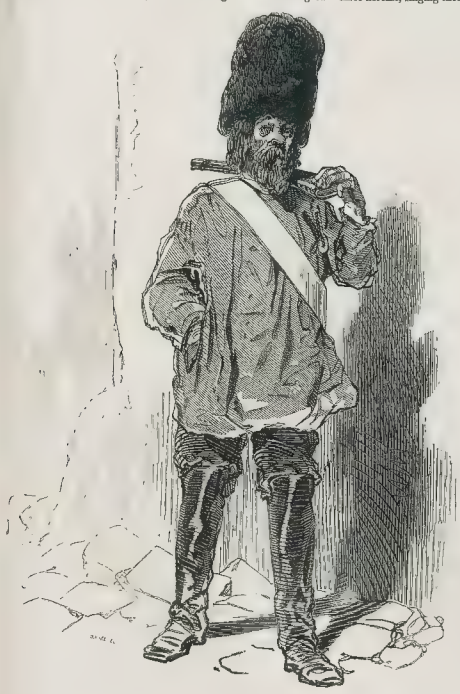
ANY convulsion in a great city brings to the surface types of society seldom seen at any other time; and it exhibits those familiar to all under new aspects. The pencil of Gavarni has fixed a few of these human phenomena, some of whom are known in Paris to turn up whenever any fighting is going on, and disappear again into inscrutable depths when all is over: they build a barricade, fire from behind it with military precision; and when a throne is upset they come for no reward. They pay their debt to their country, and never ask for a receipt. The "armed workman" is one of this class; he had the smallest conceivable interest in the Reform Banquet, and was tolerably ignorant of the political wickedness of Guizot—not being a reader of the National. But a comrade was shot down in the Boulevard des Capucins; and when the news reached the Rue St. Denis, that was enough. A barricade grew across the road as by magic, the stones seemed to start out of their beds and pile themselves in a heap. In a twinkling, the sovereignty of Louis Philippe had ceased to exist for the hundred yards of Paris that he took charge of. He was not quite satisfied that all was safe for a day or so, and stood sentinel over his barricade, ready for service if wanted, but it was not required. He heard the Republic proclaimed, and laid down his musket. He is now busy "organising labour" with Louis Blanc.

The Garde Mobile is a force that has grown out of the late revolt. It is an addition to the National Guard at present, but will soon be mixed with the line. The gamin in the blouse was one of the first enrolled; he has done post duty, and is very proud of his profession—not having seen much of it; he requires a little improvement from drill. He thinks the great occupation of life is to walk in a troop three abreast, singing the Marseillaise, for the advancement of humanity. He has a franc and a half a day or walking about Paris with a card in his cap with a number on it. It was a notable expedient of the Republic, with heavy debts and no cash, to begin with taking thirty thousand of our friends into pay: but he quite approves of the policy, being a receiver of taxes, not a payer. His horoscope it is difficult to cast: it is possible he may become a General; but, as the casuists say, the contrary is possible also. It is not improbable that, like thousands before him, he will die with a Prussian bullet in his breast, in some battle about the frontier of the Rhine. His companion in the Garde is from a higher, but not a better class of society; many hopeless roturiers have taken refuge in this wholesale enrolment: the son of the workman is rather to be trusted than these, who defy classification. The other sketches are but varieties of the type to which the workman above described belongs.



GARDE MOBILE.

ARMED WORKMAN.

UNDER the SANC[TION] of Her Most Gracious Majesty, THE QUEEN HER MAJ[ESTY'S] DISTRESSED ARTISAN'S [FUND].

HEATHE.—EXTRA NIGHT for the BENEFIT of [Mr.] Mr. Harley, on Monday, March 20

PATRONS

Her Most Gracious Majesty THE QUEEN
His Royal Highness PRINCE ALBERT QUEEN ADELAIDE

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent
His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge
Her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland
Her Grace the Duchess of Norfolk
Her Grace the Duchess of Montrose
Her Grace the Duchess of Leeds
His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, K G
His Grace the Duke of Somerset, K G
His Grace the Duke of Sutherland, K G
His Grace the Duke of Norfolk
His Grace the Duke of Montrose
His Grace the Duke of Leeds
The Archbishop of Canterbury
The Marchioness of Allesbury
The Marchioness of Sligo
The Marquis of Clanricarde
The Marquis of Lansdowne, K G
The Marquis of Allesbury
The Marquis of Ailsa
The Marquis of Huntley
The Marquis of [illegible]
Marquis [illegible]
Sir George Wombwell, Bart
Her Excellency the Baroness Brunnow
His Excellency Baron Brunnow
His Excellency Prince Castoniski
His Excellency Count Kielmansegge
His Excellency Count Revel
His Excellency Baron Bentinck
His Excellency Le Marquis Lisbon
The Countess Delawarr
The Countess of Jersey
The Earl Delawarr
The Earl of Lonsdale
Earl of Cardigan
Earl of Eglinton

The Right Hon the Lord Chamberlain
The Viscount [illegible]
The Viscountess Palmerston
The Lady Ernest Bruce
The Lady Charlotte Grey
Lady Peel
Lady Wedderburn
The Right Hon Lord John Russell, M P
The Right Hon Lord Morpeth, M P
The Right Hon the Lord Mayor
Lord Norreys, M P
Lord Sandys
Lord Marcus Hill
General Lord Aylmer
Lord Ernest Bruce
Lord Adolphus FitzClarence
Lord Charles
The Right Hon Sir R Peel, Bart M P
Sir Archibald Macdonald, Bart.
General Sir Alexander Woodford
Sir John Guest, Bart, M P
Sir John Shaw, Bart
Sir [illegible] Bart
M [illegible] Esq
[illegible] Esq
[illegible] Macdonald
The Hon D Ashley
General Upton
C W Packe Esq, M P
R Brandley, Esq, M P
John Stewart, Esq, M P
Gilbert de Burgh, Esq
Mr de Aberle
A Green, Esq
R Paradise, Esq
G Cornwall, Esq
John Collett, Esq
J Ewart, Esq
John Cavan, Esq
Horatio Twining, Esq

It is respectfully announced that the PERFORMANCE will TAKE PLACE on THURSDAY next, March 23. The Subscription Lists being now closed, their coverage on this occasion, are respectfully requested to address their applications to the Secretary, at the Box-office, as early as possible. A further List of Patrons, with details of the Performances, will be published [illegible]

Private Tickets (of which a limited number only be issued) can be had at the Box-office, as usual, [illegible] each

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 26.—Third Sunday in Lent. Prince George William born.
MONDAY, 27.—Mars rises N.E. by E. Midway between N.W. by N., and the N.W. points of the horizon at 1h. 8m. A.M.
TUESDAY, 28.—The Moon enters her last quarter at 1h. 12m. A.M.
WEDNESDAY, 29.—Jupiter souths at 6h. 21m. P.M., and sets at 2h. 40m. A.M.
THURSDAY, 30 The Sun rises at 5h. 40m., and sets at 6h. 38m.
FRIDAY, 31.—Venus rises at 4h. 57. A.M. Day breaks at 3h. 41m., and twilight ends at 8h. 59m
SATURDAY, April 1. The length of the Day is 12h. 57m. The length of the Day is 6h. 12m. longer than on 11 is shortest Day.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 1

| Sunday | Monday | Tuesday | Wednesday | Thursday | Friday | Saturday |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| M A | M A | M A | M A | M A | M A | M A |
| h m h m | h m h m | h m h m | h m h m | h m h m | h m h m | h m h m |
| 0 [illegible] | 1 [illegible] | 2 [illegible] | 3 [illegible] | 4 [illegible] | 5 [illegible] | 6 [illegible] |

* * During the morning of Saturday there will be no high tide

TO CORRESPONDENTS

"J. O. S."—PHIZ is the nom artistique of Mr. Hablot Browne.

"Rose" may purchase plain Utrecht velvets at Waterloo House, Cockspur-street.

"Clarinda" may find a memoir of Joseph Brooks in a late No. of "Bentley's Miscellany"

"A H"—Inquire of any music-seller.

"Dirk. Wetzell. We are not aware of the Rifle Corps Instructions have been [illegible]

"W. J. B."—Ebley-by-Stroud, Gunhird. We shall be glad to see the Sketches

"A. G. L."—Booth's "Principles of Engl sh Composition," and "Lindley's Botany," are sound works

"J. H. Glasop"—See the Illustrations of the Conway Tubular Bridge, in our Journal for March 11. See "Mackenzie's Emigrant's Guide to Australia," (Orr and Co.) Jordan's Carriage Machinery has been often described

"A. B. C."—The President steam-ship sailed from New York for England in March, 1841. Her precise fare remains to this day a mucl-talked mystery.

"Inflatesmus."—The Title-page and Index to Vol. XI. were given in our Journal for Jan 8, 1848

"Anthropos," and "A Warbler."—The music of the "Marseillaise Hymn" may now be had of most music-sellers for 3d.

"Montgomery" may hear about the Raphael Morghen Etching at Messrs. Smiths', Prentice-lye, Lisle-street, Leicester-square

"G. L. V."—We do not know the hour of the birth of the Count de Paris; the day was August 24, 1838

"T. M. R."—Consult the little work on Backgammon, published by Bell, Fleet-street.

"Cosa entola"—informs us that Madame Grisi made her début at her Majesty's Theatre, in 1832, during Monck Mason's management Another Correspondent writes the date of the début April 8, 1834, as Norma, in "La Gazza Ladra"

"H. G. Mortimer"—should apply to the news-agent respecting the missing papers.

"An Enquiring Mind."—Prince Albert's brother, Ernest Augustus, present Duke of Saxe Coburg Gotha, married, the 3rd May, 1842, the Princess Alexandrina Louisa Amelia Frederica Elizabeth Sophia, daughter of Leopold, Grand Duke of Baden

"E. P."—If by "lawful heir" our correspondent means "legitimate heir" to the throne of France, there can be no question that the Duke of Bordeaux is such heir. The Duke, or, as he is termed by his supporters, Henry V., King of France and Navarre, represents the elder branch of the House of Bourbon, and is the union of a Royal house, one of the most ancient in the world.

"ΦΙΛΟΔΗΜΟΣ."—The address is 224, Regent-street.

"J. A. M., near Huddersfield, is assured that with every copy of our Journal for [illegible] 1848, was given an engravation of the Battle of Aliwal

"An Old Subscriber," Wolverhampton.—Mr. Yearsley, M.R.C.S., Saville Row.

"J. P. H."—We cannot explain the "turnabout" in question

"Rhyde Ferrer," Bristol. We cannot send such a number after

"I. J. S., Guernsey, and "Apostrophe to England." Insipid.

"B. I., Manchester." By the 95 Geo. III., c. 41, Hawkers and Pedlars are to pay an annual license duty of £4. if they travel with a team of burthen, £2 extra.

"Rookes."—We have not room for the song

"R. H.," Hemyngall.—A reply has been already received

"Peter O. H."—A word of sufficient consolation may be uttered as a defence to an action on a bill We cannot speak as to the identity of the Sydney Mail, of February 29, with the vessel reported lost in the "Shipping Gazette" of March 9.

"P. I. S."—This is a great mistake, which we probably shall notice hereafter.

"A Subscriber."—Consult the lately published "Life in India," as to the mode of obtaining appointments under the East India Company.

"J. T. N.," Norwich.—The Bee-Keeper's Manual

"J. B. S.," Warwick, is thanked for the information. The subject is in the Engraver's hands

"R. S. H."—He do not deem the alteration practicable

"J. W. J." Waterford.—The price of the Lithograph is ten shillings.—Ackermann.

"E. J. Whitby."—Subscribing for our Journal for any period are charged only the original price. Odd numbers are, however, charged 1d., beyond a month from their date

"L. P."—We have not room

"T. C." Tunbridge.—Wells, will find a receipt for clarifying quills in the "Cyclopædia of Practical Receipts"

"L. L. L."—Albany is one hundred and seventy miles west of Albany, in the State of New York. The postage of our Journal, if sent there, is 2d.

"E. W. M."—Our Journal may be sent free to India, via Southampton.

"Inexpertus."—Newspapers may be sent, free of postage to the British West Indies, if posted within seven days of publication.

"Onward Bound."—The mails from Southampton for India are made up on the 1st and 15th of every month

"Miss Nimrods."—The cost of purchasing and keeping a pack of harriers depends so entirely on circumstances, that, without some specification, it would be absurd to attempt the required estimate. Twenty couples, constituting a well-known pack, of purebreds are plenty, will command a ready sale without customers, they will often fetch nothing at Tattersall's. The number of horses will depend upon the number of days they hunt in the week. The data may be compounded for, or paid as much per couple. Send your data.

BOOKS RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK

The Fisherman's Text-book.——Part I. by Sir E. L. Bulwer.——Hudson's Improved R. M. Bradshaw.——The Crochet Gem, by Mrs. Burrell.——Trials of Domestic Life, by Mrs Bray —The Welsh Harper.——Mrs. Arnott's History of the Girondists, by Lamartine [illegible]

 THE FRENCH EDITION OF THE DOUBLE NUMBER of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, containing the Historical Record of the REVOLUTION, with many Engravings, and the LARGE VIEW of PARIS, with the Number containing the Explanatory key and the History of Paris, may now be had, in a coloured wrapper, Price Two Shillings

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1848.

NOTWITHSTANDING the crusade which a section of the Liberal party in the House of Commons had led the public to expect on their part against extravagant expenditure of the national revenue by the Government, the opposition to the ministerial policy on this question has failed as completely as it had the previous week on that of the Income Tax. On Monday night Mr. Ward proposed to the House a vote of £1,425,308, to defray the expense of 27,800 seamen, 2000 boys, and 13,500 marines. Mr. Hume, Mr. Cobden, and others objected to the vote as excessive; and, after a very common-place discussion, the House declared in favour of the motion of the Hon. Secretary to the Admiralty by a majority of no less than 309—a triumphant success, no doubt, for Ministers, but one which they owe not so much to any great confidence felt either by Parliament or the country in the wisdom of their rule or the fairness of their demands upon the public purse, but to the feeling of uncertainty and ill-disguised anxiety which is excited in all quarters by the astounding nature of the events now passing on the Continent of Europe, as well as by the extraordinary rapidity of their occurrence. The oldest and most conservative of States are convulsed to their very centre; the electric flash of Revolution, passing from France into the heart of Germany, rives and rends the body politic to its lowest foundation, and the thrones of Austria and Prussia are shaken like reeds in a tempest. Amidst this universal crash, the minor sovereignties of Central Europe topple over, and crumble and prostrate before the roused might and majesty of the people, which their own Royal folly, bigotry, and oppression have goaded into fury, implore that moderation at the hands of the masses which they never practised themselves, and with all the energy of abject fear pledge once more their already perjured faith, to exercise for the benefit of the many the power entrusted to them.

All this, we repeat, is being accomplished with such rapidity—the present has so falsified all previous anticipations, and the future is involved in such dark and menacing uncertainty—there arises so natural a dread that the power so suddenly and so violently acquired by the multitude may be wielded in a manner inconsistent with the preservation of international peace in Europe—that wily and unscrupulous politicians arriving amidst the universal confusion at the management of affairs in any or all of those agitated states, and finding it difficult to curb within due bounds the spirit of political violence and martial ardour, inflamed to its highest pitch by internal revolutionary success, may adopt the wicked expedient of giving it vent in a foreign war. Considerations of this kind present themselves with so much probability, that, generally speaking, the aversion which a few months ago was so strongly felt by almost all classes of the community against any increase of the estimates for the national armaments, has been within the last week or two very much diminished, if in fact it has not altogether disappeared; and hence it is that Mr. Hume's motion for reduction of the naval estimates on Monday met with the most limited support.

For our own part, we cannot say we are uninfluenced by the considerations above adverted to; we cannot think the present a very favourable occasion for making experiments as to what should be the minimum strength of so vital a branch of our national force as the Navy constitutes; and though, under other circumstances of a less unprecedented and extraordinary character, we should most strenuously advocate retrenchment and economy, we cannot believe such a course to be the most prudent at the present conjuncture.

Motions in the House of Commons, like that of Mr. Hume, however, even when unsuccessful in attaining the immediate object aimed at, have a most salutary effect in showing Ministers that they can no longer indulge with impunity in the lavish expenditure of the "good old times," when the people were supposed to exist avowedly for the purpose of providing blood and treasure to be wasted in any mad scheme of war in which the Government of the day might choose to engage. Mr. Hume would do well, too, to remember that, though the estimates for the present year cannot well be reduced, a better administration of the expenditure should be insisted on, and ought to be guaranteed by the Government to the representatives of the people. The abuses in the management of dockyards and of stores of every kind are evils of the most aggravated description, which loudly call for reform; and we recommend them to the careful consideration of the honourable gentleman. He will find there a large field on which his useful exertions can be most advantageously employed.

MUSIC.

ANCIENT CONCERTS.

The season of her Majesty's Concerts of Ancient Music commenced on Wednesday night, at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the direction of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. At the rehearsal, on Monday morning—these rehearsals, by the way, are always public performances—Sir H. R. Bishop was the conductor, and Mr. Lucas the organist. The principal violin, in place of the late T. Cooke, is now Henry Blagrove, with John Loder, son of the late Loder, at his side. In other respects the orchestra is much the same, the patriarch Lindley being the first violoncello, and Howell the double bass. As is usual at these concerts, on the death of any one of the Royal or noble Directors, the first act was selected principally in memory of the late Archbishop of York, commencing with Handel's Dead March from "Saul," and the funeral anthem, "When the ear heard him," by the same composer. Then followed Handel's "O happy shade," by the Lord of Morrington (the Duke of Wellington's father); and the "Rex tremendæ," and the "Benedictus," from Mozart's sublime "Requiem." Mdlle. Alboni sang Cherubini's "Ave Maria" with a purity of intonation this air is peculiarly adapted to develop her rich voice, the theatrical style with which she invested it deprived the melody of its proper devotional feeling

A place called "A Spanish Chant"—"Spanish campanas"—was then sung by Mdme. Caradori Allan and chorus. We have heard that this chant was contributed to the library by Mrs. Dyce Sombre, who fixed the time to be drawled out like a psalm. This is a great mistake, which can probably only mislead the characteristic Spanish airs sung by the people being like a devotional chant; but it ought to have been taken in a lively strain, with accompaniment of tambourin and castanets, as we have heard it sung by the peasants in the mountains, or the water-carriers and porters in the streets in Spain. Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus," and a Motetto by Marcello, completed the Choral pieces. A Violin Concerto by Geminiani and Corelli, neatly executed by Blagrove, was rather dry. The second part opened with Handel's occasional overture, in which Grattan Cook has the oboe part. Then came an amorous scena, by Cimarosa, "Il mio cor," brilliantly sung by Caradori, despite of the drawback of the high pitch of the orchestra. A son of W Farren, the actor, then attempted Mozart's air from the "Nozze," "Vedro mentr' io sospero." We understand that he has been studying in Italy for two years, and is now a pupil of Signor Negri He has a powerful bass voice, rugged and uneven in quality; but the air was beyond his powers, and he has evidently been brought out too soon. We should think Garcia's "Serenata Spagnuola," "Per pieta," very artistically, but rather pre...ously as to intonation. An unmeaning duo, "Ingrata," from S. Mayer's opera of "La Ginevra di Scozia," succeeded, sung by Caradori and Albuni; then came the "O vos omnes," and the "Dead March," from Mozart's "Idomeneo;" and next Mozart's exquisite aria, "Non più di fiori," from the "Clemenza," sung by Alboni. The glee of the "Last Rose of Summer," arranged by Greatorex; Cimarosa's lively trio, from the "Matrimonio," "Le faccio un' urchina," and Handel's chorus, "O glorious Prince," from "Belshezzar," terminated the scheme.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.—On Monday night, the Beethoven Quartet Society held its [illegible] meeting, under the direction of H Rousseau, at the Rooms, in [illegible]-street. Mellon, Blagrove, Hill, and Rousseau were the executants. On the evening Mr. Dando had his Quartet Concert at Crosby Hall; and a [illegible] concert was given at the Musical Hall, Store-street, for the family of the late Mr Sturges. On Tuesday night, the second of the series of Sacred Concerts, under the direction of Miss Mounsey, was given at Crosby Hall. On Thursday evening, Messrs. G. and J. Case had a Concert at the London Tavern. On Friday night was the Concert of the Amateur Musical Society, at the Hanover-square Rooms, at which Mr. Henry Leslie's new and clever symphony was performed. This morning (Saturday) will be the Philharmonic rehearsal for the [illegible] and concert on Monday next, when Spohr's new symphony will be played. On Tuesday morning [illegible] Willis's Rooms will be the first meeting of the "Musical Union," directed by M [illegible], and, in the evening Mr. Sterndale Bennett's Classical Pianoforte Performance at the Hanover-square Rooms. On Wednesday will be Mr Lucas's second Musical Evening, and a performance at Exeter Hall by the Sacred Harmonic Society.

POSTSCRIPT.

PROCLAMATION OF A REPUBLIC IN CRACOW.

By express we have received the following important intelligence:—

On the 18th, the inhabitants of Cracow proclaimed a Republic. 15,000 insurgents are under arms.

On the same day the Governor was compelled by the people to release 400 political prisoners, implicated in the recent insurrection.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

The Criminal Law Amendment Bill was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a Select Committee

The Audit of Accounts (Railways) Bill was read a third time and passed.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL having stated the order in which the Government meant to take the various ministerial measures between the present time and the Easter recess, suggested the propriety of having a gentleman not pressing their motions on the nights set apart for Government business, as it greatly impeded the progress of the public business to do so.

THE SLAVE-TRADE.—Mr. H. BAILLIE proceeded with his motion for an address to her Majesty, praying for the adoption of measures to relieve this country from its engagement to maintain a squadron on the coast of Africa, for the suppression of the Slave Trade The hon. gentleman contended that the vast amount of blood and treasure which had been expended in the attempt to suppress the Slave Trade had all been lavished in vain, as the nefarious traffic had greatly increased, instead of diminished, since the first period of our interference. Lord PALMERSTON opposed the motion, and, on a division, it was negatived by a majority of 316 to 80

ELECTIONS OF TENANTRY IN GALWAY.—Mr. F. SCROPE moved an address to her Majesty praying that she would be pleased to direct the law officers of the Crown to prefer an indictment against certain parties concerned in an illegal destruction of several houses in the Galway Union, and the forcible ejectment of their inmates, which led to the death of several of those unfortunate persons. Sir WILLIAM SOMERVILLE said the matter in the case had been laid before the Attorney-General, and were now under his consideration. The law was, he believed, defective in this respect. However, the attention of the Government would be directed to the matter with a view to a remedy.—Mr. F SCROPE having expressed himself satisfied at having directed the attention of the Government to the matter, withdrew his motion, and the House then went into Committee of Supply. Several votes on account of the Ordnance Service, were agreed to, and the House having resumed, shortly afterwards adjourned.

MEETING OF MIDDLESEX MAGISTRATES.—On Thursday a meeting of the Magistrates of the county of Middlesex took place at Hicks's Hall, Clerkenwell The chair was filled by Mr. H Pownall.—The deputy clerk of the peace having read the minutes of the last Court, the reports of the visiting justices of the county prisons were produced and read. That relating to Coldbath-fields prison stated the sanitary condition of the establishment to be satisfactory; it contained a total of 1141 prisoners, exclusive of children—viz., 933 males and 208 females. The report from Westminster Bridewell stated the number of prisoners at present therein confined to be 537 males and 197 females, making a total of 734. The report from the House of Detention showed that since the date of the last report, January 10th, the total number of prisoners committed to that prison, was 1846

UNAUTHORISED VISITORS TO PRISONS.—In consequence of the governor of the Coldbath-fields prison having, some short time ago, received at the prison as visitors two persons who were objectionable to the visiting justices, that body passed a resolution making it imperative that every visitor should have his name and address entered in a book to be kept for that purpose by the gate porter. The governor protested against the rule, and, as far as he was concerned, it was annulled. The chaplains also protested against it; but, as far as regards them, the visiting justices determined to enforce the regulation, and the chaplains now memorialised the full court to order them to be exempted from the entry-book. A long and very animated discussion took place upon the matter, and the result was, that the rule laid down by the visiting justices was confirmed; the numbers being—ayes, 30; noes, 0

NEW LUNATIC ASYLUM.—It was resolved to raise £10,000, by mortgage on the county rates, for the new lunatic asylum at Colney Hatch, making a total of £30,000 raised for the same purpose. After transacting some routine business the Court broke up.

THE METROPOLITAN POLICE.—We are gratified to learn that subscriptions are now in progress, at the various police-stations, who have an account opened for the reward of the police force employed in suppressing the disgraceful and riotous mob in Trafalgar-square and the neighbourhood on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of March instant.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

ITALY.

The intelligence from Lombardy is most important. There the people have taken advantage of the embarrassments of Austria and the fall of Metternich, to raise the standard of revolt in Milan. When the last accounts left, the troops were treating with the people about the evacuation of the city. The Viceroy had left on the 17th from Milan.

A formal proclamation of the new Roman Fundamental Constitution by his Holiness Pope Pius IX. was published on Saturday last, the 18th.

As the most concise summary of the principles of the new constitution occupies a space of three or four closely-printed columns, exclusive of the introductory address to the people, we can only state the substance of the same in a few brief sentences:

The College of Cardinals (chosen by the Pope) is to be constituted a Senate, inseparable from the same, and two Deliberative Councils for the formation of the laws are to be established, consisting of "The Council" and the "Council of Deputies."

The judicial tribunals are to be independent of the Government, and no extraordinary commission courts are to be in future established. The National Guard is to be considered an institution of the State.

The Pope convokes and prorogues the Legislative Chambers, and dissolves the Council of Deputies, being required to convoke a new Chamber within three months, which will be the ordinary duration of the annual session. The sessions are to be public. The members of the Senate are to be appointed by the Pope for life, and their number is not limited. The qualification of a Senator is the age of 30 years, and the plenary exercise of civil and political rights.

The Senate will be chosen par préference from the Episcopates, ecclesiastics, ministers, judges, councillors of state, consistorial lawyers, and the possessors of an income of 4000 scudi per annum.

The Pope will appoint the President and Vice-Presidents.

The second council, which is elective, on the numerical basis of one deputy to every 30,000 souls.

The proclamation is dated the 14th of March, and is authenticated by the signature of his Holiness.

The advices from Naples announce the expulsion of the Jesuits from that city, in accordance with the popular will. The indignation against the "holy" fathers is general, and nothing but a promise to leave Naples saved them from summary vengeance.

It was feared at Naples that Messina was still a prey to the flames of civil war. The Government, however, had sent a special messenger to stop the further effusion of blood by the proclamation of the new constitution.

The King of Sardinia has published a general amnesty for political offences.

FRANCE

According to the latest sole Paris was perfectly quiet, even to dullness. A few straggling groups of Socialists, with Blanqui and Raspail at their head, the drilling of the German Legion, were all that was to be seen of outward movement. A magnificent fete was to be given yesterday evening at the Théâtre de la Nation for the benefit of the workmen, out of the proceeds of the mercantile community has thrown even the elections for the National Guards, which were to take place on this day (Saturday), into the shade

PRUSSIA.

His Majesty has granted a full and entire amnesty to all political offenders imprisoned or under prosecution. At one o'clock on the 20th, the Polish prisoners were liberated, and marched in triumph to the front of the palace, accompanied by the people. The King appeared on the balcony. They stood face to face with the Royal authority under very different circumstances a short time ago. Dr. Bortleman is appointed Minister of Cultus.

AUSTRIA

In Vienna the people are satisfied with the concessions made and the changes promised; the journey of the emperor is again popular

M. de Rothschild has subscribed 100,000 florins towards the equipment of the National Guard of Vienna

MARRIAGES IN HIGH LIFE.—The marriage of the Hon. Hugh Cholmondeley, eldest son of Lord and Lady Delamere, and Lady Sarah Hay, second daughter of the Earl and Countess of Kinnoul, was solemnized on Thursday, a numerous circle of the relatives and friends of both families attending as witnesses to the ceremony

GROCERS' AND TEA-DEALERS' PROTECTION SOCIETY.—On Thursday night, a numerously attended meeting of the above Institution was held at the London Tavern, Mr. Thomas Chilton in the chair. The eleventh annual report, which was read by the secretary, went to show that the society had progressed most favourably during the past year. The receipts for the last twelvemonths stood as follow:—From 685 annual subscribers, £311 12s.; forty-four donors, £313 10s. 6d.; dividend on funded stock, £355 17s. 6d.; total, £1481. During the year, the disbursements reached £1334 15s. 6d., the balance in hand now being £57 14s. 6d. The report having been unanimously received, the resignation of Mr. Wm. Sewell, the late President of the Society, was read; and Mr. Henry Campbell was chosen nem. con. to take his place. After the transaction of business of a routine character, the meeting separated.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

ACCOUCHEMENT OF HER MAJESTY.

In our late edition of Saturday morning last we announced the gratifying fact of her Majesty's safe accouchement

The following details in reference to the interesting event are furnished by the Court Newsman:—

On Saturday morning, at eight o'clock, the Queen was safely delivered of a Princess at Buckingham Palace

In the room with her Majesty were his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Dr Locock, and Mrs. Lilly, the monthly nurse; and in the rooms adjoining were the other medical attendants, Sir James Clark and Dr. Ferguson, and also her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent and the Ministers and Officers of State summoned on the occasion.

The Privy Councillors present were Sir George Grey, Secretary of State for the Home Department; Earl Grey, Secretary of State for the Colonies: Sir Charles Wood, Chancellor of the Exchequer; the Earl of Auckland, First Lord of the Admiralty; Lord Campbell, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; the Right Hon. H. Labouchere, President of the Board of Trade; the Duke of Wellington, Commander-in Chief; Earl Fortescue, Lord Steward; Earl Spencer, Lord Chamberlain; and the Duke of Norfolk, Master of the Horse.

At nine o'clock the following bulletin was issued:—

"Buckingham Palace, Saturday, March 18, 1848, Nine A.M.

"The Queen was safely delivered of a Princess this morning at eight o'clock.

"Her Majesty and the infant Princess are well.

"JAMES CLARK.
"CHARLES LOCOCK.
"JOSEPH FERGUSON."

Bulletins have been daily issued during the week, announcing the favourable progress towards recovery made by her Majesty.

On Monday her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent arrived early at the Palace, to pay a visit to the Queen. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester called at Buckingham Palace in the middle of the day. The inquiries yesterday at Buckingham Palace, on the part of the diplomatic corps and the nobility and gentry, continued very numerous. Among the visitors were the Austrian Ambassador and Countess Dietrichstein, the Belgian Minister and Madame Van de Weyer, the Bavarian Minister and Baroness de Cetto, the Portuguese Minister and Viscountess de Moncorvo, M. de Sarmento, the Chevalier de Ribeiro, Secretary of Legation; the Russian Minister and Baroness de Brunow, the Prussian Minister and Madame Bunsen, the Brazilian Minister and Madame Lisboa, the Danish Minister and Countess de Reventlow, &c. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice took walking and pony exercise. Her Royal Highness the Princess Helena was taken an airing. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent returned to the Palace in the evening

On Tuesday her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester arrived at the Palace in the middle of the day to learn the state of her Majesty. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen in the afternoon. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice took walking and pony exercise. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cumbridge called at Buckingham Palace to inquire after the health of the Queen.

HER MAJESTY'S LEVEE. On Wednesday afternoon, at two o'clock, his Royal Highness Prince Albert held a levee, by desire of the Queen, at St. James's Palace, on behalf of her Majesty. His Royal Highness arrived from Buckingham Palace, attended by the Marquis of Abercorn, Groom of the Stole; Mr. George Edward Anson, Treasurer; Viscount Clifden, Lord in Waiting; Colonel the hon. C. B. Phipps, Private Secretary; Captain Francis Seymour, Groom in Waiting; and Colonel Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting. The Prince was also attended by Lord Canterbury, Lord in Waiting to the Queen; Lieutenant Colonel the Hon. A. N. Hood, Groom in Waiting; and Messrs Stuart Wortley and Gordon, Pages of Honour to her Majesty. The foreign diplomatic circle was introduced, when the following presentations to his Royal Highness took place: M. Knight de Gerlache, Attaché de Legation de S. M. le Roi des Belges, by M. Van de Weyer, the Belgian Minister. Le Comte de Columbi, her Catholic Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Lisbon, by Senor Isturiz, the Spanish Minister.

FRANCE.

All minds were occupied in the early part of the week with the popular demonstration on Friday (mentioned in our last week's postscript), condemnatory of the unsuccessful remonstrance of the compagnies d'élite to the Provisional Government against the late decrees for the reorganisation of the National Guard. It would appear that the legions so popular a few weeks ago are now branded as aristocrats. The "Demostration" as thus described by an eye-witness:

"Early on Friday morning, the emissaries of the clubs proceeded to all the suburbs, to invite the labourers to rendezvous at different points, and to proceed from thence in bodies to the Hôtel de Ville. Their instructions were strictly obeyed, and about eleven o'clock the labourers poured down in masses into the city, forcing all their comrades who were working in their shops to have joined assembled in the Champs Elysées exceeded 30,000. A numerous column defiled on the Boulevards, brandishing shovels and pickaxes, and driving wheelbarrows before them, whilst others slowly rolled the cannon and mortars along the quays to the Hôtel de Ville. By twelve o'clock the square was filled by the dense throng, with immense files of people still crowding up the small narrow streets that debouch into the Place. The Pont d'Arcole was covered over with the small bridge that supports the suspending chains, and the chains themselves, were converted into scaffolds by the crowd.

"The assembly did not wholly consist of workmen: the latter class were not, as on ordinary occasions, the majority of the assembly. Costumes are so distinct in France, that it is easy to ascertain the character of a crowd by the dress of the mass. The bulk of those by whom this republican demonstration was made consisted of a class above the ouvriers. From twelve o'clock till two the crowd remained on the Place cheering and shouting, at intervals raising the chorus of the "Marseillaise," or beating the rappel on their drums. There was no sign of opposition to this manifestation of feeling; the guard on duty was even less numerous than usual.

"Towards two o'clock, the crowd, thinking that the united effect of its numbers and its cheers had sufficiently indicated the degree and direction of popular feeling, began to disperse, though very slowly. As the intelligence that all had passed off more quietly than had been anticipated began to spread, a manifest relief of the anxiety of the public mind could be traced; it was more sensibly felt on the Bourse than anywhere else.

"The National Guards nowhere made their appearance, in order to avoid all provocation or cause of collision. The first legions who presented themselves at the Hôtel de Ville on Thursday, had returned convinced of the fruitlessness of what had been acceded to by the Provisional Government. An individual had gone through the ranks exhibiting the draft of a decree, in which it was stated that they should preserve for the moment their present organisation, and they had retired perfectly satisfied. It was only after the arrival of M. Ledru Rollin that they were undeceived. General Courtais, their Commander-in-Chief, rode up at four o'clock to those who were advancing towards the Hôtel de Ville, and told them in rather harsh terms that their manifestation was seditious, that the decree dissolving the compagnies d'élite should continue in full force, and invited them to return home. The National Guards, disregarding his orders, insisted on proceeding to the Hôtel de Ville, but the multitude assembled in the quays and streets leading to the Place de Grève would not allow them to pass, and even threatened to erect barricades. Several of the National Guards who wore Grenadier caps were ill-treated, and their head-gear thrown into the gutter and trampled under foot by the people. The National Guard may be said from that moment to have lost its moral force, and the uniform of the Citizen Soldiers will shortly be as unpopular as that of the City Sergeants and the Municipal Guards."

This demonstration, we are told, is considered a triumph over an attempted reaction, a success gained by the mass over those who, it is said, wished to impede the progress of the Republic. It is impossible to misunderstand the light in which the people themselves regard their victory; it is celebrated as a triumph and something more

The succeeding night passed in perfect tranquillity, though the demonstration continued to a late hour Bodies of men, marching nine and ten abreast, continued to defile along the Boulevards from four till seven o'clock, stopping the traffic of the cross streets, for it was impossible for vehicles to break through the lines; they could only pass in the intervals between the several corps. As night fell, crowds collected in different spots, but principally about the Porte St. Denis and Porte St. Martin. The inhabitants in this quarter illuminated their houses, and about eight o'clock an immense body of people began to move slowly along the Boulevard in the direction of the Madeleine, singing as they went along the shopkeepers put up the shutters of their windows again by degrees, and whenever a delay occurred, cries of "Des lampions!" were raised: as soon as lamps were fixed to the balconies, the crowd gave a round of applause and marched on. In this way they advanced into compact masses, leaving a blaze of light behind them. They were in a very good humour, and not the slightest damage was done: not a single pane of glass was broken, nor did the shopkeepers exhibit any alarm, though neither police nor military were to be seen. Bodies of the new Garde Mobile were collected in considerable force in the Rue Rivoli and other streets, but out of the line of march. At the Boulevard des Italiens sections of the crowd branched off, and made the side streets illuminate in the same manner. By ten o'clock the throng began to diminish, and by midnight everything was quiet again. Some of the papers speak of the illumination as if it had been a spontaneous expression of rejoicing: it was entirely compulsory

This rupture between the National Guard and the bulk of the people is an additional element of anxiety in the already gloomy aspect of affairs The lamentable want of unity in action, even among a body so organised as the armed citizens, is proved by the fact that the march to the Hôtel de Ville was a measure not sanctioned by the majority of the legions It was strongly opposed by General Courtais, the Commander-in-Chief, and Guinard, chief of the staff. How a step so important could be taken without the fully ascertained consent of the whole body, is inconceivable; but having been done, the ill effect is not partial, the whole of the legions are compromised. An address appeared on Saturday from a number of the National Guards, but not very numerously signed, denying that they intended to intimidate the Government—they only wished to express an opinion on the execution of the decree regulating their organisation. But explanations now are of little use.

[illegible]tion of all the armed force of France, in relation to the people, [illegible] The army, notwithstanding many reassurances, has not recovered from the disgrace inflicted by the general disarming; the public are not sufficiently reassured of its disposition to permit the introduction even of two regiments into Paris without a murmur. The National Guard is now hors, tainted with anti-revolutionary tendencies; the Garde Mobile is imperfectly [illegible] quite unorganised. The military and political systems are [illegible]

An accident involved the priests of the Irish College here in the popular demonstration of Friday, and gained them a character for liberality which, on this occasion at least, they had no intention of assuming. A deputation of Irishmen was to wait that day on the Government, and the clergy of the college were to join them at the Hôtel de Ville. On their way, however, they got wedged into the crowd, who took it for granted they had come out in their costume to intermize with the movement. No explanation was possible; the reverend gentlemen were borne along, and finally escorted back to the college with every mark of respect. The liberality of the Irish priests was warmly praised in the evening in the clubs, but their appearance in the scene was involuntary

The commission of workmen held a sitting on Friday in the Luxembourg, when Louis Blanc read a deputation of masters, whom he addressed on the evils of unlimited competition and the advantages of association. The proceedings were most disorderly; silence could not be kept; all was anger and confusion, in the midst of which Louis Blanc abruptly left for the Hôtel de Ville to take a share in the receptions there. He was allowed to depart with freezing indifference. The Paris press pays no attention to these meetings.

The Presse announces that the Bank of France, wishing to accommodate the holders of bank-notes as far as is consistent with the security of the credit of that establishment, proposes, from Monday last, to pay its notes of 1000 francs each by nine notes of 100 francs each and 100 francs in silver

The Mints encumbered with an enormous mass of silver plate, brought there to be coined into pieces of five francs each. A number of silversmiths, despairing of selling their second-hand articles, have resorted to this contrivance to render their dead stock available; others announce a reduction of 10 per cent. in their goods, in order to ensure such a sale as may keep their workmen employed.

The spirit that prevails in the trades of the metropolis is extending into the provinces. The workmen of the great iron-works of Creuzot have struck for higher wages. Fears are entertained at Rouen, that the appearance of a failure in that town the extensive spinning-mills of Chantilloles would be compelled to stop work. Rumours of disorderly meetings among the troops are rife. A Rouen journal announces that a mutiny had occurred in one of the regiments of the line in garrison in that city. The Mayor of the town accompanied the Colonel to the barracks, and harangued the troops. Order was restored, and remained until a soldier, the instigator of the mutiny, had been released from custody.

For the last fortnight an extraordinary excitement has prevailed in the schools and colleges of Paris, but particularly in the Lycée Louis-le-Grand (late the College Bourbon). The outdoor pupils of the latter establishment assembled some days since, and proceeded to the Hôtel de Ville with a national flag, to demand the dismissal of their director, M. Beudin, and a certain number of their professors. They further demanded that the study of natural history and of cosmography should be discontinued. The Provisional Government not having acceded to their demands, they became so much excited that it was found necessary to close the establishment.

Citizen Bergeron, who was tried in the beginning of the ex-King's reign for an attempt against the life of his Majesty, has been appointed Commissary General in the departments of the Aisne and Somme, and has left Paris, accompanied by Citizens Nyon and Lehaneff

Letters from Rouen announce that the armed workmen evacuated on the morning of the 15th the fortified enceinte of la Croix Rousse, which was occupied by the National Guard and troops of the line. The Fort of Montessuy had been likewise evacuated by the people

The Minister of Finance had adopted, in respect of the execution of the decree of the 16th instant, relative to the Treasury bonds issued previously to the establishment of the Republic, the following conditions: "The Treasury also reimburses integrally, in legal money, the interest attached to those bonds to the capital, it shall be reimbursed, at the option of the interested parties, either in coupons of the national loan, in Rentes 5 per Cents. de jour, or in new bonds, at six months' date and an interest of five per cent. per annum. The interest attached to these new bonds shall run, as is customary, from the date of the presentation of the primitive bonds."

The Minister of War had addressed a circular to all the chiefs of corps, directing them to present in future for promotion none but candidates entitled to it by their military service. "Although," says the Minister, "there is every reason to hope that the friendly relations existing between France and the foreign Powers will not be disturbed, measures have been adopted for the purpose of concentrating towards the frontiers a number of troops sufficiently considerable to provide against every contingency. On the other hand, the young soldiers who had been left in their families are called into service under the arrangements of infantry are to be augmented by one company per battalion, so that each shall now contain eight companies. Similar measures are to be adopted with regard to the cavalry and artillery, both of which will be increased. In addition to participate with success in the common defence. The General Council of War continues its important labours; and all its propositions, sanctioned by the Government, have been hitherto carried into execution by the Ministers, whose precautions are increasing. The greatest activity prevails in the different branches of the military administration, and every arrangement is made to provide regularly for all the wants of the army.

After their demonstration at the Hôtel de Ville the workmen of Paris proceeded to the Ministry of the Interior to salute M. Ledru Rollin personally, and the different trades succeeded each other without interruption from two o'clock till three o'clock P.M. Not less than 100,000 men presented themselves at the Hotel during that interval, and M. Ledru Rollin stood constantly under the porch receiving addresses and replying to them

It would appear that the Provisional Government has determined to comply with the demand of the mob, that the troops should be sent from the capital, for we find in the Presse that the 6th Regiment of Chasseurs, which only arrived in Paris a few days since, left again on the morning of Friday, the 17th instant. At eleven o'clock on Thursday night a numerous body of the people proceeded to the barrack d'Orsay, where that regiment was quartered, with the intention of disarming it. The Colonel vainly remonstrated against their proceedings, but finding that they were determined to persevere, he declared to them that neither he nor his men would submit to that humiliation, and that they would defend their arms with their lives. The people then retired, but shortly [illegible] was received by the regiment in quiet but determined manner. The 13th regiment of Chasseurs was likewise ordered out of Paris during that same night.

On Monday, the Moniteur published two decrees. The first, signed by the Finance Minister, postpones the payment of drafts, bills of exchange, &c., till the 15th of next month; and the second empowers an tribunal of commerce to suspend actions against debtors for three months, provided the debtor wishes it.

M. Marie, Minister of Public Works, has addressed a proclamation to the men lately employed in public works, who have ceased their operations in consequence of a reduction of wages. The Minister calls upon them in the name of patriotism to return to their employment

The Prefect of Police has issued a decree declaring that foreign workmen who were flocking to Paris in share in the work and wages provided for the native workmen by the Provisional Government would, if they persisted in coming, be liable to be turned out forcibly from the French territory by measures warranted under the circumstances. Foreigners who would be expelled from France who have no burdensome to the communes and cause inquietude to the people

The National Guard Club, on Sunday, sent a deputation to the Provisional Government, to express their sympathy with the cause of the Polish Republic. The deputation was introduced by M. Cauchland, and addressed by M. Lamartine, who thanked them for their national sentiments and good wishes

The Presse publishes a letter from Cracow, dated the 10th March, which, contradicting the report that the Bank would pay its notes in cash for the purpose of paying wages

A deputation from foreigners' sons born in France had waited upon the Mayor of Paris, desirous of being granted citizenship, for which privilege they were willing to bear their full share of the public burdens. The Mayor replied, that the Provisional Government, previous to granting the request, must take time for consideration, as many principles were involved in the question; but, at the same time, he would take the opportunity of saying that the Government was desirous of extending the rights of citizenship as far as possible

The movements in Vienna and Berlin occupied a large portion of attention in the French journals; a revolt in Vienna had not been unanticipated; it was thought it would save the petty states of Germany, which had asserted their liberty, from the danger which menaced them from Austria, could the Austrians quiet themselves without embarrassment at home. They also formed the favoured topic of conversation in the clubs and in private circles. "Ca va," say the Republicans, "the work goes bravely on."

"A glance," says an able correspondent of the Times, "at the state of things in Paris might shake their confidence; but the movements of Friday and Saturday have increased the anxiety and want of confidence that already existed, little is required to convert it into a panic. The journals remonstrate, but fail to reassure. They see that there has been a rupture between the Government and the people, that the populace paraded its numbers, a half appeal to force, as its answer to what, it must be confessed, was a similar demonstration by the armed citizens, is one of which the effect cannot be lessened by explanations on either side."

The establishment of ateliers for the employment of labourers by the Government has not produced a quieting effect on the habits of Paris. Perhaps the cause may be found in the rate and mode of payment, as much as in the disposition of the men. Two francs a day are given to those employed; but work is only ensured them one day out of two; one franc a day is allowed to those who cannot be engaged at all. There are thousands who would rather be idle on the less amount than work for the greater. The minds of the working classes are unsettled at the moment the pressure on the employers is greatest The [illegible]ect of this state of things, and the disposition of the people to seize any opportunity to make a "demonstration," have increased the desire of residents to quit Paris; the British Embassy cannot supply passports fast enough

The trades' unions of Paris assembled on the ci-devant Place Royale, on Monday, and proceeded thence to the Hôtel de Ville to offer their adhesion to the Provisional Government. They thence marched in procession along the Boulevards, decorated with their various badges, and united at a fraternal banquet outside the walls of Paris, where the two parties into which they were hitherto divided—the Renards and the Devorans—agreed to form a fusion and cease their unprofitable quarrels.

A placard was posted in different parts of the city, containing a plan for making "France rich in eight days." It is calculated that 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 persons in France possess articles of plate of a value averaging 300f. each person. The State is to borrow this, giving the owners rentes to the amount of the price of the metal, with an allowance for the workmanship, at the quotation of the day. Coin this mass of bullion, and France would immediately be the richest country in the world. "Promptitude and energy" are advised in the execution of this measure. It is hinted that articles achieved by the electric process are quite as ornamental as plate

The report that the Regent diamond had disappeared from among the Crown jewels is contradicted: but a little case has been dévolé from the Tuileries, containing a mounted diamond valued at 250,000f., and a pair of car-drops worth 50,000f. more

The committee pointed to adjust the claims of the labouring classes convoked on Sunday, at the Luxembourg, the delegates of the different trades of Paris, assembled two o'clock. All responded to the appeal, and upwards of 200 workmen were installed in the half hitherto occupied by the Chamber of Peers. The members of the Government were enthusiastically cheered. No cry was raised in favour of any individual member exclusively, except that of "Vive Dupont de l'Eure!" when the venerable patriot took the chair. M. Arago then thanked the entire labouring class, in the name of the Provisional Government, for the calmness, order, and peaceable and becoming attitude they had maintained during the grand manifestation of the 17th inst., and for the confidence and force they had imparted to the Government elected by their acclamations on the 24th of February, and re-elected on the 17th of March. M. Arago, moreover, urged all labourers to lose no time in inscribing their names on the registers of the National Guard, and added that, if their inscription should experience any obstacle, they had only to apply to the Provisional Government, which would hasten to remove them. M. Arago and his colleagues then retired amidst the applause of the assembly, which shortly afterwards adjourned.

The training and equipment of the newly enrolled Garde Mobile are being urged on with the utmost rapidity. A decree in the Moniteur of Monday appoints the Minister of War to issue from the stores of the army such clothing, &c. as can be spared without inconvenience to the service. The pupils of the military schools will be required to officer the battalions; officers and men are in the young, and anxious to enter on a career of gloire. In the face of financial embarrassment the Government is compelled to find the means of supporting an army already too large for the necessities or resources of the country; this is perhaps the virtues many delinquents the future history of the Republic, it is evident economy in military expenditure will not be among them. The engagements into which the Governments entering would require an exhaustive suite of wealth. There is no party to demand retrenchment—that all use cases only from a few, and by them is directed against a few paces and sinecures, while gigantic systems are being established to with the salaries of a dozen officials are always to be found the influence of all measures in favour of increase and [illegible] serve all old taxes, and raise the armament, with no half-silent intimations that if these do not suffice, the are of forced loans, and confiscation, direct or disguised, is the ultimate dernier. Not a single amelioration of the burdens of the people has been proposed or attempted; the barbarous tax of the octroi, which fetters the trade of every city in France, will continue as before; the monopolies of certain branches of industry in Paris, which raise the price of the necessaries of life to every consumer, are not touched by any of the sweeping decrees of the Republic. The Government is goaded on to boundless extravagance by the clubs, who openly declare the property of the country ought to be forced to [illegible] the means for carrying out every scheme that may be proposed.

[illegible]ms.—The following are the names of some of the clubs now meeting, [illegible]: The Club des Hommes Libres, Club des Republicains Socialistes, [illegible]té Centrale Republicaine, Société du Faubourg St Denis, Club de l'Emancipation des Peuples, Club du Progrès Démocratique, Société Populaire d'Instruction Commerciale Mutuelle, Club de la Montagne, Club de l'Abbaye, Club des Ouvriers Nationaux. There are many others, to which must be added the clubs of every nation of Europe, of nearly every Canton in Switzerland, and of every city and large town in France whose natives are resident in the capital.

The National Bank of Discount, which opened on Monday, was set in full operation on Tuesday. The bills discounted during the day amounted to 1,200,000f., 600 accounts were opened, demands for 800 more await decision.

From the tone of opinion in the provinces, as well as in the capital, it may be considered certain no postponement of the election of the National Assembly will take place.

Commercial affairs do not improve; the Débats declares that the most solid firms are reduced to extremity, and that private credit has ceased to exist. The Government trusts every expedient to remedy the evil; a decree of the Minister of Finance authorises the establishment of dépôts for the material or manufactured goods, for which the owners may receive acknowledgments, stating their estimated value; these certificates are made transferable by endorsement, and may be discounted at the Bank of Discount; they will bear the stamp of the Republic, and the dépôts will be under the protection of the State.

General Cavaignac is officially declared Minister of War.

The decree abolishing the practice of marchandage (the middle-men system among ouvriers) not being generally obeyed, the offence is now made punishable by fines of 50f., 100f., and 200f. for a repetition of the offence, and imprisonment from one month to six if the practice be discovered.

Deputations of workmen are beginning to complain of the flight of wealthy families from Paris. The Clubs are pressing the Government to send delegates to the departments of the provinces, to watch over and put down all reactionary tendencies

The last official instrument signed by the late Minister of War, General Subervie, is a refusal of leave to the officers of the army who wish to present themselves in the departments for election

The Constitutionnel quotes a letter from the frontiers of Gallicia, stating that a general insurrection was imminent in Austrian Poland.

We find in the same journal a letter from Copenhagen on the 14th instant, announcing that a report having circulated that a Russian fleet was to cross the Sound for the purpose of assisting the King of Naples, the Danish people had conveyed artillery to the coast, to oppose the passage of the Russians

The National of Marseilles states, that since the 25th February the Bank of that city had reimbursed its own notes to the value of 8,700,000 francs, and borrowed 5,500,000 francs in specie. One house, that of M. Baltazzi, lent the bank 600,000 francs.

The Moniteur gives notice that an adjudication of 15,000,000 kilogrammes of English coal would take place at Toulon on the 22nd April.

A great number of Italians, Germans, Poles, and Austrians quit Paris every day to return to their respective countries.

M. Ladoucette, Prefect under the Empire, and Deputy of the Moselle, died at Paris on Tuesday, in the 76th year of his age. M. Ladoucette always voted with the Constitutional Opposition.

The Moniteur publishes the following return of the wounded received into the civil hospitals of Paris between the 23rd of February and 19th of March:—

| | Men. | Women. | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| Total number .. .. .. .. | 621 | 17 | 638 |
| Discharged Cured .. .. .. | 279 | 7 | 286 |
| | — | — | — |
| | 342 | 9 | 351 |
| Died .. .. .. .. .. | 96 | 2 | 98 |
| | — | — | — |
| Remaining in the evening of the 19th | 246 | 7 | 253 |

It will thus be seen that the financial measures of the Government prove the great and growing influence of the Clubs: the plans proposed in those bodies next appear embodied in a decree. The course on which the Republic is entering is, in fact, a complete counterpart to the measures by the State of the chief branches of business, a favourite theory of the most active division of social reformers. At present the steps taken appear to be imperatively necessary for the support of commercial credit and the restoration of confidence. But the germs of the new system of policy in which the Government is to do everything are being planted in them.

The State takes the whole stock on raw material which Her unmanufactured, and goods for which there is no demand. The practice is not unknown in England, where it is a matter of arrangement between private parties, but it wears quite another aspect when the Government provides the accommodation and takes the risk—all losses must fall on the community at large. The plan will, no doubt, give a temporary relief.

That commercial and monetary embarrassment continues unabated, increased by the intelligence from nearly all the rest of Europe.

The uncertainty that pervades all transactions approaches the disorganisation that would be caused by actual war

The resources of the world at large would not suffice to supply funds for the projects the popular party conceive to be reasonable. It is to be hoped the Government will be able to resist the pressure at some point short of that where the impolitic verges into the absurd

The emigration of wealthy families from Paris and France, where it is possible, is not so much caused by apprehensions as to personal safety, as by the apprehensions that the present policy will ere long render a more direct appropriation of property the order of the day. The organisation and power of the Clubs cannot be resisted by the Government, and it is impossible to conceive any scheme of spoliation that would not be popular among these bodies, if the proceeds were devoted to one of their favourite projects. Some of the labouring classes are beginning to feel the effects of this flight of wealth in the loss of employment. They are asking for measures of force to prohibit these departures, which, as yet, the Government is able to refuse. The remedy for every political and social evil a compulsion in some form or other. The popular idea of liberty must be, that it is a stern, iron power, able to force everybody to be equal and wealthy; compel masters to employ, compel trade to resume activity, and the rich to spend money; all things that are wrong compel them to go right. This tendency to call in terror to do the work of confidence gives rise to the saddest reflections.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

On the whole, perhaps, things look more gloomy now than they did a week. The grand demonstration made by the work ing classes, as a set off to one of the National Guard, has shown not only that they possess overwhelming power that everybody knew—but that they are fully conscious of their strength, and would have little or no hesitation in exercising it. On its part the Government has shown that all its sympathies are with the lower orders, and that it is de-terminated that, as the Revolution was made by them, it shall turn to their advantage. The middle classes, consequently feel themselves entirely beaten down, and are not unnaturally mortified at their defeat. Besides this, they are very seriously alarmed at the wild ideas which are entertained by the majority of the multitude on what is called the "organisation of labour," which appears to mean an attempt to secure the workmen more wages for less work; and they are still more alarmed at the Communist, Socialist, and Communiste doctrines which find favour in the eyes of a vast number. Again, the [illegible] gloom is increased by the deplorable state of trade, there being very little [illegible] in the present, and no prospect whatever as to the future.

PROTESTATION OF THE NATIONAL GUARD IN THE PLACE DU CHATELET, PARIS.

[illegible] appear in some of the L[illegible] have the l[illegible] no pre[illegible] that they have, on [illegible] to w[illegible] better than people were have been many years in Paris ever knew it. As a proof of this [illegible] and periodicals, and caricatures, those skits and sarcasms at us, which used to be [illegible] and hourly occurrence. In truth, nothing else but fraternité goes down now, and a general belief is entertained that it is of the last importance to remain in fraternité with the English great tour.

Thus far the Revolution has produced no effect on literature and art; nor has it yet been celebrated by the pen or the pencil (in speaking of the pencil I, of course, except that of the ILLUSTRATED NEWS) in a manner worthy of it. Even the very songs to which it has given rise are pitiable; and the caricatures, notwithstanding the skill of the French in such things, are really beneath contempt, both as regards point and execution.

One little fact will show how completely Paris is abandoned by the wealthy classes—several of the fashionable restaurants are closed.

Five-franc pieces, with the symbols of the Republic, with the inscription "Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité," have been issued to the public within the last few days. They are at present, however, a curiosity—so much so, that men sell them in the streets at a premium averaging from three to ten sous. The new pieces are the same in design as those of the first Republic, and are executed on the same model as the last batch of Louis Philippe's. It is seen at a glance that they have been brought out with great haste.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

The first of the accompanying Illustrations represents one of the great events of last week—the Protestation of the National Guards of the 1st and 3d Legion; "tending," says our artistic Correspondent, "to upset the Provisional Government in general, and Ledru-Rollin in particular." This is of great importance, inasmuch as it led to the great Demonstration of Friday, described in the annexed column, and engraved in the companion Illustration. In the first scene are a few Grenadiers, unarmed, assembled on the Quai, at the Place du Châtelet, the back part of whose columnar fountain is shown. Prominent in the group is General Courtais, endeavouring to persuade the Guards to retire, so as to save them from a conflict with the people, who are crowding the Quai leading to the Hôtel de Ville. The General as well as his aide-de-camp, is expostulating with the crowd. In the group are two Students of St. Cyr, mounted on horseback, and an escort of three chasseurs a cheval. Our Artist stood very near the General, and heard him strongly menaced by the infuriated crowd.

The Demonstration of Friday is, as we have said, detailed in the adjoining column: it was a scene of intense excitement; the people promenading the streets, singing national hymns—200,000 man, crowding quai, boulevard, and street, and marching in military order, some of the trades preceded by a drum and flag. The balconies and the housetops were crowded with spectators, who loudly cheered the moving masses below.

GREAT DEMONSTRATION OF TRADES, AT PARIS.

FREDERICK VII, KING OF DENMARK.

Frederick Charles Christian, who has lately ascended the Throne of Denmark, by the title of Frederick the Seventh, was born on the 6th of October, 1808; his mother was Charlotte Frederica, Princess of Mecklinburgh Schwerin, his father's first consort. On the accession of his present Majesty to the Danish throne, great anxiety was felt as to his future conduct, his past life having been anything but promising. His temper is violent, and his manners coarse; and in his youth he was exiled to Iceland, for having in a fit of passion drawn his sword on his grandfather. Married twice, he has been separated from both his wives by divorce. He had thus rendered himself very unpopular. However, at present there appears some hope that he may yet redeem the past; the "strawberry" may have grown "beneath the nettle." The tenor of his first proclamation goes in some degree to inspire confidence that the future will not be a dark one for Denmark. In that document he says:—"Our first and most important object shall be to follow the example of our beloved father; to unite, like him, clemency with justice in our government, to encircle the inhabitants of all parts of the country with the same paternal affection, and not only to continue the ameliorations commenced by him in the administration, but also to terminate the arrangement intended by him for the different relations of the State, the completion of which has been deferred only by the illness and decease of our beloved father, and which will tend to guarantee the reciprocal rights of the citizens, to ensure concord in our dear country, and to strengthen the force and glory of the State."

The formalities that attend the decease of a King in Denmark are so peculiar, that we give an account of them, as recently observed:—"On the 21st of January, at nine in the morning, the doors of the grand balcony of the palace of Christianburg were thrown open, and immediately the Princes of the Royal Family, the Ministers of State, and the high dignitaries of the kingdom appeared on the balcony. The Minister of Justice, M. de Stemann, then approached the balustrade, and read the three times with a loud voice: 'King Christian VIII. is dead! Long live King Frederick VII.' This was repeated each time by the heralds, and on each occasion the band of the body-guard replied by a flourish. From nine o'clock to twelve all the gates of Copenhagen, according to ancient usage, were closed. The keys of the city, and also those of the citadel, were carried to the palace. The troops of the garrison and the National Guard assembled at one o'clock at their various places of meeting, and took the oaths of fidelity to the new King, before Prince Ferdinand, General-in-Chief of the army, and Prince William, Governor-General of Copenhagen."

FREDERICK VII, PRESENT KING OF DENMARK.

The promise implied in the above proclamation has been kept; an ordonnance was published on the 28th of January, by which a Constitution was granted for the whole of Denmark. There is to be established Common States for the kingdom of Denmark and the duchies of Sleswick and Holstein; these States are to assemble at fixed periods alternately in the kingdom of Denmark and in the Duchies. The new Constitution consecrates the principle of voting the taxes by the States, and of their participation in the legislative power. The Constitution changes nothing in the relations between the duchies of Holstein and Lauenberg with the Germanic Confederation: it preserves, also, the optional use of the Danish and the German languages in the mixed districts of the duchy of Sleswick. The Constitution is to be submitted to the examination of deputies, the majority of whom are to be elected by the provincial States. Their number is to be 26 for Denmark, and 26 for the duchies. Within two months after the elections, this assembly is to meet at Copenhagen, and is to continue its labours until the King shall have pronounced its close.

FUNERAL OF THE KING OF DENMARK.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The funeral of a King or Royal personage is in Denmark a costly ceremony, requiring not only a large outlay of money, but also the services of all high functionaries and officers during several weeks. Whether it be from state policy, or to create effect, certain it is that the Government are lavish in their expenses to surround the remains of the departed Monarch with all the splendour they can command; and not only the courtiers, civil and military officers, and titled persons, but also the great bulk of the people, are invited to assist at the different ceremonies which we now illustrate; and the respectful crowds of mourners bear witness to the faithful and almost child-like attachment of the Danish people to their Monarchs.

After the body of the deceased King Christian VIII. had been embalmed, it was exposed on the Bed of State (Lit de Parade), in the large hall of the palace at Amalienburg, which, as well as all passages leading to the hall, had been hung in black. The corpse, dressed in the Royal robes, was laid on a bed, covered with white satin sheets, edged with gold fringes; the room was lit by wax tapers, burning in large silver candelabras. At the head were ranged the Regalia, viz. Crown, Apple, Sword and Sceptre; and round the steps leading to the bed all the Orders of Knighthood of which the departed King was a member. Officers, armed with halberds, kept guard day and night; and, during four hours of the day, when the public were admitted, seven high functionaries—Ministers of State, Admirals, Generals, and Court Officers besides the Masters of the Ceremonies, with their staffs of office, were ranged behind the Regalia, in mournful silence.

After the body had been publicly exhibited eight days, it was deposited in the Royal coffins (the inner one of lead), and placed for public exhibition on an elevated platform (catafalque) covered with black velvet. The coffin was studded with gilt crowns, and round the sides of the platform appropriate bas-reliefs were executed in gilt plaster. In front of the platform three large silver lions were placed; innumerable lights were burning in gilt candelabras, and the effect of the tasteful decorations of the "coup-d'œil doloré" was very imposing. The coffin bore the following inscription on the shield or plate:—"Christian VIII., born 18th Sept., 1786, ascended the Throne 3rd Dec., 1839, married the first time, 21st June, 1806, to Princess Charlotte Frederika, of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and the second time, 23rd May, 1815, to Princess Caroline Amelia, of Sleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Augustenburg. Two sons were the issue of the first marriage: one died 13th April, 1807, a few hours after his birth; the other ascended the Throne of Denmark on the death of his dearly-beloved father, 20th January, 1848, as Frederick VII." On the one side: "An excellent spirit and knowledge and understanding were found in him.—Daniel, v. 12." On the other side, "He filleth a long time.—Solomon's Wisdom, iv. 13." At the foot: "I give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding.—Jeremiah, iii. 15." His motto was: "God and my Country." On the platform three beautiful verses were inscribed by the poet Hoist, commencing—

"He wore the crown, and on his brow
A stamp of might he had from God."

The sarcophagus having been exhibited publicly eight days with similar ceremonies to those above described, the funeral was fixed for the 26th of February at night, when the coffin was placed on the state hearse, drawn by eight horses, and a procession formed as follows:—Royal Horse Guards; two Heralds and Masters of Ceremonies, on horseback; high functionaries in their carriages; Royal equipages, drawn by six horses; the First Master of the Ceremonies, with his staff of office; the hearse surrounded by naval and military officers, halberdiers, and chamberlains, on horseback; the deceased King's favourite horse led by grooms; a cavalcade of high officers; his Majesty the King, in his state carriage, drawn by eight horses; the Royal Princes, in their state carriages; Clergy, and City Representatives, Hussars, &c., all surrounded by torch-bearers. The troops were ranged en haie in the streets where the cortège passed, and the houses illuminated. In the King's New Square, where we see the procession passing, and in other places, appropriate funeral hymns were sung, and about midnight the procession had reached its termination out of town, by the Copenhagen and Roeskilde Railway station. During the night, the hearse was escorted by a squadron of Horse Guards, and proceeded to Roeskilde, a small town, sixteen English miles from Copenhagen, with a celebrated cathedral, built more than eight hundred years ago, and containing the coffins of a great many Kings and Queens of Denmark. On the 26th of February, we found this little town all astir, his Majesty having arrived with a large cortège at night, by a special train. The coffin of the deceased King had been most appropriately placed in the open square near the railway terminus, surrounded and guarded only by the peasantry of the district. At eleven o'clock a procession was formed, the King and Princes following the coffin on foot; and at noon they entered the Cathedral, which was crowded with spectators. A cantata having been sung, the Bishop of Zealand preached a funeral sermon; when the coffin was removed from the grand aisle to the Chapel of Frederick V., there to rest with a long line of ancestry. Many poets have sung in memory of the departed King (who was a tasteful critic and promoter of the arts), from amongst whose effusions we transcribe the following Latin lines:—

FUNERAL PROCESSION OF CHRISTIAN VIII., KING OF DENMARK, PASSING KING'S NEW-SQUARE, COPENHAGEN.—(FROM A SKETCH BY A CORRESPONDENT.)

IN OBITUM
AUGUSTISSIMI, CLEMENTISSIMI, ET PIISSIMI
DANIÆ REGIS.
CHRISTIANI OCTAVI

Auxia cum gemitu mœrens hic Dania fundat
Hexametros, pia plora, Res Camœnæ.
Vesper adest: propera, sol lumina celsa plorum,
Dum tenui spes vos, te retinere dies!
Ex vasa nubi tetulit dira ossa olim.
Quels quoque non lupar cortile, Divo! fuit,
Quamque illi fuerit patrio populosa senatu
Cura, patet cunctis, te moderante retum.
Multiplici nulla hoc bulo quæ nonmunota re-
linquis;
Hoc tu, cum mœreris, vota suprema do-
mum.
Quam placidus semper, mitis facilisque colo
cuique.
Quam miseris tandem grande levamen eras!
Nompe a te redits quisnam nisi fronte serena,
Lenis et aliquido exhilarans ore?
Jam dolet ad sinceras rapti Carolina mariti,
Hinc pia nata eaci solidisque ani.
Imo sequi cupiens vestigia publica parentis.
Nunc patre et patrio, nomina et ille gunt!
Solamen verum est carus tamen inter amorbe
Jam gemitum firma sospira tuamo mœsti:
Solmus enim, quod sit tolo mœsti pectori
Danes,
Regem, et imparvide juris ubique tenax,
Hinc patria circum summi recreantur et imi.
Et cantu fundunt pectore mille preces
Jamque vale, pia Rex! patienti tibi gaudia cedit
Quæ pietas meruit, candor amorque tuus!

LITERATURE.

ACCIDENTS AND EMERGENCIES. A GUIDE FOR THEIR TREATMENT BEFORE THE ARRIVAL OF MEDICAL AID. By ALFRED SMEE, F.R.S., Surgeon to the Bank of England, &c. Churchill.

This is a sheet of Instructions as to the best means of employing the interval which must necessarily elapse between the occurrence of an Accident and the arrival of professional aid. In such cases, no unfrequently, a life may be saved by simple yet timely measures, such as are here given, in the fewest possible words, consistent with the clear understanding of the instruction sought to be conveyed. The Directions are for the treatment of some sixty ills, which beset everyday life: they include the varieties of bleeding, by cuts and incisions, stabs, and other wounds; with bruises and sprains; broken bones and dislocations; burns and scalds; explosions; railway and steam-boat accidents; venomous bites; choking, &c. Then follow antidotes for the various poisons; treatment in fits; supposed death, &c. Perhaps we cannot do better than quote a set of Instructions entire, and we select the most familiar case:—

"BURNS AND SCALDS.—The action of a hot body on the skin is called a scald. If the hot body be fluid, such as boiling water or melted grease. If the substance be solid, or if the injury arises from the effect of fire, it is called a burn. When the clothes catch fire, roll the person in the nearest hearth-rug as quickly as possible, to stifle the flames, leaving only his head out for breathing. The effects of burns are three-fold—redness and pain, blisters, and the total destruction of the part. For redness, protect from the air by wet lint or linen, covered with oiled silk; or, if oiled silk is not at hand, cover with several layers of linen, slightly wetted with common water or Goulard water. The part may also be covered with raw cotton if it does not blister. If blisters arise, leave them alone if not very tense; and if they be very tense, puncture with a fine needle, and keep on the lint and oiled silk. Absence of pain over the injured part is a bad sign, and shows that it is destroyed. Treat as before; silk as before, or a bread-and-water poultice. If shock exists, constant care alone will save the patient. Afterwards, if excessive sleepiness or stupor, or difficulty of breathing sets in, or great pain about the injured part exists. The surgeon should always attend even the slightest burns if large in size, for then, especially in children, there is always ground for alarm."

The Guide is printed in large type, upon a sheet, so that all who run may read. The treatment of the several cases is, moreover, explained by wood-cuts, but it should be added that it is only such assistance as is recommended as non-professional persons can, with perfect safety, undertake. In short, it is merely domestic treatment.

We must add that, for its immediate utility, this Sheet Guide deserves a place in railway stations and steamboats; in police stations and union houses; and in all places where large assemblages of persons are accustomed to congregate, and where accidents are of proportionally probable occurrence.

KING ARTHUR. By the Author of "The New Timon." Part I. Colburn.

Such of our readers as enjoyed the vigorous satire of "The New Timon" may, probably, have been misled by the first announcement of the present work. "King Arthur"—in whatever way considered—is the name of a subject known, rather than him of fairy legend and knightly song. The Sovereign of Tom Thumb assuredly would have afforded abundance of that good-humoured satire which is the spirit of burlesque poetry. He would, then, have been nothing of the sort: neither is he the Arthur of the Mabinogion, nor of Geoffry of Monmouth; but rather the Arthur of the Fabliaux; the author taking the same liberty as that assumed not only by Ariosto and Boiardo, but by Ariosto and by Ariosto and Spenser, viz. of surrounding the heroes of the fifth or sixth century with the chivalrous attributes of the thirteenth or fourteenth. There are other licenses taken, which it is of little capable; for, in the author's own words, "a work of all strict accuracy of detail would be out of character in a poem of this kind, the very nature and merit of which consist in wilful defiance of mere matter of fact."

The volume before us is, however, but an instalment of the romance: it contains but four books; the first opening with King Arthur, in this gay scene:

"Hard by a stream, amidst a pleasant vale,
King Arthur held his careless holiday:
The stream was bright with many a silken sail,
The vale with many a proud pavilion gay;
While Cymri's dragon, from the Roman's hold,
Spread with calm wing o'er Cardiel's domes of gold.

"Dark to the right, thick forests mantled o'er
A gradual mountain sloping to the plain;
Whose gloom but lent to light a charm the more,
As pleasure's places most when neighbouring pain;
And all our human joys most sweet and bright,
Sport in the shadows cast from melancholy.

"Below that mount, along the glossy sward,
Were gentle groups discoursing gentle things;—
Or listening idly where the skilful bard
Woke the sweet tempest of melodious strings;
Or whispering love—I ween less fills they,
For love's the honey in the flowers of May.

"Some piled in lusty race the glistning ball;
Some, noiseless, snared the silver-scaled prey;
Some wreathed the dance along the level shore;
And each was happy in his chosen way:
Not by one shaft is Care, the hydra, slain,
So Mirth, determined, had his quiver filled."

A phantom appears to the King; his Knights are discomfited, and the restless Arthur betakes himself to the Wizard Merlin, who foretells honours, whilst he sang in the succeeding book. In the first of these King-craft is the magician; and here the author, selon his unscrupulous disregard for putting the time out of joint, paints a pair of portraits. The identity with Louis Philippe and M. Guizot is unmistakable.

"* * * Ludovick his name,
* * * a king of sage repute;
Not that in youth he sowed the seeds of fame
Whose tree he planted, what he ask'd was—fruit.
War stormed the state, and civil discord raged,
He shunn'd the tempest till its wrath was spent.

"Safe in serener lands he pass'd his prime;
But mused not vainly on the strife afar:
Return'd, he watch'd—the husbandman of time—
The second harvest of rebellious war;
Cajoled, 'tho Edenbrys, fixed the fickle Gaul,
And to the Lands promised equal law.

"The moment came, disorder split the realm;
Too stern the ruler, or too feebly stern;
The supple kinsman slided to the helm,
And trimm'd the rudder with a dexterous turn;
A turn so dexterous that it served to fling
Jock overboard—the people and the king.

"The captain's post repaid the pilot's task,
He saved the ship as he had cleared the prow;
Drop we the metaphor, as he the mask:
And, while the gaping Vandals wondered how,
Behold the patriot to the despot grown,
Pitch'd from the fight, and juggled to the throne!

"And bland in words was wily Ludovick!
Much did he promise, nought did he fulfil:
The trickster Fortune loves the hands that trick,
And smiled approving on her conjuror's skill!
The promised freedom vanished in a tax,
And buys, turn'd briars, scourged bowilder'd backs.

"A portly presence had the realm-deceiver,
An eye urbane, a people-catching smile;
A brow, of webs the everlasting weaver,
Where jovial frankness mask'd the serious guile
Each word, well aim'd, he feathered with a jest,
And, unsuspected, shot into the breast.

The wily Monarch gaily welcomes Arthur to the feast, and over "the goblet which unties the tongue," proposes to take—

"A father's charge of his forsaken nation"

The offer is thankfully declined.

In the two remaining books, the love adventures of Arthur with Ægle, a young virgin of Etruria, are gracefully narrated, but not to great length for quotation.

The poem, we should add, though teeming with beauties, has many blemishes. The most frequent of these is a superabundance, nay, an ostentatious excess, of antiquarian, and thus which the author has been led by the fabulous history of the hero. This impedes the machinery of the poem, and is a deadweight upon the reader's attention from first to last. Neither is the imagery very novel: it is far too conventional to begin with the picturesque freshness of many of the descriptive passages. Fortunately, these are of redeeming prominence throughout the work; and there are marks of genius of a still higher order too numerous to allow "King Arthur" to take rather than forever pass in our contemporary poetry. The author's incognito is still maintained intact; but internal evidences as well as common report points to Sir Edward Bulwer, Esq., as the minstrel of this new romance of the celebrated British chief.

THE LAST DAYS OF O'CONNELL. By WILLIAM BERNARD MACCABE, author of "A Catholic History of England," &c. &c. London: C. Dolman. Dublin: James Duffy.

At a moment when the whole political horizon of Europe is blackened by the lowering storm of popular violence, and the concentrated indignation of the masses has, in part, discharged its destructive fury over the social body, we have, with some curiosity, looked into this notice of the closing scenes of the Great Agitator's long career, which has now for some months on our table, uncontested, from the press of more immediately urgent matter, and we hope will in bearing testimony to its great merit as an able and impartial compilation, we can make amends for this seeming neglect. It is one of that valuable class of books whose contents form the materials of history. We are too near O'Connell's own time—too completely contemporaneous with him—to see his actions and appreciate his motives in their true light, impartially; and we therefore abstain from any reference whatever to them, than we may not give the reader to be ranked either among the enemies or the admirers of the most remarkable men of our own times, but to whose offence or create pain when either was the farthest possible from our intention.

The modest title-page of Mr. Maccabe's book conveys a very inadequate idea of the variety of subject-matter comprised within its pages, and the fulness with which it is treated. The writer has had rare opportunities of observing O'Connell in the most trying circumstances; and, accordingly, we find the book enriched with detailed accounts of the most salient points of the "Liberator's" biography, which will be read with great interest. But the most valuable portion of the work is the excellent translation of the Funeral Oration on O'Connell, delivered in Rome on the 18th and 30th of June last, by the celebrated ecclesiastical orator, the Padre Ventura.

Roman Catholicity on the Continent of Europe has been for the last three or four centuries so entwined up with Absolutism, that it requires a very clear exposition of its teachings with respect to politics, &c., to remove the impression that it is inimical to the development of political freedom and social progress, and this exposition is supplied in Ventura's oration, delivered ex Cathedra with the approbation and by the authority of the Sovereign Head of the Church of Rome itself; and we cannot, in all candour, refrain from saying that the lovers of peace, order, and progress could propound nothing more enlightened, or more in accordance with the benevolent spirit of Christianity. It is a position well worthy the supporter and assistant of Pius IX. in the political reforms accomplished by that Pontiff in his hitherto misgoverned dominions. We enjoin a short extract, referring the reader to the work itself for fuller details on this interesting topic, pointing out by the way the graphic, and, as regards a neighbouring country, the almost prophetic, force with which the orator depicts the results of a revolution:

"20. We must bear in mind, that foreign to, and beyond the pale of, Catholic doctrines, there are to be found two distinct and mutually antagonistic systems, by means of which men seek a solace or a remedy for tyranny and oppression; one is submission to them with stupid apathy the other their repulsion by physical force; one bends to them like a slave—the other rises up against them like a rebel. The one is called 'passive obedience,' the other 'active resistance.'

"The system of passive obedience, or the inert resignation to all that which power may please to do with a people, consigns to the caprice of a tyrant not only the property, the honour, and the life of the subject, but still more his understanding, his heart, his conscience, his thoughts, his reason, his will all that which man has most dear to him, that which most ennobles him, that is most sacred to him, that is of all things the most his own, the most inalienable from him, and the most peculiar to him—the entire of that which makes man worthy of the name of man. It degrades man into a brute, which is utterly and completely at the discretion of him who is its owner. It leaves to man nothing of humanity except the form that form, in fact, is not long to be found revealed the divine origin of man, and his innate dignity.

"The system of active resistance, or of sedition, whether it be abortive or triumphant, is ever fruitful in nothing but the perpetual change of persons, and leaves unchanged the circumstances, and untouched the state of things against which it was directed. The same parts are represented by different individuals, but the tragedy is ever the same—the same tone and the same manner in which it had been previously performed. The slave plays the tyrant, and he who had been the tyrant wears the garb and clanks the chains of the slave; and all goes on as before to the end, the sovereign people, the sovereign mob, is the slavery of all for the profit of a few. And if, at any subsequent period, the movement brings forth any advantage, such an event never occurs until a long time has elapsed, and not until those who have been the originators of it have with their lives, and until the traces of those passions which produced it have been obliterated.

"But well would it be for a people if their attempt at resistance has failed. The wounded pride of tyranny is no longer to be kept within any bounds. That which it did from caprice it then believes that it is bound, as a matter of duty, to perpetuate. Hence arises that detestable system of espionage, which is its nature; and afterwards it oppresses, because oppression is regarded as the necessary means of its own conservation. Distrust changes to hatred, and hatred lashes itself into fury. Every suspicion is a crime, every thought is punished as an offence, and every word condemned as if it were sedition. Talent, wealth, virtue, are converted into crimes, and suspicion the sole the sufficient ground for condemnation. Fetters are made more heavy, chains are added to chains to bind the limbs of freemen, whilst sycophants become more shameless, courtiers more vile, executioners more cruel, despotism more atrocious, and persecution more inhuman

"21. Between these two systems, which by opposite paths lead generally to the same end—the ruin and slavery of the people—stands the system of Catholic Christianity; which, condemning rebellions and tumults, teaches us to oppose to oppression, and especially religious oppression, no other species of resistance but those of passive resistance and active obedience."

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

"Attila" was again given at this theatre on Saturday last, and each time of representation the performance of this opera has done fresh credit to the artists engaged in it By some strange mistake the name of Belletti was omitted in our last week's notice of this opera, an omission which would be most unfair to this great artist, who is, in fact, the chief support. The singing of the National Anthem after the opera, was the signal for most enthusiastic cheering, a display of loyalty on the part of the audience, which formed a singular pendant to the evidences of opposite feeling given at the singing of the "Marseillaise" by Mdlle. Rachel, in Paris. Signora Cruvelli gave the last verse with an enthusiasm which she had caught from her auditors, and which in turn inspired them afresh.

On Tuesday, "I Due Foscari" was revived. This is decidedly one of the most pleasing of Verdi's operas, and one of those most exempt from the defects of his celebrated comrades. The cast, Signora Cruvelli, Corsini, Bonchi, and the great baritone, Coletti, returned with a voice even improved during his absence. His performance of the old Doge was, as before, a magnificent study. The union of the vocalists of the two theatres, with the dignity of the man and the Doge, of extreme feeling with stern resolution, could not be more happily depicted; while the superb voice of the great baritone rendered the fine music of his part with the greatest possible effect. Mdlle. Cruvelli here appeared in a new character, and one admirably suited to her. The first air, beginning with the charming preghiera, was delightfully rendered by her from beginning to end. The pathetic slow movement at the beginning of the scene with Jacopo was perfect as an even sostenuto style, hardly to be expected from her character of voice; while in the second part she recovered all her wonted fire, and gave it with an energy and force which electrified her hearers: she was most vociferously applauded, and very unmercifully (as we think) encored. The exertion was almost too much for even her powerful organ, as those who are acquainted with the fatiguing nature of Verdi's music will easily imagine. On the whole, her impersonation of Lucrezia Contarini was a fine performance, and contributed greatly to the ensemble with which the opera went off.

Corsini acquitted himself with much tact and taste of the part of Jacopo, which is one, however, requiring more power in the higher notes than this tenor possesses.

Bonchi proved himself, as usual, a valuable artist in the character of Loredano.

The most effective pieces in the opera were Lucrezia's first aria, which we have before mentioned; the trio and succeeding quartet in the prison, which was, as usual, encored; and, above all, the final scene, which created immense enthusiasm, and part of which he was obliged to repeat

LYCEUM

A new two-act piece was played on Wednesday evening, called "The Happy Family," which, although supported by a most powerful cast—one, indeed, that any author might have been well content to see produced for a first act Comedy and most exquisitely played on the stage, dragged on somewhat heavily, and at times appeared verging on the dangerous

The idea is that of three married couples and a bachelor, sustained by Mr. Granby, Mr. Charles Mathews, and Mr. Buckstone, Mrs. Fitzwilliam, Mrs. Stirling, Madame Vestris, and Mr. Harley, who take a villa called Harmony Lodge, to live together, and contribute to mutual comfort and happiness. Of course they all quarrel—including the servants (played by Mr. C. Jones, Miss Grove, and Mr. H. Hall), and are only finally, and not very clearly reconciled, by an old gentleman, impersonated by Mr. Frank Matthews, who comes to live with them, and act as the "keeper" of the popular menagerie in front of the National Gallery, in training and correcting them. In addition to these persons, two young lovers are represented by a Mr. Charles and Miss Howard.

The powerful cast will at once be seen from the above-enumerated names; but it was too powerful for the piece. It reminded us of putting a lot of people into a light carriage, and then being unable to move it. More was expected, at every speech, from such leading performers than had been given to them to say, and, in consequence, the dialogue was a series of disappointments. Indeed, one or two of the soubrettes had characters utterly unworthy of them, more especially Mrs. Fitzwilliam. The second act was merely a repetition of the first, under other circumstances; and from the commencement of the plot the entire idea was seen through. The author had aimed at producing something in the style of Mr. Buckstone's "Married Life;" but his dramatis personæ lacked the individuality requisite for carrying through a similar piece. And the very ancient "Joss" introduced—such as, "I am all over mud!" "No, you mean the mud is over you;" or, "I went to see the hounds throw off." "No, you mean the horses" were rather painful. All the performers played admirably; but the laughter came in ruffles rather than bursts and those who listened for the applause at the fall of the curtain, were compelled to hear something as well, less gratifying. The piece wanted breadth and variety; its characters were all on a level, and the writing was of that somewhat hazardous style known as "flat," between wit and "slang" the gradation is so imperceptible

Mr. Beverley, by Mr. Beverley, was exquisitely painted. In the first act was an excellent "set" of one of the old inn-yards in the Borough; and, in the second, a lovely villa on the banks of the Thames, with a verandah covered with honeysuckle, a lawn with dinner laid out, and some distant park scenery, was received with loud applause

The old favourites, "Box and Cox," made their appearances, for the ninety-seventh time, to conclude the entertainments.

ADELPHI

Mr. Sterling Coyne has been again at work for the Adelphi, and again fortunate. He is a "real blessing to managers," for no one else knows so well how to cut and shape a theatre's peculiarities into a piece with a passing event. We only wonder that he has not brought out a piece before this in which Mr. Paul Bedford played Louis Philippe, and Mr. Wright Guiset, with Miss Woolgar for Mrs. Dundee de Montgomerie. Mr. Coyne has not provided him with a much better vehicle for the display of his peculiarities than he had before; and the little drama in which he appears is received with great applause.

FRENCH PLAYS

A piece brought over from the Vaudeville, "Le Gant et l'Eventail," has been the most agreeable novelty at the French Plays since Mr. James's Theatre. The chief part is most gracefully performed by Mdlle. Nathalie, whose engagement, we regret to say, is drawing to a close. The piece is familiar to the English playgoer as "Love's Telegraph," performed some years back at the Princess'; indeed, it is difficult to find a piece in the répertoire of any piece which has not already been adapted for our theatres. Mdlle. Nathalie will be succeeded by M. Lafont.

HAYMARKET.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean concluded their highly successful engagement on Wednesday evening, when "The Wife's Secret" was performed, for the thirty-seventh time, to a house crowded to the ceiling, and the applause throughout as hearty and general as ever. No modern five-act play has achieved so popular a triumph; and Mr. and Mrs. Kean can only bring a new one with them of equal merit, and play in it with the same excellence and effect, their return will be looked forward to as the most interesting event in the dramatic world of the time.

Another translation of the French piece "Lavater" is announced for representation here this evening. This we think bad policy, especially after the excellent and finished manner in which it is played at the Lyceum, as "Not a Bad Judge."

A one-act comic sketch, "Lola Montes, or She Would be a Countess," is announced for the immediate representation.

Mr. Gustavus Brooke is also underlined to appear on the 4th of April. There is a report in the coulisses, that whether he comes to the Haymarket, or stops at the Olympic, in either way he involves himself in disaster.

OLYMPIC

Mr. Brooke appeared as Virginius on Thursday evening, for the first time before a London audience. He was received with all the defects and all the effective points of those characters in which he has before played, with the exception of the Hunchback, which, as we stated last week, we take to be the best part which he has appeared in. It is, however, scarcely fair to give any decided opinion upon Mr. Brooke's acting at present; the railway hats with which he is pushed through a succession of characters, badly secured, with no time for sufficient rehearsal, is highly detrimental to his reputation. Miss May, who played Virginia, was the only other performer entitled to any commendation. The scenery was composed of Norman, Gothic, and "composite" architecture in every sense of the word; and the general business slovenly and loose. If these are "the days of the legitimate drama" stated at the end of the bill to be "revived" at this theatre, we think the sooner they are allowed to sink into neglect again the better

After the tragedy a new ballet, called "Coquillia, or the Spirit of the Shell," was brought out; but everything in it was imperfectly done that all the effects failed one after another, and, but for the excellent dancing of some very clever little children, pupils of Mr. B. Barnett, the audience, we expect, would have found their own demonstrations. We will not pronounce it a failure, for it had not a chance. The plot appeared well arranged, and as far as the scenery went, it was well painted; whilst the action was plain, and easily to be followed. But the unfinished state in which everything came on the stage was most disgraceful; and we pitied the gentlemen engaged in its production—author, leader, and ballet-master—so mercilessly thrown over.

PRINCESS'S

Mr. Wallack will make his first appearance since his return from America, next Monday, at the PRINCESS' Theatre, and on Tuesday "Don Cæsar de Bazan" will be revived for him.

"God save the Queen" was sung and played at all the principal theatres on Saturday, on the occasion of the Queen's birthday; and, as before, all the illmannered individuals who refused to take off their hats met with sorry usage from the hands of the surrounding audience. The general feeling was one of earnest, hearty, loyal enthusiasm; and at one or two of the theatres, at the conclusion of the anthem, loud cheers were given for the Queen and Constitution, until the walls rang again. The demonstration at Drury Lane was especially general.

The success of the Cirque Nationale at the theatre just mentioned establishes the truth of what we have so often stated—that a well-managed circus would be a most valuable addition to the resources of London

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"H. B. W." and "A. B. C.," "Observer."—Problems No. 216 is quite right. It is obvious on the solution, since Black has no other move, that his 4th move is R, not K. to Q Kt's. 5th.

"S. P. Q."—It is correctly stated, and is easy enough. Black simply moves the R from B's sq. to B's 7th, and White can then only prevent immediate mate by the sacrifice of his Queen and Bishop; after which Black mates him on the 4th move.

"Diogenes," "T. W. B."—You can have two or more Queens on the board at one and the same time.

"J. V. K. C."—Stay in the Handbook and the Elementary Lessons by Calvi, now publishing in the "Chess Player's Chronicle."

"W. G. C."—No. The Black King is at his R's 3d.

"J. P. P."—The "Berlin Chess Magazine," is obtainable at Messrs. Williams and Norgate's, foreign booksellers, of Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

"H. J. A."—The "American Chess Magazine" is not now, we think, obtainable in this country.

"H. S., Preston.—One of them is neat, and shall appear. The others are either wrong or unsuitable.

"A. Z. B. P."—It shall be looked to.

"G. P."—Too weak for publication. The notice shall appear when we have more room.

"F. D. M.," Oxford.—The Problem forwarded is one of D'Orville's most beautiful; but unfortunately it has been several times before the public. Thanks, nevertheless.

"Claribyda," Worcester.—There is some omission, which renders it impracticable, as far.

"M. D."—It is published in monthly numbers, at 1s. 6d. per number. Apply to Hurst, 25, King William-street, Strand.

"Juvenile Reader."—Get Kenny's little book for beginners—the "Chess-Player's Manual."

"Children."—It is want of space alone prevents our giving the solutions of Enigmas. At the end of the present volume we hope to be enabled to give them in an abbreviated form.

"H. H.," Stockton.—It shall be examined and reported on forthwith.

"Jute."—It is impossible to make you understand by written description. Get some friend who knows the moves to show you.

"J. B." Your position shall be attentively examined. At the first glance, the board looks crowded with unnecessary pieces.

"Oldsyne." Your Enigma is easily solved in four moves.

"T. E.," "Zeta," St. Neot's.—Your suggested move in Enigma 258 shall be submitted to the author.

"Piers."—They shall be examined.

"Learner."—The White King cannot come within the range of the Black Queen while she is protecting her King from check.

"H. H.," "W. P."—Answers to many Correspondents were deferred from the pressure of political matters during the last few weeks. The same cause occasioned, once or twice, the abridgement of which you complain.

"A. de Ferra."—They shall be reported on next week.

"R. W.," "S. S. A."—It shall be looked to.

"A Lady."—A Pawn that has not been moved can be played two squares; but if it goes on to other Pawn that is in a position to capture it, were it only played one square, then the opposing player may take it in passing, or permit it pass two squares.

"H. L." East Grinstead. Your communication reached us too late for examination this week.

"G. P."—Your adversary can Castle after he has been in check.

"M. M. M."—Under the circumstances mentioned, the King is checkmated, as he cannot, in any case, move into a square commanded by an adverse piece.

"J. B. C."—We like the Problem very much. As few people, however, will look at a position trammelled by conditions foreign to the principles of ordinary play, might not the stipulation of not moving the Q P be obviated by adding a Black Kt at Black's 4d sq?

Solutions by "C. W. C.," "P. G. R.," "S. P. Q.," "J. B.," "Sopracitta," "Eva," "T. R." "A. D." Gand;" "I. Z. B. Y.," are correct Those by "L. E. L.," "Philo-Vetus," "Hero," "J. P." are wrong.

PROBLEM, NO. 218.

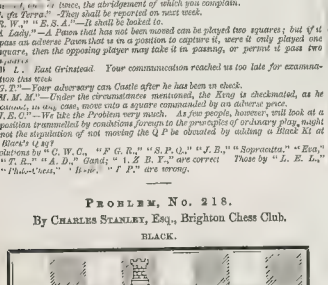
By CHARLES STANLEY, Esq., Brighton Chess Club.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to move and mate in four moves.

GAME BETWEEN HERR MAYET AND HERR HARRWITZ.

| BLACK (Mr. M.) | WHITE (Mr. H.) | BLACK (Mr. M.) | WHITE (Mr. H.) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. P to K 4th | P to K 4th | 12. B to K Kt 5th | Castles |
| 2. Kt to B 3d | Q Kt to B 3d | 13. B to K R 4th | Q B to K Kt 5th |
| 3. Kt to Q B 4th | K Kt to B 3d | 14. P to K R 3d | Q R to K R 4th |
| 4. Castles | K B to Q 3d (a) | 15. P to K Kt 4th | Q B to K Kt 3d |
| 5. B takes Kt (b) | Q P takes B | 16. Q to K 2d | Q to K 3d |
| 6. P to Q 4th | Q to K 2d | 17. Q R to Q sq | Q R to Q sq |
| 7. P to Q B 4th | P to Q Kt 3d | 18. Q R to Q 3d | K takes R |
| 8. P to Q Kt 4th | P to Q B 4th | 19. Q takes R | P to K R 3d |
| 9. Q B P takes P | Q Kt P takes P | 20. R to Q sq | Kt takes K Kt P (c) |
| 10. Q P takes Q B P | B takes P | 21. P takes Kt | Q takes P (ch) |
| 11. Q Kt to B 3d | P to Q B 3d | 22. K to R 2d | B to K R 4th |

Black resigned in a few more moves.

CHESS IN INDIA.

The following game was recently played at Burhampore, between R. F. Hodgson, Esq., and a Native Player, Koonya-Behoory, the latter playing without seeing the board.

| WHITE (Mr. H.) | BLACK (Native). | WHITE (Mr. H.) | BLACK (Native). |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. P to K 4th | P to K 4th | 20. P takes B | Q takes P (ch) |
| 2. P to K B 4th | P takes P | 21. K to his sq | Kt takes Kt |
| 3. K Kt to Q B 4th | K B to Q 3d (a) | 22. R takes Kt | Q R to K sq |
| 4. P to Q 4th | Q to K R 5th (ch) | 23. K R to K B sq | K R to K 3d |
| 5. K to B sq | K Kt to K 2d | 24. K R to K B 2d | K R to K 4th |
| 6. Q Kt to B 3d | Castles | 25. P to Q B 3d | P to K Kt 4th |
| 7. P to h 3th | K B to Q Kt 5th | 26. P to Q Kt 4th | K B to Q Kt 3d |
| 8. Q Kt to K 2d | P to Q 4th | 27. Q R to his 2d | K R to K 6th |
| 9. K Kt to Q 3d | Q Kt to B 3d | 28. Q to her 3rd | Q to K Kt 5th (d) |
| 10. Q B takes P | Q to K Kt 5th | 29. Q to K 6th (ch) | K to his R sq. |
| 11. P to Q B 3d | K B to Q R 4th | 30. Q takes R P (ch) | K to his Kt sq |
| 12. K Kt to Q B 5th | Q to K R 6th (b) | 31. K takes K Kt P | Q to her 2d |
| 13. K Kt to his 5th | P to K R 3d | 32. K R to K B 7th | Q takes R |
| 14. K Kt to K B 3d | Q B to Q R 6th | 33. Kt takes Q | K takes Kt |
| | Castles | 34. Q to K 8th (ch) | K to his B sq |
| 15. Q Kt to K Kt 3d | Q to K Kt 5th | 35. Q takes Q P | P to Q R 4th |
| 16. Q B to K 3d | P to K B 4th | 36. Q to K B 5th (ch) | K to his Kt sq |
| 17. P takes P (en passing) | R takes P | 37. Q to K 4th (ch) | K to his B sq |
| 18. K B to K 2d | R Kt to K B 4th | 38. Q R to Q B 2d | R P takes P |
| 19. Q B to K B 2d | Q B to K h 5th | 39. R P takes P | |

(a) Indians it should be stated that he has always been accustomed to play the Indian game of Chess, which varies materially from ours; and hence the present opening of play offered a very inadequate [illegible]

(b) There is too much time lost: he might as well have gone here at once.

(c) This is an better style.

(d) A grave fault, to admit White into the game.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM NO. 217.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. R from Kt 5th to Q 5th | R takes R (best) | 3. Kt to K 3d (ch) | K takes Q P |
| 2. Kt to K Kt 5th (check) | K takes R | 4. Kt to K 6th (ch) | K to Q B 6th |
| | | 5. B to Q R 5th | Mate. |

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 287.—By BETA, of St. Neots.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at K Kt 2nd | K at his 5th | Kts at K 6th and 7th | |
| Rs at K R sq and Q Kt 4th | B at Q B 6th | Ps at K Kt 3d and Q 4th | |
| | Kt at Q 4th | | |

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 288.—By H. J. C. ANDREWS.

This position occurred in play.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at his sq | K at his 3d | Ps at K 6th, K 4th, Q B 2d, and Q H 2d | Ps at K R 4th, K 4th, Q B 5th, and Q Kt 3d |
| R at Q R sq | B at Q B sq | | |
| Bs at K R 4th and K B sq | B at Q 2d | | |
| | Kt at K H 7th and Q R 4th | | |
| Kt at K B 7th | | | |

White (Mr. A.) having to play, announced mate in four moves

No. 289.—By S. B., of Hull.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at his sq | K at his 6th | Kt at R 5 6th | |
| Bs at K K 3d, and Q 6th | | Ps at K 2d and Q R 2d | |

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 290.—By H. S., of Preston.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at Q B 3d | K at K 4th | Q 5th | |
| R at K B 7th | P at Q 3d | P at Q Kt 5th | |
| B at K Kt sq and | | | |

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 291.—ANONYMOUS.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at K R 8th | K at K R 8th | Kt at K 6th | P at K R 6th |
| R at Q R 2d | R at K R 7th | | |
| | B at K B 7th | | |

White to play, and mate in three moves.

IRELAND.

St. Patrick's Day passed off in tranquility. A few mounted police patrolled the streets in solemn silence, but this was the only show of power. The parish meetings were held, at which the resolutions arranged by the association were carried, and a repeal petition adopted as each. Mr. John O'Connell attended two meetings. The speeches, of course, contained nothing new. In the evening the Lord-Lieutenant gave the usual state ball.

MEETING IN CORK.—The Mayor of Cork refused to convene a meeting to address the French, and the citizens held it without him. The meeting took place on Saturday; the chair was occupied by Mr. Maguire, editor of the Cork Examiner. A rather novel feature in public meetings was introduced by some of those present, who joined and sang a national song in the midst of the proceedings. An address of sympathy with the French was adopted.

The violence of the articles in the United Irishman continues unabated.

RELIGION.—No public meeting nor demonstration of any kind took place on St. Patrick's Day. The United Repealers issued a placard this morning, announcing that they had postponed their meeting, which had been announced for the purpose of congratulating the French on their revolution.

A meeting of the trades' union took place on Sunday to address the French people; Mr. John O'Connell attended. The address was of the ordinary kind in those cases.

DEMONSTRATION OF THE TRADES AND YOUNG IRELAND PARTY.

The demonstration of the Trades and Young Ireland party was held on Monday at the North Wall, Dublin. A platform was erected on a building-ground at the rear of a public-house, and was crowded; about it was a large number of persons of all sizes and sizes, and a considerable portion of the crowd was composed of boys and sailors, but there were also present many respectable tradesmen. There was not any military or police at the meeting. The chair was taken by Richard O'Gorman, Esq. Amongst the leaders on the platform were W. S O'Brien, Esq., M.P., and Messrs. Meagher, Mitchell, Duffy, O'Gorman, and several other members of the Irish Confederation.

Mr. Hodges, the Government reporter, was present.

The Chairman stated that the objects for which the meeting had been called were to address the French people upon their gallant assertion of their legitimate rights, to address the British Queen upon the unfortunate state of this country, and to demand the exertion of her influence with her ministry for a repeal of the legislative union, which had been so disastrous to Ireland.

Mr. Mitchell rose to move the adoption of an address to the French people. He could not congratulate that great meeting on their position in the State—citizens they were not—but mere sojourners in their own land. They dare not assemble there as the people of a free State, for they were at that moment under command of the guns of a foreign soldiery. While they could not congratulate themselves on their position, they were competent to tender their warm congratulations to the French people on the achievement of their liberties. The day, however, was not far off when the French would and could congratulate them (the Irish) on their freedom, as soon as they had won it. (Cheers.) He gave a glowing picture of the present position of the working classes of France, which he intimated was soon to be the lot of the labourers of Ireland, and concluded by moving the adoption of an address.

Mr. Richard O'Gorman proposed the following resolution:—"Considering that it is the universally-acknowledged right of every nation to determine who shall be its own rulers. That, previous to the year 1800, this island was, in all essential attributes, an independent nation. That the act which abolished its independence was passed by means of bribery and brute force, in opposition to the declared will of a large majority of its people. That the union was thus forced upon the Irish people in violation of a solemn international treaty ratified by an act of the British Legislature, declaring the right of Ireland to be bound only by laws enacted by her own Parliament to be 'established and ascertained for ever, and at no time hereafter to be questioned or questionable.' That, for the foregoing reasons, we declare our solemn conviction that the aforesaid union is a nullity; that the laws of the British Legislature are not in conscience binding upon the Irish people, and that resistance or obedience to its authority is a question of expediency, not of duty."

Mr. Dowling seconded the resolution.

Mr. T. D. M'Gee proposed the next resolution, which was to the effect that the Council of 300, contemplated by the late Mr. O'Connell, should be established, and that preparations for the purpose be immediately adopted.

Mr. T. F. Meagher, of Waterford, in addressing the meeting, said he did not think he went too far in summing up that it was for the determination of the English people, if a drop of blood were shed here by this armed Government, whilst the citizens were assembled to assert a constitutional right, for every drop of that blood there would be a thousand shed in England, and the workshops of the chief citizens would be burned to the ground in revenge. (Protracted cheering.) Mr. Meagher, in conclusion, exhorted them to violate the Convention Act, if it stood in the way of their accomplishing the project suggested by the resolution.

The resolution was then passed, as was also another, approving of the "recognition of the rights of labour" by the French Government.

Mr. Smith O'Brien, M.P., also spoke at considerable length, and the meeting separated cheering lustily for repeal.

A large body of the persons who had been present were again harangued when passing through Westmoreland-street, by Messrs. Meagher, O'Brien and Maguire, from the windows of the Young Ireland Party's Committee Rooms. They were congratulated on their having established their right of meeting, and it was hoped they would be ready when called upon to meet in another and more effective way

On Tuesday afternoon informations were sworn at the Head Police Office, before Mr. J. Magee, Justice of the Peace, against Mr. W. Smith O'Brien, M.P., Mr. T. F. Meagher, and Mr. J. Mitchell, and on the following day they attended to give bail to stand their trial at the Court of Queen's Bench, the two former for having on the 16th of March last delivered speeches calculated to excite unlawful opposition to her Majesty's Government, and the latter for having published in the United Irishman articles of a like tendency.

The Magistrate, addressing Mr. Mitchell, said that, from the gravity of the charge preferred against him by the Attorney-General, he would be required to give bail in person for £200, and in two sureties for £100 each.

The Magistrate also informed Messrs. O'Brien and Meagher of the charges against them. Sureties were tendered, to which the Crown did not object. They then proceeded to D'Oller-street, where the three gentlemen delivered short inflammatory speeches to between 4000 and 5000 persons, after which the mob dispersed, and the large body of police in attendance were marched back to their barracks.—Mr. O'Brien, it is said, has gone to Paris.

REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—Rent for the week, £91 2s. 9d.

THE MARINE SOCIETY.—The anniversary dinner of the Marine Society took place on Thursday at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street. The Earl of Auckland, G.C.B., first Lord of the Admiralty, was in the chair, and the festival was attended by comparatively a large number of influential friends, among whom were the Earl of Romney, the president of the Institution, Admiral Sir Charles Adam, K.C.B., Governor of Greenwich Hospital, Major-General Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B., and Captain Sir John Pelley, Bart., Deputy-Master of the Trinity Corporation, Vice-Presidents; Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Malcolm (one of the warmest supporters of this, as he is of all other institutions connected with the maritime service), Major-General Caulfield, Rear-Admiral Sykes, Rear-Admiral Sir Henry Hart, Commodore Superintendent Sir Gordon Bremer, K.C.B.; Captain Milne, one of the Lords of the Admiralty; Captains T. Pickering, Clarke, and Prokyn, R.N., Messrs. O. Lang, Whiteman, Commaney, and Francis. The meeting was addressed by Sir James Lushington, Sir Charles Adam, Lord Romney, Lord Auckland, and Sir John Pelly; after which the treasurer announced a list of subscriptions, headed by Lord Auckland with £25, which amounted to about £600.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

General Subervie, the Minister of War, has resigned, and been replaced ad interim by M. Arago The General is named Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honour, in place of Marshal Gerard.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge entertained his co-Directors of the Ancient Concerts at dinner on Wednesday evening, at Cambridge House.

The Vienna Gazette of the 14th instant contains the following official notification:—"The Privy State-Chancellor, Prince Metternich, has resigned his office into the hands of his Majesty the Emperor."

M. Lafitte has addressed a letter to the Finance Minister, enclosing a gift of 25,000f. to the public treasury

The Royal Commission for enquiring into the Merchant Seamen's Fund had a meeting at the Board of Trade on Saturday. The Commissioners present were the Earl of Ellenborough, Admiral Sir Edward Codrington, and Mr. Enderby

The Moniteur contains a decree, placing 60,000,000f. at the disposal of the Minister of Finance, for the encouragement of agriculture, manufactures, and commerce.

The Duke of Devonshire will give a grand banquet on Wednesday, the 29th instant, at Devonshire House; to be succeeded by an evening party.

His Excellency Viscount Falkland, the newly appointed Governor of Bombay, left London on Monday evening for Southampton, accompanied by the Hon. Mr. Carey, there to embark for Alexandria, en route to Bombay.

By a decree inserted in the Moniteur of Saturday last, the privilege of the Bank of Bordeaux is prolonged to 31st December, 1849.

Her Highness Princess Gassalkovich de Gyrgenti (née Princess Esterhazy) arrived at Mivart's on Saturday, from Hungary.

Lord Brougham, according to letters received from Cannes, on Saturday, was progressing rapidly towards health.

The Courrier Français says that a commission is to be nominated to examine into the state of the coast defences

Viscount and Viscountess Milton have recently arrived in this country from a cruise in the Mediterranean

Lord and Lady Poltimore, accompanied by General Buller, and their son, the Hon. Augustus Bampfyld, arrived in London last week, after a lengthened residence in Germany and Paris.

The shareholders of Gunneron's bank, at Paris, were, like those of Gouin's, taking measures to start it again.

On Tuesday last, Abraham Kershaw, a coal-miner, aged 31 years, was accidentally killed, by falling out of a tub when ascending out of Messrs Dearden's coal pits, at Spotland Fold, near Rochdale. He fell a distance of above 60 yards. He has left a wife and four young children

Lord and Lady Fitzclarence have left the Clarendon for Government House, Portsmouth

His Excellency Count Schimmelpennick, the Netherlands Minister, left London on Monday evening, for the Hague. His Excellency, it is understood, has been summoned to take part in the new Dutch Ministry.

The Infant of Spain Don Enrique has been struck off the list of half-pay naval officers, in consequence of his letter of adhesion to the French Republic.

Sir Fitzroy and Lady Kelly have left Dover for the south of France, where they will remain for the benefit of her Ladyship's health until Easter.

We are sorry to announce the decease of Mr. Edward Monckton, of Somerford Hall, in the county of Stafford, Lieutenant-Colonel of the Queen's Own Staffordshire Yeomanry, and a very active magistrate.

George Hudson, Esq., M.P., gave a dinner to the following Members of the House of Commons, at his residence at Albert Gate, on Saturday, the 18th :—Lord George Bentinck, Lord Ingestre, Sir John Trollope, Sir John Tyrell, Col. Sibthorp, Mr. Disraeli

The Hon. Hector Loring, Commander of her Majesty's ship Howe, died at Lisbon, on the 7th instant. His health had been in a declining state for some considerable time

A luminous meteor, coming from the south-west, passed over Bath on the morning of the 8th, to the east, with a tail of about three-quarters of a yard apparent length. The nucleus was about double the size of a cricket-ball, and it passed very rapidly. The sky was cloudy, not a star being visible.

Cardinal de Bonald, Archbishop of Lyons, has written to the Minister of Public Instruction and Ecclesiastical Affairs, to protest against the violation of the great principle of association consecrated by the commissary of the Government, in decreeing the suppression of religious communities not authorised by the laws.

His Excellency, Sir Stratford Canning (the Ambassador at Constantinople), accompanied by Lady Canning, left Grosvenor-square on Saturday evening, for Dover, en route to Vienna. Sir Stratford will make a brief sojourn in the Austrian capital, and then proceed, via Trieste, to Constantinople, to resume his diplomatic duties, after a protracted absence

On Saturday, the 18th instant, Dr. Mathie Hamilton, from Peru, had an interview with Lord Palmerston at the Foreign Office

Letters from Constantinople of February 7 state that a dreadful fire, which occurred at Kenia, in the province of Kutiah, on the 10th of February, consumed the bazaar and the mercantile part of the town, as well as a depôt of grain.

We have authority to state that Sir Charles Morgan, of Tredegar, has no intention whatever of coming forward as a candidate for the representation of the county of Monmouth at the approaching election.

The Prince of Wales' Gate, the new entrance to Hyde-Park, from the Kensington-road, nearly opposite the site of the Half-way house, is now open to the public. There are two carriage gates and two for pedestrians; they are of neat and rather elegant construction, with a keeper's lodge similar to those formerly erected at the other entrances

George Hudson, Esq., M.P., has signified his intention of heading, with a donation of £1,000, the subscription which has been opened for the relief of the labourers who have been expelled from the different railway works in France.

At Newport, in the Isle of Wight, an address to the French had been got up during the last week, and sent for presentation to Paris.

A serious accident occurred on Wednesday evening (last week), to a party going out to view the Chinese junk Keying, lying in St. Aubin's Bay, Jersey. A boat, containing 16 persons, was run down by the Zebra cutter, and four of the number perished, among whom was a boatman, who was strangled in the endeavour to draw him on board the cutter

Pipes for the supply of Newport, Isle of Wight, with water have been laid down, and many of the inhabitants are deriving the advantage of a full supply of the celebrated Carisbrook spring water

The official returns of the exports of our manufactures from the United Kingdom, for the month ending on the 5th of February, must be considered satisfactory. Their declared value was £3,227,136, against £3,077,910 at the corresponding period in 1847, and £3,382,819 ditto in 1846

There is no foundation for the statement that a fleet had arrived at Cove. There are some war-ships there, and they have been amusing the people of the harbour.

Much apprehension was felt, during the last week, at Jersey, owing to the French traders, which arrived there on Sunday last, having been prevented by a mob from embarking any meat at Granville, and which had been the cause of advancing the price of meat in Jersey to 10d. per pound. The export of meat, however, to that island is resumed, and is likely to continue.

A letter from St. Petersburgh announces the approaching departure of the Emperor Nicholas for Berlin, and of the Empress for the island of Madeira, where she has been ordered by her physicians to pass some time

The marriage of the Lady Sarah Hay, the daughter of the Earl and Countess of Kinnoul, with the Hon. Hugh Chomondeley, had been fixed to take place on Thursday last.

Her Majesty the Queen of Naples was safely delivered of a Prince on the 6th inst.

The Protestants of Paris have formed a Democratic Club for the purpose of ensuring the success of their friends at the approaching general election for members to the Constituent Assembly

The Hanover Gazette of the 16th instant contains a Royal ordinance prohibiting the exportation of horses to any state not belonging to the Germanic Confederation, under penalties of confiscation and fine

The Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and her daughter the Duchess Louise, left Berlin on the 16th inst. for Schwerin, where the Duchess of Orleans had arrived with her children.

The prices of admission to the Théâtre Français, Paris, have been reduced nearly one-half, to make it as easy of access as possible.

The Provisional Government of France have imposed an addition of 45 centimes per franc, or 45 per cent., on the four direct taxes.

The Gazette of Tuesday night contains an order, by the Lords of the Privy Council, to his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, to prepare a form of prayer and thanksgiving to Almighty God for her Majesty's safe delivery of a Princess, to be used in all churches and chapels on Sunday next.

Lamoricière, one of the combatants of February, anxious to retain trophies of their prowess, had kept the arms they took from the Tuileries, in spite of the many appeals of the Provisional Government to restore them. Cavaignac, the late Minister of War, has been active in his researches, and caused most of these arms to be restored. Amongst these was a sword which had been presented in Louis Philippe's cabinet, and which he had made use of in his first campaign under Dumouriez.

M. Guizot has been admitted as an honorary member of the Athenæum Club, for two months; a step that has excited some disapprobation in the club.

At Stockholm, the capital of Sweden, immediately on the receipt of the intelligence of the revolution at Paris, a society was formed for demanding electoral and parliamentary reform

On and after the 28th instant, the fee charged for the registration of letters at the Post-office will be reduced from one shilling to sixpence, which must be paid in money. The postage of registered letters must in all cases be paid in stamps.

THE CITY OF BERLIN.

THE REVOLUTION IN PRUSSIA.

Serious disturbances occurred at Berlin on the 13th

The deputies of the [illegible] having refused to adopt the petition which had been drawn [illegible] and signed for presentation to the King, [illegible] for the morning to take the matter into consideration. At an early hour a large [illegible] and it was suddenly reported that some arrests had been made, and that the Government purposed preventing any public demonstration by armed force. At this moment a gendarme made his appearance, and was received with hootings, and compelled to retire towards the guard-house, near the Brandenburg-gate. The crowd followed him, and surrounded the guard [illegible] on duty sent for a reinforcement, and some detachments of cavalry and infantry came, driving back the people. The cavalry at the same time cleared the square near the Castle.

The mob began to assume a more serious aspect, and the cavalry made repeated charges in which some blood was shed. The troops unnecessarily made use of their arms in dispersing the people. The [illegible] was most serious in the vicinity of the Palace and near the Peter's-place, from which the people were driven towards the Breiten-street, where a barricade was thrown up. On other points the pavement was taken up and stones thrown at the soldiers. Many arrests were made.

All the public offices, such as the Arsenal, the Bank, the Seehandlung, &c., were occupied by strong detachments of troops. Guns ready for action were kept [illegible] all day in the barracks.

The ostentation with which the Government displayed its troops was one of the principal causes of the assemblages of the people, who were dispersed by the cavalry. The number of wounded has not been ascertained, but there is a general feeling of indignation against the troops, who used their sabres against the people often without first calling upon them to disperse.

On the following day, the 14th, the Burgomaster and Senators issued a proclamation expressing confidence in the "good intentions" of the King, and inculcating the observance of peace and order on the part of the people. On the same day the deputation of magistrates and delegates of Berlin, headed by the Chief Burgomaster, was received by the King of Prussia, and they presented to his Majesty the petition adopted in the last meeting of the town-councillors. His Majesty received the deputation kindly, and speaking of some modifications the deputation wished to have introduced into the constitution, his Majesty said that alterations in the constitutional law must be made with great caution, and he alleged the example in France, where in some fifty years fifteen constitutions had been made and abolished.

The disturbances were renewed on the 15th and 16th, and succeeding days. We learn that, on the first-named of those days, numerous gatherings in all the streets assembled about noon on the Schlossplatz. The crowd was immense. At night a kind of consabulary force was formed, whose members wore, as a distinctive mark, a black and white stripe on the left arm. A proclamation was issued claiming for the constables the respect of the people [illegible] the authorities promised to retain the soldiery in their barracks so long as the personal safety of the public was respected. But the infantry suddenly charged the crowd on the Castle-place at the moment when the constab[illegible] and exhorting them to disperse. The people were violently thrown back upon the streets near the Castle. They halted, and established several [illegible] which they defended with stones against the soldiery sent to d[illegible]. The troops made use of their fire-arms, and fired several times [illegible] men of the people fell. The infantry and the cav[illegible] fled, and killed several with the same brutality which [illegible] out the disturbances. The Minister of the Interior, Count de Bodelschwing, has instituted an inquiry into the conduct of a troop of cuirassiers, whom the citizens accuse of charging the people without any provocation. Several gun and iron shops are said to have been plundered. Numerous arrests have taken place. The number of the wounded and killed was considerable. On the 17th, the students of the Universities of Berlin and Halle, forming a procession of about 1800 men, went to the Royal Palace to present a petition to the King.

On the 17th the violent spirit exhibited by the people still continuing, the King, on the morning of the 18th, issued a proclamation convoking the States for the 2nd of April next, and granting the liberty of the press. Whereupon the crowd directed its steps towards the square in front of the Palace, in order to testify to the King the gratitude of the people. All of a sudden some individuals began to hoot and threaten the military. The troops charged, and were repulsed. They then attacked the people with their sabres. The cry "To Arms!" was immediately to be heard on all sides. Barricades were erected in the twinkling of an eye, and the massacre between the citizens and the military commenced. The number of killed is computed at upwards of 100 persons.

Four of the retrograde Ministers have given in their resignation, namely, de Thile, Eichhorn, Savigny, and Bodelschwingh. Some add the name of Stolberg. It was also said that Messrs. de Vincke, [illegible], Camphausen, and Auerswald had been recalled, and that the two latter had [illegible].

CHANGE OF THE PRUSSIAN CABINET.

At two o'clock this day, the 19th, the following Royal proclamation was published:

"I have already, early yesterday morning, accepted the resignation of my former Ministry, and have charged Count Arnim with the formation of a new Ministry.

"He accepts the office of President of the Ministry, and, pro tem., the Administration of Foreign Affairs and of Constitutional Questions.

"To Count Schwerin I have confided the Ministry of Ecclesiastics Affairs.

"The Provincial Councillor Von Auerswald, who is now absent, will be charged with the Ministry of the Interior, exclusive of the above-named portion of its duties reserved for Count Arnim, provided, as may be expected, he, the Councillor Von Auerswald, be ready to accept the same.

"The Minister of Justice and the Ministers Counts Stolberg and Von Rohr will retain their posts for the present, till subsequent arrangements are made for replacing them.

"Until the definitive appointment of the Minister of Finance, the Director of Taxes, M. Kühne, will undertake that part of the administration ad interim.

"Berlin, March 19, 1848." "FREDERICK WILLIAM.

Tranquillity has been quite restored in Berlin, and the people have given themselves up to rejoicings.

The Börsenhalle of the 18th has letters from Königsberg to the 14th inst., which report great disturbances in that city on the preceding day.

An immense concourse assembled around the building in which the Municipal "Ressource" was sitting, and refused to disperse when the meeting broke up, although implored to do so by M. Walesrode, a great popular favourite.

The enraged multitude proceeded to the police station, where they tore up the pavement, broke all the windows, hewed the shutters in pieces with axes, and vowed vengeance against the police-president Lauterbach, a man universally detested. The gendarmerie and police could not arrest the violence of the crowd, and the soldiery were equally impotent. At length a furious charge was made upon the people by the Cuirassiers, who displayed the same brutal ferocity as at Cologne. Many peaceable citizens were seriously wounded, and two killed. Several were arrested and sent to prison.

On the 14th the tumult was still very alarming. The address forwarded to Berlin by the Municipal "Ressource" has provoked his Majesty to dissolve the assembly definitively, and the framers of the obnoxious document are to be prosecuted, although the proceedings are temporarily suspended by the police.

The enthusiasm of the inhabitants of Cologne, when the above news arrived from Berlin on the 20th, was indescribable.

The great Imperial standard (black, red, and gold, with the double eagle) was with the sanction of the Archbishop, hoisted on the top of Cologne Cathedral, and is now proclaiming to the Germans on both sides of the Rhine the regeneration of Germany.

CHARGE OF TROOPS, AT BERLIN.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. March 19.

ELECTION OF A VISITOR.—The Master and Fellows of Balliol College, in conformity with the peculiar privilege possessed by that society of appointing their own visitor, have elected the Lord Bishop of Lincoln in the room of the late Archbishop of Canterbury.

PUBLIC EXAMINERS.—The Vice-Chancellor has appointed the Rev. William Hedley, M.A., Fellow of University College, to be a public examiner in Disciplinis Mathematicis et Physicis; the Rev. Mark Pattison, M.A., Fellow of Lincoln College, was nominated by the Junior Proctor to be a public examiner in Literis Humanioribus.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE.—The Rev. J. Hunt, M.A., Fellow of this College, has been preferred to the Vicarage of Fishead Magdalen, Dorsetshire, on the presentation of the patron, the Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol.

THE INCOME TAX.—The following return "of the Amount of Income Tax Assessed by the Commissioners upon any Annuities, Dividends, or Shares of Annuities, payable by the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland to or for the use of Persons not resident in Ireland, under the 91st Clause of the Act 5 and 6 Victoria, c. 35, during each Year since the passing of the said Act," has been just published:—

| Year. | | | Income Tax Assessed | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | £ | s. | d. |
| 1842, ending on the 6th of April, 1843 | .. | .. | 2[illegible] | 14 | 9 |
| 1843, —— 1844 | .. | .. | 3179 | 10 | 9 |
| 1844, —— 1845 | .. | .. | 2[illegible] | 0 | 3 |
| 1845, —— 1846 | .. | .. | 2[illegible] | 13 | 2 |
| 1846, —— 1847 | .. | .. | 2[illegible] | 19 | 5 |

T. LIGHTFOOT, Accountant and Comptroller-General

Accountant and Comptroller-General's Office,
Stamps and Taxes, March 11.

MORTALITY IN THE METROPOLIS.—The Deaths in London during the week ending March 18 are stated by the registrar-general to have numbered 1118; the average being 1107. The births during the same period were 1436.

STRIKE OF THE WORKMEN AT THE PORTLAND BREAKWATER.—The Portlanders and navvies on these works have shown some determination to resist the terms of their employers, and various acts of threatening have been used towards some few men who attempted to work, and who were consequently compelled to leave off. Captain Manning, one of the county magistrates, has judiciously cautioned them against intimidation, and issued warrants for the apprehension of some two or three ringleaders. Now, however, nearly the whole of the men are at work again, but the Portland quarrymen are at present excluded, with the exception of some few, as it is generally considered they were the instigators of the strike. We are not aware what proxies terms have been come to, but we hope they will be satisfactory to all parties.

VIENNA, FROM MR. BURFORD'S NEW PANORAMA.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

JOHN, MARQUIS OF BUTE, K.T., F.R.S., &c.

THIS excellent and much-respected nobleman died suddenly, at his seat, Cardiff Castle, on the 16th instant. His Lordship had entertained a small party at dinner on that evening, and retired at ten o'clock. His absence was observed by Lady Bute, and in a few minutes afterwards he was discovered by his valet lying across his bed. Medical attendance was immediately procured, but the vital spark had fled. The greatest gloom pervades the town of Cardiff, where the Marquis was deservedly beloved.

At the period of his decease Lord Bute had completed his 57th year, having been born 12th August, 1793. He succeeded to the Scottish Earldom of Dumfries on the demise of his maternal grandfather, Patrick, Earl of Dumfries, 7th April, 1803, and inherited the Marquisate of Bute at the decease of his paternal grandfather, in 1814. He married, first, in 1818, Maria, eldest daughter of George Augustus, third Earl of Guildford, but by her Ladyship, who died in 1841, he had no child. His second marriage, to Sophia, daughter of the first Marquis of Hastings, and sister of the lamented Lady Flora Hastings, took place in January, 1845, and its issue is an only son, born in 1847, who now succeeds to the family titles.

John Stuart, founder of the House of Bute, was a natural son of King Robert II. His representative, Sir James Stuart, Bart., of Ardmoleish, the first Peer, considerably augmented his patrimony by his marriage with Agnes, eldest daughter of Sir George Mackenzie, of Rosehaugh, whose estates eventually enriched a junior branch of his Lordship's descendants, and are now held by Lord Wharncliffe. The first Lord's grandson was John, third Earl of Bute, K.G., the favourite and Minister of George III. Of that nobleman, the Peer whose death we record was great-grandson. By his Lordship's decease, a ribbon of the Thistle, the Lieutenancy of Glamorganshire, and the Recordership of Banbury fall to the patronage of Government.

ADMIRAL MATSON.

Richard Matson, Admiral of the Blue, was the second son of John Matson, Esq., Chief Justice of Dominica. He was born in 1771, and entered the navy in 1785. As midshipman and mate he was actively employed for several years in the Mediterranean, under Lord Hood and Sir Sydney Smith. He was mate of the Britannia, and served ashore during the occupation of Toulon, in 1793, when he was publicly thanked by Sir Sydney Smith for his conduct at the destruction of the arsenal and fleet; and his name, in connexion with this service, appeared in the Gazette. He fought, also, at the siege of St. Florenzo and Bastia, in the year 1794; was lieutenant of the Bedford, in Hotham's action; commanded the Cyane, under the orders of his uncle, the late Sir Henry Harvey, in the West Indies; and was present at the capture of Surinam, in 1799. The Daphne was subsequently under his orders for three years. This gallant officer became a Rear-Admiral in 1825, and an Admiral in 1847.

Admiral Matson was the younger brother of Charles Matson, Esq., Retired Paymaster and Purser, and uncle of Commander Henry J. Matson, lately commanding the Darring. The death of Admiral Matson took place on the 19th inst., at his residence, Cavendish-road, St. John's Wood, from a fit of apoplexy.

VICE-ADMIRAL WARREN.

THIS highly respected naval officer was son of Dr. Warren, physician to George III., and brother of the late celebrated Dr. Warren. He entered the British service in 1769, and was most actively and honourably engaged during the course of the last war. His gallant encounter with the Danish gun-boats off Omoe Island, in 1809, and the part he took while commanding the Spartiate, in the Tagus, during the eventful period of Don John's escape from Portugal to the Brazils, tended much to enhance his reputation.

He was Commander-in-Chief on the Cape of Good Hope and Western African station in the Isis from 1831 to 1833. His last appointment was Rear-Admiral Superintendent of Devonport Dockyard. Admiral Warren died on the 22d inst., at his seat, East Cosham, Hants, leaving a widow, one daughter, and two sons. The sons are both active officers in the naval service of their country. The gallant Admiral dies deeply and deservedly regretted.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S GARDENS.—We are authorised to announce that, by a recent resolution of the Zoological Society, the public will be admitted to the Gardens in the Regent's-park, on Mondays, after the 10th of April next, upon the payment of sixpence only; and children on all days, but those of Promenade, also at sixpence. We rejoice at these concessions to the public.

EDUCATION OF NEGRO CHILDREN.—A public meeting was held in the course of the week, at the Literary Institution, in Cadogan-gardens, Sloane-street, Chelsea, the Marquis of Cholmondeley in the chair, in aid of the Ladies' Society for Promoting the Improvement of Children of Negroes and People of Colour in the British West Indies. Resolutions in accordance with the objects of the meeting were supported by the Bishop of Oxford, the Bishop of Antigua, Sir E. N. Buxton, Bart., M.P., and the Rev. Dr. Burges.

CROYDON.—The new Archbishop of Canterbury has fully determined on making Addington his country abode. On Tuesday week he paid it a visit, and inspected the house and grounds, not omitting to make friendly calls on the villagers, whom he congratulated on their neat and comfortable appearance, and addressed in terms of great kindness and encouragement. His Grace has taken a considerable portion of the stock on the estate, and, what is to be commended, has re-appointed the whole of the out-door servants connected with the establishment.

MUNIFICENT LEGACY.—The late Miss Catherine Wood has bequeathed a munificent legacy of £1000 to the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels.

VIENNA.

OPPORTUNELY enough, Mr. Burford has completed, for the large circle of his establishment in Leicester-square, a Panoramic View of the City of Vienna and the surrounding country, just in time to illustrate the news received of the revolutionary proceedings in that capital. These will be found detailed at page 182, so that our present purpose is to do justice to the merits of Mr. Burford's Picture.

Vienna, the capital of the Austrian dominions, is situated in a fine fruitful plain, on the south or right bank of the Danube, not strictly on the main stream, being separated from it by the extensive suburb of Leopoldstadt, and by a vast park called the Prater. A navigable arm of the river, which here divides itself into several streams, washes the very walls on the northern side; whilst, on the southern, it has the river Wien, an insignificant rivulet, from which, however, the city takes its name.

Although the site is flat, it is bounded by hills and mountains, their sides covered with fine woods, sprinkled with chateaux and villas, and ornamented everywhere by the picturesque ruins of decayed castles, the strongholds of feudal times; whilst there is a splendid landscape of romantic valleys, villages, woods, farms, pastures, and gardens, spreading far and wide.

Mr. Burford has sketched his Panorama from the church of St. Carlo, in the suburb of Wieden, on the verge of the Glacis, which, with its fine trees and verdant lawns, intersected by the Wien, forms the foreground of the view; from this rise, also, the two bell-turrets of the church; the view being taken from the lantern of the dome. At first, there is little seen to impress you with the idea of one of the first cities in the world: but, if you look attentively towards the north-west, you see the old town, with its rich Gothic cathedral tower and spire, rising from a vast mass of buildings. The walls are distinctly shown, and within them is the Imperial palace, with the Emperor's garden, the grounds of the Volksgarten in front, and a long line of fine houses facing the ramparts behind is a dense mass of buildings, churches, palaces, and immense public edifices, so closely built, that the streets dividing them can scarcely be defined.

To the South and East a different scene presents itself: here are several churches and public buildings, and magnificent palaces in beautiful gardens and grounds; and beyond them villages, and a vast plain, here stretching to the verge of the horizon, and there bounded by the mountains of Hungary. Among the striking objects are the winding Danube; the villages of Aspern, Essling, Wagram, and Schönbrunn, famous in military story; and the Brühl and Baden hills, with the castle of Presburg in the extreme distance.

The interior of the city appears to have been principally the scene of the recent revolutionary outbreak; but, looking to the left, as you face the old city, you may see in the Rennswig the palace of Prince Metternich, stated to have been destroyed by the people. It is a lofty, many-windowed edifice, with little of the architectural character of a "villa," by which it is designated.

The diplomatic celebrity of Vienna is attested by its name being attached to several treaties with Germany, Spain, France, and England; none, however, of more importance to Europe than that signed there, after the famous Congress of Sovereigns, and ministers of the allied powers, in 1815.

The Panorama is cleverly painted throughout, the paysage, as usual in Mr. Burford's pictures, being beautifully executed, and the aërial effect particularly fine. The long, straight lines of trees, walls, and houses are strongly inimical to the picturesque—a difficulty which the painter has surmounted with much skill. It is true that the formality of the houses is relieved by their high-pitched and dormered roofs; and the charming suburbs make up for the monotony of the city. Yet, the mass bristles with spire, and dome, and tower: the tower and spire of the Cathedral, by the way, are 465 feet in height.

Altogether, this is a well-timed addition to our metropolitan sights; which, as a work of art, it has superior claims upon the public attention. By permission of Mr. Burford, we have engraved the most striking portion of his picture.

FREE EXHIBITION OF SELECT BRITISH MANUFACTURES AT THE SOCIETY OF ARTS.

(Concluded from page 188.)

BEFORE we resume our notice of this Exhibition, it is important to observe that a proposition has lately been made by the Society of Arts, by co-operation with the Government, to give the provincial Schools of Design the benefit of the periodical Exhibition of the Society's collections. It is also proposed that, with the co-operation of the Board of Trade, the Society shall, every (fourth?) year, make a collected Exhibition of the principal subjects exhibited in the previous three years, as well as of others; and that such National Exhibition shall take place in some large building provided with the Government sanction, if not at their cost. Trafalgar-square has been suggested as the site, and has, we believe, been approved of. The admission to the Exhibition is to be partly free, and partly by payment, as at Westminster Hall: the receipts over the expenses are to be distributed as honorary rewards to artists, manufacturers, and art-workmen, and to be applied to form a fund for future exhibitions. This is, certainly, a valuable extension of the Society's plan, which we hope to see carried out with the same spirit of popular enlightenment in which it has been conceived.

We now return to the Society's Large Room, near the centre of which is the noble specimen of Earthenware we have engraved—a VASE IN THE ETRUSCAN STYLE, one of the largest and most perfect that has ever been executed by English Potters. Its height is four feet; the material, Staffordshire clay; the form is from the antique, and the ornamental design executed upon it is after Flaxman, from Flaxman's "Outlines," (Æschylus). It is from the pottery of F. and R. Pratt and Co., Fenton Potteries; the exhibitors are J. and F. Atkinson. We are happy to add that his Royal Highness Prince Albert has commissioned Mr. Eldred to purchase this and a companion Vase—the price 150 guineas. They are magnificent specimens of British skill, and worthy of a place in any Royal palace.

Near this Vase is a beautiful Rose-water Dish, and Toilet Bottle and Stand, in Electro gilding and plating, by a new process, manufactured by G. R. Collis and Co.: there are two deposits—gold and silver, and the effect has nearly the richness of olden art.

We may here notice, as of very commendable design, a frame of Electrotype Casts of the Centres of three Rose-water Dishes, executed in Silver Gilt, for St. Bartholomew's Hospital; and a model in wax of St. George and the Dragon, part of a candelabrum manufactured for the Duke of Nassau. These are by Mr. Thomas (not J.) Sharp, the artist of the Shakespeare Cup, noticed in our Journal of last week.

A very elegant specimen of Jennens and Bettridge's Papier Maché—a CHEVAL SCREEN, ornamented in the Alhambra style should be specially mentioned; the panel by a patent process in imitation of inlaid gems. The framework is white and gold pierced; and around the Moorish arch, or opening, the green, gold, and carmine have a superb effect.

Among the Modern Marqueterie, we should mention a fine specimen by Gillman and Davis: the flowers, scroll-work, and Arabesque design are in various woods, of natural colour, except the green portions; an important advantage both as regards beauty and permanence.

Among Summerly's Art-Manufactures, we have already illustrated and described the Shakespeare Clock. One of the novelties is a TEA CADDY SPOON, ornamented with the Tea-plant, designed by W. H. Rogers, and made in silver by B. Smith. The CAMELLIA TEA-POT is an article of kindred taste and utility. It is from the design of R. Redgrave, A.R.A., and is made in Britannia Metal, by J. Dixon and Sons; the figure, a Chinese Fairy, examining the Tea-plant, at the top, is of Parian, made by Minton and Co. The Caddy Spoon and Tea-pot well illustrate the Summerly principle of the ornament denoting the use of the Manufacture; and there is, unquestionably, much more artistic design in these instances, than in the shell spoon, and corrupt vase-like forms of tea-pots

STAFFORDSHIRE CLAY VASE IN THE ETRUSCAN STYLE.
BY PRATT AND CO.

hitherto in use. The same design is made in silver, with an ivory figure; and the latter is likewise placed upon tea-caddies of turned wood and papier maché.

CADDY SPOON. TEA-POT.

The BREAD PLATTER is another useful domestic novelty; it is executed in Wood, the rim ornamented with Wheat, Rye, Barley, and Oats, designed by Bell, and carved by Phillips and Wynne; or, the Platter may have electro-Bell, and carved by Phillips and Wynne; or, the Platter may have electro-plated mountings, or be entirely of Porcelain. The wooden Platter may to the BREAD PLATTER.

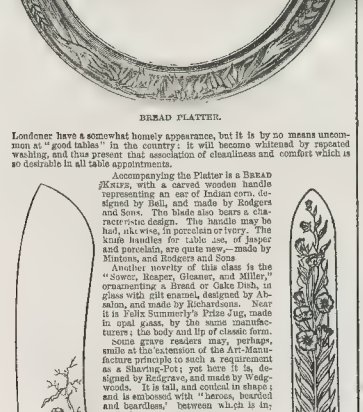
Londoner have a somewhat homely appearance, but it is by no means uncommon at "good tables" in the country: it will become whitened by repeated washing, and thus present that association of cleanliness and comfort which is so desirable in all table appointments.



BREAD KNIFE. PAPER KNIFE.

Accompanying the Platter is a BREAD KNIFE, with a carved wooden handle representing an ear of Indian corn, designed by Bell, and made by Rodgers and Sons. The blade also bears a characteristic design. The handle may be had, likewise, in porcelain or ivory. The knife handles for table use, of jasper and porcelain, are quite new,—made by Mintons, and Rodgers and Sons.

Another novelty of this class is the "Sower, Reaper, Gleaner, and Miller," ornamenting a Bread or Cake Dish, in glass with gilt enamel, designed by Absalon, and made by Richardsons. Near it is Felix Summerly's Prize Jug, made in opal glass, by the same manufacturers, and duly lit of classic form.

Some grave readers may, perhaps, smile at the extension of the Art-Manufacture principle to such a requirement as a Shaving-Pot; yet here it is, designed by Redgrave, and made by Wedgwoods. It is tall, and central in shape; and is embossed with "heroes, bearded and beardless," between which is inscribed—

"By the length of his beard can you measure a man?
Poet or Hero?—I doubt if you can."

"Bearded or Shaven—Wit comes from Heaven." Old Proverb.

The lid is a sitting figure, by no means beardless.

The Knifave Salad Fork is made in Ivory, Silver, and Wood, designed by Bell. The wood and ivory are good specimens of carving, but we cannot commend the execution of the silver.

A PAPER KNIFE is, however, a better specimen of illustrative manufacture: the handle is a boy and dolphin, either in Parian or Ivory, as representing water, while the blade is ornamented with the flower of the flax, the chief ingredient of the best paper. This elegant design is by Mr. Bell, who appears to have entered fully into the spirit of Art-Manufacture. The blade of his Paper knife is richly gilt: it is a beautiful drawing-room appointment.

A series of three Dessert Stoppers, "the Vintagers," by Horsley, on the full of design: the figures are "Gathering the Grapes," "Wine-making," and "Wine made."

A Wine Tray, in papier maché, designed by Redgrave, made by Jennens and Bettridge, enables you to fix the decanters, and prevent their slithing among the glasses, and is, accordingly, better adapted for handing wine round. The style of ornament is quite new in this material. Richardsons have made gilt decanters to match

There is, also, a handsome Fish Knife and Fork, in Silver, by Bell, which is of very characteristic design. On the blade, Boys are spiking an Eel and landing a Trout; and, on the handle, the Fisherman is hauling a net from the sea. It is made by Rodgers and Sons.

In the Office, we noticed some Specimens of Manufacture which reminded us of the early days of the Society of Arts. These are Soaps made from a new vegetable oil, expressed from the seed of the Barria latifolia, common in the Northern and Central parts of Bellar, in the province of Behar. The timber is used for ship-building, and from the flower is distilled a cheap and powerful spirit. The Oil has also been manufactured, in India, into Candles. Here are, likewise, samples of Soap made from the Oil-nut, the produce of Australia, the first specimen imported into this country.

We have now completed our descriptive détour of this year's Exhibition: our bestowal of commendation may to some appear liberal, but we are persuaded that, in every instance, the meed of praise will be found justified by the merit of the production.

The arrangements for the Exhibition, we should mention, are in excellent taste, and the attention of the Officers of the Society to the requirements of the Visitors deserves special mention.

 Last week, by an error in the Catalogue, we noticed the Parian Bust of Jenny Lind as by Copeland, instead of by the Mintons.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The tempter, or the tempted—who sins most? SHAKESPEARE

With the exception of a small amateur meeting—the Old Asbury—and a few steeple-chases, the interest of which was merely local, the present week was barren as regarded any popular sport. It may, therefore, be a convenient opportunity for offering some observations on points connected with the principle and practice of the turf, as well as affecting both its character and condition. There is no need for allusion to those acts of denounced scoundrelism which have sullied its annals within the last few or a dozen years. Where is the place so pure, it has been well asked, wherunto foul things will not sometimes intrude?

It is the policy of horse-racing as now received and generally acted on that seems to call for more consideration than has been bestowed upon it by those who frame and revise its laws. Every turf law is putting forth that it is a profession, more or less, with all engaged in it. Now there are two parties to the system the proprietors of race-horses, who make the game, and the public, who make stakes. If this were so common sense—to say nothing of honour—is to order the dealing between these chapmen, the owner of a nomination, which he suffers to be publicly backed, has no more right to do as he chooses with it, than has a banker at hazard to pocket the money "out" without a throw of the dice.

According to rule 40 of "Rules concerning horse-racing in general," it is established "that no person can enter and run, either in his own name or the name of any other person, two horses of which he is wholly or in part the owner, for any plate." In lieu of Plates, we have now Stakes, for which anybody may enter and start (or let it alone) any number of horses, according to his pleasure or caprice. This may be well, for it increases the value of the prizes, and adds, we will take it for granted, to sport. But out of this has grown a practice which cries indignantly for reformation—the usage that when two horses in the same stable have, on their merits, been backed by the public, it is open to the proprietor to declare to win with the worst.

In the middle of August last, Cossack was backed at Tattersall's seen against the field at the St. Leger, and there was at that time an outsider quoted at 25 to 1, called Foreclosure. On the day of the race, there was a slip of paper stuck up in the rooms to this effect, "Mr. Pedley declares to win with Fore-closure." In this case the animal selected to win ran last. Some years before a similar declaration was also made on the St. Leger, and in that instance the steed last was not to win but had been heavily backed by the public at 4 to 1. He could have won in a canter: indeed, he was only prevented doing so by one of the most powerful jockeys on the turf. This refers to the race, or rather the heating, between Launcelot and Maroon. No reflection is meant upon the principals in either of these modern instances. They dealt with the custom as they found it. But if Doncaster is to be a sport for gentlemen, or an engagement of honour, this must be reformed altogether

In the Book Calendar there is the following resolution. At a meeting of the Jockey Club, held on Thursday in the second October Meeting, 1838, which was very numerously attended, it was unanimously resolved, "That it is the opinion of this club that it is necessary to declare their extreme disapprobation of horses being started for races without the intention on the part of the owners to win with them." Did the members of the Jockey Club visit with their "extreme disapprobation" the owners of Cossack and Maroon?

While the practice of the system and vagaries of it remain, no wonder that it gives constant rise to episodes of equivocal morality. Let good examples be shown by these to whom the majority look up, and then—should not matters mend—why, then, "Lay on, Macduff," and so forth—not set down out of reverence for "ears polite."

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—There was not much doing this afternoon on the Spring Betting, nor the changes of sufficient importance to call for more than a quotation of the prices. The Derby Betting, however, was of greater interest. Springy Jack was second favourite; Fern and Nil Desperandum having been backed with considerable spirit, at improving prices, each leaving off with a rising aspect. We give the latest averages.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE STAKES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 9 to 2 agst Ballinafad (t) | 15 to 1 agst Convict | 15 to 1 agst Walmgate-Bar-Without |
| 10 to 1 —— Thistledown | 15 to 1 —— Duplicity | |

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 8 to 1 agst Jerboa | 12 to 1 agst Marquis of Co-nyngham | 15 to 1 agst Vampyre |
| 8 to 1 —— Tuthmaster | 14 to 1 —— Glen Saddle | 15 to 1 —— Cossack |
| 10 to 1 —— Bat-trap | 20 to 1 agst Lackbird | 20 to 1 —— Good Boy |

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.

| | |
|---|---|
| 7 to 2 agst Blaze | 7 to 1 agst Londstone |
| 6 to 1 —— Eastcheker (t) | 8 to 1 —— Fern (t) |

CHESTER CUP.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 25 to 1 agst Crasow (t) | 30 to 1 agst Roman Plaloff (t) | 40 to 1 agst Bardary | |
| 27 to 1 —— Blaze | 35 to 1 —— Lightning | 40 to 1 —— Enchanter | |
| 25 to 1 —— Swallow | 40 to 1 —— Ballinafad | 2000 to 30 —— Rufus (t) | |

DERBY.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 9 to 1 agst Surplice (t) | 20 to 1 agst Fern | 33 to 1 agst Risborough |
| 12 to 1 —— Springy Jack (t) | 30 to 1 —— Nil Desperandum | 40 to 1 —— Faterchild |
| 12 to 1 —— Glendower (t) | (t) | 40 to 1 —— Backfilter |
| | 1000 to 15 agst The Fowler (t) | |

THURSDAY.—The very moderate amount of business transacted this afternoon led to a few changes, the chief of which were a decline in Ballinafad, and a great inclination to get on Joe o' Sot, Lady Wildair, Rat Trap, Marquis of Conyngham, Glen Saddle, Hermit, Ratcliff colt, Eastchester, and Springy Jack, for the various events for which we have returned prices

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE STAKES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 5 to 1 agst Ballinafad | 13 to 1 agst Walmgate Bar Without | 15 to 1 agst Thistledown |
| 10 to 1 —— Joe o' Sot | | 20 to 1 —— Segacity |
| 13 to 1 —— Lady Wildair (t) | 15 to 1 —— Joe Lovell | 25 to 1 —— Jem Ladeo |

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 5 to 1 agst Rat Trap | 9 to 1 agst Jerboa (t) | 12 to 1 agst Glen Saddel (t) |
| | 11 to 1 —— Marquis of Conyngham (t) | |

CHESTER CUP.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 20 to 1 agst War Eagle | 30 to 1 agst Hermit, Plaloff colt (t) | 35 to 1 agst Eschanter (t) |
| 30 to 1 —— The Swallow | | 66 to 1 —— The Tartar (t) |
| | 66 to 1 agst Ballinafad (t) | |

DERBY.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 9 to 1 agst Surplice | 20 to 1 agst Fern | 40 to 1 agst Whalstone (t) |
| 10 to 1 —— Springy Jack | 25 to 1 —— Nil Desperandum | 50 to 1 —— The Hermit (t) |
| 16 to 1 —— Glendower | (t) | 1000 to 15 —— Deerstalker (t) |
| 20 to 1 —— Londstone | 35 to 1 —— The Stingar | |

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday) The quantity of English wheat on sale to-day's market was very moderate, and of middling quality. Although the attendance of buyers was by no means large the demand for all descriptions was firm at Friday, but at nothing quotable beyond Monday's prices, and a good clearance was effected. Foreign wheat was held rather more for money. The middling and inferior kin is moved off steadily, at very full prices. The barley trade was firm, but have no improvement to notice in value. All kinds of beans were in improved request, at extreme currencies. Oats were very dull, but not lower than on Monday. Oatmeal, and Indian corn commanded scarcely any attention. Flour firm, at fully late rates.

ARRIVALS: English: wheat, 3230; barley, 1505; oats, 2180. Irish: wheat, 6970; oats, 6310 Foreign: wheat 4740; barley, 1960; oats, 7220 quarters. Flour, 2140 sacks; and, 7400 quarters

English:—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 45s to 56s dito white, 48s to 62s, Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 46s to 49s, dito, white, 48s to 54s; rye, 32s to 34s; grinding barley, 20s to 20s, distilling dito, 28s to 30s, malting dito, 31s to 33s, Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 54s to 56s; brown ditto, 47s to 48s; Kingston and Ware, 56s to 58s; Chevalier, 57s to 59s; pale malt, 54s to 56s; fine oats, 21s to 22s, potato ditto, 23s to 25s; Youghal and Cork, black, 18s to 19s; ditto, white, 19s to 21s; fine beans, new, 30s to 34s; ditto, old, 32s to 34s, grey peas, 30s to 31s, maple 32s to 34s; white, 30s to 32s; boilers, 33s to 34s per quarter. Town-made flour, 45s to 47s; Suffolk, 35s to 38s, Stockton and Yorkshire, 35s to 38s per 280 lbs. Foreign: Danzig red wheat, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 32s to 37s per barrel; Baltic —s to —s per barrel

The Seed Market.—For all kinds of seeds the demand still rules exceedingly heavy, and last week's prices are with difficulty supported. In rakes new and old, 42s to 44s; ditto, Lincoln, Rutland, seeding, 56s to 60s, Italian, crushing, 44s to 48s, Mediterranean and Odessa, 48s to 50s; Hungarian, 52s to 54s per quarter. —— by the bushel, brown mustard seed, 5s to 8s, white ditto, 6s to 8s 6d; tares, 3s 6 to 4s 6d per bushel, English rapeseed, £28 to £31 per last of ten quarters, Foreign, £26 to £28 10s; ditto Foreign, 49 to £46 to per 1000, rapeseed cakes, £3 to £3 10 s per ton, canary, 56s to 72s per quarter

Provisions.—The prices of provisions remain much the same as on Friday last. Of Scotch dittos, 6d to 7d, per 4lb loaf

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 50s 4d; barley, 33s 8d; oats, 23s 6d, rye, 34s 6d, beans, 36s 3d, peas 38s 10d

The Six Weeks Average. Wheat, 50s 5d; barley, 33s 9d; oats, 23s 6d; rye, 33s 10d; beans, 37s 5d, peas, 41s 9d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 7s; barley, 3s 6d; oats, 2s 6d, rye, 2s 6d, beans, 3s 6d; peas, 3s 6d

Provisions.—The finest qualities of Irish butter are to steady request, at an advance of fully 1s per cwt., but the middling and inferior kinds are a drug. Fine to good Cork, 90s to 96s; Cork, 84s to 87s, Belfast, 97s to 94s, Limerick, 86s to 90s; Waterford, 85s to 88s, and Sligo, 82s to 85s per cwt. Bacon is in moderate request, at Friday's rates, and sells at 50s to 112s; and other fine sorts at 100s to 104s per cwt. English butter, the supply of which is large, is dull, at 76s to 78s per cwt. Fine new Cheese, 54s to 56s; and middling to fine 50s to 52s per cwt. Fresh 10s 6d to 14s per dozen lbs. Bacon is in moderate request, at 52s to 60s for prime Waterford singeing; Limerick may be quoted at 48s to 52s per cwt. Of stewable, and 42s to 45s for ordinary. Fine and mild ale best hams are quite as dear. Most other kinds of provisions support last week's currencies.

Smithfield, Friday.—Rams is tolerably steady, at very full prices. 500 pouchens Lowlands have sold at 3l 7s per pouchen, and 500 Highland dittos at 3l per pouchen.

Coals (Friday).—Hasting's Hartley, 15s; Tanfield Moor, 14s; Eden Main, 15s; Ord's Redheugh, 15s 6d; Stewart's, 16s 6d per ton

Hops (Friday).—The demand for new fine or fairly fine hops on offer is very small, yet the demand for them is in an inactive state at barely last week's quotations. All other kinds are dull and somewhat lower to purchase. Mid and East Kent, choice, 5l to 5l 5s; ditto, good, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, fine, 4l 5s to 4l 15s; ditto, middling, 4l 5s to 4l 10s; ditto, inferior, 3l 10s to 4l; Weald of Kent, choice, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, good, 4l 5s to 4l 15s; ditto, fine, 4l to 4l 5s; ditto, middling, 3l 10s to 4l; ditto, inferior, 3l to 3l 10s; Sussex, choice, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, good, 4l 5s to 4l 15s; ditto, fine, 4l to 4l 5s; ditto, middling, 3l 10s to 4l; ditto, inferior, 3l to 3l 10s; Farnham, choice, 5l 5s to 5l 10s; ditto, good, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, fine, 4l 5s to 4l 10s; ditto, middling, 4l to 4l 5s; ditto, inferior, 3l 10s to 4l; Mid and East Kent, choice, 5l 5s to 5l 10s; ditto, good, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, fine, 4l 5s to 4l 10s; ditto, middling, 4l to 4l 5s; ditto, inferior, 3l 10s to 4l; Weald of Kent, choice, 5l 5s to 5l 10s; ditto, good, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, fine, 4l 5s to 4l 10s; ditto, middling, 4l to 4l 5s; ditto, inferior, 3l 10s to 4l; Farnham, choice, 5l 10s to 5l 15s; ditto, good, 5l 5s to 5l 10s; ditto, fine, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, middling, 4l 5s to 4l 10s; ditto, inferior, 4l to 4l 5s; Sussex, choice, 5l 10s to 5l 15s; ditto, good, 5l 5s to 5l 10s; ditto, fine, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, middling, 4l 5s to 4l 10s; ditto, inferior, 4l to 4l 5s. Yearlings are in full request, at full prices. Of Scotch dittos, 6d to 7d per 4lb loaf

Wool.—The finest qualities of Irish butter are to steady request, at an advance of fully 1s per cwt., but the middling and inferior kinds are a drug. Fine to good Cork, 90s to 96s; Cork, 84s to 87s, Belfast, 97s to 94s, Limerick, 86s to 90s; Waterford, 85s to 88s, and Sligo, 82s to 85s per cwt. Bacon is in moderate request, at Friday's rates, and sells at 50s to 112s; and other fine sorts at 100s to 104s per cwt. English butter, the supply of which is large, is dull, at 76s to 78s per cwt. Fine new Cheese, 54s to 56s; and middling to fine 50s to 52s per cwt. Fresh 10s 6d to 14s per dozen lbs. Bacon is in moderate request, at 52s to 60s for prime Waterford singeing; Limerick may be quoted at 48s to 52s per cwt. Of stewable, and 42s to 45s for ordinary. Fine and mild ale best hams are quite as dear. Most other kinds of provisions support last week's currencies.

Smithfield, Friday.—Rams is tolerably steady, at very full prices. 500 pouchens Lowlands have sold at 3l 7s per pouchen, and 500 Highland dittos at 3l per pouchen.

Coals (Friday).—Hasting's Hartley, 15s; Tanfield Moor, 14s; Eden Main, 15s; Ord's Redheugh, 15s 6d; Stewart's, 16s 6d per ton

Hops (Friday).—The demand for new fine or fairly fine hops on offer is very small, yet the demand for them is in an inactive state at barely last week's quotations. All other kinds are dull and somewhat lower to purchase. Mid and East Kent, choice, 5l to 5l 5s; ditto, good, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, fine, 4l 5s to 4l 15s; ditto, middling, 4l to 4l 5s; ditto, inferior, 3l 10s to 4l; Weald of Kent, choice, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, good, 4l 5s to 4l 15s; ditto, fine, 4l to 4l 5s; ditto, middling, 3l 10s to 4l; ditto, inferior, 3l to 3l 10s; Sussex, choice, 5l 5s to 5l 10s; ditto, good, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, fine, 4l 5s to 4l 10s; ditto, middling, 4l to 4l 5s; ditto, inferior, 3l 10s to 4l; Farnham, choice, 5l 10s to 5l 15s; ditto, good, 5l 5s to 5l 10s; ditto, fine, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, middling, 4l 5s to 4l 10s; ditto, inferior, 4l to 4l 5s; Sussex, choice, 5l 10s to 5l 15s; ditto, good, 5l 5s to 5l 10s; ditto, fine, 4l 15s to 5l; ditto, middling, 4l 5s to 4l 10s; ditto, inferior, 4l to 4l 5s. Yearlings are in full request, at full prices. Of Scotch dittos, 6d to 7d per 4lb loaf

Wool.—The finest qualities of Irish butter are to steady request, at an advance of fully 1s per cwt., but the middling and inferior kinds are a drug. Fine to good Cork, 90s to 96s; Cork, 84s to 87s, Belfast, 97s to 94s, Limerick, 86s to 90s; Waterford, 85s to 88s, and Sligo, 82s to 85s per cwt. Bacon is in moderate request, at Friday's rates, and sells at 50s to 112s; and other fine sorts at 100s to 104s per cwt. English butter, the supply of which is large, is dull, at 76s to 78s per cwt. Fine new Cheese, 54s to 56s; and middling to fine 50s to 52s per cwt. Fresh 10s 6d to 14s per dozen lbs. Bacon is in moderate request, at 52s to 60s for prime Waterford singeing; Limerick may be quoted at 48s to 52s per cwt. Of stewable, and 42s to 45s for ordinary. Fine and mild ale best hams are quite as dear. Most other kinds of provisions support last week's currencies.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

DURING the slight intervals that have occurred in the absorbing topic of foreign affairs, the subject of altering the banking hours in the Metropolis has engaged much attention. Manchester and Liverpool certailed the hours of business some two years since. The inducement in London, however, has arisen from the alterations already effected at the Stock Exchange, Colonial markets, and the hours of closing the Royal Exchange. The directors of the Bank of England issued a circular on Monday, stating that on and after the 1st of May business would close at four o'clock instead of five, as at present. This hour has been universally adopted by all the bankers east of Temple-bar. From the tenor of conversation on "Change," the feeling in regard to this alteration is one of nearly unanimous approval.

The National Bank of Ireland has, with the consent of the Legislature, suspended specie payments. Its circulation is limited to 44 millions

Consols on Monday opened steadily, and during that day and Tuesday it fluctuated about ¼ per cent, ranging between 86¾ and 87, at which price they closed on Tuesday. On Wednesday, however, an upward movement became apparent. Notwithstanding the unsettled state of affairs in Germany, as well as the news from Paris being financially unfavourable, Consols advanced to 87¾ ⅝, but without fully maintaining this advance, closing at 87¾ to ⅞. To a scarcity of stock for the last few days, and the general belief that, on the part of the speculators, it would prove a Bear account, this rise may be principally attributed. These surmises grew stronger on Thursday, several large Bear accounts being bought in, which, allied to the conservative tendency of news from the Continent, and purchases on behalf of the public, caused another improvement from the opening price of 87¾ to 88¾. Towards the close of business, however, some realising occurred, and prices consequently receded. Notwithstanding this, should no unfavourable cause on the Continent arise, a further rise may be anticipated as the account draws towards a close. Exchequer Bills have not been quite so firm as last week. Nor has Bank Stock advanced materially upon the improved dividend. At closing the market was buoyant at the following prices:—9 per Cent. Consols, 88 ⅝; India Bonds, £1000,16 p; Ditto under £1000, 15 p; South Sea Stock 88 ⅝; India Stocks, 89¾; Bank Stock for Account, 192; Consols for Account, 88; Exchequer Bills, £1000, March, 30 p; £1000, June, 30 p; £500, March, 30 p; £500, June, 30 p; Small, March, 30 p; Small, June, 30 p.

Foreign Securities have partaken but slightly in the improved condition of the English market, Spanish and Mexican alone showing any disposition to advance. The former on Monday quoted 14¾ for the Five per Cents, and have since improved ¼. The Three per Cents, which stood at 21½ to 22, are now 22¾. Mexican on Monday was 14¾, and now quotes 14¾. In the other descriptions of stock not much variation has occurred. The last prices are Brazilian Bonds, 76¾; Dutch Bonds, 58; Mexican Five per Cents., 1846, 14¾; Do., Account, 14¾; Portuguese Three per Cents., 15¾; Ditto, Four per Cent., 9¾; Spanish Five per Cent., 14-16, 15; Ditto, Account, 15¾; Ditto, Passive, 3¾; Ditto, Three per Cent., 22¾; Ditto, Account, 22¾; Venezuela Bonds, Two-and-a-Quarter per Cent., 19¾; Ditto, Deferred, 2¾; Belgian Four-and-a Half per Cent., 98; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 52 Guild., 42; Ditto, Four per Cent. Certificates, 61¾.

The Railway Market, at the beginning of the week, was exceedingly depressed, but a better feeling is now apparent. The French lines have shown some symptoms of improvement, but the new lines of English railways are still confined to speculative dealings. Prices, at the close of the market, stood for Birmingham and Gloucester, 91¾; Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Dudley, 13⅜; Buckinghamshire, 4 dis.; Caledonian, 28½; Chester and Holyhead, Preference, 11½; East Anglia, £25, L. and E. and L. and D., 7¾; Ditto, £18, E. and R., 5¾; Do., £3 10s., 3¾; Eastern Counties, 19¾; Do. Extension, Five per Cent., No. 1, par; E. Lancashire, New, 7¾; Great Northern, 44; Great South. and West. (Ireland), 18; Great North of England, 221; Great Western, 90; Do., 4 Shares, 51; Ditto, New, £17, 7¾; Hull and Selby, 97¾; Ditto, Half Shares, 48; Ipswich and Bury St. Edmunds, 44; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 69¾; Ditto, Half Shares, 31¾; Ditto, Fifths, 7⅜ x d; Ditto, (Preston and Wyre), 35¾; Leeds and Bradford, 85; London and Blackwall, 4¾; Ditto, New, No. 2, 1¼ dis.; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 30¾; Ditto, Consol. Eighths, 19; London and North-Western, 128; Ditto, New, 44; Ditto, Fifths, 7; London and South-Western, 46; Ditto Tenths, (Consol.), 8¾; Ditto, ditto, 3l 1 Ditto, Thirds, 3¾ dis.; Midland, 100; Ditto, ditto, £50 Shares, 9¾; Ditto, Consol. Bristol and Birmingham, Six per cent., 115; Norfolk, 33½; North British, 20 x d., Ditto, Half Shares, 9; Ditto Quarters, 3¾; North Staffordshire, 8¾; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 20¾ x d; South-Eastern and Dover, 23¾ x d; Ditto, No. 2, 7¾; Ditto, No. 4, 4¾; South Wales, 4¾; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 20; Ditto Original New and Berwick, 87¾; Ditto, Extension, No. 1, 15¾; Ditto ditto, No. 2, 10¼; Ditto, Great Northern and Eastern Preference, 8¾; York and North Midland, 69; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 28¾; Boulogne and Amiens, 6¾; Dutch Rhenish, 4¾; Namur and Liege, 2¾; Northern of France, 3¾; Orleans and Bordeaux, 2; Paris and Lyons, 2; Paris and Rouen, 16¾; Rouen and Havre, 6¾; Sambre and Meuse, 5.

SATURDAY MORNING.—The English Market again advanced, and Consols registered 88¾ to 89, closing at 88¾. In shares there is nothing of moment; and the Foreign Market is unaltered.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, MARCH 21.

CROWN OFFICE, MARCH 20.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN THE PRESENT PARLIAMENT

City of Carlisle: William Nicholson Hodgson, Esq., Philip Henry Howard, Esq., the last election for the said city having been declared void.

Borough of Reading: Benjamin Hawes, Esq., of Queen-square, Westminster, the last election for the said borough having been declared void.

City of Lincoln: Thomas Benjamin Hobhouse, Esq., the last election for the said city having been declared void

BANKRUPTCY SUPERSEDED.

W EVANS, Piccadilly, linen-draper

BANKRUPTS

B MCCLEISH CREES and J BOYD, Bow Churchyard, silk-manufacturers. A BALDWIN, Bamford-street, St Mary-Cray-lane, Kent, hop-factor. W WILSON Daventry, Northamptonshire, surveyor. C P WOOD, Drury-lane, licensed victualler. D LE BOUTILLER, Northumberland-street, Commercial-road, draper. J O SWILLIN, Rodney's Frame, Herefordshire, farmer. J HUNTABLE, Frome Selwood, Somersetshire, silversmith. J I ISAACSON, Liverpool, merchant. S ROBERTS, Denbigh, carrier. J WALLBANK, Stockport, cotton W PICKUP, Haslingden, Lancashire, cotton-shearer. J SMITH, Macclesfield, silk-throwster. R SMITH and M SMITH, Burnistoe, Lancashire, cotton printers W ANDERSON, Chesterfield-street, Bermondsey. J STRAKER, Jarrow Lodge, Durham, brick-maker W HARLING, Stobhouse, Durham, shipowner.

FRIDAY, MARCH 24

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS-LIEUTENANT

SOUTHAMPTONSHIRE: J R Carter, Esq., M.P., to be Deputy Lieutenant

PEMBROKESHIRE: F L S Meyrick, Baron de Rutzen Frenze, to be Deputy-Lieutenant

BUTLANDSHIRE: The Earl of Jersey to be Deputy Lieutenant; C H Fremen, Esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant

YORKSHIRE: G Stapleton, Esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant; T E Endsau, Esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant

Ayrshire Regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry Lord F Kennedy to be Cornet, vice W C Patrick

ADMIRALTY, MARCH 23

The following promotions have this day taken place, consequent upon the death of Admiral Richard Matson

Vice-Admiral of the Red Sir A Drummond, K C H, to be Admiral of the Blue

Vice-Admiral of the White Sir M Seymour, K C B, to be Vice-Admiral of the Red

Vice-Admiral of the Blue Sir S Pym, C B, to be Vice-Admiral of the White

Rear-Admirals of the Red: J S Darrell, C B, Sir T Hastings, C B

Rear-Admiral of the White, Hon J Percy, C B, to be Rear-Admiral of the Red

Rear-Admiral of the Blue, Hon J Duncan, C B, to be Rear-Admiral of the White

Capt C Sotheby, to be Rear-Admiral of the Blue

WHITEHALL, MARCH 18.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Thomas Lloyd Phillips, Esq., of Dudley, in the county of Worcester, to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

BANKRUPTCY SUPERSEDED

B HARRIS, Tewkesbury, corn-factor

BANKRUPTS

J ELLIS and C ELLIS, Warner-road, Camberwell, builders W DAY, Hilgay, North, brickmaker W WHEELER, Nottingham, Lancaster, builder L GOODRICH, Birmingham, cap manufacturer J BALDWIN, Cornbrook, coal-factor and W NEWALL Manchester, commission agent, grocer J PRICE, Pontypool, Monmouthshire, grocer, Flitney-square, engraver F E MORGAN, Leicester-square, draper. W DINGLEY, Bridgwater, Somerset victualler J GOUDIE, Church Hargreaves, Georgia township, district of James C Bishop, Esq., of Newport, Monmouthshire, builder J T WOOLNAIR Hary Lee-shire, carrier W OWEN, Ruthin, Denbighshire auctioneer J T WOOLNAIR Hary Lee-shire, carrier W LAX, Darlington, land-surveyor. Bishop Wilton, East Riding, York, farmer W PRUE, Bristol, engraver J PENNY, Merthyr Tydvil, Glamorganshire, brewer J BENNIN, Junior, Oswestry, grocer. Brompton builder. P BERRALL, Halifax, Yorkshire, grocer

BIRTHS.

At Cleveland row, St James's, the wife of the Rev Charles D Bearcroft, M.A., of a son.—At the lady of Robert Horton, Esq, late of her Majesty's 74th Regiment, of a daughter.—At Lower Mosen, the wife of the Rev Nicholas Aurea Hidley, of a daughter.—In Upper Berkeley-street Portman-square, the wife of N Goldsmid, Esq, of a son.—At Teddington Manse, the wife of Captain Benson, of a son.—At No 51, Whimple-street, the lady of Sir Percy F. Nagle, M P, of a son.—At No 13, Argyll place, St James's, the wife of Joseph Toynbee, Esq, F.L.S, of a daughter.—On the 16th inst, at the Shrubbery, Ramsgate, the wife of Captain Henry Vansittart, R.N., of the Artillery, of a son.—On the 20th inst, Mrs William Ray of Stockwell-green, Surrey, of a daughter.

DEATHS

At All Saints', West Hatt, Wiltshire, eldest son of William Helmore, Esq, of Exeter, to Mary Anne, only daughter of the late Richard Tyrer, Esq, of Westbury Leigh, Wiltshire.—At Bideford, Devon, to Florence, youngest daughter of James O Hare Trevor, Esq, of Tolgrove, the Rev Edward Daniel Hutchinson, Georgina Somerville, eldest son of James C Bishop, Esq, of Newport, Monmouthshire, to Catherine, third daughter of Joseph Houlton, Esq, M D of Lisson-grove.—At Bath, Arthur Edward Hilliard Wilton, late of Jamaica, to Susan Jane, Rev Wentworth Hall, Norfolk, to Miss Smith, of Regent-place, Regent-square.—At the parish Church, Wandsworth, Surrey, Dr Edward Wilson, of Bedford-square, to Louisa Jane, only daughter of the late James De Burgh Smith, Esq, of Lakefield House, Cork, Ireland.

DEATHS

At Beaudesert Hall, Lydia, Dowager Viscountess Downe, in the 76th year of her age.—At the Poplars, Wellingborough, in his 87th year, Herbert Mackworth, Esq, R N.—At Egginton, in the 74th year, Francis Fox Strangways, Esq, late of Bath.—At Cheltenham, suddenly at a distance of the heart, the most honourable the Marquess of Ailsa.—At Paris, Elena, the second daughter of the Rev Sir Stapylton —— Baronet, Hampshire Rectory, Northamptonshire, to Hon and Rev Thomas Laurance Dundas, aged 72.—At the residence, No 14, Cavendish-road, Pimlico, Mary Ann, wife of Captain Richard Matson, on the 17th year of his age.—At the parish Church, Wednesbury, in the county of Stafford, Edward Monckton, Esq Lieutenant-Colonel of the Staffordshire Yeomanry Cavalry, aged 70 years.—At Langley, Bucks, Mary, the wife of Dr Thomas Lockley, aged 55.—At Liverpool, in the 56th year of his age, Mr Thomas Lowe, one of the Aldermen of that city of bankruptcy in that town and [illegible] Islands.—Captain William Wilkinson, late of the 3rd Royal Veterans Battalion, in his 74th year.—At the Rectory, Fawsbourn, Kent, the wife of the Rev W Cromwell.—At Bakham, in the 72nd year, Henry Clive, Esq, late M P for the town of Worcester.—In his 87th year, Thomas [illegible] Esq, of Queen's-square.—On the 19th, at his residence, Abbotsbury, Dorset, Thomas Fane, Esq, aged 87. He was for many years a Deputy-Lieutenant and senior Magistrate of the county of Dorset.

 We omit many Advertisements this week, for want of room.

FRENCH PLAYS AT JAMES'S THEATRE.—Mr MITCHELL begs respectfully to announce that the engagement of Mdlle NATHALIE will positively Terminate on Friday Evening next; and that M. LAFONT and Mdme. PAUL ERNEST (of the Theatre des Varietes, Paris) will make their First Appearance on Monday, April 3rd, in the two last New Comedies of the Parisian Season, MA JUNGHENT and UN MYSTERE. TWO NEW PIECES. The New Comedy of LA DERNIERE CONQUETE will be produced on Monday, April 10, and the Celebrated Drama of LES FEMMES, by several of Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 53, Old Bond-street; and at the Box-office of the Theatre, which is open Daily from Eleven till Five.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Last Two Weeks of the present Grand Spectacle, and unprecedented Equestrian Entertainment, in order to make preparation for the magnificent Easter Holiday Novelties. On MONDAY, April 3rd, and during the week, the Highly Successful Gorgeous Spectacle of the BATTLE OF THE AMAZONS, with all its new and costly appointments. Succeeded by a Grand Equestrian and Gymnastic Scene in which the unequalled Artistes of the Establishment, in their Unique and inimitable feats will appear. Doors open from Eleven till Five. Stage Manager Mr W. West.

LOVE'S ENTERTAINMENTS CROSBY HALL. On WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29, and FRIDAY, MARCH 31, LOVE will resume his Annual Last Entertainments. He will present, for the first time in Crosby Hall, an Entertainment on a novel construction, with entirely new and appropriate Illustrative Costumes and Appointments throughout, entitled THE WORLD'S SUPPER OF COMEDIANS. Succeeded by a Grand Display of Lucubrations, and other Entertainments, which are expressed in the Bills of Fare. Welsh Harp, Roberts; Pianoforte, H. G. Ware. On Monday, March 27, there will appear in the Lecture Hall, 193, Upper-street, Islington, in an Historical and Philosophical Lecture on the Ossoth Powers of the human Voice, and its Concordancy thereto, Illustrated by several Pianoforte and Vocal Illustrations, by Mr. [illegible] Admission to all parts, 1s. Children and Schools, Half-price.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the public are respectfully informed that SECOND CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS, on MONDAY EVENING next, [illegible]

[illegible] Symphonia in B flat, Beethoven. Overture, "Siege of Corinth," Rossini. Vocal Performers, Madame Persiani and [illegible] Conductor, M. Costa. Single Tickets, £1 1s.; Double Ticket, £1 10s.; Triple Tickets, £2 2s. To be obtained of Messrs. Addison and Co., 210, Regent-street.

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES, Princess's Concert Rooms, MONDAY, MARCH 27 and every Monday. A subscriber of two guineas is entitled to an admission for the season, and to another any Six nights during the season. Single tickets, 7s. Weippert's Palace Band as usual, conducted by himself. Mr. Coote. The refreshments and supper by Mr. Payne, of the Lane and Covent Garden Theatres.—Commence at Eleven, conclude at Three. Tickets and programmes at 81, Soho-square.

MAGNIFICENT IVORY STATUE. THE GENOA CRUCIFIX. This remarkable Work of Art, unanimously pronounced by the highest authorities to be one of the most perfect and beautiful productions of modern times, is now Exhibiting for a short time at the COSMORAMA ROOMS, 209, Regent-street. Admission, One Shilling. Visitors receive gratis a Pamphlet containing a detailed account of its singular origin, and a Portrait of the Artist Monk, Fra CARLO PIETRO.

MODELS of the TABERNACLE and ENCAMPMENT of ISRAEL, by the Rev ROBERT HARTLEY, are now exhibiting at 52, Parliament, nearly opposite St. [illegible] Palace. The beautiful Tabernacle, with the Ark of the Covenant, Mercy Seat, Table of Shew Bread, Candlestick, Altar of Incense, Altar of Burnt Offering, Laver of Brass, and Model of the Tabernacle covers a space of 56 square feet, in which every fabric and [illegible] is displayed with those of the sacred original.—

GOOD FEMALE SERVANTS are obtained at the CITY DOMESTICS BAZAAR, 33, Ludgate-hill, which is conducted on a Lady of Property's responsibility. Servants with good characters will find it the best office to get a respectable situation. Open from Ten till Four, Saturdays excepted.

THE LARGEST and MOST ECONOMIC HOUSE in LONDON for the best Children Furniture, Carpets, and Bedding, is SMITH, SON, and CO., 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, Albion House, Pimlico, Established 36 years, where purchasers can save from 20 to 30 per cent. Catalogues sent free, and references to their established connexion.

SEASONABLE PRESENT.

MULLEN'S HAVANNAH TOBACCO, in packets of 6d each, 1s each, and 2s each, or 6s per lb. Each packet has a piece of paper, Gentlemen should ask for Mullen's Havannah Tobacco, in packets of 6d, 1s, and 2s each, or 6s per lb., or 6s per lb. for 20s, at his Warehouse, 24, Tavo-street, London. A choice lot of Cigars, 6s per lb.

CARPETS.—The best Brussels at 3s. 6d. per yard.—KELK, LEAF, and CUMMING, late of Carpenter's Hall, London-wall, having purchased many Thousand Yards of the best Brussels Carpeting of persons who are relinquishing the trade, are enabled to offer them at the above low price. Patent Tapestry of splendid designs and colourings, and all other finer sides of Carpets, at reasonable prices. Turkey Carpets, Floor Cloths, &c.—Warehouse, 4, Regent-street, Waterloo-place, opposite Howell and James's; and 99, Sutton-garden, London.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY.—Baths, Sheffield Plate, Tea Trays, Japanned and Iron Tea Trays, Table Cutlery, Lamps Iron Bedsteads, Clothes Mangles, Stoves, Grates, Fenders, Kitchen Ranges, Coppers, Kitchen Boilers, Chairs, Tools, Garden Engines, and Rollers. Drawings and prices may be had, and orders executed by WILLIAM S. BURTON, 39, Oxford-street, and 5, King-street, Portman-square

TEA. FURTHER DEPRESSION IN PRICE. Good Congou, 2s 4d per lb; finer, 2s 8d; rich and full flavour, 3s; very fine, 3s 4d; finest Congou, 3s 8d; fine young Hyson, 3s 4d; rich Gunpowder, 3s 4d per lb; superfine Hyson, 3s 8d; fine Souchong, 3s 4d; also Colonial produce. Some of the leading articles are lower than at any former period. The best pekoe, 3s 4d per lb; finest Tapioca, 6d; the best West India Arrow-root, 1s 4d; fine Sago, 6d per lb; the best Jamaica Pimento (fine imperial), 3½ inches, 6d lb; boxes, 2s per box. The carts and vans of the sole Inventor give goods to all parts of London and suburbs daily.—PHILLIPS and CO., 8, King William-street, City (corner of Adelaide-place), No. 8.

STELLA SALAD OIL and MANDARIN PICKLE SAUCE, mixed together, form the most delicious dressing ever tasted. The Stella Salad Oil is from the olives of Provence, and is superior to capers. With each bottle is given the receipt for frying fish in perfection, and also for mixing salads in a French style.—Sold in perfection, and also for mixing salads in a French style.—Sold in patent flint bottles, 1s, 2s, and 4s 6d each; by Hedges and Butler, 155, Regent-street; Meredith, 16, Southampton-row, Strand; Hill, Buckingham-street; and all dealers in town and country. Wholesale, Co. agents, WILLIAM ORRIDGE and Co., 11, Pilgrim-street, London.

THE KALOS GEUSIS SAUCE "Gentlemen,—I got a sauce the other day at your house which I must say is far superior in strength and flavour than any which have been submitted to me. [illegible] A. SOYER. "To Messrs. Wm. Clayton and Co., 72, Wardlow-street." This is an invaluable adjunct to the dinner table or cuisine. Its wholesome and stimulating stomachic properties render it a most desirable relish. To be had of all respectable houses in town and country, and the Colonies, and wholesale only, or on sample, at 72, Wardlow-street Club

HOOPER'S DANDELION & TARAXACUM Is the discovery of modern chemistry and proves a powerful [illegible] Right Chambers, Bright, Latham, Watson, Apthorp, and others, exhibit the extensive and other remedial agents of the Taraxacum, or Dandelion as prepared by Mr. Hooper, in complaints of the liver, bilious and nervous affections, calculi, dyspepsia, or indigestion, hæmorrhoids, pulmonary consumption, &c. Dr. Wilson Philip states: "On all occasions which I have employed to promote a regular and healthy secretion of bile, I have found none equal to dandelion." As certain ingredients are substituting chicory for dandelion, Mr. Hooper cautions the public against avoiding this deception until entire his name and address on each label, thus—"William Hooper, operative chemist." Put up in bottles at 2s 9d, 4s 6d, 11s, and 22s each. Sold by all druggists and patent medicine venders. Wholesale agents will find the trade terms on application.

EVERYTHING IN WORK TABLE [illegible] Ivory scissors, thimbles, finger-guards, silk-winders, needles, pins, [illegible] sorts, netting boxes and materials, and all other requisites for [illegible] in Bond-street.

[illegible] Inkstands, &c., elsewhere in ivory and horn, some superlatively beautiful.

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

COMPLETION OF DOMBEY AND SON.

Forty Illustrations on Steel by HABLOT K. BROWNE, price 15s. in cloth, or 3ls 6d half-bound in morocco, from the engravers, E. ELLIS and SON, Exeter, sole manufacturers of Devonshire Silver Ornaments.

DEALINGS with the FIRM of DOMBEY AND SON. Wholesale, Retail, and for Exportation. By CHARLES DICKENS. London: BRADBURY and EVANS, 11, Bouverie-street.

HOUSE OF CLEARAY, AND FAMILY OF LOUIS PHILIPPE. THE PATRICIAN, for April next, Price 2s. 6d., Edited by JOHN BURKE, Esq., author of "The Peerage," &c., will contain, besides its usual contents, a full account of Louis Philippe, his Family, and his Ancestry.

E. CURTIS, Publisher, 26, Holles-street, Cavendish-square

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHORS OF "THE GREATEST PLAGUE IN LIFE." Now ready, in 1 vol. post 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

On the 31st of March will appear, No. 1 of a New Monthly Comic Story (to be completed in Six one-shilling Parts), by the BROTHERS MATHEWS and HOOD.

THE IMAGE OF HIS FATHER; or, One Boy is more trouble than a dozen Girls: being a Tale of "A Thousand and One Troubles." With Eleven Illustrations, by H. K. BROWNE, King William-street, Charing-cross.

NEW WORK BY GEORGE HERBERT RODWELL, ESQ. On the 29th of April will be published, Part 1st., No. 1 of a new Work, to be entitled OLD LONDON BRIDGE, by G. H. RODWELL, Illustrated with a highly-finished Engraving (on Steel) of the Bridge, by an eminent Artist. The succeeding Numbers will each contain two or more Engravings.

J. and D. A. DARLING, 126, Bishopsgate-street, Cornhill.

LADIES' GAZETTE of FASHION for [illegible] Price [illegible]

[illegible] G. BERGER, Holywell-street, Strand; and all Booksellers.

Just ready, price 1s.

THE NEW GUIDE to KNITTING and CROCHET. By MARIE JANE COOPER. Third Edition, with additional Receipts and Plate. "The present publication is one of the best which has come under the notice of our fair readers; containing all the Novelties of the Art, besides the usual insertion, which is told from the beginning, so that it is comparatively requires but a glance to become acquainted with the manœuvres."—[illegible]

Just Published, Price 1s.

THE New and Elegant CROCHET-COLLAR BOOK, with splendid Toilet Cushion, and handsome Edging, By a Lady. May be had at SHEPPY, MARSHALL, and Co., 84, New Bond-street; and of all Booksellers and Fancy Repositories. Post-paid, Eleven Stamps

Just Published, Price 1s.

THE COLOURED CROCHET ANTIMACASSAR BOOK. By CHARLES HAIRS. To be had at his warehouse, 32, Regent-quadrant, and all Berlin Warehouses and Booksellers throughout the Kingdom. Sent post free on the receipt of 18 postage stamps. London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co., Stationers' Hall-court.

THE ARTISAN CLUB ON FREE STEAM-ENGINE New Edition, in One Volume 4to., with 36 Steel Plates and 340 Wood Engravings, 27s cloth.

A TREATISE on the STEAM-ENGINE in its Application to Mines, Mills, Steam-navigation, and Railways. By the ARTISAN CLUB. Edited by JOHN BOURNE, C.E. London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

NEW EDITION OF SIDNEY HALL'S COLOMBIER ATLAS, CORRECTED to 1847.

Just published, Part I. of the Fifth Edition in 14 Monthly Parts, each containing Six coloured Maps, price 5s.

SIDNEY HALL'S GENERAL LARGE LIBRARY ATLAS of the WORLD, comprising 42 Maps (size 29 in. by 16 in.), and an Alphabetical Index of 11 the Names contained in the Maps, with their Names in and Longitude in A.

with all the Railways laid down, and many of the Maps re-drawn and re-engraved.

London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS.

COMPLETION OF THE LIVES OF THE QUEENS OF ENGLAND.

The 12th VOLUME and CONCLUDING WORK is now READY, embellished with a Portrait of the Authoress, and other Illustrations.

Also, Just published,

TRIALS OF DOMESTIC LIFE. By Mrs. BRAY, Author of "The White Hoods," &c. 3 vols.

III.

MRS ARMYTAGE; or, Female Domination. By Mrs. GORE. Forming the new volume in COLBURN'S STANDARD NOVELS. With Portrait of the Authoress. Price 6s. bound.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

Now ready, price 5s. 6d.,

PART II OF

THE HISTORY and ART of WOOD ENGRAVING

CONTAINING

AN INTERESTING HISTORY OF THE ART OF WOOD ENGRAVING FROM ITS EARLIEST PERIOD.

BY W. A CHATTO

With Fac-similes of entire Pages, and Choicest Wood Engravings: Also, the following subjects, which have been selected from

THE "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,"

And exhibit in various styles the Progress of Wood Engraving :—

Choosing the Wedding Gown — Cream

Old Father Time — Jeagues (Westall)

Christmas Eve in Germany — Highland Piper (Frederick Taylor)

The Stonemason's Apprentice — Jew

Italian Landscape — Sweet Summer Time (G. Dodgson)

Mourning during her Country — Aurora (Guido)

Mignon aspiring to Heaven — Britannia (Gerard)

[illegible] M. Ward

[illegible] 6d each

98 Strand

New Pocket Edition, price 5s 6d.,

FALLACIES of the FACULTY. By Dr [illegible] author of "The Chrono-thermal System, for thawing up the monstrous calmness of the medical science of medicine."—New York Tribune.

"Almost as entertaining as a novel."—Westminster Review

SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Stationers' Court; J. OLLIVIER, Pall-mall.

No More Medicine for Indigestion and other Functional Disorders. By DU BARRY and Co, 8, Bury-court, St Mary Axe, London.—Price 6d each, 1s, 2s, 5s, and 10s per pot, by post 1s 2d, 2s 6d, 5s 6d, and 10s 6d.

THE NATURAL REGENERATOR of the DIGESTIVE ORGANS (the Stomach and Intestines), Without Medicine Dieett says, 5s 6d each.

Just Published, price 6d.,

ACCIDENTS and EMERGENCIES: a Practical Guide for the Unprofessional, in the Moments of Peril. By ALFRED SMEE, F.R.S., Surgeon to the Bank of England, Lecturer in Surgery, &c. &c. Printed on a large Broadsheet, and illustrated with [illegible]

[illegible] printed on a broadsheet, in preference to a book, is to secure their being pasted up in some well known and conspicuous part in all places where accidents are liable to occur, and to enable any bystander, who may be at hand, to render immediate assistance, which frequently, in cases of urgency, is of the utmost importance.

The instructions are written in straightfirst and concise style, and are rendered still more easily understood by Engravings; they embrace all cases which arise from Accidents by Railway or Steamboat—Gun Shots—Poisons—Burns—Scalds—Explosions—Falls—Drowning—Serious Wounds, &c. &c. All public offices, railway stations, police stations, fire-offices, &c. should be provided with this case, as should be duly in some well-known place. A knowledge of how to act promptly in cases of accident frequently leads to the preservation of human life and often saves [illegible]—Published by JOHN CHURCHILL, Medical Bookseller, Princes-street, Soho.

THE QUEEN'S BISCUITS.—J. D. CARR and Co., of Carlisle, and 111, Strand, Loudon, Steam Biscuit Manufacturers to Her Queen and Royal Family, by Special Appointment. The great celebrity which these Biscuits have now for many years attained in the north, has induced the Proprietors to establish [illegible] elsewhere, but the [illegible] has not [illegible] elsewhere, but the [illegible] has not [illegible] elsewhere, but the [illegible] has not

THE COUNT AND COUNTESS DE NEUILLY LEAVING THE CHAPEL AT WEYBRIDGE.

THE EX-KING AND QUEEN OF THE FRENCH, AT THE CATHOLIC CHAPEL, WEYBRIDGE.

SINCE the Count and Countess of Neuilly have claimed the hospitality of this country, and resided at Claremont, they have regularly attended the Catholic service on the Sabbath, at the above chapel. It was built by the late Mr Taylor, and now adjoins the residence of Miss Taylor, near the Weybridge station of the South-Western Railway.

THE COUNT AND COUNTESS DE NEUILLY IN THE CHAPEL AT WEYBRIDGE.

We give these Illustrations, not only for the mere historical interest they will present, but for the contrast they afford with the churches which the ex-King must before have been accustomed to visit, and with a far different equipage from that attending him on the present occasion.

We remember Louis Philippe, during his visit to our Queen at Windsor, being attended with all the honour and pomp due to the greatest monarch in Europe. Alas! in a few short years, we see him the humblest and almost the poorest of men, seeking shelter from the vengeance of his subjects!

The carriage which brought the ex-King to Weybridge on Sunday was of the meanest description; and the ex-Monarch wore, strange to say, the blue pilot coat given to him on his embarking from France by the Captain of the Express steamer. The Countess of Neuilly looked proud and careworn, and seemed to feel her lowered condition more than the ex-King.

The scenery in the neighbourhood of the Chapel is very charming. Weybridge Church, at a short distance, is a small edifice, with a shingled spire. It contains a beautiful mural monument of the Duchess of York, from the chisel of Chantrey, and for design and execution ranking with his elegant memorial of the Sleeping Children in Lichfield Cathedral. The Duchess was interred in Weybridge church, in a small vault, prepared in pursuance of her directions, near the spot where the monument is affixed.

---

The Count and Countess de Neuilly arrived in town shortly after mid-day on Saturday, from Claremont. The Count and Countess proceeded from the railway station in one of the Royal carriages to Clarence House, St. James's, on a visit to the Duchess of Kent, to congratulate her Royal Highness on her Majesty's happy confinement. The Duchess of Kent entertained the Count and Countess at a dejeûner shortly after their arrival. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the Duchess of Gloucester, met the Count and Countess at the dejeûner. The Count and Countess returned to Claremont shortly after four o'clock.

During the preceding week, the Count received visits from a great many personal friends and others at Claremont. The Duke of Wellington visited the Count on Thursday, and was closeted for a very long period with the ex-King. Sir James Graham and several other leading members of the political world have also been to Claremont during the week. On Sunday, the Austrian Princess Grassalk vich, who only arrived in town on Saturday, paid the Count and Countess a visit.

The Count de Jarnac remains in close attendance upon his late Royal master. The Count and Countess are in good health, and, for the present, we understand, they contemplate remaining at Claremont. Offers have been made by several noblemen and gentlemen to place their country seats at the disposal of the exiled Monarch, but we have not heard that any of them have been accepted. Powderham Castle, the seat of the Earl of Devon; Airlie Castle, the seat of the Earl of Airlie, in Forfarshire; and Mr. Standish Standish's seat in Lancashire, are among those offered.

---

THE PRINCE DE JOINVILLE AND THE DUKE D'AUMALE.—The Prince and Princess de Joinville, with the Duke and Duchess d'Aumale, and their families, arrived in the French Government steamer Solon at Dartmouth on Tuesday morning, having started from Lisbon on the 16th instant. At half-past eight o'clock, the Princes landed, and proceeded in two carriages and four to the Totnes station of the South Devon Railway, and took their departure for Maidenhead, whence they posted to Claremont. The Prince de Joinville and the Duke d'Aumale arrived at Buckingham Palace on Wednesday forenoon, and had an audience with his Royal Highness Prince Albert. The French Princes then returned to Claremont.

LEAD POISONS

(To the Editor.)

Observing in your last week's Journal the death of Captain Ennis, of the Tigris, and the cause being attributed to pork salted in a leaden tank, it may be necessary to give some further caution against the use of that metal for such purposes. About twelve months since a person residing in this town sent me some pork brine for examination, which I found to contain a very large quantity of lead in solution, notwithstanding the salting had only taken place a week previous. I found that part of the pork which had been lying in contact with the lead had some peculiar white spots on the surface, which were not observed previous to pickling.

Lead may be conveyed into the system through another source, which I believe has not been pointed out. Copper kettles are sometimes made of very thin metal, and in order to strengthen them, a quantity of lead is run under the shoulder. Water from certain localities, or any fluid used for domestic purposes capable of acting upon the metal, would convey the poison into the system. I have seen from a pound and a half to two pounds of lead taken from a copper kettle, by placing it on the fire when empty; the lead melts and falls down.

Southampton, March 21. HY. OSBORN.

CORPORATION OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY.—A special general Court of Governors was held on Saturday, at the Society's offices, 2, Bloomsbury-place, for the purpose of electing a president in the room of the late Archbishop of Canterbury. The proceedings were of a merely formal character. The loss sustained by the Church in the demise of the late venerable Primate, Dr. Howley, was pointedly adverted to, and the unremitting efforts of his Grace in the formation of the various associations connected with the Church were spoken of in terms of well-merited eulogy; after which the present most Rev. Primate, Dr. Sumner, was elected president, and the Court adjourned.

AFTER the performances of Franconi's equestrian troop at Drury-lane Theatre on Saturday evening last, the band struck up the "National Anthem," which elicited a strong manifestation of feeling. The boxes, pit, and gallery simultaneously rose, and gave, with hats off and waving of handkerchiefs, three hearty cheers, and one cheer more—a gratifying proof to the friends of true liberty that the loyalty of the English people is rather strengthened than diminished by the political excitement which now disturbs almost every other monarchy in Europe.

---

LONDON; Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 310.—Vol. XII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT.

The Great Revolution of February, 1848, in Paris, has spread like an electric shock, and shaken the whole of Europe. It was from the first expected that the consequences would be of great importance; yet few expected the startling events which have revolutionised nearly the whole of the Continent. Germany has, at one blow, destroyed a system on which years have been spent by the ablest of statesmen in attempting to perfect.

Austria—stagnant, apathetic Austria, as that nation was wont to be regarded—has been one of the first to respond to the Revolutionary impulse imparted by France, to the progress of liberal ideas in central Europe. In the very heart of his own stronghold of despotism, the wiliest of those artificers of diplomatic nationalities, who some thirty years ago reared the political fabric of Europe, with such cunning device, has lived to see the results of his matured, unscrupulous, heartless dexterity, crumble in the dust at the first touch of the magic wand of the people's will. Yes, strange as it is true, Metternich, whom all the lovers of liberty in Europe have been accustomed to look upon as the evil genius of Germany—potent and invincible as any weird and wicked influence could be supposed to be—has been obliged to fly from the face of his countrymen, covered with confusion and humiliation, and the hated offspring of freedom, a Constitutional Government, has been set up in the halls of Absolutism.

The intensely interesting account, with illustrations, which we give to-day, in our Journal, of the Revolution in Prussia, is replete with consequences which will for ages affect this large proportion of the population of Europe; and which we believe will end in the establishment of a great German nation, abolishing the petty principalities which have long been the bane of the people, and the derision of Europe. The King of Prussia has issued a manifesto, in which, availing himself of the universal desire that at present exists in Germany to unite all the states of "Fatherland" into one great federal Empire as a whole, he "demands" of the Princes a reorganization of the whole of Germany; a national army, banner, and system of customs in common; a federal representation, on a new and liberal basis, of the several States in one grand national Imperial Parliament or Diet, which is to have a superintending care over all the Imperial concerns of the Confederation, leaving the domestic affairs of each State to its own proper management. These are the very "demands" which all classes in Germany have long made, though scarcely venturing to breathe a hope of their ever being successful, in our time at least; and these same "demands" are those which Frederick William of Prussia now addresses to his Royal contemporaries, as embodying the institutions which his Majesty and Germany will be satisfied with alone. The position is a novel one for a sovereign, and above all a German sovereign to take up, but if boldly and honestly maintained, will be productive of the greatest blessings to central Europe. If he is sincere, and is not led on by any silly ambition to aim at the Imperial diadem which events have dashed from the brow of Austria, his Prussian Majesty will be enabled by the progress of events to set up in the heart of Europe an order of things which will efface for ever all that is unworthy in his reign, and surround it only with associations the most glorious and heroic.

It is gratifying to find, amidst all this social and political commotion, that no illusory ideas of a Republic find favour with the vast majority of the German people. Sober and reflecting, they perceive that, under a limited Monarchy, of which the English Government presents so perfect a model, the greatest amount of personal and political freedom can be enjoyed, in conjunction with the greatest security of property, without the body politic being needlessly exposed to the desolating effects of any of those hurricanes of popular passion which have so often brought the most powerful Republics to the verge of destruction, and which not infrequently render the rule of the many more oppressive than the despotism of absolute sovereignty.

From Poland we receive intelligence of an unanimous rise of the people against their ruler, the result of which we may safely anticipate will be to release the country entirely from her late subjection.

While thus in the more northern divisions of Central Europe the tone of events is prospective and undecided, in Lombardy, and all those portions of Italy which have hitherto experienced the withering sway of Austria, freedom from the hated yoke has been most decisively achieved. The Milanese, after a five days' combat, have expelled the Austrians, and aided by Charles Albert of Sardinia have, it is said, entered upon the formation of an Italian sovereignty.

All these changes, whatever good may result from them, have been effected at great sacrifice of life and property. Let us hope they may have the tendency of producing a better state of government. Whatever may happen at present, every reflecting man in England must feel that the events on the Continent indirectly affect us; and each in his own sphere should endeavour to ameliorate the condition of the poor; our Government to lessen the burdens of the people; and above all to strive to maintain the peace and security of the empire, which is the best means to maintain our trade, the support of the people, and which security and peace are the life and the hope of the civilized world.

THE GREAT BARRICADE IN THE BREITEN-STRASSE, BERLIN.—(SEE PAGE 214.)

NEW FIVE-FRANC PIECE.

THIS new Coin has just been struck at the Mint of Paris, in the name of the French Republic. Dupré's old design of Hercules supported between the Nation and the Law has been adopted, with some slight alterations; and the legend, "Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité." This Coin, it is, however, said, will only be used until a final decision shall be made by the National Assembly.

NEW FIVE-FRANC PIECE.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE

We resume the history of the events in Paris from our paper of last week:—The affairs of Germany at the commencement of the week superseded all others in public estimation. The Revolution in Prussia might perhaps have been expected, but that Austria, corpse-like Austria, should all at once have become galvanized into vitality, surpassed the fondest hopes of the most sanguine. On Friday (last week), there was a meeting of American Republicans held in the Place Vendôme. The persons attending the meeting (Austrians, Bohemians, and Hungarians) proceeded in procession to the Hôtel de Ville, chaunting national airs. They were prepared to march to assist in establishing a Republic in Germany, and left Paris in divisions on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. Some of them having neglected to announce their approach to the authorities of Meaux, as German Republicans en route to their native land, were mistaken by the inhabitants of the town for brigands, and fired upon.

Several Belgian Republicans also formed themselves into a procession, and paraded Paris with drums beating, and colours flying, enlisting recruits to accompany them to the Belgian frontier, to proclaim a Belgian Republic. They left Paris by special train on Sunday. Polish refugees are continually leaving Paris for the purpose of assisting in the liberation of their country. A Polish Deputation waited on the Provisional Government on Sunday, to request arms, and to take leave of the Government before returning to Poland. The answer of M Lamartine to the address presented by this deputation is a masterpiece of caution, and is well calculated to reassure those who might have been previously inclined to entertain doubts as to the pacific intentions of the French Republic. "The French Government feels for the situation of Poland," said M. Lamartine; "but the time and the mode of displaying its regard must be left to its own discretion. A peaceable movement will advance your cause more quickly and more effectually than an appeal to arms."

The Provisional Government has postponed the elections for the National Assembly to the 24th of April. The Assembly itself is convoked for the 4th May. It is considered probable that Arthur O'Connor may be the first President. His election to the Assembly is considered certain; and, as he is 86 years of age, he will be probably the President by seniority, and in that capacity preside over the Assembly until it shall have definatively chosen its officers.

M. Thiers has addressed his old constituents of the Bouches du Rhône, and M. Odillon Barrot has attended a meeting of the Electoral Committee of Leon. There have been serious riots at Bordeaux, in consequence of the appointment of M. Latrade, as Commissioner of the Provisional Government, in the room of M. Chevalier, who had made himself exceedingly popular with the inhabitants. M. Latrade very judiciously abstained from pressing his rights, and tranquility was thus restored. Serious complaints are made of the arbitrary conduct of the Government Commissioner at Blois and at Lyons.

A new police force, modelled on that of London, and to be called "Guard rof Paris," has been organised by the Provisional Government to the service of the Capital.

The Committee of National Defence has ordered the formation of a camp of 90,000 men at Dijon. The Minister a War has placed 200,000 muskets and sabres at the disposal of the National Guard

Several trees of Liberty have been planted in Paris and its neighbourhood. One was planted on Saturday in the Place de l'Hôtel de Ville, on the spot where his four Republican sergeants of La Rochelle perished on the scaffold 25 years since

Abd-el-Kader has addressed a very touching appeal to the Provisional Government, praying that the political refugees at Amboise may be kept by sending him to Mecca. He truly states that such different habits of food and dwelling are enough to render his life and that of his followers very miserable. His letter contains a panegyric on the French, recommending harmony and other virtues, and is altogether of a pious kind

The Provisional Government has placed the bust of the Jen-de-Paume, at Versailles, so celebrated in 1789, among the national monuments.

The intelligence from Lyons is important. The Courrier de Lyons says that the workman in that city were in revolt. They had attacked and taken forcible possession of the powder-magazine, and were in a state of arms. Just at the time the paper was going to press orders had been given that no public carriage should be allowed to leave the city. M. Arago, the Commissary of the Government, had sent to Paris for orders, and had expressed his determination to carry them into execution to the last extremity

The Moniteur publishes a decree of the Provisional Government authorising the city of Lyons, at the disposement of the Minister of the Interior, to levy an extraordinary contribution of 85 centimes, which, with the 45 previously laid on, amounts to a franc on the direct taxes—in other words, it doubles the actual imposts.

In consequence of the general dissatisfaction to which the proceedings of the Provincial Commissioners more especially as regards matters of finance, have given rise, the Provisional Government has referred their proceedings to the Minister of Finance, who has made the following report

"Citizens, Unity is at once the principle and the object of the Government of the Republic. What happily distinguishes France from other countries of Europe is, that already unity has prevailed in all the elements of her social, political, and administrative organization This precious conquest must be preserved; the care of our grandeur imperiously commands it, the safety even of the Republic requires it.

"Some acts have nevertheless taken place which tend to compromise this sovereign principle Surrounded with considerable difficulties, some Commissioners of the Provisional Government found themselves under the painful necessity of taking measures which are in formal contradiction to the decisions and the acts of the Central Government Thus, while with a painful and salutary economy we endeavour to the commerce of Paris the postponement of the bills which they claim of you, your Commissioners in some departments have granted delay of fifteen days, and even of three months. Other analogous facts are well known to you, and it is therefore needless for me to recapitulate them.

"In this state of things it appears to me indispensable to set all ideas right on the true principles of the Government, and to assimilate the conduct of all to them. The more we render homage to the ardour, the zeal, and the courage of the men who devote themselves to all points of our territory to the great work of the establishment of the Republic, the more are we bound to repress all hostile tendencies, and to adopt vigilance in the consecration of the ideas which constitute the Republican Government.

"I, in consequence, propose to you, citizens, to decide that all financial measures adopted by the Commissioners of the Provisional Government shall be null and void unless they were ratified by the Central Government In that sense I propose for your adoption the following decree

(Signed) "ARMAND MARRAST

On the above report the Provisional Government has decreed as follows:—

"Considering that it is the duty of the Government to see that the whole territory of the Republic; considering that the unity of the Govern ment would be in danger if the local authorities had the power of acting in a sense contrary to the decisions of the supreme power, decrees as follows:—

"Art. 1. All the measures adopted by the Commissioners of the Provisional Gov rnment with regard to commercial or financial legislation are provisionally suspended

"Art 2. For the future, all the financial or commercial measures of the said authorities are to be submitted for the previous consent of the Central Government.

"Art 3. The Ministers of Finance, Commerce, and the Interior are charged, each in his respective province, with the execution of the above decree."

"GARNIER PAGES, Member of the Provisional Government.)

The Minister of the Interior considering that the unity of the Government would be in danger if the local authorities had the power of acting in a sense contrary to the decisions of the supreme power, decrees as follows:—

"Art. 1. All the measures adopted by the Commissioners of the Provisional Government

Maestri, Councillor Pietro Gioia, Professor Pietro Pellegrini, Members of a Regency, to which we grant supreme authority, with powers to give such institutions and adopt such measures as circumstances may require

"In our Royal Palace of Parma, 30th March, 1848

(Signed) "CARLO"

The Regency on being installed named a Director of the Police and a new Military Commander of the city. The civic guard occupied all the posts at nine o'clock P.M., and the Council of Seniors assembled.

PAVIA.—The Austrian Garrison has been driven out of Pavia.

ROME.—The following are the bases of the Roman Constitution which has just been promulgated by Pope Pius IX., and which we noticed in our Postscript of last week:—

"A College of Cardinals to be elected by the Sovereign Pontiff, and a Senate inseparable from that council. Two legislative chambers, the one called the Upper Council, the members of which are named for life by the Pope; the other composed of deputies elected by the nation, at the rate of one for every 30,000 souls. The electors are taken from amongst certain categories, defined according to the taxation paid. The possession of a capital of 300 scudi, or the payment of taxes to the state to the amount of 12 scudi per annum, secures the electoral franchise. An elector must be 25 years of age. To be eligible to election the party must possess a capital of 3000 scudi, or pay taxes to the amount of 100 scudi per annum, and must be 30 years of age. The judicial power to be independent. No more provincial courts. A National Guard to be embodied. Individual liberty secured. Abolition of the censorship. The initiative of projects of law belongs either to the Ministers or the deputies, provided that the proposition be supported by ten members. The right of petition is recognised.

It will be seen that this constitution is, in certain respects, more liberal than the French charter of 1830

NAPLES AND SICILY.—Important accounts have been received from Naples to the 24th ult., Lord Minto having arranged conditions of peace with Sicily which, at that date, were under the consideration of the Neapolitan Cabinet. The following are the conditions:—

"The King of Naples to be King of Sicily, with the title of King of the Two Sicilies, not King of the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies. The representative of the King in Sicily, when not a member of the Royal Family, to be a Sicilian, and to have the title of Viceroy, to be invested irrevocably with a perfect alter ego, with all the powers that the Constitution annexes to the Executive. All the acts and appointments of the Provisional Government to be confirmed. The convocation of Parliament to be considered an integral part of the Constitution, until the legislative power shall have adapted to the present times the Constitution of 1812. Offices of every nature, civil, military, diplomatic, and ecclesiastical, to be conferred by the executive power in Sicily, and on Sicilians only. The National Guard to be continued. All fortresses to be evacuated in eight days from the conclusion of the agreement, and such parts as command the city to be demolished. Sicily to run its own money. The present tri-colour flag and cockade to be acknowledged. The fourth part of the fleet, with arms and materials of war now existing, to be given up to Sicily, or the equivalent in money. No claim to be made on either side for the expenses of the war. Damages to property and to the Prince of France at Messina to be paid by Naples. The Ministers of War, of Marine, of Foreign Affairs, and all other Sicilian Ministers, to be in Sicily attached to the Viceroy, and responsible, according to the Constitution. Sicily not to recognise a Minister for the affairs of Sicily resident in Naples. The Porte Franche at Messina to be re-established in the state it was in before the law of 1826. All matters of mutual interest between the two countries of Naples and Sicily to be determined by the two Parliaments. In the event of a commercial or political league of the Italian people, Sicily to be represented separately, like any other state of Italy, by persons named by the executive power residing in Sicily. The approval of these terms to be given formally to the Provisional Government before he opening of the Sicilian Parliament, otherwise the treaty to be null and void. The Post-office and Custom-house steam-boats purchased at the expense and for the service of Sicily to be restored."

MODENA.—A revolution took place at Modena on the 20th ult. About a hundred persons on that day sallied forth with loud cheers for independence, the revolution of Paris, and that of Vienna. The Hungarians and the pioneers refused to act against the people; the dragoons alone fought desperately. The revolution was completely successful

The Duke has been deposed and imprisoned.

VENICE.—Venice, Trieste, and Padua, were in open insurrection on the 19th ult

SARDINIA.—Carlo Alberto has virtually declared himself the Liberator of Italy; he has issued a proclamation taking Lombardy under his protection, has marched an army to Milan, and thus taken the initiative in a war against Austria, and has been proclaimed in Milan King of Sardinia and Lombardy

On the 21st. Rome was perfectly tranquil. An attempt had been made to excite the Transteverins to revolt, by means of money and promises, but the popular chief, Cicernacci, defeated the projects of the promoters of disorder. Great preparations were making to receive with pomp two more pieces of artillery, and a banner, offered by the ladies of Genoa to the city of Rome. The Senate, National Guards, and troops were to repair to the gate, where they were to be delivered into the hands of the Colonel of the Marine Guard at Civita Vecchia, who was to escort them with 60 National Guards of that town. They were thence to be conveyed to the Quirinal, accompanied by the Roman ladies, in order to be blessed by the Pope.

GERMAN STATES.

HANOVER.—The King of Hanover has been compelled to yield to the wishes of his people, and has consented to depose him, and to proclaim Prince Ernest Augustus of Cumberland King, should his Majesty, King Ernest, refuse to comply with their wishes

March 19.—His Majesty has this day sent an official notification to the Burgher Guard that he had dismissed Privy-Councillor Falke from his post in the Cabinet. Had not his Majesty taken this step, it would assuredly have been demanded.

The burghers have completely maintained the peace of the city to-day. By their desire, no soldier is to appear unless the burghers themselves should require their assistance. Last night two soldiers were apprehended for having intruded.

The King of Hanover has conceded all the demands of his people, and been obliged to submit to the bitter necessity of seeing the Ministry of the Count Von Lüerdi deputy of Osnabruck, who, for refusing to abet his Majesty in the arbitrary measures which he adopted on his accession, was prosecuted and imprisoned for several years

The following is the King's proclamation to his faithful people:

"Hanoverians!—In answer to many representations while have reached me, I have already abolished the censorship of the press, permitted the publication of the proceedings in the Estates, recognised the right of association, granted the desired amnesty and restoration of rights to all who have been condemned for political offences—an ordinance which I now by these presents expressly declare—and with regard to several other points promised further consideration and legislation; but I can do nothing more until the Estates of the Kingdom are assembled by with which view I have given orders that by the time they meet all necessary preparatory measures shall have been taken

"In particular, I will, under the now essentially altered position of all Germany, lay before the Estates proposals for a change in the constitution of the country, which change shall be based upon the responsibility of the Ministry to the country, and upon the union of the Royal Treasury with that of the country

"I exhort you all to await calmly the development of events, and to avoid the disturbance of legal order.

"HERRENHAUSEN, March 20. "ERNEST AUGUSTUS."

BADEN.—A letter from Carlsruhe, in the Cologne Gazette, states that, in consequence of the concessions which have been granted to the people of the Grand Bourg, in Baden, the Margrave William, brother of the Grand Duke of Baden, has resigned all the dignities he occupied in the grand duchy. He was chief commander of the Baden army.

The Duke of Brunswick has already made known his intention to his subjects of joining with Prussia in forming a German union and national representation, so that he proposes to abolish the constitutional guarantees secured and maintain liberties and rights at home and abroad. He has ordered his troops to wear the national German cockade.

The German national flag has been hoisted on the palace at Frankfort, at which the Diet holds its sittings, and is, in fact, the badge of the whole country.

HESSE HOMBURG.—The Landgrave of Hesse-Homburg has abdicated in favour of the Grand Duke of Hesse Darmstadt.

SAXONY.—It has already been announced that the King of Saxony had changed his Ministry. In the new Cabinet there is only one noble, Count de Holzendorf, who is appointed Minister of War. He some time since commanded the Leipsic Brigade, and is very popular. A manufacturer, M. Georgi, a member of the municipality of Leipsic, is appointed to the Finance department. The other portfolios have been confided to Doctor Braun and Doctor Vanderpforten, both noted for their liberal opinions. Serious disturbances have taken place at Bautzen. Several Jews were pillaged; and a mother who had just given birth to a child, had the agony of seeing it killed by a blow from a stone. Some disturbances took place on the 19th ult., at Breslau. In a charge of cavalry three inhabitants were wounded. A burgess guard was organised; but when the accounts left, the military authorities refused to entrust it with arms.

BAVARIA

King Ludwig, urged by the intrigues of the nobles on the one hand, and seduced by the charms of Lola Montez on the other, has abdicated in favour of his son Maximilian. The new King opened the Chambers on the 22nd March; and in the course of his Speech from the Throne gave the following programme of his future policy:

"In my proclamation of yesterday, and in that of the 6th of March, I have expressed the fundamental principles of my government. Faithfully and conscientiously will I adhere to these promises, and I am proud to be able to call myself a constitutional king. In order that every remembrance of former dissensions may disappear, I have resolved to grant an amnesty for all political offences and transgressions.

"I have taken measures which shall be legally submitted to the States of the kingdom, without delay. They are:—Responsibility of the Ministers—liberty of the press—election for the Chamber of Deputies speedy promulgation for the representation of the Palatinate—abolition of ground-rents—and projection of a new legal code.

"I shall likewise cause to be submitted to you the fundamental principles of legislation on the organization of the courts of justice, on proceedings in civil and criminal cases, and on penal laws, to which will be added the projection of a code of police; the general course of exchange discusse. at Leipsic, and a law on the organization of the superior ecclesiastical authorities of the Israelites' subsequent projects. I reserve the laws already accorded in the administration of justice with open courts, and free proceedings, and trial by jury, likewise a law indicated in IX. of the Appendix of the Constitution for increasing the provision of the servants of the state and their families. Likewise its exi nsion to the officials of the state, and lastly a law for improving the condition of the clergy.

"It is my intention to abolish lotteries, as far as the state of the receipts of the kingdom in these troublous times will admit of; in every case these receipts will be replaced by others in the next budget.

"I have likewise commenced a comprehensive reform in the administration of the Landwehr, for the purpose of effecting a general armament of the people as commensurate with the times."

BELGIUM

The attempt of the Belgian republicans who left Paris for the purpose of revolutionising their native country has resulted in an almost ludicrous failure. They arrived by three trains at Quiverse, where a strong detachment of troops, surrounded by a considerable crowd of armed peasants ready to aid the military, were awaiting them. The chiefs seeing that the trains did not stop at Valenciennes as had been arranged, thought the coup de main had failed. They hastened to jump from the trains before reaching the frontier. Those who so leaped were about sixty; several of them broke their legs. The others were led directly in the midst of the troops. Many of them were armed with guns, sabres, and daggers. About sixty of the party escaped; them were Frenchmen or Englishmen, and were directly brought back to the frontier. The others were mostly poor Belgian workmen who had been driven from their work by the French. They were immediately put in irons by one to their respective localities, and so ends the mean project for the liberation of Belgium. Some who were found armed have been taken into custody. The procession occupied thirty-two carriages. Other trains were expected, and would be met at the same place.

SPAIN.

The bill giving to the Government dictatorial powers has passed both Chambers by large majorities, and has received the Royal assent. It was at once put into operation. The Cortes still continues a decree suspending indefinitely the sitting of the Cortes. The Duke and Duchess of Montpensier are expected at St. Sebastian

Mr. Bulwer has, it is said, presented a note to the Spanish Government, declaring that the British Government perseveres in its protest against the Montpensier succession, notwithstanding what has recently occurred in France.

DENMARK AND HOLSTEIN

HAMBURG, March 27.—Holstein has declared itself independent of Denmark. The King of Prussia has approved the declaration, and has promised to support it to the utmost of his power. A Provisional Government has been appointed, and the Prince of Augustenberg has the command of the troops. The Danes are assembling an army to attack Holstein, and both at Elsineur and at Copenhagen active preparations for war are going on.

The following is a detailed account of the most recent occurrences in Denmark and Slesvig Holstein:—

The Hamburgh Borsenhalle, of March 25, says—"We are authorised to insert the following letter from his Majesty the King of Prussia to the Duke of Slesvig-Holstein-Augustenburg:—

"Your Highness, In reply to your Highness's letter of to-day, relative to the threatening aspect of affairs in the Duchy of Slesvig-Holstein, I beg to state that I have taken upon myself the maintenance of the German cause during this stormy epoch, not to usurp the rights of others, but energetically to maintain those that are in existence both at home and abroad. Among these existing rights I include those of the Duchies of Slesvig-Holstein, which, without infringing upon the rights of Denmark, are included in the following clauses:

"1. That the duchies are independent states

"2. That they are states firmly united to each other.

"3. That the male line obtains in the duchies

"4. I have already expressed myself to this effect at the Diet, and under these legally-existing constitutions, I am ready, in reference to the federal resolution of Sept. 12, 1846, to protect the duchies of Slesvig-Holstein against any aggression, and attack whatever, with such measures as shall be the most compatible. I trust, however, that the nationality of the duchies is not menaced by any serious changes. Yet should this be the case, I am persuaded that my German confederates will follow my example, and hasten to their defence. With sincere respect, I remain,

"Your Highness' Friend and Cousin,

"FREDERICK WILLIAM."

"Intelligence from Copenhagen states that the aggressive measures of Denmark are resolved into some pompous words of the Danish newspapers. The affairs of Denmark are in so disposed a state, that an attack upon the duchies will certainly not be one of the first measures of the Danish Government."

RUSSIA.

The Emperor of Russia has issued an ukase placing the army upon a war footing. He has also ordered 160,000 men to march to the frontiers of Poland.

According to advices received via Berlin from Warsaw, we learn that the inhabitants of that city are in open revolution. On Thursday, the 23rd ult., they rose en masse, and murdered several hundreds of the Russians. The troops fled to the fort, and from thence bombarded the town. Warsaw itself is said to have been reduced to ashes. General Sonecki, formerly a captain in the Belgian artillery, was there, and was ordered to procure 20 pieces of cannon at any price. The Prussian frontier is now quarded by 60,000 troops. Orders from Berlin, at the King's expense, in a special train, accompanied by a great number of students

The following is the disposition of the Russian forces on the frontiers of Poland:

"Thirty thousand Russians are on the frontiers of Galicia, at some leagues from Cracow; fifty thousand Russians occupy Russian Poland; twenty thousand in Wolhynia. The Russian Guard is marching towards the Vistula. All the reserves have been called from the interior, and the corps stationed at the side of Odessa and towards Turkey have received orders to send fifteen thousand men towards Polesia. The Prussians occupy about 20 leagues of ground rigidly on the defensive. Schamil has organised communications with Constantinople, in order to know what is passing in Europe. His intention is to take the offensive as soon as hostilities have commenced in Poland. There are from 60,000 to 80,000 Poles in the Caucasus. The Government is not easy about Southern Russia. The Cossacks impatiently support the harsh administration of the Czar. In the province of Astrakan there is a sort of republic. The province situated between the White Sea, the Ourai Mountains, and the Volga, is inhabited by four millions of Tartars, who till hear the iron yoke that weighs upon them. This country is the born inheritance of Russia: it is there that are found platina, gold, silver, copper, iron, timber

SWITZERLAND.

The Canton of Uri has consented to deliver up to the Vorort the protocols and official documents of the Sonderbund. By these the conspiracy against the integrity of the federation will be publicly known, since the federal directory has stated that it will specially communicate their contents to the state. The details of the measures taken by the absolutist Governments, and by M. Guizot in particular, are curious. Had the Sonderbund been victorious, the independence of the other Cantons would have been destroyed, and their territory would have been parcelled out among the Sonderbund Cantons. They would have been saddled with the expenses of the war, and Jesuit convents established in all their towns.

UNITED STATES.

By the last advices we learn from Washington that the proceedings in Congress were of little interest. The Senate adjourned on the 9th ult., without coming to any decision in regard to the treaty. Several amendments and modifications had been adopted, but its ratification was considered certain.

The bids for the loan of Five Million took place at Washington on the 8th ult. On this subject the Courrier and Journal has the following:—"The expectation of peace has operated favourably on the Five Million Loan. The whole sum was bid for at an average rate exceeding 1.36 per cent. premium. There were bids to the amount of 17,000,000 dollars. The house of Rothschild take 4,000,000 out of the 5,000,000. This is the first appearance in our markets of foreign bidders for the United States loans—a fact which, we believe, has been taken for American account, and have not been found negotiable in Europe."

The financial condition of the State of Maryland is shown to be extremely satisfactory. The sum received from sales of securities amounts to 3,358,659 dollars, which would form a sinking fund towards paying off the State debt.

Special honours had been paid to the remains of the late John Quincy Adams. A great demonstration had been made by the people of New York in favour of Mr. Clay.

MEXICO.

General Scott is said to have sent a message to Queretaro, with the announcement that unless a peace was concluded within three days, he would proceed to occupy that and other points of the Republic

Rumour prevailed in Vera Cruz that Santa Anna had made an application to General Scott for a passport to Vera Cruz, and permission to leave the country, and that General Scott had acceded to his request.

CANADA.

The Canadian Parliament assembled at Montreal on the 28th of Feb., when both Houses were addressed by a speech from his Excellency the Governor-General, Lord Elgin. The subjects to which he alluded were respecting the Post-office of British North America, which he was desirous of seeing placed on an improved footing; the subject of immigration he recommended to their serious consideration, with the view of mitigating the evils which took place last year. The constitution of the University of King's College, a more equitable mode of assessment in Western Canada, and the improvement of the systems of judicature in both sections of the province, he recommended to engage the attention of both Houses of Parliament of the Legislature. The Ministry were defeated on the debate on the address, and some resigned.

WEST INDIES

By the Royal Mail Company's steam-ship Dee, matters were perfectly quiet at Tampico, and trade flourishing

At Havannah, the new Captain-General, Roncali, had not arrived when the Dee sailed, but he was hourly expected. Trade was somewhat dull.

At Barbadoes the troops were still suffering from the yellow fever, which had made sad havoc among the men. A few deaths had taken place since the departure of the last steamer for England

THE RIVER PLATE.

We have received, viâ New York, advices from La Plata to the 19th January. The blockade is now most rigidly enforced, the French making a complete line across the river with their steamers and other men-of-war; say from Ensenada, on the Argentine side, to Colonia, on the Oriental side. This rigid enforcement of the blockade has been done by the French in consequence of Rosas closing part of Buenos Ayres against the trade of Monte Video

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

At Chatham all the mills are now working ten hours a day. Block-printers have rather more work; consequently a better rate of wages is now allowed for

Tadolini finished her engagement at La Scala, at Milan, on the 20th ult., and was expected to arrive in London this week

The tradespeople in Paris are generally subscribing a day's wages for the relief of the Exchequer

The English barque Tom Moore was wrecked on the hidden rocks on the Bahama Bank on the 6th of February. Part of the cargo and the crew were, however, saved.

Jenny Lind is expected every day to resume her engagement at Her Majesty's Theatre, and Lablache will be here by the 8th of April

The Right Hon. the Speaker gave a dinner on Saturday evening, at his residence in Eaton-square, to several members of the House of Commons

The Marchioness of Anglesey, last week, through the sudden breaking of a chair on which she was seated, fractured her leg. The fracture has been reduced, and the Marchioness is satisfactorily progressing towards recovery

Lord Brougham is shortly expected to arrive in town from Cannes. The noble lord is steadily recovering his health.

The cotton-mills at Bolton are, on an average, running considerably better time than they were a few weeks since

It is expected that her Majesty's ship Howe, 120 guns, will return direct from the island of Madeira to England, the latter end of April, with her Majesty the Queen Dowager and suite on board.

Sunday was the birthday of his Royal Highness Prince George. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge during the afternoon

The English Court at Le Pavone (Tennis Court) at Versailles is to be considered henceforth an historical monument in France. It was the closing of this ball-court against a public meeting that began the Revolution of 1789.

A great many English, Russian, and French families, who left Paris in consequence of the events there, have returned as friends and at Ostend, where they propose to remain. All the hotels in Brussels are crowded.

Mr. Joseph Howe is appointed Provincial Secretary and Clerk of the Executive Council of the province of Nova Scotia, in the place of Sir Rupert George Mark Kennaway, Esq., of Exeter, has been appointed Distributor of Stamps for the county of Devon.

The new electoral law of Sardinia fixes the basis of voting at 40 livres for Piedmont, and 20 livres for Savoy. All the capacities (heads of families) are electors

The Toulonnais announces the approaching arrival of Mehemet Ali at Toulon, and with this seeming absurdity, that he was to be "received with all the honours due to a crowned head."

Captain Roche d'Anbigny, former governor of the French establishments in Oceania, died at Lorient on the 20th ult.

The Presse states that all feudal and seigniorial rights are abolished in Austria, and the lines of Custom-houses between the different provinces of the monarchy are suppressed.

The operatives employed on the Orleans Railroad have presented 1,224 francs (£48), the amount of a day's wages, as an offering to the Republic.

It is understood that it is in contemplation to erect a range of batteries on the cliffs at the north side of the bay at Weymouth, to act in connexion, as occasion may require, with the extensive fortifications about to be established in the island of Portland.

The mortal remains of the late Marquis of Bute were interred, on Friday last, in the family mausoleum at Kirting, near Newmarket. In consequence of the suddenness of his Lordship's demise, an inquest was held on his remains before the coroner for the district, when, after a full investigation of the circumstances, a verdict of "Died by the visitation of God" was returned.

Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston gave a grand entertainment on Saturday evening at their residence in Cotton-gardens, to the Royal Highness Prince Leopold of Naples (Count Syracuse).

M. Sobrier, who was lately one of the delegates of the Police Department in France, has placed a sum of 20,000f. (being the fifth part of his estate) at the disposal of the Provisional Government, "to create the capital which shall be the inducement of the workmen and the cultivator fruitful."

The Junior United Service Club have taken the lead in offering a mark of respect to Lord Hardinge. A dinner is to be given to the Governor-General of India on the 8th Instant. One hundred and fifty names have already been subscribed.

All the Russians residing in France have received orders to return forthwith...to their own country.

It is stated in a Lyons newspaper, that a merchant having entered Lyons with a large sum of money in specie, was compelled to take it to the bank, where notes were given him in exchange for it

The late Andrew Macklew, Esq., of Poulett Lodge, Twickenham, in addition to the munificent bequests left to the various Public Charities, to be applied to the purposes of the poor-box of each court, bequeathed to the Accident Relief Society £500, and to the Distressed Need-owenon's society £500

Lord Morpeth, Baron Goldsmid, Joseph Bailey, jun., Esq., M.P., W. Jackson, Esq., M.P., and J. M. Randel, Esq., on Monday, visited Birkenhead for the purpose of surveying the present condition of the dock works there.

The natives of Germany resident in Nottingham have entered into a subscription towards the relief of the sufferers at Berlin

The Rev. Mr. O'Brien, who died on the 14th ultimo, at Rugby, has left to the Christian Brothers' Society and the Sisters of Mercy, of Limerick, £200 each, £20 to the Irish Colleges of Rome, and the residue of his property to build and found an almshouse for fifteen widows in Limerick.

According to the Brussels Independance, the King of Hanover is so ill as only to allow his recovery is despaired of

The Limerick and Clare Examiner contains details of the most remorseless evictions in both Clare and Kerry, comprising altogether more than one thousand unhappy creatures. The landed proprietors are the Marquis of Conyngham and Colonel Vesey, and Mr. Wesley.

The French Provisional Government has ordered an army of 35,000 men to concentrate in Dauphiny.

The following notice is being affixed by the Lombard-street banks to the pass-books of all their customers:—"On and after the 1st of May, 1848, banking business will close at four o'clock in the afternoon, instead of five o'clock, as at present."

A return just issued of the amount of stocks transferred from England to Ireland, and the reverse, in each year from 1837 to 1847, both inclusive, gives the total as £10,305,744 stock transferred from England to Ireland in that period, and £5,153,979 stock transferred from Ireland to England

The funeral of the late Vice-Admiral F. Warren took place on Tuesday, near Portsmouth.

William Crawford Newby, Esq., of Stockton upon-Tees, in the county of Durham, is appointed one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women in and for the county of Durham, and in and for the city of the county of York. James Gallaway, Esq., of Prescot, in the county of Lancaster, has obtained a similar appointment for the county of Lancaster

The eldest son of Viscount Hardinge, on returning to his seat at Penshurst, was the laying of the foundation-stone of a new church at Fordcome-green, for the erection of which the inhabitants of the noble and gallant hero's estate have to thank his munificent donation of funds, transmitted from India, just after his splendid achievements there. The ceremony took place on Friday (last week.)

A Piedmontese Jew has left by will a sum of three million francs to the Pope

The works on the Paris and Lyons Railroad have been resumed in the neighbourhood of Lyons.

The appointment of M. Galetti to the Ministry of Police, or government of Rome, had been generally approved

A battalion of the National Garde Mobile of Paris, fully armed, marched from Paris on Monday last, to surround the house at Neuilly in which Louis Philippe and the Queen of England were to sleep that night, on their way to Eu.

A fire broke out on the premises of Mr. Sanderson, at Ousebridge, near York, on the morning of the 21st ult., and was not extinguished until it had destroyed the whole of the premises, consisting of a large range of buildings, used as a cabinet-maker's shop, and a dwelling-house adjoining. The loss is estimated at £2,000.

The Marchioness of Anglesey, last week, through the sudden breaking of a chair on which she was seated, fractured her leg. The fracture has been reduced, and the Marchioness is satisfactorily progressing towards recovery

Lord Brougham is shortly expected to arrive in town from Cannes. The noble lord is steadily recovering his health.

The cotton-mills at Bolton are, on an average, running considerably better time than they were a few weeks since

It is expected that her Majesty's ship Howe, 120 guns, will return direct from the island of Madeira to England, the latter end of April, with her Majesty the Queen Dowager and suite on board.

Sunday was the birthday of his Royal Highness Prince George. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge during the afternoon

The English barque Tom Moore was wrecked on the hidden rocks on the Bahama Bank on the 6th of February. Part of the cargo and the crew were, however, saved.

Jenny Lind is expected every day to resume her engagement at Her Majesty's Theatre, and Lablache will be here by the 8th of April

The Right Hon. the Speaker gave a dinner on Saturday evening, at his residence in Eaton-square, to several members of the House of Commons

The Marchioness of Anglesey, last week, through the sudden breaking of a chair on which she was seated, fractured her leg. The fracture has been reduced, and the Marchioness is satisfactorily progressing towards recovery

Lord Brougham is shortly expected to arrive in town from Cannes. The noble lord is steadily recovering his health.

The cotton-mills at Bolton are, on an average, running considerably better time than they were a few weeks since

It is expected that her Majesty's ship Howe, 120 guns, will return direct from the island of Madeira to England, the latter end of April, with her Majesty the Queen Dowager and suite on board.

Sunday was the birthday of his Royal Highness Prince George. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge during the afternoon

The English barque Tom Moore was wrecked on the hidden rocks on the Bahama Bank on the 6th of February. Part of the cargo and the crew were, however, saved.

Jenny Lind is expected every day to resume her engagement at Her Majesty's Theatre, and Lablache will be here by the 8th of April

The Right Hon. the Speaker gave a dinner on Saturday evening, at his residence in Eaton-square, to several members of the House of Commons

The Marchioness of Anglesey, last week, through the sudden breaking of a chair on which she was seated, fractured her leg. The fracture has been reduced, and the Marchioness is satisfactorily progressing towards recovery

Lord Brougham is shortly expected to arrive in town from Cannes. The noble lord is steadily recovering his health.

The cotton-mills at Bolton are, on an average, running considerably better time than they were a few weeks since

It is expected that her Majesty's ship Howe, 120 guns, will return direct from the island of Madeira to England, the latter end of April, with her Majesty the Queen Dowager and suite on board.

Sunday was the birthday of his Royal Highness Prince George. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge during the afternoon

INTERIOR OF A PARIS CLUB.

SKETCHES FROM PARIS.

Our Artists in Paris this week enable us to present to our readers the accompanying Scenes and Incidents.

THE CLUB.

First is a view of the interior of one of the Republican Clubs, of which several have just been established in Paris. The scene shows the form in which the members are accustomed to meet. A workman in a blouse is addressing them. In the galleries are seated the women of the assembly. The tri-coloured flag hangs in the centre, beneath the Republican motto, "Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité." The scene is one of order and quiet, becoming a deliberative assembly.

THE HOSPICE DES INVALIDES.

To meet the exigencies of the late Revolution, several of the splendid apartments of the Tuileries were converted into Hospitals for the wounded; their beds being ranged in the order shown in the Illustration. In the Galerie de Diane, which is here represented, nearly 40 beds were thus placed, with a chair at the foot of each bedstead; and here might be seen Sisters of Charity attending the patients. The Galerie is a sumptuous apartment, but one which, by a happy thought at the time of Louis XIII. the ceiling is noble and richly painted with scenes from Roman history. It was through one of the doors of the Royal Library, as well as by the windows, that the colossal statue of Napoleon was removed in 1814, to make room for the bust of the King of Rome, which stood there. The contrast between the luxurious, well-appointed chamber, and the rough, coarse beds and bedding, must strike the beholder at once with its peculiar appropriateness.

NEWSVENDERS.

This is a sketch from one of the Boulevards—a newsman—shouting "Demande! la Presse," one of the most popular organs of the new state of things in France. The mode of carrying the papers so as to display the several titles is ingenious, to say the least of it.

"LA VOIX DES FEMMES."

This is a companion marchande to the previous portrait. She appears very active in her vocation. The Charivari has the following jeu d'esprit on this new champion of the Rights of Woman:—

"Last night, on the Boulevards, we heard a man calling 'The Voice of Women.' Now we have admired the voice of woman when coming from a throat or an Album, but we must own we were alarmed to find that the voice in question was a sheet of printed paper expressing the political opinions of the female population of France. We saw that paper forthwith our shirt buttons will be cancelled, to keep the contents together. 'Down with shirt buttons!' will be the exclamation against The Voice of Women. From to-day we shall square the new inventions to the shape of braces, buttons, &c., which will best serve the interests of asking a woman's aid in these matters. We expect a great rise in the string trade. We contemplate an opposition journal to be called The Voice of Men."

THE TREE OF LIBERTY, IN THE CHAMP DE MARS.

On Tuesday week, the numerous workmen employed on the works of the Champ de Mars, having resolved to plant there a "Tree of Liberty," dug a hole for that purpose in the centre of the Lawn, and set up in it

THE SALON DE DIANE, IN THE TUILERIES, CONVERTED INTO AN HOSPITAL FOR THE WOUNDED.

NEWSVENDER ON THE BOULEVARDS.

"LA VOIX DES FEMMES."

one of the large trees which they had rooted up from a side alley. The hole was, however, not deep enough, and the tree fell, and broke the leg of one of the workmen, who was carried to the hospital by his comrades. Another and a deeper hole was then made, and, the tree being finally planted, the operatives repaired in a body to Grenelle to fetch the Mayor and the parish priest, whom they requested to come and bless the tree of liberty, which was decorated with the colours of the Republic.

The Mayor and the priest soon came, and the latter recited the usual prayers, he stowed the benediction on the tree, and on the assistants, and cried "Vive la République!" The cry was repeated by a thousand voices, and the workmen afterwards escorted back to Grenelle the Mayor and the parish priest, singing patriotic hymns.

On the following day, there was "a manifestation" round the Tree of Liberty; and this is the scene of our Artist's illustration. Soon after one o'clock, M. Ledru-Rollin, the Minister of the Interior, by request of a deputation of operatives, proceeded to the Military School, and was there received by Colonel Allard, the director of the public works in that quarter. "Ledru-Rollin then proceeded (says the Moniteur), followed by a number of operatives, to the foot of the tree of liberty, and after a few words from Colonel Allard, who thanked him, in the name of the operatives, for having consented to join in this manifestation, the Minister delivered a simple and energetic discourse, full of that eloquence which sympathises with the people, which he ever places at the service of the Republic. His speech, delivered in a loud tone of voice, in which much emotion was betrayed, was heard by all, and must have been retained in the memory of each individual of the multitude. It would be difficult to describe the effect produced on the operatives present. After the Minister had concluded his speech, an officer of the line approached him, and with a faltering voice, whilst his eyes were filled with tears, expressed to him the grief experienced by the regular troops at being removed from Paris. He demanded the recall of the army; to which citizen Ledru-Rollin replied, 'My friends, before I quit you I desire to say a word which ought to find an echo. The sight of this glorious monument, of this military school, recalls to my mind that fears have been manifested in consequence of the presence of some regiments in Paris. . . . I protest most earnestly against those sentiments of mistrust, unworthy of French generosity. It is not possible thus to separate the people from the army. The people is the army—the army is the people! What is the army? Is it not the most generous portion of the people—the blood of our blood? Who, during that period of corruption and of disgrace which we lately endured, still preserved any traditions of honour? The army, the army alone! (Applause.) Was it not the army which represented the ancient glory of France in the plains and in the mountains of Africa? Without the army it might have been believed that France had degenerated. Without the army insolent rivals might have insulted us with impunity. Glory, then, to the army! Yes, my friends, glory to the army! For it recollected in February that it was the people, and it would not fire against the people. You, like me, have seen those soldiers in a state of despair who proved to you that they would not fight against their brothers. No more suspicion nor mistrust. What, moreover, could three or four regiments effect? It might be believed that you, so great and powerful, are afraid. As for my part, my friends, and it is my constant occupation, I shall never be satisfied until I shall have seen the army, the National Guard, and the people fraternize in this same Champ de Mars. The army has no need of being amnestied—it is you, and you are the army. Let there be complete fraternity between us.' This speech was greeted with immense applause; and, after having proposed a toast to the independence of France and to liberty, citizen Ledru-Rollin retired, followed by a numerous crowd, crying 'Ledru-Rollin for ever! the Republic for ever!"

In the Illustration we see Ledru-Rollin addressing the great crowd, beneath the Tree of Liberty, from amid whose branches flaunt the gay tricolour and the bonnet rouge. Among those who accompanied Ledru-Rollin was the young son of General Lamarque, wearing a red Turkish cap, with a large blue tassel. Near him is one of the officers of hussars.

MANIFESTATION ROUND THE "TREE OF LIBERTY," IN THE CHAMP DE MARS.—M. LEDRU-ROLLIN ADDRESSING THE PEOPLE.

Arrivals from France.—The steamers arriving from the French ports at the metropolis during the latter portion of the past week have brought very extensive cargoes of merchandize, both of silks and other French manufactures, of the valuable description usually brought at this time of the year for the ensuing season; and also of the effects of parties who have been either residents in or temporary visitors to Paris, and who have left the French capital suddenly and returned home. One packet from Boulogne was not only crowded to excess in her hold, but had actually the deck laden with packages of merchandize and effects of the nature alluded to, so great was the demand for freight to the British metropolis. Circumstances which have come to our knowledge prove, if any further proof were necessary, that a feeling of the general insecurity of property but too surely and actually exists in the French metropolis, and not only on the part of the English residents, but also by foreigners themselves of wealth and distinction. We are assured, as an instance in point, that an individual resident in Paris, the fame of whose name and immense wealth is not even confined to Europe, has caused the most valuable portion of his private and household effects to be shipped to this country for safety, in order that they may be housed in the warehouse of one of our metropolitan dock establishments, until the existence of a greater degree of security for property in the French metropolis may render their return to that capital politic and safe. Nothing can more completely show the unhappy consequences of the present state of affairs and general insecurity in Paris than the occurrence of events of this nature.

Mail Arrangements. Her Majesty's sloop Star is appointed to take out the mails for Madeira, Cape de Verd, Sierra Leone, and Ascension, on the 1st of April; the Tagus steamer the Indian mails, on the 3rd of April; the Tay steamer the West India and Mexican mails, on the 1st of April; the Acadia steamer the American mails, on the 7th of April; her Majesty's brig Lemnet the Madeira, Brazil, and Buenos Ayres mails, on the 4th of April; and the Emperor of China sailing packet the Sydney and New South Wales mails, on the 31st March. The Sarah Sands steamer will take out ship letter bags for America, on the 3rd of April.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—M. THALBERG.—GRAND SACRED, CLASSICAL and MISCELLANEOUS CONCERT, on MONDAY, EVENING APRIL 17th, 1848.

It is respectfully announced that on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 17th, will be given a GRAND CONCERT, with GREAT ORCHESTRA, CHORUS, &c. On which occasion M. THALBERG will execute the following Pieces: 1 Grand Concerto in C Minor, Beethoven 2 Fantasia on Subjects from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Thalberg—3 Fantasia on Subjects from Auber's "Masaniello," Thalberg—4 "Letter from Weber," Mendelssohn.

The vocal portion will include Madame Tadolini, Mdlle. Schwartz, Mdlle. Vera, and Mdlle. Sofia Lanzelli; Signor Gardoni, Signor Belletti, Signor F. Lablache, Signor Gilardi, Signor Bonetti, Cuzzani and Signor Labriche, and complete Selections from the Works of Mozart, Beethoven, Gluck, Mayerbeer, Weber, Rossini, &c., and include a Scena Ed. Trio, for Three Basses, by Meyerbeer, Signor Labriche Belletti, and Gilardi. Conductor, Mr Balfe

Tickets (certificates which, &c. &c.) announced.

N B.—A SECOND GRAND CONCERT will be presented on WEDNESDAY MORNING, APRIL 19th, 1848.

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—On MONDAY next, APRIL 3, M. LAFONT and Mons. PAUL ERNEST, of the Theatre des Varietes, Paris, will have the honour of making their First Appearance, in the two New Comedies of LES EXTREMES SE TOUCHENT and UN MOUSQUETAIRE GRIS, both of which have been recently produced at the Theatre des Varietes, Paris, with great success.—Mdlle NATHALIE respectfully announces that her BENEFIT and LAST APPEARANCE will take place on WEDNESDAY next, APRIL 5, on which occasion she will have the honour of performing in an entirely New Comedy, entitled LE DERNIER AMOUR; Le Lion comique, Mdlle Nathalie, the Character of Juliette, by Mdlle Rose Flexor.—Boxes and Stalls may be secured at Mr MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street.

THEATRE-ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—CIRQUE NATIONAL DE PARIS.—On MONDAY, APRIL 3rd and during the week, a variety of New Entertainments Extraordinary and Darling Performances, by the celebrated French Artists of the Cirque National de Paris, under the direction of Mr Charles Hughes. Mons. Duval, the Acts of Equitation, Mons. Franconi, Acts of Horsemanship, Mdlle Stuart Leon in her Pas de Fascination, Mdlle Rose Stuart, and for the first time in England, Mdlle Leocadie Stuart in her Grand Pas de Deux, Mons. Adolphe Franconi and Mdlle Rose Stuart. Between the performances will be given the Farce of "The Little Devil." &c. &c. Commence at 7 o'clock. Doors open at half-past 6. Private Boxes and Stalls may be secured at the Box-office of the Theatre between the hours of 11 and 4. Second price at Half-past Nine o'Clock. Acts of Horsemanship. Mr Charles Hughes.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Last Six Nights of the present Season, to give ample time for the vast alterations and preparations for the 1st Easter Spectacle and Splendid Holiday Entertainments, Tuesday, April 4th, and during the Week. Last Nights of the present Operatic Spectacle, THE RAFFLE OF THE AMAZONS, succeeded by a Grand Equestrian Fete, in which the Equestrian and Gymnastic Artists will appear in their incomparable Feats.—Box-Office open from 11 till 4 Stage Manager, Mr Wm West

LOVE'S ENTERTAINMENTS.—CROSBY HALL.—On WEDNESDAY, APRIL 5, and FRIDAY, APRIL 7, LOVE will resume his Annual Entertainments. He will present, for the first time in Crosby Hall, an Entertainment on a novel construction, with entirely new and appropriate Mutative Costumes and Appointments throughout, entitled, THE WOLF IN SHEEP'S CLOTHING; or, The Blue Ribbon; with Love's Lenten Lucubrations, and other Entertainments, which are expressed in the bills Welsh Harp, Reberts, Pleasure-hill, & Mary-lebone Monday April 3, Love will appear at the Lecture Hall, 197, Upper-street, Islington, in an Historical and Philosophical Lecture on the Occult Powers of the Human Mind and its Contributory Organs: A Lecture on Peculiarities of Character, and other Entertainments. On Thursday April 6 at the Lecture Hall, Richmond Begin each Evening at Eight. Tickets, 3s. Gallery, 1s Books, 6d.

MODELS of the TABERNACLE and ENCAMPMENT of ISRAEL, by the Rev ROBERT HAMILTHORN, are now exhibiting at 28, Pall-mall, near the Palace St. James's Palace. The beautiful Landscape Model covers an area of 84 square feet, representing the Encampment on the Plain of Moab, View of the Dead Sea and River Jordan. The Model of the Tabernacle covers a space of 50 square feet in which every fabric and material corresponds precisely with those of the sacred original —Admission 1s. Open from Eleven till Eight WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES, Princess's Concert Rooms.—Last Six Nights. MONDAY, APRIL 3 and five following Mondays, Stage Doors at Five Season, and terminating at the present Subscription. Single tickets, each Mr Weippert's Palace Band as usual, conducted by himself. Mr Corri. The refreshments will be under the direction of Mr Lazzari, late of Covent Garden Theatre.—Commence at 9 o'clock precisely. To insure admission to avoid disappointment, Subscribers are requested to send their Tickets early in the day.

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, REGENTS-PARK. Visitors will be admitted WITHOUT ORDERS from MONDAY APRIL 10th next, on the payment of Sixpence each on Mondays, and of One Shilling each on the four following days. Children under twelve years of age, on the payment of Sixpence each on all days, except those of Promenades.

By Order of the Council.

March 28, 1848. D. W. MITCHELL, Sec.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 2.—Fourth Sunday in Lent.
MONDAY, April 3. New Moon at 11h. 1m. P.M., and an Eclipse of the Sun takes place, but it is not visible here.
TUESDAY, April 4. St. Ambrose
WEDNESDAY, April 5. The Sun rises at 5h. 27m., and sets at 5h. 39m.
THURSDAY, April 6. Old Lady Day.
FRIDAY, April 7.—Day-breaks at 3h. 20m., and twilight ends at 9h. 45m.
SATURDAY, April 8. The length of the day is 13h. 22m., and it is 5h. 37m. longer than it was on the shortest day.

The planets Mercury, Venus, and Saturn are near together during this week, and the two, former conjoined together all the month. See the diagram in the "Illustrated London Almanack, showing their paths this month

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 8

| Sunday | | Monday | | Tuesday | | Wednesday | | Thursday | | Friday | | Saturday | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| M | A | M | A | M | A | M | A | M | A | M | A | M | A |
| h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m | h m |
| 0 35 | 0 56 | 1 18 | 1 40 | 2 0 | 2 22 | 2 45 | 3 10 | 3 36 | 4 2 | 4 35 | 5 10 | 5 50 | 6 37 |

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Beta," and several other Correspondents.—The expected Comet of 1264 and 1556 has not yet been seen.

"Mathematicus."—The Transactions of the Royal Astronomical Society, No. 17, Vol. VII., for the predicted Right Ascension, &c., upon three hypotheses of the times of Perihelion Passage.

"D. R.," Exeter—A letter has been sent to you, which, if not delivered, you will find at the Post-office.

"A. F. L.," near Abingdon, Berks—A letter has been sent to you in reply to your communications of March 17.

"O. P.," Hull. The quantity of water caused with the air is determined by means of a dry and wet-bulb thermometer

"Phrenologus." Apply at the Phrenological Publishers', King William-street, Strand.

"Arthur Pearson."—We are not sufficiently versed in churchwardens' law to be able to solve your doubt

"Oneagh,"—"Kenny's Shilling Manual of Chess."

"A. H." Inchen is pronounced as spelt

"H. F. N." Weymouth. Write respecting your half-crown (temp. Chas. II.) to Mr. Webster, 17, Green Arbour-court, Cheapside.

"Moderato"—Chas les X. duel, we think, at Graz

"E. S." See the published "Key to Cocaigny."

"A Young Singer" should consult a Professor of Singing on his four (1) questions

"Communis." Apply to Jeffery and Son, Inventors of the Marine Glue, Commercial-road.

"A Subscriber" A complete work on Glass Painting has lately been published by Parker, of Oxford.

"R.," Guernsey—The improvement will be illustrated in our pages.

"An Instructress." We regret that we cannot assist you.

"F. B. J.," Poplar—Ackermann and Co., Strand.

"A. Z." is thanked for the hint

"St. Vincent" If the money has been paid to the postman by inadvertence, the Post-office authorities will, doubtless, return it

"C. G. B." The style of "Lord" Mayor of London was granted by Edw. III., with the style of Right Hon., in 1353.

"James N." Mackintosh's work, "Il Principe," appeared in 1517, and was translated into English in 1640. Florence's translation of the complete works, was by Ivy, Vale, 1762, may be bought for about two guineas

"C. B.," Jersey, is thanked for the sketch, though the subject was already in our engraver's hands

"A. Z." Livery and The amount of damages in the case Bunn v. Lind was £2000 in favour of the plaintiff

"C. M.," Guernsey. We regret that we have not room for the lines

"R. T. N." Bath. See a little book entitled "A Peep into Architecture."

"W. H. C.," Cork—Apply to a Police Magistrate.

"A Constant Reader." Procure a work on book keeping

"J. G. B.," Capel Mayor. We have already stated our approval of the Baby Jumper. It is out of Mr. Smith's hands

"Eugena." We do not make rare wines.

"G. H. T." Shrewsbury.—Piccadilly.

"J. L. B." Lords of Universities, Military Schools, &c.

"S. H. R."—There have been published several controversial pamphlets on the tendency of Theatrical Entertainments; but we cannot enumerate their titles.

"J. D. C." Plea in the nunc artistique of Mr. Habbé R. Browne

"A Novice." Hudson on Sheep

"A. S.," "M. M." "A Subscriber," Y. Y. Z.," "J. R.," Royal street," "Blackheath," "C. C.," "Constant Reader," "W. A. R.," Wakefield, and "M. P."—We cannot reply to your questions

"A. Z."—Bets in the Books of London usually commence at £30 or £90 a year

"Lex," Edinburgh—Sanctuaries in London, or places privileged against the arrest of persons for debt, were suppressed in 1696

"A Bad Memory," Braintree. Mr. O'Connell died at Genoa, May 15, 1847, aged 72.

"Anne." Mrs Hemans died at Dublin, May 16, 1835, aged 41.

INDELIBLE. Lucas, "Britain defended," &c.

"J. S. H." Words of "God save the King"

"Truth."—"Mourir pour la Patrie" is the "Chaunr des Girondins," not the "Marseillaise Hymn."

"A Researcher from No. 1" is mistaken

"A Correspondent," who inquires as to the standing armies of Europe, will find a tabular view of the military force of the various civilized nations in the "Penny Cyclopædia," now Array."

"An Old Subscriber." The Government office

"G. H. S.," Whitby. The lines are from Congreve's "Mourning Bride."

"C. H. M.," Inverness.—To plead humority is a disreputable shift.

"Decuria." The music and words of the "Marseillaise Hymn" may be bought of any musicseller for 3d.

"A Reader," Ashborne, may purchase a good Map of London, by order of any bookseller, for half-a-crown.

"Syrus," Strood, and "V. B. Y" The Moon's orb being visible at the time of the total Eclipse, was chiefly owing to the earth-shine.

"G. T." is thanked: but we have not room

"A Subscriber," Bedford, should apply at the Commercial Travellers' School

"A Resident in the Country" should send a friend to the British Museum; the officers cannot attend to such matters as he names.

"A Subscriber."—We do not know who is Secretary of the Canal Navigation Society

"Quis, Quis," Sheffield. The loss by broken windows in popular tumults is recoverable from all the County Rate

"Sam Slick."—A marvellous work, descriptive of the Cape of Good Hope, has lately been published by Mr. Murray The income of the late Archbishop of Canterbury has been stated as £18,000 per annum.

"C. P.," Chelmsford. The aurora on the evening of Sunday, March 19, was seen at Greenwich, but I did not see it, and therefore I did not insert it in the meteorological notes of the week. It was also seen at Nuneaham by Mr. Lowe. The aurora on Monday evening was also very generally seen. The aurora can scarcely be merely an atmospheric phenomenon, or of local origin, for simultaneously the Cape of Good Hope Observer mentions it.—J. G.

"Romeo."—The London Banking Firms and Companies do not allow interest on accounts, but insist on a remunerative balance being constantly on the credit side of the ledger. To the second query.—No

"Ozoneana," "W. S." Buckingham; and "E. J. L.," Nottingham, are thanked for the diagrams of the Solar Phenomena, for which we regret that we have not room

"H. B." Southampton.—"Haydn's Dictionary of Dates" is, perhaps, the most trustworthy recent work of its class: it is more copious than "Pepy's Chronology."

The price is 18*s*

"A Country Subscriber."—See "The Shilling Manual of Oil Painting," from Mesrs. Winsor and Newton, Colnaghi, and others.

"G. B." To what hospital does our Correspondent refer?

"A Parisian," Alton. Of what class are the subjects of the drawings?

"W. H. B.," Greenwich. Apply to the Registrar of your district

"A Bad Memory," Braintree.—The Great Britain steam-ship ran ashore in Dundrum Bay, Sept. 22, 1846, Capt. Hosken, in command. Capt. Claxton superintended the attempts made for the vessel's re-sail.

 Owing to the great pressure of News, Our Magazine Column for April 8 is unavoidably deferred.

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

The Parlour Library. Vol. 14.——Bibliopegia.——Rajah Brooke's Journal Murray.——Light and Knowledge. ——Sketches of her Majesty's Household.——Field's Naturalist's Note Book.——The Image of his Father. Part I.
Music. "Le Bouquet d'Hiver."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1848.

LAST week, when commenting on the failure, in the House of Commons, of Mr. Hume's motion for a reduction of the naval estimates, we took occasion to glance at the necessity which exists for a better administration of the expenditure in that department of the public service, particularly in the management of stores, dockyards, &c. An occurrence has since become known, which supplies an apt illustration of the monstrous evils to which the abuses suffered by the Admiralty authorities to exist, are, in the ordinary course of things, almost certain to give rise.

By the packet-ship Madrid, which has arrived from Portugal within the last few days, we learn that the first-class ship of the line, the Queen, 110 guns, commanded by Captain Bruce, when endeavouring to bring up in the Bay of Gibraltar, on the 14th ult., went ashore in consequence of the flukes of both her anchors breaking off in the ground. This fine three-decker, with one thousand souls on board, thus placed in the most imminent peril, would, in all probability have been lost, if it had not been for the timely assistance rendered by the Polyphemus steam-sloop, which, attracted by the guns of distress fired by the Queen, fortunately succeeded in hauling her off.

And what has been the cause of this mishap, which had nearly terminated in the destruction of a noble specimen of naval architecture and the sacrifice of one thousand lives? The gross neglect of the Admiralty officials in not supplying the best workmanship and materials, as well as the best principle of construction in every article of such first-rate importance as anchors are. With respect to this very ship, it is said that her former commanders, Captain Martin and Sir Henry Leeke, had each made application for the patent anchors, but without success, and here is the result of this very stupid mal-administration—a first-class man-of-war all but wrecked, and damaged to such an extent that a most serious outlay will be incurred for repairs.

This is a case which we would refer to Mr. Hume's most especial attention.

"PROPERTY has its duties as well as its rights;" and as the Legislature has overloaded our Statute Book with enactments enabling the possessors of landed property to enforce, by every conceivable summary method, every conceivable territorial right, it behoves that same Legislature to compel those to perform their duties to whom it has thus given almost arbitrary power for the enforcement of their rights, and at the same time to take care that those to whom this power has been given shall not, by the abuse of it, convert that which the Legislature intended merely as a defence for the rights of property, into an instrument of destruction of the lives and liberties of her Majesty's subjects. Our readers will perceive from the debates in the House of Commons on Friday, 24th ult., that a gross abuse of the rights of property has taken place in the county of Galway, upon the estate of a Mr. Blake. It appears that on the last day of the old year the agents of this gentleman ejected from their tenements certain poor cottiers, under circumstances of such wanton cruelty, that the Poor Law Commissioner felt it his duty to draw the attention of the Government to the subject. Major M'Kie was appointed to make enquiries into the matter, and in his report he says:—

"It would appear from the evidence recorded, that the forcible ejectments were illegal, that previous notices had not been served; and that the ejectments were perpetrated under circumstances of great cruelty. The time chosen was for the greater part nightfall on the eve of the new year. The occupiers were forced out of their houses with their helpless children, and left exposed to the cold in a bleak western shore in a stormy winter's night; that some of the children were sick, that the parents implored that they might not be exposed, and their houses left till the morning; that their prayers for mercy were vain, and that many of these have since died. I have visited the ruins of these huts (not any great distance from Mr. Blake's residence); I found that many of these unfortunate people were still living within the ruins of those huts, endeavouring to shelter themselves under a few sticks and sods, all in the most wretched state of destitution; many were so weak that they could scarcely stand when giving their evidence. The site of these ruins is a rocky wild spot, fit for nothing but a sheepwalk."

If a peasant snaps a hare, he may be transported for seven years; if a landlord causes the death of a peasant by illegally pulling down his house and exposing him to the rigours of a winter's night, that landlord cannot be punished, for the law officers of the Crown both in England and Ireland have been consulted on this matter, and they declare that they cannot advise any criminal prosecution against either Mr. Blake or his accessories, and that the only remedy is by civil action to be brought by those whom he has illegally ejected, to bring which action would require an outlay of at least £300. In the course of the debate, Sir Robert Peel said, "That these ejectments were illegal, is expressly stated in the report of this gentleman to the Commissioners. I know, however, that the law is powerless in procuring redress in such cases; but I know also, that the mere statement of the facts in the House of Commons, accompanied with the expression of such feelings as can alone be excited when such facts are narrated to us, will not be without its influence."

We cannot agree with Sir Robert Peel. The conscience of the man who could coolly plan such a proceeding is so utterly seared, that no expression of indignation unaccompanied by punishment will produce any effect upon him. Moral feeling he has none, and it is only by an appeal to his physical feelings, involving the infliction of pain or privation, that he can be prevented from the reperition of his offence. In November a Coercion Act was properly passed through Parliament to defend the Irish landlords from the murderous revenge of their exasperated tenants. Justice demands that such equal celerity a bill should now be passed to protect defenceless tenants from the equally murderous clearances of tyrannical landlords.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER Majesty's convalescence is so far re-established, that no more bulletins are issued. The Royal infant, too, is going on well.

On Saturday, his Royal Highness Prince Paul of Wurtemburg visited his Royal Highness Prince Albert, at Buckingham Palace: his Royal Highness was attended by Baron de Brunow, the Russian Minister. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen at Buckingham Palace. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice took their usual airings; and her Royal Highness the Princess Helena was taken an airing. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback attended by Col. Bouverie, equerry in waiting

On Sunday morning their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert and the Duchess of Kent, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household, attended divine service in the private chapel, in the Palace: the Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated. The Royal children took their accustomed airings. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent received her visitors.

On Monday her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen, at Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness the Prince of Prussia paid a visit to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, at Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness was introduced by Viscount Palmerston, and attended by his Excellency Chevalier Bunsen, the Prussian Minister. In the evening Prince Albert returned his Royal Highness's visit at the house of the Prussian Minister, in Carlton House Terrace. The Prince and Princess Augustus of Coburg and family left Buckingham Palace in the afternoon, for the Continent. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Mr. F. E. Anson, transacted business at the office of the Duchy of Cornwall, at Somerset House, in the course of the day. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, took walking and pony exercise, and her Royal Highness the Princess Helena was taken an airing

On Tuesday, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester visited the Queen at Buckingham Palace His Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, honoured the performance at Drury-lane Theatre with his presence in the private box of the Keeper Lady Lyndhurst, Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps, and Colonel Bouverie, were in attendance on the Royal party Her Royal Highness the Princess Helena was taken an airing. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent and his Royal Highness the Prince of Prussia dined with his Royal Highness Prince Albert at Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness the Prince of Prussia paid visits to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, at Clarence House, St. James's; to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, at Cambridge House; and to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, at Gloucester House. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, and his Serene Highness Prince Frederick of Anhalt visited the Prince of Prussia, on Monday evening, at the residence of the Prussian Minister, on Carlton House Terrace. Colonel K. Cannon, R.S.F., was presented by Viscount Palmerston to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, on Wednesday at the Levee, on being appointed a Knight Commander of Charles III.

On Wednesday, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen at Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, attended by Colonel Seymour, Equerry in Waiting. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, took their usual walking and pony exercise, and her Royal Highness the Princess Helena was taken an airing. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, at her residence, Clarence House, St. James's. His Royal Highness the Prince of Prussia, dined with their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, in the evening, at Cambridge House. A select party were present to meet his Royal Highness, including her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, her Royal Highness the Princess Augusta, his Serene Highness Prince Frederick of Hesse, the Marquis of Anglesey, Viscount Hardinge, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, Sir John Macdonald, and Colonel Chaplin.

ARRIVAL OF THE PRINCE OF PRUSSIA.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Prussia, brother of the King, and heir apparent to the Crown, arrived in London on Monday morning, via Hamburg, and alighted at the hotel of the Prussian Legation at Carlton-terrace.

His Royal Highness, we are given to understand, arrived here with a confidential mission from his Royal brother to her Majesty the Queen; and it is also stated that his Royal Highness was not (as some accounts had intimated) in any way connected with the fatal misunderstanding which caused the contest between the Guards and the people of Berlin on the afternoon of Saturday, the 18th ult. In consequence of the regulations made by the late King, in 1836, prohibiting past occurrences of such nature, the Royal Highness had on that occasion no commands to give to the troops, and gave none.

On accounts of any official or personal interference or collision of the Prince with the people in that deplorable struggle, or in the popular excitement which followed it, are declared to be devoid of the slightest foundation

Intelligence of the arrival of the Prince having got abroad, his Royal Highness received several complimentary visits during the afternoon from members of the corps diplomatique and others.

Viscount Hardinge was among the earliest to pay his respects to the illustrious Prince; but, owing to the absence of the Prince, the noble and gallant Viscount had not the honour of a personal interview.

Among the leading personages who called at the Legation, for the same purpose, were his Excellency the Austrian Ambassador, his Excellency the Russian Minister, his Excellency the Belgian Minister, his Excellency the Bavarian Minister, the Chargé d'Affaires of the Netherlands, Viscount Palmerston, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, Hon. Robert Dundas, and Mr. E. St. John Mildmay, Equerry to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

MARYLEBONE VESTRY.—On Saturday a large meeting of the vestry took place, the Rev. Dr. Spry in the chair. The first business was the adoption of a report from the vestry clerk, relative to the Government measure for the improvement of the health of towns. The committee stated that Lord Morpeth had consented to exclude the metropolis from its operation, and that a special bill upon the subject would be brought in for the City of London; that they were apprehensive that the objectionable principle of centralization, without regard to constituted local authorities, would be introduced, to which they strongly object on their own account, as tending only to increase the number of public officers, and the burdens of the rate-payers. The report also complained of the unjust operation of the present law of settlement, the effect of which had been to congregate large masses of the casual poor in the metropolis. The adoption of the report was carried unanimously. A resolution was next brought forward, and passed, to the effect, that the Government should be memorialized to afford greater protection against tumultuous assemblies and riotous mobs. The vestry clerk then read a report from the auditors of the baths and washhouses, explanatory of their accounts, and urging the vestry to assist the committee in providing a building worthy of so important a parish as that of Marylebone. An address to the Queen, congratulating her on the birth of a Princess, was unanimously adopted; and the vestry, having resolved to go into a discussion of the guardians of the poor (thirty), afterwards separated.

CITY OF LONDON COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS.—On Tuesday, a Court of Sewers was held at Guildhall, Dr. Reid, engineer and surveyor appointed to inquire into and report on the state of the City of London sewers not having yet had time to carry the objects of their appointment into effect, the proceedings were confined to the usual routine business, and nothing further transpired relative to the Public Health Bill. Mr. Godson begged to ask the chairman whether any pens had been taken by the committee to indicate gas companies to lower their prices, as he observed, by the printed returns, that the Pavements accounts that the gas lighting for the last three quarters amounted to the very large sum of £7782. (Hear, hear.) The chairman said, the question was under the consideration of the committee, but all the information which they could collect relative to the subject would be laid before them at their next meeting (Hear, hear.) A consolidated rate of sixpence in the pound was then made, and the Court broke up

BIRTHS AND DEATHS FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 25.—The number of births registered in the metropolis and suburbs during the week was 1364, of which 702 were males and 772 females. This number exceeds the births of the preceding week by 118. The deaths during the week numbered 1099, being eight less than the weekly average for the last five winters, and nineteen less than the number of the preceding week. Thus, also, the births this week exceed the deaths by 265. The meteorological report shows that the mean temperature of the week has been 39 degrees above the mean temperature of the corresponding week on an average of 25 years. The wind was variable in direction, and the sum of its horizontal movement at Greenwich was 1165 miles.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL has received the design of the new two-shilling piece from Mr. Wyon, and has submitted the same to her Majesty, who has been pleased to approve of it.

IMITATION CAMEOS.—In our notice of the Society of Arts' Exhibition, we intended to refer to Miss Nichols's fine specimens of Imitation Cameos, beautifully executed on ivory: they are Portraits of June, De la Roche, her Majesty and Prince Albert, and Mrs. Siddons.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

The Superannuation Fund Borough Bill passed through Committee, and was ordered to be read a third time on Monday

In reply to Lord Beaumont, the Marquis of Lansdowne, on the part of the Government, bore testimony to the exemplary manner in which the Catholic clergy of Ireland had exerted themselves to preserve the public peace; and Lord Stanley expressed great satisfaction at the announcement

The House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

Horsham Election.—The Earl of March moved that a writ be issued for the election of a member for this borough, in the room of Mr. J. Jervis, vacated on a charge of treating.—Mr. Hume moved, as an amendment, that the issuing of the writ be suspended.—After a short discussion, in which it was generally admitted that further inquiry into the state of the borough of Horsham was quite desirable, a writ was issued, the motion and amendment were both withdrawn, the understanding being that an investigation would be instituted on the subject.

Supply. The House then went into Committee of Supply, when Mr. Fox Maule brought forward the Army Estimates, several of which were voted, and the House adjourned.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE

M. de Girardin, the proprietor of the Presse newspaper, was near having his presses broken on Wednesday by the people, in consequence of his furious attacks upon the Government. The general belief is that he is a mere Carlist agent, and that his desire is to overthrow the Government, and open the way for such men as Ravigan and Raspail, which would be complete anarchy and civil war, the only hope now of the Carlists for their protégés, the Duke de Bordeaux. The disturbance in the manner of three thousand assailed his bureau, and had him in their possession. But he escaped without personal violence is due to the fact of his having expressed himself to them in words of much milder import than those with which his paper has teemed. General Courtais was of great use in putting down what was near becoming a serious riot. The mob was in possession of the offices of the Presse, and threatened to destroy all the machinery, a threat which they would probably have put in execution, but for the authority of General Courtais, and a body of National Guards who accompanied him, and who represented to the rioters, that by breaking the presses they would do more injury to the compositors in the office than to M. Emile de Girardin himself. On Thursday and Friday not a single Presse was to be seen in the streets of Paris. The clubs have given the mot d'ordre that it is not to be sold, and it has consequently disappeared

The deputation sent by the Irish Confederation to present an address of congratulation to the Provisional Government, was received on Friday, not on Saturday, at twelve o'clock. Mr. Smith O'Brien has received notice to that effect from M. de Lamartine

General Cavaignac has refused the Ministry of War, which has been offered to General Changrenier. The Provisional Government has ordered a civic guard of 1500 men to be organised for its own protection against the sankts of the clubs, many of whom are ci-devant police agents, and endeavoured to destroy at the machinery

REVOLUTION IN PRUSSIA.

CONFLICT BEFORE THE ROYAL PALACE, AT BERLIN.

IN OUR Journal of last week we noticed, though very briefly, the conflict between the troops and the people before the Royal Palace at Berlin, on the 18th ult. A Correspondent of the Times describes this as "one of the most terrible tragedies ever enacted."

The King, it appears, had acceded to the wishes of the people, and a proclamation was forthwith prepared and published. Nothing could exceed the joy of the people, and a large body of the most respectable burghers in Berlin proceeded to the Palace to thank his Majesty in their name. The military stationed there, perceiving the approach of a large crowd, endeavoured to oppose their further progress; whereupon several of the party stated that their intentions were pacific, and expressed great dissatisfaction at any opposition being offered to a peaceable expression of gratitude to the Sovereign for his timely concessions. At this moment, without any warning being given or any cause assigned, some evil genius prompted a regiment of cavalry to draw their sabres against the burghers. The intents of the peaceful, and most respectable classes of the mass of whom it was, beings. The peaceful citizens, seeing their friends and neighbours dead and dying, fled in all directions, carrying confusion and dismay into every part of the town. In an instant the whole population was on foot: "To arms! Revenge! Blood for blood!" were shouted on all sides: barricades were erected as by magic, and a state of excitement prevailed which no pen can describe.

The firing commenced at two P.M., and soon after became general through the town; the troops attacked the people indiscriminately, and cannon were brought to bear on the half-armed masses. A party of burghers got possession of two great guns, which they used against the troops, among whom they committed fearful havoc. The barricades were of enormous dimensions; waggons, trees, and stones from the ripped-up pavement were heaped together, and made an almost impassable barrier, behind which the people acted. In the Linden (the largest street in Berlin) there were seven or eight, all most formidable, and one quite gigantic in its proportions. This latter was attacked in the evening by a Prussian regiment, and was defended by an immense body of citizens; till by overwhelming rush, it was borne headlong on the soldiers, and citizens and military lay pell-mell among the ruins. Many of the latter were killed; the remainder, deprived of their weapons and disabled by their wounds, were in a few minutes despatched almost to a man, their arms being distributed among the burghers. No quarter was given, and the struggle, though fearful, was short. A regiment of Neufchâtel sharpshooters, towards evening, fraternised with the people, and from behind the barricades were of the greatest service against the military, directing their aim principally at the officers, many of which fell. In the course of the evening, the Princes rode through the streets, endeavouring to restore peace and quiet, but in vain. The Prince of Prussia was seized by the mob, and subjected to the greatest indignities. Until five in the morning did this fearful scene continue, the gutters literally running with blood. At five the firing ceased; order was in some degree restored, and every soldier compelled to quit the town, now guarded by the armed burghers.

In the early morning, several waggons were filled with the slain corpses and wounded bodies of the citizens of Berlin, which, preceded by an enormous mass of the burghers, were carried in funeral procession to the courtyard of the Palace. The King was loudly called for; he appeared on the balcony, was requested to descend to the courtyard, and, uncovered, to survey the fearful spectacle. Cries were raised for the Queen; and on his Majesty affirming she was so alarmed as to be ill in bed, such cries of despair were made to be repeated: the King then withdrew, and shortly afterwards returned, leading the Queen by the hand. Both were dressed as affected at the awful scene, which they gazed on for a few moments in solemn silence, after which the crowd peaceably dispersed, carrying with them the torn and bleeding remains of their friends and neighbours.

THE DEAD CARRIED BEFORE THE KING AND QUEEN

Such is the account of an eye-witness of one of the most dreadful catastrophes on record, which has consigned to an untimely end hundreds of Prussia's most faithful subjects. The most generally received opinion is, that the officers, enraged at seeing the day won by those whom they regarded as canaille, and with whom they have never had the slightest sympathy, refused to give credit to their peaceable intentions, and were glad of the opportunity of "shooting them down."

The crisis is, also, thus vividly described by L. Muhlbach:—"A bloody and unheard of fight commenced, spreading through all the streets, but having for its principal fields the streets in the neighbourhood of the royal Palace, the Breiten-strasse and the Königs-strasse, which are two of the most industrious and stricken-peopled streets of Berlin. The earth shook from the thunder of cannon. From three o'clock in the afternoon the fight raged everywhere. Every man capable of bearing arms was ready to work according to his strength and means, to stir up the people, to erect barricades, or to defend them with the arms at his command. Arms were wanting. But few favoured ones possessed them; the populace had nothing but the stones. With these they defended themselves; as women carried them to the spot in baskets; dragging them even with heroic courage and strength on the roofs of the houses. The tiles were torn off and pointed round the walls; behind them the women sheltered themselves, from time to time, as opportunity offered, sending down a volley on the heads of the soldiers. In the Königs-strasse and Breiten-strasse [illegible] vitriol were even used as means of defence against the soldiers. [illegible] powerful assailants, and strength, struck down all in their neighbourhood, [illegible] and [illegible] the barbarous spirit of centuries long passed seemed again to have resumed its place in the bosoms of the soldiers, in all its animal and brutal propensities. With a maddened desire for blood, they rushed at all, and spared none. Their blades were sharp, their muskets loaded, and their thoughts were blood. Old men, women, and children were torn from their beds, and carried away as prisoners, or, if they attempted to resist, were shot at once. It was no longer a fight, but a murder—a maddened, brutal power on the one side, and a heroically courageous defence on the other.

REVOLUTION IN PRUSSIA.

THE KING OF PRUSSIA IN THE STREETS OF BERLIN ON THE 21st.

"Suddenly a tremendous crying was heard spreading to the remotest corner of the town. The general commanding the troops, Von Möllendorff, was captured by the citizens, disarmed, and carried a prisoner into the house of the Burgschützen corps. The thunder of the guns and muskets ceased; a sort of cessation of hostilities ensued. The citizens here compelled General von Möllendorff to sign an order to such a purport. With this written order, and a white flag at their head, a deputation proceeded through the ranks of the soldiers to the Palace, and demanded an audience with the King. It was accorded them. With the all-powerful words of experience and conviction, they placed before his Majesty the heart-rending condition of his residence, and prayed him, of his own free will, for his own sake, to withdraw the troops. After a long debate, the King consented, and signed an order for the immediate departure of the troops." Then follows a fearful scene before the Palace next day:—

"One-and-twenty corpses, with their wounds open and uncovered, were carried to the Palace, and laid before the principal staircase. The scene, even in memory, causes shuddering and heart-rending. A holy but sorrowful silence pervaded the vast multitude. In silence they waited in patience, but no one came; then they cried, 'The King! the Queen [illegible]' and long waiting, they appeared. Hand in hand the Royal pair descended the staircase to the bloody corpses.

"'That is your work,' said one man: from thousands and hundred thousand throats the cry was repeated, all pointing to the corpses.

"Much shaken, and without the slightest appearance of firmness, the King stood by the side of his trembling Queen.

"'Off with your cap!' the people thundered.

"The king removed his cap."

Our Artist has illustrated this touching scene, as well as the conflict before the Palace, and the great Barricade in the Breiten-strasse.

"The number of troops was not less than twenty thousand, and not one regiment offered to fraternise with the people. About fourteen or fifteen hundred persons were killed in all, [illegible]. The number of wounded is not yet known. Several houses were set on fire during the night; the Royal foundry was also very much damaged by fire. Much damage has been done to the houses in the neighbourhood of the principal barricades; they show traces in many instances of a very severe conflict.

* * * * *

"On Monday morning, the King rode through the town, and, strange to say, he was well received! This sympathy, it is believed, was not quite general, and the King, it seemed, was aware of it. He is said to have almost lost his senses."

A second progress of the King through the city is thus described:—

"The King was continually kissing his hand and bowing from the carriage windows in answer to the affectionate greetings of his subjects. The people loudly testified their friendly disposition towards him, and openly declared that they, and not he, were alone responsible for what had occurred. [illegible] frequently inquired the names of those who made themselves conspicuous [illegible] and he granted pardon to many who [illegible]. He also made inquiries respecting the particular circumstances which had taken place at various parts of the city during the [illegible]. The [illegible] new ministers were also very flatteringly received by the populace, especially Schwerin and Bornemann. At two [illegible] points the King addressed the people: the cheering was universal."

The funerals of 187 persons who fell on the 18th ult., took place on Wednesday, the 22nd, and the solemn and holy ceremonial is thus described:—

"At twelve o'clock, the students assembled in the garden of the University, and formed themselves into sections according to the different parts of the town placed under their protection, and then marched in orderly procession, all armed with cavalry sabres or muskets, and preceded by the German national flag: they proceeded to the large open space in front of the Neuen Kirche, on the steps of which a platform, erected for the occasion, displayed to the general view the coffins containing the 187 heroes of the twelve hours between Saturday and Sunday. The church itself was covered with evergreens, and from the summit of the large pillars large flowing sheets of crape descended to the earth, waving mournfully to and fro in the gentlest of mild spring breezes. The open place in front was covered, so that nothing but a sea of heads was visible, with the different guilds of the town, the tradesmen and factory operatives all armed, and bearing their flags covered with crape. Every man was dressed in deep mourning; the national cockades were veiled with crape. When all were thus assembled, and silence was in some degree procured, the band of the opera played a solemn dirge. At its conclusion, Herr Sidon, the chief clergyman of the town, addressed the assembled multitude. He consoled with the families of the departed for the loss they had suffered, expressed the nation's regret at the death of so many patriots, and reminded them that no death could be more glorious than in fighting for the rights of humanity; and that death itself was but the transition from earthly to heavenly life. A Catholic priest succeeded him, and he in his turn was followed by a Jewish rabbi. And it was from the steps of a Protestant church that the ministers of these three religions addressed themselves, in consoling and affecting terms, to a mixed audience. Amid solemn silence the coffins were then raised one by one, and, carried by voluntary bearers, the procession advanced on its way, accompanied by most of the authorities of the town, Herr von Humboldt, and, I believe, some of the new Ministry. It proceeded through a short street to the Linden, across the King's-bridge, and round the Palace. Here, on the balcony, his Majesty was seen with Prince Carl and some of his Ministers. The armed citizens and students present were not less than 20,000, besides those who were on guard in all parts of the town. The streets were lined with the inhabitants—men, women, and children all in deep mourning, and many weeping bitter tears; but not a single policeman or gendarme was to be seen, and a more quiet and orderly populace was never known. There must have been between 200,000 and 300,000 persons in the streets. The procession occupied nearly three hours in passing the Palace, during the whole of which time the King was on the balcony, at one end of which was displayed a black flag, and at the other the national colours veiled with crape. When the procession arrived before the Königs Thor, the other end could hardly have left the market-place. It proceeded up the short ascent immediately on leaving the gate, and turning short to the right, entered a field, which is, perhaps, higher than any other spot in the neighbourhood. In the middle of this field a large circular hole had been dug, in the middle of which was a platform, on which stood the families and friends of the deceased, the clergymen, and other authorities of the town. Round this platform, and covered with evergreen wreaths, flowers, and coffins of holly, were placed the coffins. After a sort of funeral sermon and some sacred music, the assembled multitude was again addressed by several clergymen and others. All listened in solemn silence: the speaker being only now and then interrupted by a long-drawn heartfelt sigh from the breasts of the many thousands who surrounded the grave. The burgher corps of marksmen had the honour of firing several volleys over the grave of their departed brethren, and fellow-soldiers. And, after more sacred music, vocal and instrumental, the vast concourse peacefully separated."

SOLEMNITIES OVER THE DEAD BEFORE THE NEUEN KIRCHE, BERLIN.

The illustrations are from Drawings made by eminent Berlin Artists, who were eye-witnesses of the several scenes which they have painted.

The accompanying large illustration represents the touching solemnity opposite the Nelson Kirche, a noble edifice, surmounted with several fine statues.

The large Engraving upon the opposite page shows the Great Barricade in the Breiten-strasse, the scene so strikingly detailed in the preceding extracts.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR APRIL.

As this period of the year, which partakes alike of spring and winter, personages occupied alternately with country visits, and Longchamps—the three glorious Days of the Parisian Fashions. The season, it is true, has been interrupted by the great national event; but though less active, and less brilliant than usual, it is not entirely lost.

The ball toilettes for the present month continue as for the last three months. Longchamps this year will take place five weeks later than last; that is rather fortunate, as people will have time to recover themselves from the late excitement, the world of fashion will, it is hoped, resume its allurements.

But while awaiting this Longchamps, let us glance at the most distinguished fashions of the present day.

A great many "robes de Princesses" are now worn, which have the advantage of being equally new and graceful. Dresses with the bodice fastening to the skirt in the front without a seam, in the jacket style, are marvellously becoming to the figure. The fulness of the skirt only begins on the hips, which, we may say, tends imperceptibly to bring us back to the great dresses of "the Empire." Nearly all palisses have the bodice open all the way down, so to show a splendid chemisette, either of embroidery or lace.

A great many plaids are of light blue on dark chocolate; of crimson crossbars on a grey ground shot with white.

People are now leaving off furs and wearing cashmeres. Many Spanish cloaks of velvet, fanelle made of velvet, they are cut in the cross very full; they have a little collar brisé; they are trimmed with thick silver cord, or flat gimp, in the front; the gimp is put en Brandebourg: thus disposed, they are styled Monsieur Mesapatarre.

The shapes of the bonnets are not altered; however, they are lighter. Many are made of satin re-covered with lace. For morning dress, quilted bonnets are fashionable, having a fall; when thrown back and covers the plait; the only ornament is four pieces of cross-way velvet, which surround the crown at equal distances.

Embroidered muslin pelerines, trimmed with lace, have long and narrow lappets, which go round the waist and tie behind; they are open at the chest; they may be worn at small parties, and are called Charlotte Corday. They are also made of lace over net, and are very pretty.

Pocket-handkerchiefs have never been richer or more truly elegant than those worn this year. The handkerchiefs called Fleurs des Champs, surrounded with a wreath of red poppies, quilted coloured ground, embroidered in their natural colours, with a coloured festooning, are a superb novelty. Others have only a wreath of one of these flowers, and of a single shade. We have also seen very rich handkerchiefs, quite new and unworn, which nearly touches the centre; there scarcely remains a small plain space to show that it is a handkerchief.

Linen is made handsomer every day. Fine linen is a mark of elegance and excellent taste.

Birds of paradise are much in request at present for head-dresses; they are worn en plesseure on new coiffures, reminding us, to a certain degree, of those of the times of the Republic.

In powdered head-dress, the hair is taken up and frizzled from the roots with the greatest lightness; the upper part to form two twists; the curls behind the ears must be crossed, and the longest hang carelessly on the neck; three hind curls separated from a thick one which hangs down the neck, and the other two placed so that the knot differs in proportion; this coiffure pendre a Diane is ornamented with a bunch of gold thread or the tips of coloured feathers curled at the extremity.

Another head-dress has the front dressed in curled locks, mixed with a wreath of flowers; a long corkscrew curl hangs behind the ears; the back is dressed with three twists smooth, disposed like a Grecian cap. The front is dressed in little corkscrew curls, tightly rolled, and placed on two curls, and descending very low on the temples as far as the neck. The back of the head-dress is composed of three twists, one laced in the other in the form of a tresse. In evening or opera dresses, the lightest materials; amber crêpe lisse, spangled net, transparent gauze, do not appear too light or too elegant for these fanciful toilettes.

ODE BY BERANGER ON THE REVOLUTION OF FEBRUARY.

The Democratie Pacifique publishes the following Ode by Beranger, who is announced as one of the candidates for the deputation of the department of the Seine. It is addressed to Manuel, who dared to profess Republicanism even under the Restoration, but who died before 1830

BERANGER A' MANUEL.

O Manuel, la France s'est levée!
Sa liberté n'a plus un ennemi.
C'est bien ainsi que nous l'avions rêvée
Peuple géant qui n'est rien à demi!
Puisqu'il nous mène à la terre promise,
Dieu parmi nous aurait dû le laisser
Qu'avais-tu fait pour mourir en Moïse?
Mon pauvre ami, je voudrais t'embrasser.

Sortant vainqueur de ces luttes sublimes,
Tu penserais à mon tout petit con
C'est dans ces jours de fièvres magnanimes,
Que l'on de l'autre on a souvent besoin.
Longtemps muets, dans une étreinte unique,
Pua, refoulant nos pleurs dans un baiser,
Nous nous dirons, "Vive la République!"
Mon pauvre ami, je voudrais t'embrasser.

Le sait-on bien? Depuis qu'au Jeu-de-Paume
Sourvit l'époque où le peuple vainqueur
Baffling de leur beau royaume
Le monde entier, comme le sang au cœur,
Du livre de sa sagesse, sublime ou sage,
Où chaque lustre eut sa gloire à tracer,
Quarante-huit est la plus belle page!
Mon pauvre ami, je voudrais t'embrasser.

La royauté vécrifiait l'empire,
Et jetait l'ancre en ce sable mouvant;
Le fondre passe, et le trône chavire,
Et j'ai dressé ma frêle vêtement.
Mais je rétrouve une France féconde,
Qu'un noble sang vient de fertiliser;
Sol généreux, qui nourrin le monde!
Mon pauvre ami, je voudrais t'embrasser.

La République est grande, et sera stable,
Elle remplit nos vœux, mais je t'admais;
Je me souviens de ce temps terrible—
"Plaignons les morts, ils dorment à jamais!"
Dormir, hélas! quand la France se lève,
Lorsque, pour vaincre, et pour se surpasser,
Elle a besoin de l'esprit et du glaive,
Mon pauvre ami, je voudrais t'embrasser.

Gloire à toi, peuple, à tes succès rapides!
Je t'aime mieux lorsque je pense à toi,
Mes bras ouverts ne resteront pas vides
Tous les Français sont frères aujourd'hui
Vieillard courbé, quand tu courais aux armes,
Comme les morts, j'ai dû me reposer;
Mon sang est froid, mais j'ai de chaudes larmes,
Peuple Français, je voudrais t'embrasser!

Paris, le 1er Mars, 1848.]

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Administration of Oaths (Court of Chancery) Bill and the Queen's Prison Bill were read a third time.

After a short conversation relative to the delay in the delivery of the medals granted by the Queen to certain soldiers and sailors, their Lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

An unusual quantity of private business was transacted.

EXCISE PETITIONS.—A number were presented this session a Registration (Ireland) Bill, and a bill for the reform of the Irish Grand Jury system; but he could not name the precise time when they would be introduced.

On the order of the day, Mr. B. COCHRANE complained of a gross course of treatment to which a clerk of the London and Brighton Railway Company had been subjected, for a debt of £2, in the Clerkenwell prison.—Sir G. GREY said, the case was under investigation, and a report had been called for from the Visiting Justices.

THE INCOME TAX

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved the committal of the Income Tax Bill.

Mr. HUME moved, as an amendment, that the bill be referred to a select committee. As the Income Tax was evidently a permanent tax, some modification of its inequalities should be made.

Mr. ROBINSON seconded the amendment.

Sir R. INGLIS urged the justice of commencing the assessment at £150, leaving the first £150 of each man's income free from tax. He could not support the amendment.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, after the fullest consideration, did not believe that any modification of the mode of assessing the tax could be made that would not aggravate the irregularities at present complained of.

Mr. Clay, Mr. Thesiger, Mr. S. Crawford, Mr. Carter, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Newdegate, Mr. Horsman, Mr. Cardwell, Mr. Goulburn, and Mr. Anstey addressed the House, which then divided:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For referring the bill to a select committee | .. .. | 73 |
| Against it .. .. .. .. .. | | 284 |
| Majority .. .. | | 211 |

Mr. S. CRAWFORD moved the House on the original motion:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For committing the bill | .. .. .. | 328 |
| Against it .. .. .. | .. .. | 12 |
| Majority .. .. | .. .. | 311 |

The House then went into committee on the bill

On the first clause,

Mr. BERESFORD moved, as an amendment, to substitute the words "two years" for a "limited period," thereby limiting the continuance of the tax for two years instead of three, as proposed by the Government.

The amendment was negatived without a division, and the bill passed through Committee.

The report of the Committee of Supply was received.

The Stamp Duties Consolidation Bill passed through Committee.

The Insolvent Debtors (India) Bill was read a second time.

The Borough Police Superannuation Fund Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Leases of Mines (Ireland) Bill passed through Committee.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Royal assent was given by commission to the Passengers Bill, the Queen's Prison Bill, and some other bills, after which their Lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

A petition presented by Mr. Wakley from a clergyman, praying amongst other matters for Universal and Secret Suffrage, for the Appropriation of the Property of the Church, and for the Abolition of the House of Lords, led to some discussion.—Sir R. INGLIS objected to its reception, on the ground that the House of Lords would not receive a petition praying for the abolition of the House of Commons. Neither House of Parliament would receive a petition praying for the abolition of the monarchy, and they should likewise reject with contempt any petition praying for the abolition of either of the branches of the Legislature.

Mr. HUME contended that if petitions were respectfully worded they ought to be received.—Sir G. GREY would not object to the reception of the petition.—Mr. LABOUCHERE took the same view of the subject. Sir J. GRAHAM thought no petition should be laid on the table which prayed for the abolition of the fundamental institutions of the constitution.—Mr. BRIGHT contended that, as petitions were received which prayed for the exclusion of the Bishops from the House of Lords, they could not consistently reject the one under consideration.—After some observations from Mr. F. O'CONNOR and Mr. HUME, Mr. WAKLEY said, he did not agree in that portion of the petition which related to the abolition of the monarchy, but he thought that under our existing constitution the greatest extent of desirable liberty was enjoyed.—The petition was then received.

IRELAND.—Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL gave notice for Mr. J. O'Connell that he (Mr. J. O'Connell) would, on the 11th of April, move for leave to bring in a bill for a Repeal of the Legislative Union.—Sir G. GREY took an opportunity of stating the substance of a communication from the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland in reference to the late atrocious case of ejectment of tenantry in Galway. As soon as Major Mackie's report on the case had been laid before him, the Lord-Lieutenant submitted the whole circumstances to the law officers of the Crown, who gave their opinion that a criminal prosecution could not legally be instituted. The Lord Chancellor of Ireland also transmitted a statement of the case to Mr. Blake; an explanation was received, after a lengthened delay, but not being considered satisfactory, Mr. Blake's name had been struck off the commission of the peace. The right hon. baronet's statement seemed to afford the House great satisfaction.

THE GOVERNMENT RAILWAY BOARD

Mr. BANKES then proposed his motion, "That in the opinion of this House the powers, rights, and authority now vested by the act 9 and 10 Vict., c. 105, in the commissioners of railways, may be so regulated as to secure their efficient execution as a greatly diminished rate of charge to the public." The hon gentleman contended that the railway commission rested a commission without duties, no bill having been passed to prescribe or define its duties. The expense of the board for 1847 amounted to no less a sum than £17,000; this was by no means the whole of the expense to be incurred by the public on account of the superintendence of railways. They ought to have no difficulty in dealing with an experiment which had now existed for two years and a half, and which he had no hesitation in saying, after what had passed, had proved a signal failure. Two railway bills had been before the House, both recommended by the railway board, and both rejected by large majorities. It was clear, therefore, that the recommendation of that commission carried with it no warrant of authority in that House.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER gave a narrative of the steps which had led to the establishment of the board, and alluded to the recommendations of parliamentary committees on which it had been founded. The great object constituting the board had been to secure parliamentary responsibility. As the business of the board was increasing, he feared there was not much prospect of a reduction in its expense, which was of considerable amount. Whether the retirement of the present head of the department, he stated that it was not intended to fill up Mr. Strutt's place, but to appoint some member of the Board of Trade as unpaid commissioner, with a view to discover by experience whether it would be possible to carry on the business of the office under this arrangement. He trusted his honourable friend would be satisfied with this intimation, and with the assurance that, if it should be found upon the report of the Committee on the Miscellaneous estimates that reduction could be carried further, effect would be given to the recommendation.

Mr. HUDSON was of opinion that when the railway business was done by the Board of Trade, it had been much better and more efficiently done than by the commission. He looked upon commissions of this sort with disfavour; when once vested, the commissioners felt bound to do mischief rather than do nothing.

Mr. V. SMITH hoped that Parliament would not lose sight of the necessity of some more efficient control over the railway companies

Mr. GLADSTONE pointed out that, though new commissioners for railways had been appointed, no new correlative powers had been created by the House. The House had in fact declined to give new powers, though two bills had been submitted to them. On the whole he thought that the present system worked well that it was a sound and safe system. In 1847 Parliament had been disposed to pass for large additions to the powers of superintendence, but it was now clear that Parliament was disposed to maintain the present system, and he did not think it would now be prepared to give additional powers. Divided responsibility in cases of this kind was a great disadvantage to public offices. Unless it could be shown that the President and Vice-President of the Board of Trade were overburdened with Parliamentary business, their assumption of the functions of superintendence of railways would not be necessary. With one or two improvements he believed the business would be transacted to the entire satisfaction of the public

Mr. HUME had come to the conclusion that the Railway Department might now merge entirely in the Board of Trade

Mr. F. T. BARING could not help thinking that it had been a mistake originally to unite the Railway Department with the Board of Trade. He suggested that the constitution of the departments was defective, so far as related to the superintendence of public works, and that it would be a great improvement to create a new department which might look after all business of this kind, now distributed between the Woods and Forests, Tidal Harbour Commission, and Ordnance.

Sir J. GRAHAM enforced the economical view of the subject with great point and effect, and showed also that some degree of anarchy was insinuating itself into the departmental arrangements of the Government. He thought the Board of Trade competent to discharge all the duties of the Railway Commission. Unless he could secure a guarantee for economy, and if Government meant to adhere to the intention announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, he thought the resolution of the honourable member for Dorsetshire would be a salutary one for the House to affirm, and should think it his duty to give it his support

Mr. LABOUCHERE said his chief objection to the motion was, that it prejudged a question which the House, after a due interval for consideration, would be much better able to decide. He had learned from Mr. Strutt, that shortly after Easter a statement by the Railway Commissioners would be laid on the table, giving full details of the official duties of the board, as well as recommendations as to the course of legislation which ought to be followed. The right honourable gentleman animadverted on the disposition to find fault with what existed, and showed that the duties of the railway commission were in fact of a very onerous character, that it was vain to suppose they could be discharged by a few clerks at a cheap rate; and that they must be performed by men of high personal and professional character, to whom adequate remuneration must be given. He should propose to the House the previous question

After a debate which was very desultory in its scope, the House divided, when the previous question was carried by 166 to 56.

Mr. J. S. WORTLEY moved the second reading of the Election Recognizances Bill. Sir R. H. INGLIS moved as an amendment that the bill be read a second time that day six months. Considerable discussion ensued, after which the House divided, and the second reading of the bill was carried by a majority of 112 to 80.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon till six o'clock.

PRIVILEGE.—Mr. GOULBURN moved for the appointment of a Committee to inquire how the oaths ordered had been taken by members at the table of the House, and to report thereon. The right hon. gentleman said there was considerable doubt whether Mr. HAWES, who had been recently elected for the borough of Kinsale, was entitled to take his seat in the House. The hon. gentleman was elected on the 11th of the present month, and sworn in on the 14th, although the Clerk of the Crown had made no return of his having been elected until the 14th. This was most irregular, as there had been a double return, the member who was most active in reaching London might be sworn in as the sitting member. At the Crown Office there was no return of the hon. gentleman as member for Kinsale at the time he took the oaths at the table. It was true that when the hon. gentleman found this to be the case he had abstained from sitting and voting, although important matters were then pending; but still he thought the question ought to be referred to a Select Committee, that a rule might be laid down for the future regulation of the House.—Mr. HAWES would not oppose the motion, believing it to be one worthy of inquiry. For his own part, he thought he was bound to attend his duties in the House at the earliest possible period after his election, and he contended that his having done so did not invalidate his election, but, under the circumstances, he would withdraw while the question was under consideration. The hon. gentleman accordingly withdrew. Sir G. GREY thought there was no illegality in the course pursued, but, under all the circumstances, he thought a Committee should be appointed.—The motion was then agreed to.

ELECTION RECOGNIZANCE.—The Election Recognizances Bill, after considerable discussion and several divisions, passed through Committee. The Commons on the Roman Catholic Relief Bill was, after a short discussion, postponed until the 19th of April

FRAME-WORK KNITTERS.—Sir H. HALFORD moved for a Select Committee to take into consideration the report and the evidence laid before Parliament in 1844 by her Majesty's commissioner for inquiring into the condition of the frame-work knitters, and to make such further inquiries as may appear necessary, in order to ascertain whether any, and if any, what legislative measures can be devised for the relief of their long-continued distress. Mr. HUME opposed the motion, and his opposition was supported by Dr. BOWRING and other political economists.—Sir J. WALMESLEY supported the motion, as did also Mr. LEWDGATE, who strongly objected to leg-slating in such cases according to the abstract principles of political economy.—Mr. LABOUCHERE opposed the motion as calculated to encourage a dangerous and fallacious hope that it was impossible, by act of parliament, to strike at the root of the evils existing amongst the operatives in the manufacturing districts.—Mr. Packe, Mr. Gardner, and Colonel Sibthorp severally supported the motion; but, on a division, it was defeated by a majority of 85 to 41.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The Borough Police Superannuation Bill was read a second time.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE laid on the table the report of the Committee appointed to consider the propriety of altering the Poor-law Boundaries and the Electoral Divisions in Ireland.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH, pursuant to notice, called the attention of the House to the Abstract of the Annual Account of Increase and Diminution in the Number of Persons employed, and in Salaries, Emoluments, Allowances, and Expenses, in all Public Departments of the Government of the great increase which had taken place in the number of appointments since the present Ministry came into power.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE defended the Government generally; and Earl Grey, the Earl of Auckland, and the Marquis of Clanricarde explained the reasons of the increase in their respective departments; after which their Lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

New writs were ordered for Wicklow in the room of Colonel Acton, who had accepted the Chiltern Hundreds; and for Dorsetshire, in the room of Mr. Curteis, not duly elected. The House adjourned at half-past four o'clock, in consequence of the illness of the Speaker.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

We shall be all day retailing in this manner; do let us deal wholesale.—School for Scandal

THE week's sport—as regarded the turf—was confined to the meeting at Northampton, which was a very satisfactory one, inasmuch as the racing was good and ample, as also was the company; the weather, moreover, became the season. Next month we [illegible] not only a sporting but a busy one; rich in occasions of interest their shadows before—affording the curious means of gratifying their inquisitiveness, as well as supporting the deductions which many come of its indulgence. The Easter holidays bring about the especial time of industry for such as make books, the lore which of research to the odds and such like Olympic mysteries.

A new scene, or, rather, a new scheme, of operation has been opened, which offers great facilities for enterprise and great encouragement to speculation. The system of investing upon racing ventures through the medium of private "clubs," or "little pots," as they used to be called, has grown into a popular rage. Every town of any account has fifty of them—the metropolis as many thousands, probably—there is not a street without several. These furnish an enormous capital for the general purposes of betting, or, to speak plainly, "legging." They supply the bank for those who play in the Ring professionally. Your "City apprentice" draws Surplice in a Derby sweep. With the stock in trade he goes into the country to the races of Bumpton or Dumpton in "hedging," becomes knowing in lots, can afford to lay against Day or Scott, sets up a metallic pencil and frequents the parlour of the Flying Childers as regularly as those in "a draw." How does he find funds for all this?

It is some years since racing lotteries were introduced. Instead of a game at speculation, worked by means of an ordinary pack of cards, the new speculation is by the machinery tickets having the names of horses engaged in one or other of the leading stakes. Thus it remained—a harmless resource against a dull hour—till the vent went forth, "let us deal wholesale." So it is now played; and with an impunity which seems to depend upon individual caprice. The question was lately mooted at the City of London Sessions, when one civic authority stated his abhorrence of the practice, and another that it enjoyed his entire approbation, giving as one reason why he encouraged it that it kept people from worse was done elsewhere. To be sure this is doubtful logic, but our purpose is with the abstract fact. Is it the retirement of the former head of the department, he stated that it was not intended to fill up Mr. Strutt's place, but to appoint some member of the Board of Trade as unpaid commissioner, with a view to discover by experience whether it would be possible to carry on the business of the office under this arrangement. He trusted his honourable friend would be satisfied with this intimation, and with the assurance that, if it should be found upon the report of the Committee on the Miscellaneous estimates that reduction could be carried further, effect would be given to the recommendation.

Mr. HUDSON was of opinion that when the railway business was done by the Board of Trade, it had been much better and more efficiently done than by the commission. He looked upon commissions of this sort with disfavour; when once vested, the commissioners felt bound to do mischief rather than do nothing.

Mr. V. SMITH hoped that Parliament would not lose sight of the necessity of some more efficient control over the railway companies

Mr. GLADSTONE pointed out that, though new commissioners for railways had been appointed, no new correlative powers had been created by the House. The House had in fact declined to give new powers, though two bills had been submitted to them. On the whole he thought that the present system worked well that it was a sound and safe system. In 1847 Parliament had been disposed to pass for large additions to the powers of superintendence, but it was now clear that Parliament was disposed to maintain the present system, and he did not think it would now be prepared to give additional powers. Divided responsibility in cases of this kind was a great disadvantage to public offices. Unless it could be shown that the President and Vice-President of the Board of Trade were overburdened with Parliamentary business, their assumption of the functions of superintendence of railways would not be necessary. With one or two improvements he believed the business would be transacted to the entire satisfaction of the public

Mr. HUME had come to the conclusion that the Railway Department might now merge entirely in the Board of Trade

Mr. F. T. BARING could not help thinking that it had been a mistake originally to unite the Railway Department with the Board of Trade. He suggested that the constitution of the departments was defective, so far as related to the superintendence of public works, and that it would be a great improvement to create a new department which might look after all business of this kind, now distributed between the Woods and Forests, Tidal Harbour Commission, and Ordnance.

Sir J. GRAHAM enforced the economical view of the subject with great point and effect, and showed also that some degree of anarchy was insinuating itself into the departmental arrangements of the Government. He thought the Board of Trade competent to discharge all the duties of the Railway Commission. Unless he could secure a guarantee for economy, and if Government meant to adhere to the intention announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, he thought the resolution of the honourable member for Dorsetshire would be a salutary one for the House to affirm, and should think it his duty to give it his support

Mr. LABOUCHERE said his chief objection to the motion was, that it prejudged a question which the House, after a due interval for consideration, would be much better able to decide. He had learned from Mr. Strutt, that shortly after Easter a statement by the Railway Commissioners would be laid on the table, giving full details of the official duties of the board, as well as recommendations as to the course of legislation which ought to be followed. The right honourable gentleman animadverted on the disposition to find fault with what existed, and showed that the duties of the railway commission were in fact of a very onerous character, that it was vain to suppose they could be discharged by a few clerks at a cheap rate; and that they must be performed by men of high personal and professional character, to whom adequate remuneration must be given. He should propose to the House the previous question

After a debate which was very desultory in its scope, the House divided, when the previous question was carried by 166 to 56.

Mr. J. S. WORTLEY moved the second reading of the Election Recognizances Bill. Sir R. H. INGLIS moved as an amendment that the bill be read a second time that day six months. Considerable discussion ensued, after which the House divided, and the second reading of the bill was carried by a majority of 112 to 80.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon till six o'clock.

PRIVILEGE.—Mr. GOULBURN moved for the appointment of a Committee to inquire how the oaths ordered had been taken by members at the table of the House, and to report thereon. The right hon. gentleman said there was considerable doubt whether Mr. HAWES, who had been recently elected for the borough of Kinsale, was entitled to take his seat in the House. The hon. gentleman was elected on the 11th of the present month, and sworn in on the 14th, although the Clerk of the Crown had made no return of his having been elected until the 14th. This was most irregular, as there had been a double return, the member who was most active in reaching London might be sworn in as the sitting member. At the Crown Office there was no return of the hon. gentleman as member for Kinsale at the time he took the oaths at the table. It was true that when the hon. gentleman found this to be the case he had abstained from sitting and voting, although important matters were then pending; but still he thought the question ought to be referred to a Select Committee, that a rule might be laid down for the future regulation of the House.—Mr. HAWES would not oppose the motion, believing it to be one worthy of inquiry. For his own part, he thought he was bound to attend his duties in the House at the earliest possible period after his election, and he contended that his having done so did not invalidate his election, but, under the circumstances, he would withdraw while the question was under consideration. The hon. gentleman accordingly withdrew. Sir G. GREY thought there was no illegality in the course pursued, but, under all the circumstances, he thought a Committee should be appointed.—The motion was then agreed to.

ELECTION RECOGNIZANCE.—The Election Recognizances Bill, after considerable discussion and several divisions, passed through Committee. The Commons on the Roman Catholic Relief Bill was, after a short discussion, postponed until the 19th of April

FRAME-WORK KNITTERS.—Sir H. HALFORD moved for a Select Committee to take into consideration the report and the evidence laid before Parliament in 1844 by her Majesty's commissioner for inquiring into the condition of the frame-work knitters, and to make such further inquiries as may appear necessary, in order to ascertain whether any, and if any, what legislative measures can be devised for the relief of their long-continued distress. Mr. HUME opposed the motion, and his opposition was supported by Dr. BOWRING and other political economists.—Sir J. WALMESLEY supported the motion, as did also Mr. LEWDGATE, who strongly objected to leg-slating in such cases according to the abstract principles of political economy.—Mr. LABOUCHERE opposed the motion as calculated to encourage a dangerous and fallacious hope that it was impossible, by act of parliament, to strike at the root of the evils existing amongst the operatives in the manufacturing districts.—Mr. Packe, Mr. Gardner, and Colonel Sibthorp severally supported the motion; but, on a division, it was defeated by a majority of 85 to 41.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The Borough Police Superannuation Bill was read a second time.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE laid on the table the report of the Committee appointed to consider the propriety of altering the Poor-law Boundaries and the Electoral Divisions in Ireland.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH, pursuant to notice, called the attention of the House to the Abstract of the Annual Account of Increase and Diminution in the Number of Persons employed, and in Salaries, Emoluments, Allowances, and Expenses, in all Public Departments of the Government of the great increase which had taken place in the number of appointments since the present Ministry came into power.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE defended the Government generally; and Earl Grey, the Earl of Auckland, and the Marquis of Clanricarde explained the reasons of the increase in their respective departments; after which their Lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

New writs were ordered for Wicklow in the room of Colonel Acton, who had accepted the Chiltern Hundreds; and for Dorsetshire, in the room of Mr. Curteis, not duly elected. The House adjourned at half-past four o'clock, in consequence of the illness of the Speaker.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

We shall be all day retailing in this manner; do let us deal wholesale.—School for Scandal

THE week's sport—as regarded the turf—was confined to the meeting at Northampton, which was a very satisfactory one, inasmuch as the racing was good and ample, as also was the company; the weather, moreover, became the season. Next month we [illegible] not only a sporting but a busy one; rich in occasions of interest their shadows before—affording the curious means of gratifying their inquisitiveness, as well as supporting the deductions which many come of its indulgence. The Easter holidays bring about the especial time of industry for such as make books, the lore which of research to the odds and such like Olympic mysteries.

A new scene, or, rather, a new scheme, of operation has been opened, which offers great facilities for enterprise and great encouragement to speculation. The system of investing upon racing ventures through the medium of private "clubs," or "little pots," as they used to be called, has grown into a popular rage. Every town of any account has fifty of them—the metropolis as many thousands, probably—there is not a street without several. These furnish an enormous capital for the general purposes of betting, or, to speak plainly, "legging." They supply the bank for those who play in the Ring professionally. Your "City apprentice" draws Surplice in a Derby sweep. With the stock in trade he goes into the country to the races of Bumpton or Dumpton in "hedging," becomes knowing in lots, can afford to lay against Day or Scott, sets up a metallic pencil and frequents the parlour of the Flying Childers as regularly as those in "a draw." How does he find funds for all this?

It is some years since racing lotteries were introduced. Instead of a game at speculation, worked by means of an ordinary pack of cards, the new speculation is by the machinery tickets having the names of horses engaged in one or other of the leading stakes. Thus it remained—a harmless resource against a dull hour—till the vent went forth, "let us deal wholesale." So it is now played; and with an impunity which seems to depend upon individual caprice. The question was lately mooted at the City of London Sessions, when one civic authority stated his abhorrence of the practice, and another that it enjoyed his entire approbation, giving as one reason why he encouraged it that it kept people from worse was done elsewhere. To be sure this is doubtful logic, but our purpose is with the abstract fact. Is it the retirement of the former head of the department, he stated that it was not intended to fill up Mr. Strutt's place, but to appoint some member of the Board of Trade as unpaid commissioner, with a view to discover by experience whether it would be possible to carry on the business of the office under this arrangement. He trusted his honourable friend would be satisfied with this intimation, and with the assurance that, if it should be found upon the report of the Committee on the Miscellaneous estimates that reduction could be carried further, effect would be given to the recommendation.

Mr. HUDSON was of opinion that when the railway business was done by the Board of Trade, it had been much better and more efficiently done than by the commission. He looked upon commissions of this sort with disfavour; when once vested, the commissioners felt bound to do mischief rather than do nothing.

Mr. V. SMITH hoped that Parliament would not lose sight of the necessity of some more efficient control over the railway companies

Mr. GLADSTONE pointed out that, though new commissioners for railways had been appointed, no new correlative powers had been created by the House. The House had in fact declined to give new powers, though two bills had been submitted to them. On the whole he thought that the present system worked well that it was a sound and safe system. In 1847 Parliament had been disposed to pass for large additions to the powers of superintendence, but it was now clear that Parliament was disposed to maintain the present system, and he did not think it would now be prepared to give additional powers. Divided responsibility in cases of this kind was a great disadvantage to public offices. Unless it could be shown that the President and Vice-President of the Board of Trade were overburdened with Parliamentary business, their assumption of the functions of superintendence of railways would not be necessary. With one or two improvements he believed the business would be transacted to the entire satisfaction of the public

Mr. HUME had come to the conclusion that the Railway Department might now merge entirely in the Board of Trade

Mr. F. T. BARING could not help thinking that it had been a mistake originally to unite the Railway Department with the Board of Trade. He suggested that the constitution of the departments was defective, so far as related to the superintendence of public works, and that it would be a great improvement to create

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE STAKES
6 to 1 against Bellbrufid (t) | 6 to 1 against Doubleton | 12 to 1 against Thistledown
6 to 1 — Walmgate-Bar-Wilson (t) | 7 to 1 — Joe Lovell | 16 to 1 — Van Dyke (t)
10 to 1 — Ben Brace | 10 to 1 — Wildair | 20 to 1 — Prospero
METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.
7 to 1 against Dorothy | 10 to 1 against Marquis of Queensberry | 14 to 1 against [illegible]
9 to 1 — Saddler | 12 to 1 — Glen Saddle (t) | 16 to 1 — [illegible]
9 to 1 — Footbolder | 30 to 1 against Executor (t) | 20 to 1 — [illegible]
CHESTER CUP.
33 to 1 against Parfect (t) | 50 to 1 against Rufus (t) | 11 to 1 against Bee and Hetman Plat
33 to 1 — Enchanter (t) | 1000 to 15 — Malt (t) | 100 to 1 — The Parrot (t)
10 to 1 against Surplice (t) | 40 to 1 against [illegible] | 50 to 1 against Whitstone (t)
10 to 1 — Epsom Lass (t) | 40 to 1 — Pleasaunter | 50 to 1 — Excuse (t)
11 to 1 — Glendower | 50 to 1 — The Sheriff (t) | 50 to 1 — The Fowler
3000 to 25 against Beersellar (t)

TATTERSALL'S

MONDAY.—The Northamptonshire Handicap betting underwent a marked change this afternoon, Enchanter and Walmgate-Bar-Wilson coming so prominently into favour that it became a toss-up which of three was first favourite. Joe Lovell was also a great favourite, and Doubleton in request, but Wildair and Saddler were also in demand for the Metropolitan Handicap, and Parfect for the Chester Cup. Nothing very important in the Derby, but several hundreds had out on the two favourites, and left off so completely head and head, that it is impossible to say which had the call.

TUESDAY.—The Northamptonshire Handicap betting underwent a marked change this afternoon, Enchanter and Walmgate-Bar-Wilson coming so prominently into favour that it became a toss-up which of three was first favourite. Joe Lovell was also a great favourite, and Doubleton in request, but Wildair and Saddler were also in demand for the Metropolitan Handicap, and Parfect for the Chester Cup. Nothing very important in the Derby, but several hundreds had out on the two favourites, and left off so completely head and head, that it is impossible to say which had the call.

6 to 1 against Bellbrufid (t) | 6 to 1 against Doubleton | 12 to 1 against Thistledown
6 to 1 — Walmgate-Bar-Wilson (t) | 7 to 1 — Joe Lovell | 16 to 1 — Van Dyke (t)
10 to 1 — Ben Brace | 10 to 1 — Wildair | 20 to 1 — Prospero
METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.
7 to 1 against Dorothy | 10 to 1 against Marquis of Queensberry | 14 to 1 against [illegible]
9 to 1 — Saddler | 12 to 1 — Glen Saddle (t) | 16 to 1 — [illegible]
9 to 1 — Footbolder | 30 to 1 against Executor (t) | 20 to 1 — [illegible]
CHESTER CUP.
33 to 1 against Parfect (t) | 50 to 1 against Rufus (t) | 11 to 1 against Bee and Hetman Plat
33 to 1 — Enchanter (t) | 1000 to 15 — Malt (t) | 100 to 1 — The Parrot (t)
10 to 1 against Surplice (t) | 40 to 1 against [illegible] | 50 to 1 against Whitstone (t)
10 to 1 — Epsom Lass (t) | 40 to 1 — Pleasaunter | 50 to 1 — Excuse (t)
11 to 1 — Glendower | 50 to 1 — The Sheriff (t) | 50 to 1 — The Fowler
3000 to 25 against Beersellar (t)

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

"J. T. C." White can have no difficulty whatever in winning from the position you send; it is merely a question of time. We do not think there is anything in the situation, therefore, to warrant its publication. The former Problem shall appear immediately.

"E. S. A." In your last game, if White for his second move play R to Q 3d, we cannot see how the mate will be avoided in two or three moves.

"Piper."—No. 1, of your Enigmas is wrong. No. 2 is right, but a very old principle. No. 3, a bad position, and admitting of too easy solution. No 4 is tolerable, and, when we have a little more room, it shall have a niche in our column.

"Anserine"—The President of the London Chess Club is A Mongrelton, Esq

"Woodstockensis," No. 2 is neat, but the principle has been worn thread-bare since the Indian Problem was brought into vogue. No. 3 we like, and if upon re-examination no fault is found, it shall appear. Your other problem

"W. L."—You are wrong both as regards Problem and game. Look again at them before consulting our solutions. The two positions you have sent, numbered 419 and 425, are not without merit. They shall appear anon.

"H. W. L." The initial "L." in our Chess notation, stands for "Rook," the proper name for the Castle or Tower. Staunton's "Young Chess Player's Manual" is published by Bogue, of Fleet-street.

"W. J. S."—R to Q Kt's 8th, not K. The Problem is quite right

Solutions by "Sopracrito," "A. B.," "Mon. Ermin," "F. G. D.," "P. H. T.," "R. R." "Miles," "G. T. Y." "Woodstockensis," "F. I.," "H. T. M.," are correct

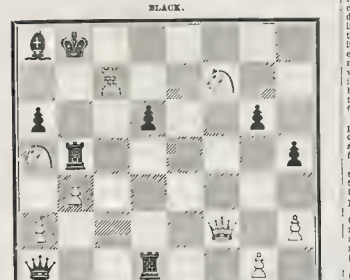
 The pressure of political intelligence compels us to defer replying to many communications this week.

 At the request of several Correspondents we shall withhold the solution of Mr. Stanley's capital Problem, No. 218, until next week

PROBLEM, No. 219.
By C. E. R.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to mate in five moves.

CHESS IN GERMANY.

The opportune arrival of the March number of the Berliner Schachzeitung enables us to continue the games of the highly interesting match between Messrs. Harrwitz and Anderssen of Breslau.

ALLGAIER GAMBIT, IN WHICH MR. HARRWITZ PLAYS WITHOUT SEEING THE BOARD.

| WHITE (Mr. H.) | BLACK (Mr. A.) | WHITE (Mr. H.) | BLACK (Mr. A.) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 P to K 4th | P to K 4th | 20. Q Kt to K 8th 3d (d) | B takes K at |
| 2 P to K B 4th | P takes P | 21. Q takes B | R to his sq |
| 3. K Kt to B 3d | P to K Kt 4th | 22 Q to B 5th (ch), | c K to Kt sq |
| 4. P to Kt 4th | P to K Kt 5th | 23. K B takes P | R takes R |
| 5. Kt to K 5th | P to K R 4th | 24. R takes R | Kt to B 3d (f) |
| 6. K B to Q B 4th | R to K R 3d | 25 Q to K Kt 5th | K Kt to his sq |
| 7. Q to Kt 3d | P to K B 6th | 26. Q takes P | P takes P |
| 8. P takes P (a) | P to Q 3d | 27. R to K sq | K Kt to B 3d |
| 9 Kt to Q 3d | K B to K 3d | 28. Q to K B 5th | K Kt takes Q P |
| 10. Q B to K Kt 5th | B takes B | 29. R takes P (g) | Kt to K 6th (h) |
| 11. P takes B | Q takes P | 30. Q to K R 5th | Q to Q 3d |
| 12. P to K B 4th (b) | Q to K 2nd | 31. B to Q 8th | Q Kt takes B |
| 13. Q Kt to B 3d | Q B to K 3d | 32. Kt to K 4th | Q to Q B 3d |
| 14. P to Q 5th | B to his sq | 33. P to Q Kt 3d | Q Kt takes K B P |
| 15. Q to K 2d | Q Kt to Q 2d | 34. Q to Q B 3d | Q Kt to Q 6th (ch) |
| 16. Castles (on Q side) | Q Kt to his 3d | 35. K to Kt sq | Kt takes R |
| 17. B to Q Kt 3d | Q B to Q 2d | 36. Q takes K Kt | P to K B 4th |
| 18. P to K 5th | Castles | 37. Kt to Q 2d | Kt to Q B 5th |
| 19. Q Kt to K 4th (c) | B to K B 4th | 38. Kt takes Kt | Q takes Kt (i) and wins |

NOTES BY THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

(a) This move is not thought so safe for White as P to K Kt 3rd.

(b) White establishes a strong army of Pawns in the centre, but in return he leaves his opponent two troublesome passed Pawns

(c) White has contrived to bring all his pieces into play in a manner that fully compensates the loss the P.

(d) By this move he secures at least the winning of one of Black's passed Pawns, and has unquestionably the advantage of position.

(e) If instead of so playing he had moved the Kt to K B 5th, and then taken Q P with P, he would have had no overpowering attack, as Black could not retake the P with P without letting the K Rook and afterwards the P at K B 4th.

(f) Ingenious, but unsound. From this point White, with common care, ought to have won.

(g) A serious mistake. With the board before him Mr. H. would simply have taken P with P, and still have retained the advantage of attack

(h) A very pretty move, and one which decidedly changes the whole aspect of the battle.

(i) He has no other resource

(k) Q to K R 6th would have been more conclusive, and in better style.

| WHITE (Mr. A.) | BLACK (Mr. H.) | WHITE (Mr. A.) | BLACK (Mr. H.) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. P to K 4th | P to K 4th | 20. K R to K sq | Q B to K 3d |
| 2. K Kt to B 3d | Q Kt to B 3d | 21. Q to K 3d | Q to K sq |
| 3. P to Q 4th | P takes P | 22. Q R to his 3d | B to K R 4th |
| 4. K B to Q B 4th | K B to Q B 4th | 23. P to Q B 5th (d) | P to Q B 3d |
| 5. P to Q B 3d | K Kt to B 3d | 24. Q R takes P | R takes R |
| 6. P to K 5th | P to Q 4th | 25. Kt takes R | Q to her B sq |
| 7. B to Q Kt 5th | K Kt to K 5th | 26. Kt to B 3d | B to K 3d (e) |
| 8. P takes P (a) | B checks | 27. P to Q R 4th | P to K Kt 4th |
| 9. B to Q 3d | B takes B (ch) | 28. P to Q R 5th | R to K sq |
| 10. Q Kt takes B | Castles | 29. P to Q B 6th | Q to Kt sq |
| 11. B takes Kt | P takes B | 30. R to Q R sq | Q to R 2d |
| 12. Castles | P to K B 4th | 31. Q to her Kt 4th | K to R 2d |
| 13. R to Q B sq | Q to K sq | 32. Q to Kt 7th | Q to her Kt 3d |
| 14. Q to Q B 2d | Q R to Kt sq | 33. Q R to Q 7th | Q takes Q |
| 15. Q Kt to his 3d | Q R to K B 4th | 34. Kt takes Q | R to Q R sq |
| 16. K Kt to Q 5th | Q Kt to K 4th | 35. K to Q 4th (ch) | K to his 2d |
| 17. P to K B 3d | Kt takes Kt | 36. Kt takes B | K takes Kt |
| 18. Q takes Kt | P to K B 5th (b) | 37. P to Q Kt 4th | |
| 19. Kt to B 6th | Q to K Kt 3d (c) | And wins. | |

(a) P to Q Kt 4th first, and then P takes P, prevents the adverse Bishop checking and keeps it out of play, but is subject to White to an embarrassment from the advance of the K B Pawn if Pawn afterwards.

(b) This is well played. It confines White's game, and stays the advance of his K B Pawn

(c) Black should have followed up the game with P to K 6th

(d) If he had taken the Q P, Black would have moved Q to Q Kt sq

(e) Mr Harrwitz is not himself in this game. He loses time, and seems to have no fixed object in his moves

IN THE MATCH BETWEEN HERR HARRWITZ AND HERR ANDERSSEN, OF BRESLAU.

| WHITE (Herr H.) | BLACK (Herr A.) | WHITE (Herr H.) | BLACK (Herr A.) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 P to K 4th | P to K 4th | 11. B to K Kt 5th | P to K B 4th |
| 2 P to K B 4th | P takes P | 12. P takes P | P takes P |
| 3 B to Q B 4th | Q checks | 13. Kt to K 5th (a) | Castles |
| 4 K to B sq | B to Q B 4th | 14. Q takes Kt | P takes B (discovering ch) |
| 5. P to Q 4th | B to Q Kt 3d | | |
| 6. Kt to K B 3d | Q to K 2d | 15. Kt to K B 6th (double ch) | K to Kt 2d |
| 7. Q Kt to B 3d | K Kt to B 3d | 16 Q takes K R P | |
| 8. P to K 5th | Kt to K R 4th | (ch) | K takes Kt |
| 9. Q Kt to Q 5th | Q to her sq | 17. Kt Mates. | |
| 10. P to K Kt 4th | P takes P (in passing) | | |

(a) This is not so decisive as—12. Q to K 3d (ch) In that case, Black, for his best, would move—12 K to B sq, upon which the following variations occur:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 13. Q to K 3d (ch) | K to B sq | 14 Q Kt takes K B P |
| If, instead of this, Black take Kt with Kt, he is mated on the move. | | |
| 13. B to K 3 6th (ch) | Kt to Kt 3d | 14. B takes Kt, and wins. |

CHESS ENIGMAS.

For the two following beautiful Enigmas we are indebted to the Berliner Schachzeitung.

No. 222.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at his K sq | K at Q 5th | Ps at K 4th and 2d, | K B 3d, K 4th, Q 5th, Q B 6th, and Q R 2d |
| Q at K B 2d | Q at her K 3d | | |
| Kts at K Kt 3d and Q 3d | Rs at K R 4th and Q Kt sq | | |
| | Kt at Q Kt 6th | | |

White to play and mate in four moves

No. 223

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at Q sq | K at Q 5th | Kts at K 3d and Q B 3d | |
| B at Q 6th | | P at Q 2d | |

White to play and mate in five moves.

No. 224 By Mr. J. R. EDNEY.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at his B sq | K at his R 2d | Q Kt 2d | Kt at K B 7th |
| Q at her 4th | Q at her B 4th | Ps at K 4th and Q 3d | |
| Bs at Q B 6th and | Rs at K R 3d | White to play and mate in 4 moves. | |

MUSIC

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The scheme for the second Concert on Monday opened with Mozart's Symphony No 6, known by the title of "Jupiter," a name given on account of its overwhelming grandeur. The interpretation from the vigorous allegro in C to the delicious andante cantabile in F, the vivacious minuetto and trio, and sublime final movement and its wonderfully contrived fugue with three subjects, was a continued triumph to the band and its energetic conductor. Every nuance was rendered with delicacy and poetical feeling; and such was the excitement at the close, that an encore was demanded for the finale, which Mr. Costa prudently declined, considering the labour of the night's programme. Molique's Concerto in D, No. 4, Op. 14, created a powerful sensation. The presence of the distinguished Composer and Violinist, to play his own work, added naturally to the intrinsic interest of a very beautiful composition. He was applauded to the very echo, both for his Concerto and for his highly finished execution. It is in three movements—the first a bold and striking introduction announcing his theme, which he illustrated with the usual soli; the second, a most enchanting romance in B minor—a kind of passionate lament in which exquisite use is made of the bassoon; and the third, a gay and spirited allegro, the model of which is suggestive of Spohr and Mayseder, but the orchestral colouring of which is remarkable for elegance and originality.

In Molique's playing we are not startled by his warmth and force, but we are pleased by his silvery tone, and the ease with which he triumphs over the most complicated difficulties. Molique is chapel-master to the King of Wurtemburg, and is famed in Germany not only for his varied instrumental pieces, but also for a series of most charming ballads.

Mendelssohn's overture, "The Isles of Fingal," an attempt to describe the stormy attributes of the Hebrides, although stamped with the original characteristics of his imagination, we do not regard as one of his happiest imaginings; but it was superbly played, the restless changes being marked with kindred poetical feeling.

Beethoven's glorious Symphony in B flat, No. 4, was the opening piece of the second act. The lovely adagio was poured forth with impassioned sentiment, and in the concluding allegro the climax of orchestral perfection was attained, so as to command the unanimous suffrages of the amateurs Rossini's military overture of "The Siege of Corinth," with its intricate violin passages, completed a most interesting Concert.

The vocal pieces comprised Mdme. Persiani's accomplished vocalisation in the air of "Mathilde," from Rossini's "Guillaume Tell;" "Sombre forêt," which she sang in Italian; Mozart's "Dove sono," from the "Marriage of Figaro;" Miss Dolby's singing of Mozart's "Al desio," and the coalition of these two vocalists in the "Quis est homo" duo, from Rossini's "Stabat Mater." The third concert will be on the 10th of April. Mr. Henry Blagrove was the first violin on Monday, Sainton having generously consented, although he was engaged as successor to the late T. Cooke, to share the position with Blagrove alternately

THE MUSICAL UNION.

The first meeting of the fourth season took place on Tuesday afternoon at Wills's Rooms. The programme comprised Haydn's Quartet in D, No. 79; Schumann's Pianoforte Quartet, Op. 47; and Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat, Op. 12. M. Sainton was the first violin, M. Deloffre the second violin, Mr. Hill, the viola, and Signor Piatti the violoncello. Herr Roeckel, a nephew of Himmel, was the pianist. The novelty in the scheme was Schumann's Work. He is known in Germany as the composer of forty-seven compositions, and as a celebrated critic. He is the husband of the famed pianist, Clara Wieck, who has performed the present quartet in Leipsic, Dresden, and Berlin with great success. We agree with Mr. Ella, in his Record, that it is entitled to the claim of great excellence, for the richness of the harmonies, the classical beauty of its scoring, and orthodox development of its motivi. After a spirited allegro, there is an original scherzo, followed by an andante cantabile, in which a beautiful theme, harmonies, and classical beauty of its scoring, and orthodox development of its motivi. may be designated as a little extravagant: the finale will be found to be rich in imitative and fugal writing, in which the pianist's powers are fully tested, the tenor having the lead in the fugal portion. The composer is not only entitled to eulogium, the Canzonetta in G minor in Mendelssohn's splendid work calling forth an encore. The room was filled with distinguished amateurs and artists; amongst the latter were Berlioz, Molique, Emile Prudent, &c.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

On Wednesday night, a crowded audience assembled at Exeter Hall, to hear Handel's "Jettingen Te Deum," and Mendelssohn's sacred cantata, "The Hymn of Praise," with a selection from Handel's "Theodora" and "Redemption." The conductor was Mr. Perry, and Mr Miller presided at the organ; but the performance was by no means creditable, especially in Mendelssohn's work, which was very indifferently treated, some portions being a regular scramble between band and chorus. To add to the disasters, Mr Hobbs was suffering from cold, and was unable to sing his solos, which were taken at sight by Miss Birch and Miss P. Horton. In "Lord Remember David," as no apology had been made, Mr Hobbs was visited with signs of disapprobation. The début of Miss P. Horton at those concerts is a trying air from "Theodora," was quite successful. Her voice is a mezzo soprano of excellent quality. Mr. Hill, a counter tenor, made a favourable impression, although the practice of men singing contralto solos is becoming unpopular. Mr. H. Phillips was the bass. Mendelssohn's "Elijah" is announced for the 12th inst.

CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE CONCERTS.

Mr. W. Sterndale Bennett's third and last classical pianoforte concert was given on Tuesday night, when Herr Molique played Bach's Sonata in E Major, and Beethoven's Sonata in G Major, with Mr. Bennett, with classical taste. Mr. Bennett was encored in the "Fountain," one of three charming musical sketches. Miss Dolby was similarly complimented in Mr. Bennett's song "A Young Highland Rover." Miss Ransford sang with artistical feeling two airs by Cursbman and Mendelssohn.

MISS LUCAS'S CONCERT.

Miss Messent O'Connor's Concert.—On Tuesday night this popular vocalist gave a Concert at the Princess' Rooms. The following pieces were enthusiastically encored:—Prech's "Alpine Horn," with Distin's Sax-Tuba Obligato, sung by Miss M. O'Connor; Balfe's scena, "All is lost," played by Distin on the alto-sax-horn. Dr. Arne's "Soldier Tired," wonderfully played on the trumpet, by Distin, sour Lonley's pretty ballad, "The Swiss Girl," sung by Miss S. Flower. Balfe's "Sentinel," sung by Weiss. Macfarren's "Gentle Words," sung by Miss M. O'Connor; and the Historical Romance, "King Alfred," given with much humour by Mr. John Parry, who also sung "Miss Harriet and her Governess." Mr. F. Chatterton played a Harp Solo, and Mr. J. Cooke an Oboe Fantasia. Mrs. Weiss sung very nicely W. Maynard's clever song, "Leonene," and the Misses Pyne contributed their agreeable duos. Mr. J. L. Hatton and Mr. J. Wily were the accompanists.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.—

It is highly creditable to the aristocratic amateurs of this society, that they have accepted and performed an MS. symphony by a young English composer, Mr. Henry Leslie, the honorary secretary. We on other occasions had to report favourably of his talents both in instrumental and vocal composition, but now he has taken a higher flight in essaying the most difficult task in a composer's career—that of producing a symphony, which is the loftiest order of inspiration. Mr. Henry Leslie has proved himself to be a thorough musician: his symphony opening with an adagio in F, leading to the theme of a spirited allegro in the same key, is succeeded by an andante religioso in A major, and followed by a very animated scherzo in D minor, which was encored, the whole winding up with a finale in F, the theme in which was well contrived and sustained. Mr. Lucas conducted the band, which took especial pains in the interpretation of the symphony, that was, throughout the movements, deservedly applauded.

MR. LUCAS'S MUSICAL EVENINGS.—

The second performance, on Wednesday night, was attended by a distinguished circle of amateurs. Mendelssohn's Quartet in D, led by Sainton, Haydn's Quartet in G, No. 44, led by Blagrove, and Beethoven's Quartet in E Minor, led by Sainton (the second of an Rasoumofsky set), with Hill as tenor, and Lucas as violoncello, were finely executed Beethoven's Sonata in A, for piano and violoncello, was admirably performed by Mrs. Anderson and Mr. Lucas.

THE MELODISTS' CLUB.—

There was a good attendance of the members and their friends, at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Tuesday night: the conversazione, Goldsmid, Esq., in the chair. "Non nobis Domine" was sung by Messrs. Barnby, Benson, Blewitt, Lockey, Howe, H. Gear, Wrighton Parry, John Parry, King, Templeton, E. Taylor, and Machin. Bishop's glee, "Care thou Monarch of the Vine," was encored. H. Blagrove played a violin fantasia on the air "In vedrai:" and Mr. R. Burnett a pianoforte solo.

Mdlle. Clara Loveday, the eminent pianista of Paris intends visiting London this season, and will arrive in the course of a few days.

Mr. Love, the original polyphonist, has reappeared, with his entertainment—which really deserves the name—at Crosby Hall, and with his usual success.

The rapidity of his changes, and the different aspects under which he appears, is really marvellous, whilst his imitations of sounds emitted by inorganic bodies is as curious as the almost supernatural manner in which he contrives to send his own voice to all sorts of remote localities. We shall take the earliest opportunity of detailing his performances; in the mean time we can assure our readers, that if they pay Mr. Love a visit, they will be well amused.

MUSIC FOR THE WEEK. On Monday, rehearsal of Ancient Concert, and in the evening the second meeting of the Beethoven Quartet Society. On Wednesday the second concert of Ancient Music at the Hanover-square Rooms. On Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, Italian Opera at her Majesty's Theatre and at the Royal Italian Theatre.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.—The Théâtre Italien in Paris was to close last night (Friday) with Mario's benefit, when Rossini's "Otello" was to be performed with Grisi, Ronconi, and Lablache. This morning, Grisi, Mario, Signor and Mdme. Ronconi were to leave for the Royal Italian Opera season in London, and Lablache for Her Majesty's Theatre. Rovere, the buffo comico, had quitted Barcelona, on his way to London. All concerts in Paris are at a complete standstill. The run of Auber's "Haydée" had been interrupted by Roger's departure for London. His re-appearance was expected on the 3rd instant.

The Annual Ball in aid of the funds of the Metropolitan Ear Institution takes place on Monday, at the Hanover-square Rooms, under very distinguished patronage. As an admirable charity, the establishment deserves all support; and, as the admission is only to be obtained by the vouchers of the stewards, the ball will be as select as a large private party

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

"Nino" was re-produced at this theatre on Saturday last. The more we hear this opera, the more convinced we are that Verdi's genius has here reached the highest point to which it can attain. The splendid harmonies and dramatic effects, and the no less varied and delightful melodies with which the opera abounds, entitle it to a place among the works of the greatest masters. Its performance on Saturday was extremely brilliant, although there was one drawback, caused by the exceeding and unprecedented panic of terror which had seized Madame Abbadie, the prima donna—a panic the more extraordinary, as, whatever be her powers now, she once was (and she is very young) one of the sweetest and most promising artists of Italy. Genius she unquestionably has; but as to her voice, it was quite impossible to judge of it on Saturday night, and the effect produced by it under the circumstances was far from favourable. We think it impossible hers can now be the glorious voice which, from the description of those who heard her in Italy, it was at the beginning of her short career; at the same time, she no doubt can and will sing in a far different and superior style when unaffrighted by the fears with which the sight of a London audience had inspired her. In person and manner she is most interesting; and all she does bears the stamp of deep feeling and natural refinement, although her action is a most too energetic for the voice she now possesses

The other debutante, Mdlle Vera, achieved a decided success in the pretty little part of Fenena. Her last song was loudly encored, although she, too, was dreadfully frightened. Her voice is a mezzo soprano, with fine low notes, and, in fact, powerful throughout; and it proved very effective in the concerted pieces. Colett's Nino is well known to the opera votaries; and he sang with his usual grandeur and breadth of style. But one of the most interesting features of the evening's performance was Belletti's Grotesque This part, hitherto a merely secondary one, by the force of genius Belletti renders one of the most important in the opera. His singing throughout can hardly be too highly praised, and created great enthusiasm. He obtained an encore for an aria in the second act, which is usually omitted, and which he sang with a flowing ease and purity of style which alone would stamp him one of the best singers of the day. His is the singing of a man equally versed in the science and the poetry of his art, and whose physical gifts and mere mechanical skill keep pace with his genius

On Tuesday "I Due Foscari" was repeated, and here Mdlle. Cruvelli and Coletti both sustained the success which they last week obtained in this fine opera. The principal burden of the performance, however, rests upon the latter, whose final scena never fails to elicit the same enthusiasm. It is, indeed, a marvellous performance, both in a musical and dramatic point of view, and it is in the latter, especially, that he enlists the sympathies of his audience, and would even awaken emotion in the heart of the unhappy man "who hath no music in his soul."

The favourite opera "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" was performed on Thursday night, and went off with the greatest éclat. Mdlle. Cruvelli was encored in the first movement of "Una voce;" and the trio in the second act was also encored, having been sung by Gardoni, Mdlle. Cruvelli, and Belletti, with the greatest effect. The boxes were crowded by the principal nobility in town After the opera, the National Anthem was sung by the whole strength of the company, Gardoni singing the first verse, and Cruvelli the last. Every sentence was received by the audience with the greatest enthusiasm; and the most fervent applause resounded on all sides, which was continued until Mdlle. Cruvelli retreated the third verse, which was responded to with, if possible, increased fervour. We never recollect to have witnessed such a thorough demonstration of loyalty. The performances were for the benefit of the distressed artisans of London.

DRURY-LANE.

This theatre is nightly crowded with rank and fashion; and the morning performance on Tuesday was honored by the presence of the Royal children.

The Grand Morning Performance on Tuesday was honoured by the presence of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and Princess Alice, their Royal Highnesses Princess Royal and the Princess Alice, attended by the Dowager Lady Lyttleton, Miss Hilyard, the Hon. Colonel Bouverie, and the Hon. Colonel Phipps. The Royal party was received by Mr. Doyle, Mr. Chapple, and the Lessee and Manager, Mr. Eugene Macarthy

The two sisters, Palmyre and Marie Anato, with the graceful Caroline, are the "stars" of the arena. The youngest of these is an exquisite little dancer; and her performance of the "Mazurka," with castanets, is loudly encored; whilst Palmyre, in addition to being an exceedingly pretty girl, shows a graceful daring on horseback, and a certainty in accomplishing her feats, which ensures her every night a hearty recognition. We saw her leap through forty hoops at circles in succession the other evening, always coming down safely on the saddle. Carolina's performance is well known; she rides as the unrivalled queen of the manege

The audience, at first, scarcely entered into Auriol's quiet fun; but now they enjoy him immensely. And there is an enormous deal of humour in the whims of Leclair, who is eagerly looked for every evening. The way in which he tumbles his assistants about is highly diverting. But the pony race of the monkeys is the funniest affair of the programme. Laughter becomes absolutely painful as you witness the frequent squabbles during the struggle.

Some of the costumes, especially those worn in the "Quadrille du Moyen Age," are very beautiful

OLYMPIC.

Mrs. Mowatt, the American actress, and Mr. Davenport—both of whom lately performed at the Princess'—made their first appearance at this house on Monday evening, in Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer's comedy of "Lady of Lyons," and were very warmly received by the audience. They will, we expect, prove an acquisition to the company until Mr. Brooke returns. The performance of each of these transatlantic artistes has been so recently noticed by us as required to make an impression. Mr. Holl and Mrs. Brougham were the only other members of the cast calling for notice.

We think, from the appearance of the house, that the theatre is not in good odour with the playgoers. No evidence is offered of a pains-taking management, and the public eye has, of late, been so accustomed to the clever and artistic revivals at Sadler's Wells and St. Mary-le-bone, that it is remarkably quick at detecting any inefficiency behind the scenes. The disgraceful manner in which two or three plays have been scrambled through, rather than acted, deserves the severest censure.

HAYMARKET.

The revival of "The Double Gallant," by Colley Cibber, at this theatre, can not be called a successful one, at least as regards its attraction only, for nothing could be more powerful than the cast, nor more admirably played. But it is one of those resuscitations which no longer excite the slightest interest. The allusions are of a period gone by and forgotten, the moral more or less questionable, and the foibles of manners offered in its representation very unsatisfactory, as no one can tell whether it is lifelike or otherwise. The comedy dragged heavily on, and no one could have wondered why, when first produced, it only ran four nights, or why it has never since achieved any remarkable success. The great care taken in its revival, and the strength thrown into its dramatis personæ, evidence Mr. Webster's constant anxiety to sustain the character of the Haymarket; but we fear in this instance his remuneration will not be adequate to the trouble incurred.

More agreeable is the new piece "Lavater," of which we spoke last week, as being another translation of the piece playing at the Lyceum under the title of "Not a Bad Judge." Mr. Webster sustains the character of the physiognomist played by Charles Mathews, and gives a different idea of the part—a graver quieter version, but equally effective. The Lyceum Lavater is a humorist, the livelier of the two, and better suited for representation; but we question whether the Haymarket may not be the truer assumption. Miss Fortescue, as the girl, plays with more than her usual gentle grace and intelligence. The piece is loudly applauded; but, as a whole, we prefer the other adaptation.

ADELPHI.

A complete "Adelphi piece" was brought out with success on Wednesday, called "Harvest Home." By thus classifying it, we mean that it was a romantic drama of the school always so popular at this house, comprising several attractive situations, embracing the entire strength of the company, and having several short scenes for the comic gentlemen to exhibit in—which they do to the immense gratification of the audience

The plot is somewhat slight—too much so, indeed, for a three-act drama which lasted nearly four hours, and may have a full quarter of its length taken out of it with considerable advantage:—A gentleman, Mr. Cecil Derwent (Mr. H. Hughes), holds certain estates, the real heiress having disappeared when a child, and never more been heard of. She was kept out of the way by Caleb Kestrel (Mr. O Smith), a travelling hawker, who finds her in the little travelling troupe of Poyo (Mr Paul Bedford) and his wife (Mrs. Frank Matthews), who together direct a peep-show, called "The Temple of Arts" the motto of which is "Let the ungenius liv." Mary Everett (Miss Woolgar), the niece of a farmer, is engaged to a young rustic, Frank Mortdale (Mr. Boyce), who hates Derwent, and carries a gun on purpose to annoy him. Kestrel goes to Derwent, and threatens to produce the heiress, Amy (Madame Celeste), and throw him out of his property, unless he makes over a considerable sum to him. Derwent defies him, and is shot by an air-gun on the moors at night, aimed by Kestrel. Amy has seen this, but, believing Kestrel to be her father, dares not mention it; and Mortdale arriving at the time is taken up on suspicion of the murder. Things are going against him, when Amy discovers that she is not Kestrel's child, and the reappearance of Derwent—who, after all, was only wounded—clears up everything. In the under plot the chief interest centres in Brassy Poyoy (Mr. Wright), "an independent gent from London on a visit to the moors," and his every word, and look, and confidential appeal to the audience, was, as usual, the signal for a roar of hearty laughter.

M. LOGER.

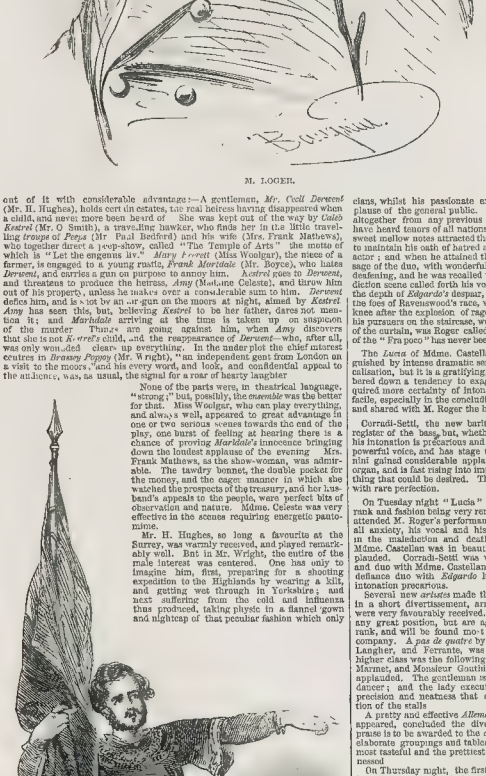
None of the parts were, in theatrical language, "strong;" but, possibly, the ensemble was the better for that. Miss Woolgar, who can play everything, and always well, appeared to great advantage in one or two serious scenes towards the end of the play, one burst of feeling bearing there is a chance of proving Mortdale's innocence bringing down the loudest applause of the evening. Mrs. Frank Mathews, as the show-woman, was admirable. The tawdry bonnet, the double pocket for the money, and the eager manner in which she watched the prospects of the treasury, and her husband's appeals to the people, were perfect bits of observation and nature. Mdme. Celeste was very effective in the scenes requiring energetic pantomime.

Mr. H. Hughes, so long a favourite at the Surrey, was warmly received, and played remarkably well. But in Mr. Wright, the entire of the male interest was centered. One has only to imagine him, first, preparing for a shooting expedition to the Highlands by wearing a kilt, and getting wet through in Yorkshire; and next suffering from the cold and influenza thus produced, taking physic in a flannel gown and nightcap of that peculiar fashion which only



M. ROGER SINGING "MOURIR POUR LA PATRIE."

Mr. Wright's genius could plan, to see the elements for laughter provided. The piece was entirely successful—the principal characters were called for—and Mdme. Celeste announced it for repetition every evening until further notice. Those was a loud cry for the author, but he was stated not to be in the house. He is, we believe, a gentleman named Parry.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

An unexpected novelty was provided for the subscribers last Saturday night. Donizetti's "Lucia" had been announced for Tuesday week, with a new tenor, named Pagliei, and Madame Persiani; but, at the rehearsal on the previous day, the tenor was seized with an extinction of voice, owing to the effects of the climate, and Madame Persiani had such a cough, that she was quite hors de combat. No time was to be lost for the Saturday's representation, as "Tancredi" was given five times on the Tuesday, and the cry for novelty was stringent. An extra engagement was immediately tendered to the famed tenor Roger, who is announced in the prospectus for July and August: and Madame Castellan was requested to quit Paris before her season was terminated at the Théâtre Italien. This on Saturday, without any preliminary notification, the bills of the day exhibited to the patrons of the Royal Italian Opera with the names of Roger for Edgardo, and Madame Castellan for Lucia; Poloni being the Raimondo, and Corradi-Setti and Soldi, the new baritone and tenor, Enrico and Arturo. M. Roger never sang in Italian before Saturday night, and yet at forty-eight hours' notice, the half of which was necessarily occupied in travelling from Paris to London, did he make his debut with signal success, perhaps unparalelled under such a curious combination of circumstances. We need scarcely remind our musical readers that for Roger Auber has composed his chief operas, and Scribe has written the most difficult acting parts, particularly in the last opera of "Haydée," in which Roger develops histrionic genius of the highest order. In person he is short but compactly built, with a remarkably handsome face, a fine eye, and having great play of features. His voice is a pure chest tenor, of extensive compass, beautiful quality, and average power. His unerring intonation and excellent method ensure for him the sympathies of the most clans, whilst his passionate expression and dramatic power gain him the applause of the general public. His Edgardo is an original conception, differing altogether from any previous representative within our recollection, and we have heard tenors of all nations in this character. In the duo in the first act his sweet mellow notes attracted the ear instantaneously; the declaration of Edgardo to maintain his oath of hatred against Lucia's family at once stamped him as an actor; and when he attained the high notes from F to B flat in the closing passage of the duo, with wonderful force, the acclamations of audience were deafening, and he was recalled with Mdme Castellan. The contract and malediction scene called forth his vocal and histrionic powers with electrical effect: the death of Edgardo's despair, his intensity of the malediction, the defiance of the foes of Ravenswood's race, were magnificently depicted. The falling on the knee after the explosion of rage, taking up of the sword, and turning round on his pursuers on the staircase, were novel and striking points. Again, on the fall of the curtain, was Roger called for. In the third act, the pathos of his singing of the "Fra poco" has never been approached.

The Lucia of Mdme. Castellan is gentle and interesting. It is not distinguished by intense dramatic sensibility, nor is it startling by marvellous vocalisation, but it is a gratifying, if not an exciting performance. She has scarcely down a tendency to exaggeration in the ornate style, and she has acquired more certainty of intonation. Her voice was fresh and her execution facile, especially in the concluding scene. She was received with much warmth, and shared with M. Roger the honours of the calls before the curtain.

Corradi-Setti, the new baritone, has a fine voice, which partakes of the register of the bass, but, whether from habit or trepidation we know not as yet, his intonation is precarious and his style frigid. The second tenor, Soldi, has a powerful voice, and has stage tact; he will be a very useful acquisition. Poloni gained considerable applause in Raimondo. His bass has a magnificent organ, and is fast rising into importance. The choruses and band were everything that could be desired. The finale of the second act was coloured by Costa with rare perfection.

On Tuesday night "Lucia" was repeated, the attendance of rank and fashion being very remarkable. The same enthusiasm attended M. Roger's performance as on his début, as, free from all anxiety, his vocal and histrionic powers were developed in the malediction and death scenes with electrical effect. Mdme. Castellan was in beautiful voice, and was warmly applauded. Corradi-Setti was very unequal; his opening air and duo with Mdme. Castellan were spiritedly sung, but in the defiance duo with Edgardo his execution was tame and his intonation precarious.

Several new artistes made their debuts on Saturday evening, in a short divertissement, arranged by Signor Appiani, and were very favourably received. They do not presume to take any great position, but are agreeable dancers of the second rank, and will be found most useful additions to the ballet company. A pas de quatre by Mademoiselles Thierry, Honoré, Langher, and Ferrante, was very cleverly executed. Of a higher class was the following Pas de Deux, by Mdlle. Melina Marmet, and Monsieur Goutière, both of whom were warmly applauded. The gentleman is a vigorous but withal a graceful dancer; and the lady executed several difficult pas with a precision and neatness that called forth the hearty approbation of the stalls.

A pretty and effective Allemande, in which all the deputantes appeared, concluded the divertissement, and in this much praise is to be awarded to the corps de ballet generally, for their elaborate groupings and tableaux. Several of these were the most tasteful and the prettiest that we have for some time witnessed.

On Thursday night, the first of the extra performances, not included in the subscription, "Lucia" was given for the third time; Roger and Mdme. Castellan were rapturously applauded, and called for at the end of each act. The second act of "Tancredi" followed.

We annex a Portrait of M. Roger, from a cleverly-executed bust; and a spirited whole-length of the great artist as he lately appeared, singing the "Mourir pour la Patrie," at the Opéra Comique, in Paris.

SURREY

Mr. Ira Aldridge, the African tragedian, made his first appearance at the Surrey Theatre on Monday evening, 20th ult., as Zanga, in the "Revenge." Our Illustration represents the last scene of the tragedy, wherein he is trampling on the prostrate Don Alonzo. His reception throughout the performance was flattering; and, as the play progressed, the applause became enthusiastic. Mr. Aldridge possesses an excellent voice, commanding figure, and expressive countenance; to which he adds the advantages of education and study. His dress, which is novel and picturesque, reminds one of the portraits of Abd-el Kader. Throughout the play he more than realised the high encomiums that had previously been passed upon him; and many who ridiculed the idea of a native-born African successfully representing a dramatic character, retired with very different feelings. Nor is his talent confined to tragedy. His representation of Mungo, in "The Padlock," is a laughable performance, differing entirely from the Ethiopian absurdities we have been taught to look upon as correct portraitures; his total abandon is very amusing. He re-appeared on the 27th, as Othello, with great success.

MR. IRA ALDRIDGE, AS ZANGA, IN "THE REVENGE."

NEW TELEGRAPHIC LIGHT-HOUSE.

Mr. J. Wells, of the Admiralty department, Somerset House, is the inventor of this new Light-House; in which he proposes to supersede the present defective system by a series of scientific improvements, under the superintendence of Mr. R. Rettie, C.E.

NEW TELEGRAPHIC LIGHT-HOUSE.

The New Telegraphic Light-House is built of iron, of moderate height; the inventor considering the great elevation at which Light-Houses are generally built to be one of the principal causes of the many shipwrecks that occur, as they appear to be at a greater distance than they really are. "All lights," says Mr. Rettie, "should be almost on a level with the spectator, but leaving a sufficiency for storms."

Next, in this New Light will be introduced an entirely new method of ventilating, so as to keep the wind from disturbing the burners, and prevent any smoke or vapour from blackening or frosting the lights. The burners will be so powerful as to give a body of light free from shadow and smoke, of great brilliancy, and altogether superior to the expensive French lenses; the reflectors will be made more powerful—sending the light to a much greater distance than at present, and in ten times the volume.

The distinguishing or telegraphic signals, it is stated, are so plain as to be understood by seamen of every nation in passing, as the first letter of the name will be given, (see letter N in the vignette), appearing as a dark ground, "clear," "white," or "frosted," and will indicate the name of the Light-House, and be understood at once. The want of such a system has long been experienced on the British and Irish coast, where Light-Houses have repeatedly been mistaken, from the similarity of their appearance. In Mr. Wells's plan, Mr. Rettie's Code of Marine Night Signals will be introduced, as well as the new lighting apparatus and reflectors.

LETTERS, &c., FOR INDIA.—Her Majesty's Government having decided to discontinue the packet between Southampton and Alexandria, which now leaves the former port on the 3rd of each month, letters intended to be sent to India, &c., viâ Southampton, can only be forwarded, after the despatch of the packet of the 3rd May next, once in each month, namely, by the packet which sails from Southampton on the 20th of every month. The mails, however, for India, &c., viâ Marseilles, which leave London in the beginning of the month, will be continued, and will be despatched, as usual, on the evening of the 7th of each month (or when the 7th falls on a Sunday, on the evening of the 8th); and all letters, if pre-paid and not specially addressed viâ Southampton, will be forwarded by the route of Marseilles.

LICENSED VICTUALLERS AS SPECIAL CONSTABLES.—A point of some importance to licensed victuallers has just been decided by the Attorney-General. Mr. Wire, on the part of the Licensed Victuallers' Protection Society, wrote to the first law officer of the Crown, to ask "whether, in the event of a licensed victualler being sworn in as a special constable, he would thereby incur a forfeiture of his license." The doubt was suggested by a clause in the form of the license appended to the 9 Geo. IV., cap. 61. The Attorney-General has replied that a licensed victualler does not forfeit his license by being sworn in as a special constable.

LORD HARDINGE'S RETURN TO PENSHURST.

PENSHURST, WITH THE PROCESSION TO SOUTH PARK.

Thursday, the 23rd ult., was the day fixed for the return of Lord Hardinge to his seat at Penshurst, after his long absence and brilliant services in India.

Penshurst, it will be recollected, lies near the South-Eastern Railway, and at a short distance from Tunbridge Wells. Its park, mansion, church, and village, and rich wooded and pasture scenery, form a lovely spot, in beauty of its own, as well as in historical sentiment

"Thou wilt tread
As with a pilgrim's reverential thoughts
The groves of Penshurst: Sidney here was born."

THE ARCH AT PENSHURST.

Nearly three centuries have rolled away since this event: but it is not unreasonable to suppose its interest has been strongly impressed upon the village mind, and his feeling may have had some influence in the enthusiastic reception given to "the Man of Kent" to the hero of our times, on Thursday week.

Lord Hardinge left London by an express train, at half-past one, and reached Penshurst station about three o'clock, where he was met by about a hundred of the neighbouring gentlemen on horseback, who escorted him on his way to Penshurst. On their road the procession was joined by the Bailmakers' Band, consisting of the men employed by Mr. Duke, in manufacturing cricket-balls. As the procession drew near to the village, the various benefit societies, and a numerous body of workmen from Chafford's paper mills, advanced with flags, banners, &c.; and, the morning being very fine, the scene was truly exhilarating. Penshurst Place, the birth place of Sir Philip Sidney, was next passed: Lord de l'Isle, the present noble owner, was stationed on the lawn in front of the mansion, and cheered Lord Hardinge as he passed. At the turnpike-gate an elegant triumphal arch was erected, [illegible] with "Welcome" in flowers. In passing through the arch, [illegible] was fired, and the cheering of the crowd was deafening. On [illegible] address was presented by the Rev. F. S. Dodd, rector of Penshurst, which is subjoined

"We, the rector and inhabitants of Penshurst, desire to offer your Lordship a heartfelt welcome home. The valour, humanity, and good judgment which distinguished your government in India, are held in honour by the whole British nation.

ARCH AT THE ENTRANCE TO SOUTH PARK.

"We express our concurrence in this general sentiment as neighbours, who respect your private as well as public worth, and congratulate you on your return to South-park, from attachment to your person, added to admiration of your professional and official merits."

His Lordship, in reply, said that profound indeed were his feelings of pleasure and gratitude for the welcome he had received; and however highly he valued the expression of their approbation of his policy in India, it was not to that alone (as his reverend friend had said) that he must consider himself indebted for the hearty reception they had offered him; but he hailed in it a sign of the perfect good feeling which existed between landlord, farmer, and labourer in the parish and which he trusted would continue to exist there. And [illegible] he would beg them to recollect that the successes of our [illegible] upon the undaunted courage of our private soldiers—upon the [illegible] Englishmen—aye, and of Kentish men, along with our [illegible]

The procession now moved on towards South park, a distance of half a mile

SOUTH PARK, THE SEAT OF VISCOUNT HARDINGE.

CHAPEL-OF-EASE TO BE ERECTED AT FORDCOMB-GREEN.

from the village. At the entrance to the park another triumphal arch was erected, on which was inscribed "HOME" in passing which Lord Hardinge was again cheered by the multitude

In his Lordship's carriage were Lord and Lady H[illegible]ge, the Hon. Miss Hardinge, and the Hon. Charles Stewart Hardinge (his Lordship's eldest son). The next carriage contained Lieut.-Colonel and the Hon. Mrs. Cunninghame, and Lieut. the Hon. Arthur Hardinge. After which came [illegible]merable other equipage

The nobility and gentry present included Lord de l'Isle: Sir John Sidney, the Hon. Miss Sidney, and the Hon. Misses Ernestine and Philippa Sidney; Lord North; Sir John Croft; Sir Hen. Colonel Miles Fleetwood Peter Hesketh Stracy Esq; of Cuddington, and Miss Streatfield; Colonel Streatfield, Mrs. and Miss [illegible] Streatfield; Rev. Woodgate; Rev. Woodgate, Esq.; Frank Woodgate, [illegible] Esq.; Rev. Miss Allcroft; Miss Allcroft; Miss Arundel; Mrs. and Miss Cowlas; Lady Georgiana Pratt; Mr. and Mrs. Warde and family; Rev. W. Greand lady; Mrs. Tighe; Sir George Bingen; Rev. P. S. Dodd; Rev G. R. [illegible]ster; Richard Turner, Esq.; John Hickaring, Esq.; Captain Holland Thos. Harvey and lady; Sir Charles and Lady Harding; Sir Walter James [illegible] Esq.; Chas. Powell, Esq.; Stephen Beeching, Esq.; [illegible] Esq.; Rev. Wm Bruce; W. R. Barrington, Esq.; [illegible] Esq.; Wm. Yates, Esq.; Wm. Jewhurst, Esq.

On Friday week, Lord Hardinge laid the foundation-stone of a chapel-of-ease at Farderoja, in the parish of Penshurst. The site chosen is a piece of land generously given for the purpose by Richard Turner, Esq., of Chafford Paper-mills At the time fixed for the ceremony, a very numerous company had assembled; Lord Hardinge arrived punctually at twelve o'clock, and was warmly greeted: he was received by the Rev. P. S. Dodd, Rector of Penshurst, who commenced the ceremony by reading, "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain who build it;" &c.; after this a psalm, the responses by the children of the Penshurst Sunday Schools

The stone was then laid by Lord Hardinge, and the worthy Rector addressed his Lordship as follows:—

"In the name of the inhabitants of Penshurst I thank your Lordship for the office you have performed. But you need no thanks—you have your reward in your own breast. You consider, I am sure, that no act can better become you, on your return to us which we all hail with joy—than to lay the foundation, in your own parish, of an edifice to be erected to His glory who has been the gracious preserver of you and those dear to you—through whose mercy you are now a glad father. You are come home crowned with honour; and you are pleased with this opportunity of declaring that you are sensible whence honour cometh. You have been in many battle, and you now bend to the Lord the Giver of all Victory. You have prospered in council, and are ready to confess that wisdom and understanding are from the Lord. You have been a peace-maker, and to the great Author and Giver of peace you make your acknowledgement. But your feeling on this occasion is, I know, stronger than words can express. No more, then, need be said. Again we thank you, believing that your generous encouragement of this work, and all the part which you have to-day taken, will be among the happiest reminiscences of (we hope) a long-extended life"

His Lordship was sensibly affected by this address, and briefly replied: "My dear pastor, Mr. Dodd,—I hope that the edifice which we proceed on this road will tend to the glory of God, and will be a spiritual consolation to all the inhabitants of this neighbourhood. I need say no more

A hymn was then sung by the children and company, and the Rector concluded by a prayer

IRELAND.

A meeting of the Irish Confederation was held at the Music Hall, Dublin, at which the following resolutions (each of which was proposed in a speech of a violent tendency) were agreed to:—

"Resolved,—That the English Government in Ireland having prosecuted the speeches delivered at the last meeting of the Confederation by two of its most trusted members, Wm. Smith O'Brien, M.P., and Thomas F. Meagher, as having deliberately adopt the principles contained in those speeches, and direct them to be printed and circulated throughout Ireland, at the expense of the Confederation." (Cheers.)

"Resolved, That the Council be instructed to inquire and report without delay on the best, most effectual, and speediest means of organising an armed National Guard, composed of all sects of religionists, in every county that may have available strength ready for its defence as occasion may arise. That the Confederation have heard with much satisfaction that the Protestants of the North are engaged in arming themselves, as all true men should be, for the defence of their property, and that the Council be instructed to invite the co-operation both of the Orangemen and the Repealers not members of the Confederation."

Resolved,—"That the Council be instructed to inquire and report, at the earliest possible day, on the best and most effectual means and manner of holding a National Council, to be composed of elected delegates from all principal towns and rural districts in Ireland, representing as far as possible all sects and classes of the Irish people, to consult together how the island is to be liberated most speedily from the dominion of the British Parliament, and whether and how far the great national events occurring throughout Europe may afford additional means and opportunities for that purpose"

Mr Mitchell, who addressed the meeting, declared it to be his intention to commit high treason, and urged every man present to do the same as a duty.

Mr Doheny proposed the following address, which was carried unanimously

"Citizens of the Irish nation a voice calls you from afar. The breath of young nations mingles with your old and loftiest aspirations. Awake! If your cause must be consecrated by sacrifices, they shall not be wanted. Three of your truest-hearted have already fallen in the fight, and the cause goes on with a proud step and fearless hearts, because they hope—hope in you. Citizens, this is the beginning of the end. All is now staked on the majesty and the virtue of the people. Be ours the post of suffering, be yours the glory and liberty. Its vindication in the hour of trial, its enjoyment in success. Be wise, be steadfast, be prudent, but be bold. One backward step is death. Look around, and look within, and ask your hearts if this time has not arrived. Europe is astir from west—from the north and the south—murmurs freedom's invocation. Her lessons are read by the light of burning thrones—her echoes heard in the footfalls of flying tyrants—and vulgar and base are the people or acts and classes that cause shall be sacred. Here, too, popular virtue shall sanctify popular triumph There shall be order, protection, tranquillity. Property and life shall find their best security in the generous participation of a liberated people in their welfare, and swear that the time is at hand. Stand together, and prepare. Prepare! For the trial will require all your firmness The end is in view; courage, truth, virtue, and it is already yours. So the people be armed and be free, let us perish. We shall be happy.

(Signed) "MICHAEL DOHENY

"Chairman of the Council"

At a meeting of Scarsfield Club, in Limerick, resolutions of a similar character were agreed to. At this meeting, Mr. Pigot, the son of the Lord Chief Baron, made his début as a Young Irelander, in a very violent speech. On the other hand, Mr. John O'Connell has issued an address to the people of Ireland, urging to depend upon moral force alone for obtaining a Repeal of the Union, and beseeching them to remember the advice of Father Mathew, to abstain from violence, and not to break the law

CONCILIATION HALL The Association met as usual on Monday, and the following resolutions were agreed to:—"Resolved, That we strongly deprecate state prosecutions as at all times a bad means of dealing with popular discontent, and particularly so when originating in a policy that has done nothing for the removal of the real grievances of the people. Resolved, That, admiring from all reference to the differences which we have had with the gentlemen who have been made the object of state prosecutions, we tender to them our assurances of high respect for their personal characters, and of our sincere anxiety to render them every service that it may be in our power to offer. Resolved, That we highly wise and statesmanlike would be the ganger, in front of Maryborough gaol.—Thomas Shea and William Dwyer, who were to be executed at Tullamore, on Thursday last, for attempt to murder Captain Garvey, have been respited until the 26th of May next, a writ of error having been sued out by their agent, Mr. E. Nugent.

THE MYSTERIES OF LONDON We see a new advertised called "Felix on the Bat," in reference to which we beg to put a few questions. Who is Felix? Is he Arabin Felix or Bonthia Felix? How did he get on the bat? Where does he intend to go on the bat? Is he not too big to ride on a bat? In fine, what does it all mean?—We had got thus far in our queries, when we were apprised that the bat in question was a cricket-bat, and that Felix is one of the gentlemen in flannel waistcoats and white trowsers, whose portraits we have frequently seen in shops devoted to the sale of apparatus for "Manly Sports." All we have, therefore, to say, is, that Mr. Felix must, in future, make his advertisement more succinct, or we shall be under the necessity, instead of laying Felix on the bat, of laying the bat on Felix.—Mere to the Moon for April.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The tendency of the English Market during the past week has been to decline, notwithstanding the support it has received from continuous investments on behalf of the public. So increasing have these investments lately become, that Stock for immediate delivery has frequently been done at higher prices than Stock for the Account in April. Consols on Monday opened with firmness, and 83¾ to ¾ was the ruling price of the day—the highest quotation being registered at the close of the day's transactions. A little heaviness was apparent on Tuesday, arising from an uneasy feeling regarding Continental affairs; but prices towards the close of business became firmer, and the previous day's quotation was attained. On Wednesday, however, a decline of nearly one per cent. occurred. The state of the Continent for the moment yielded to anxiety with regard to Ireland. It was feared that the ignorant populace might be urged to acts of rebellion, by the rash[illegible]s that were done at the [illegible]. At the close of the week quotations were generally lower, the Market closing at the following rates:—Bank Stock, 186; Consols for Account, 83¼; Consols Reduced, 84; Consols New, 84; Consols Bonds, Deferred, [illegible]; Mexican, Five per Cent., 1846, 15; Ditto, Account, 15¼; Peruvian Bonds, Six per Cents, 22½; Portuguese Three per Cent., 14½; Ditto, Four per Cent., [illegible]; Russian Bonds, 74; Ditto, Account, 74; Spanish Five per Cent., 1840, 14½; Ditto, Passive, 5½; Ditto, Three per Cent., 20½; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 59½; Ditto, Four per Cent Certificates, 69½; Ditto, Account, 57.

The Share Market was, and notwithstanding the abundance of unemployed capital, a strong feeling of indisposition to invest in either Railway Stock or debentures generally exists. The established lines cannot raise money at 6 per cent on their securities. Fifty-four and three-quarters, or three per cent. is the utmost that can be procured by any temporary employment of capital. This forcibly proves that it is not want of capital that presses on Railway interests, but a want of confidence on the part of the wealthier portion of the community. Until this feeling of distrust subsides, any improvement in the prices of the finished lines can be scarcely anticipated, while those in progress run great risk of coming to a dead stop. Caledonian, 26; Great Western, 76; Ditto, Caledonian, 26; Eastern Counties, 13½; Ditto, North and Eastern, 4⅜; Lancashire, New, 74; East Lincolnshire, 15½; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 36; Ditto, Half Shares, 1; Great Northern, 4; Great South and West (Ireland), 17½; Great North of England, 224; Ditto, New, £40, 54; Great Western, 85⅛; Ditto Quarter Shares, 14; Ditto, Fifths, 2¼; Ditto, New, £10, 7⅝; Ipswich and Bury St. Edmunds, and Norwich, 14; Ditto, Thirds, (New), 7⅛; Ditto, (W. v Riding Union), 3¼ dis.; Ditto, (Preston and Wyre), 33½; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 59½; London and North Western, 126; Ditto, New, 3⅜; Ditto, Fifths, 7; London and North Western, old, Ditto, New, 2⅞; Ditto, Midland, 95½; Ditto, £50 Shares, 9. Ditto Consolidated Bristol and Birmingham, Six per Cent., 113; Norfolk, 63, Ditto, Extension, 13¾; North British, 20¾; Ditto Quarters, 4¾; North Staffordshire, 8¼; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 20; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 6¾; Scottish Central, 25½; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, Class B, 1, Shropshire Union, 11; South Eastern and Dover, 23½; Ditto, No. 2, 7; Ditto, No. 4, 4½; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 29½; Ditto Original New and Berwick, 7; Ditto Extension, No 1, 15½; Ditto ditto, No. 2, 10; Ditto Great North Eastern Preference, 7½; York and North Midland, 60; Ditto, New, Preference, 19½; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 28½; Boulogne and Amiens, 5½; Namur and Liege, 2½; Northern of France, 2½; Paris and Lyons, 1½; Paris and Rouen, 13; Sambre and Meuse, 4½.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Consols opened yesterday at 83⅛ but some doubtful foreign intelligence depressed the price to 80¾, a rally afterwards occurred, and the closing quotation was 81¾ for Money and Time. Shares were declining, and there was nothing of moment in the Foreign Market

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The present week's arrivals of wheat of home produce have been on the increase, and the show of foreign has been very small. As the attendance of buyers was small the demand for all kinds of wheat of home produce was in a very sluggish state, and, in order to effect sales, vendors were obliged to submit to a considerable decline in the currency. The best parcels of foreign wheat were mostly held at full prices, but the middling and inferior kinds were rather easier to purchase. The sales were mostly confined to the late arrivals. The barley trade was heavy, and prices were with difficulty supported in malt very few sales took place, and prices were 2s per quarter lower than last week. Oats, beans, and peas had a downward tendency. In flour we have no change to notice

ENGLISH. Essex and Kent, 4000 sacks; Suffolk, 4400 Irish, oats, 13,200 Foreign [illegible]. 1670: oats, 4900. Flour, 4080 sacks, malt, 5630 quarters.

English.—Wheat, 1200 quarters, barley, 1000, oats, 6800, beans, 400, rye, 200 Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 42s to 48s, ditto, white 47s to 50s; rye, 32s to 34s; grinding barley, 24s to 26s; distilling ditto, 29s to 31s; malting ditto, 32s to 35s; Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 50s to 57s; brown ditto, 48s to 54s; Kingston and Ware, 52s to 56s; Chevalier, 56s to 60s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s to 20s; potato ditto, 22s to 24s; longdan and Cork, ditto [illegible] 18s; fine ditto, white, 17s to 19s; Scotch beans, new, 30s to 32s; Suffolk and Essex ditto, 28s to 30s; maple, 32s to 36s; white 34s to 38s; bollers, 36s to 40s per quarter. Town-made flour, 42s to 46s; Suffolk and Norfolk, 36s to 38s; Yorkshire, 34s per 280 lbs.

Foreign. Barley red wheat, —s to —s; white, —s to —s, barley, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s; flour, American, —s to —s; [illegible] per barrel

SEEDS, &c. Although the season is far advanced, the demand for [illegible] is only moderately supported. In Cakes next to nothing is doing.

Linseed, English, sowing 60s; Baltic, 52s to 53s; Mediterranean and [illegible] 42s to 46s; hempseed, 32s to 36s per quarter; coriander, 16s to 18s per cwt; brown mustard-seed, fine, 9s to 10s; ditto, fine, 6s to 9d; tares, 3s 6d to 4s 6d per bushel; linseed cakes, English, [illegible] per ton; rapeseed cakes, [illegible] per ton; [illegible] per cwt; [illegible] per cwt; [illegible] per cwt

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

NOTICE.

Now Ready, at all the Booksellers,

BURKE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE

1848

NEW EDITION revised to the present time, from the personal communications of the Nobility, &c.

II.

COMPLETION of the LIVES of the QUEENS of ENGLAND.

The TWELFTH VOLUME, completing the Work, is now ready, and will be NOW READY embellished with a Portrait of the Authoress, and other illustrations.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13 Great Marlborough-street.

WHILE Nations are flinging away their Sovereigns, and Rhine are throwing down their Crowns, happy England is only required to stamp to her Sovereign, Victoria Regina, as change for their Crowns, and the Bank [illegible] Kings, as change for their Crowns at the Bank. But three-hooded England, as change for her Crowns, [illegible]

HE PLAN IN THE MOST FOR APRIL.

At No. 17, Warwick-lane, to which and Hotel in VIII. the [illegible] Europe are now there.

Just Published, Price 1s.

THE COLOURED CROCHET ANTIMACASSAR BOOK By CHARLES HAIRE.—To be had of [illegible] Country Booksellers, Exeter; and all Berlin Warehouses [illegible] throughout the Kingdom. Sent post free on the receipt of 16 [illegible] stamps.—London: RICHARD [illegible], and Co.: Stationers' [illegible].

THE PIANISTA, Post Free.—Any Three Numbers of this popular Musical Work sent, post-free, on receipt of 6s in stamps. All the best German Operas, full music size, with various complete, at 3s per open.—Figaro, Sonnambula, Il Barbiere, Norma, Lucia, and 20 others (see Catalogue). Mary Blaize, Old Joe, and 9 other of the best Negro Songs, 1s per 3d. All Wilson's, Jullien's, and Jenny Lind's most Songs, 1s 6d per 3s. Catalogues gratis.

* * Either of any two Numbers post free for 6d extra. Any three or six Numbers sent post free.

Pianista Office, 97, Paternoster-row (one door from Cheapside)

NOW READY, the [illegible] publishing, price 5s., free by post, 6d extra,

HER MAJESTY'S CIVIL LIST.—REDUCTIONS IN SALARIES.—The salaries of [illegible] Household appointments at Court, with the nature and extent of the duties [illegible] Correspondence relative to the [illegible] Offices suggested to be either wholly ABOLISHED or the SALARIES [illegible] REDUCED. The Financial state of the country will be found [illegible] SKETCHES OF HER MAJESTY'S HOUSEHOLD." Interspersed with Historical Notes, Official Documents, and Critical Remarks, now publishing by W STRANGE, 21, Paternoster-row, and may be obtained of all booksellers.

Now ready, in 1 vol. 8vo, price 12s.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "RANTHORPE."

On Tuesday, at all the Libraries, in 3 vols. post 8vo.

ROSE, BLANCHE, and VIOLET. By G. H. LEWES, Esq.

Author of "Ranthorpe," "A Biographical History of Philosophy," &c.

JANE EYRE: An Autobiography By CURRER BELL. Second Edition, with Preface by the Author. Three vols. post 8vo.

III.

ADVENTURES of an AIDE-DE-CAMP, or, A Campaign in Calabria. By JAMES GRANT, Esq. Author of "The Romance of War," &c. London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

Second and Cheaper Edition, post 8vo, 5s. bound in cloth, gilt edges,

THE FAVOURITE LIBRARY.—A New Series of Books for Children, each volume to consist either of a work which has already received the public approbation, or of a newly compiled Tale by some favourite Author, and illustrated by a well-known Artist.

I. THE SKEDALE HERD-BOY. A Scottish Tale By LADY [illegible]. With Illustrations by William Harvey. Price 1s (On April 4,

II. MRS LEICESTER'S SCHOOL By CHARLES and MARY LAMB With an Illustration by J. Absolon Price 1s. [illegible]

GRANT and GRIFFITH, Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard and [illegible] Cornhill. Old Bond-street.

Now ready, price 2s 6d.,

THE HISTORY and ART of WOOD ENGRAVING containing AN INTERESTING RESUME OF THE ART OF WOOD ENGRAVING FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD BY W. A. CHATTO

With Fac-similes of various Specimens of Ancient Wood Engravings; Also, the following Articles, which have been selected from THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS:

And exhibit in various styles the capabilities of Wood Engraving:

Dancing of Wedding Guests (Rubenstein) Interior (Westall)
(Rubenstein) Imogene (Westall)
Reformed Eve in Germany Highland Piper (Frederick Tayler)
The Sleeping Boy (Hunt) Ditto
Italian Landscape Sacred Summer Time (S. Palmer)
Mignon, regretting her Country Actress (Leslie)
Mignon inspired with Hope Fisherman's Cottage
Hogarth's portrait of Captain Smith Sea Bobbin (E. M. Ward)
"Ha! Ha!" (Leslie) Portrait of Sir Walter Scott
Initial paper, made expressly for the purpose, which considerably enhances the beauty of the Engravings.

To be completed in Four Parts, 2s

PART I of this beautiful work is now ready, containing specimens of Engravi gs, the anforventioned subjects,

Wayfarers Resting (C. Taylor)
The Invention of the Stocking (Leslie)
Loon (Elmore)
Outlaw Asleep
Sonnet (Duncan)
Cavan's Well (Topham)

[illegible] Strand

Just Published, price 6d., or, prepaid by post, 10d.,

A COMPLETE GUIDE for EMERGENCIES: a Guide for their Treatment before the Arrival of Medical Aid. By ALFRED SMEE, F.R.S., Surgeon to the Hospital of Bethlehem or Surgery, &c. &c. Printed on a large Broadsheet, and illustrated with numerous Engravings.

The object Mr. Smee has in view, in issuing these instructions printed on a broadsheet, in preference to a book, is to ensure their being pasted in some well-known part of every household in the [illegible] places where numbers of people congregate, so that, when accidents take place, the hands of treatment may at once be observed by a book, when wanted in haste is too fine not to be found

The instructions are given in an explicit and concise style, and are rendered all more easily understood by Engravings; they embrace all cases which arise from Accidents by Railway or Steam-boat—Drowning—Fire—Burns, &c. &c.—Poisons—Fits—Apoplexy—Bleeding—Fainting—Choking—Blows—Falls—Bites—Stings—Wounds—Dislocations—Fractures, &c. &c. &c.

As a public duty, and for the [illegible] interesting specimens of Engravi gs, the anforventioned subjects,

[illegible] to

THE CHINESE JUNK "KEYING."

(Continued from page 220.)

ing the supply of provisions and water running short, and the crew becoming discontented and almost mutinous at the length of the voyage, her captain (Kellett) deemed it necessary to make for New York. She entered the port amidst a general display of flags and saluting from the large assembly of shipping in the harbour. The anxiety evinced by the inhabitants to visit the vessel was extremely great; and for a succession of days subsequent to her arrival, as many as 7000 to 8000 persons daily went on board.

The Keying next visited Boston; whence she sailed direct for London on the 17th of February last, and arrived in St. Aubin's Bay, Jersey, on the 10th March, having performed the voyage, from land to land, in twenty-one days—a short period even for the American packet-ships. She encountered tempestuous weather in crossing the Atlantic, from which she sustained some unimportant damage.

The Junk arrived at Gravesend on Monday: she will, we believe, be re-painted, and will, in a few days, be at Blackwall, for exhibition to the sight-loving Londoners.

LAUNCH OF THE "VLADIMERE," RUSSIAN WOOD STEAM FRIGATE.

THE ceremony of launching this beautiful specimen of naval architecture took place on Wednesday, 22nd ult., from the ship-building yard of Messrs. C. J. Mare and Co., Orchard Wharf, Blackwall, in the presence of a numerous and élite company of spectators, among whom were many officers of the Russian Navy. The symmetry of form and magnitude combined in this vessel are very striking; and it will well repay the trouble of any lover of the science to inspect her at the East India Docks, where she now lies fitting for sea. She was designed by the same gentleman who constructed the Express, Courier, and Dispatch, and who superintends the constructing department of Messrs. Mare's firm. The last-named boats, belonging to the South-Western Steam Navigation Company, have lately proved of most essential service to the English at the various French ports, in consequence of their well-known speed and sea-worthiness.

The following are the principal dimensions of the Vladimere.—

| | Ft. | In. |
|---|---|---|
| Length between the perpendiculars .. .. .. | 200 | 0 |
| Length of the keel for tonnage .. .. .. | 178 | 8½ |
| Breadth, extreme .. .. .. .. | 36 | 11 |
| Breadth, moulded .. .. .. .. .. | 34 | 11 |
| Breadth for tonnage .. .. .. .. | 35 | 7 |
| Depth in hold .. .. .. .. | 21 | 0 |
| Burthen in Tons, 1200. | | |
| Draught of water complete for sea .. .. .. | 14 | 6 |
| Engines, 400 horse-power, by Messrs. Rennie | | |
| ARMAMENT. | | Cwt. |
| 2 10-inch Pivot Guns .. .. .. .. | | 84 |
| 4 8-inch on carriages and slides .. .. .. | | 65 |

LAUNCH OF THE RUSSIAN WAR-STEAMER "VLADIMERE," AT BLACKWALL.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No 311.—Vol. XII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE PRIVATE MORALITY OF PUBLIC MEN.

IT has often been observed that a low state of public morality in a country is the sure precursor of Revolution. So certainly do like causes produce like results, that the last French Revolution was confidently predicted for many months before it took place. It was as certain from the premises as a logical deduction; as unerring as an algebraic equation. Amid all the vices and crimes of mobs, there is in the collective people of all countries a love of virtue—a hatred of meanness—a sentiment of grandeur, which will pardon a great crime more readily than a succession of systematic and debasing vices. This sentiment of the people cannot be outraged with impunity by the governing classes in any country. The first French Revolution owed its worst crimes to the disgust and horror excited throughout society by the scandalous debaucheries and corruptions of the aristocracy and priesthood—an aristocracy without honour, and a priesthood without belief. The Revolution of 1848 was produced and hastened by the same feelings on the part of the people. Tyranny may often commit public crime with impunity, if it practises the private virtues. George the Third was tolerated by the people of England, notwithstanding the wickedness of his reign, because he was a good husband and father. George the Fourth was infinitely more hated, though in no degree worse as a King, because his vices as a man rendered him odious to the good sense and correct feeling of the people. So it was with Louis Philippe. As long as he was considered an exemplary character in private life, his public tyranny did not goad the people into insurrection; but when the corruption that he had spread through French Society in all its ramifications—the mean, grovelling, dirty love of money—the utter selfishness—the entire want of honour which characterised himself and all the tools that he employed—became too apparent for further doubt—the doom of his system and of his dynasty was sealed. The full extent of the infamy he caused and kept in his pay is not yet known; but every day brings to light some new proof of the deplorable venality which he introduced and fostered, and of the gangrenous poison that he infused into the whole body of French society.

The Monarchy fell, not so much from any theoretic love of Republicanism widely diffused among the people, as from the conviction impressed upon the public mind by Louis Philippe and all his Ministers, that Monarchy and Corruption were convertible terms. Hence, it was thought well to give another trial to a system that could not maintain itself, except by employing the old and disreputable means, destructive of the national honour abroad, and of the national happiness at home. To repair the enormous evils of this system is the most difficult of the many difficult tasks reserved for the present and all future Governments of France. Robespierre said, in 1793, "that it was no child's play to found the French Republic." He and his colleagues, his predecessors and successors, found this to their cost; but, whatever may have been their faults and their crimes, whatever the enormity of the deeds of blood that has given their names an unhappy celebrity, they did one great thing: they purified the character of public men. Wielding absolute power, having unlimited control over the resources of a rich and powerful nation, they lived in decent poverty—some of them even in indigence. They scorned the vile thing, a bribe, and their word was their bond. Louis Philippe has rendered it necessary that the new rulers of France should perform this Herculean task once more. M. de Lamartine—a greater, a purer, a better, and a wiser man than any of the heroes of his "History of the Girondins"—may exclaim with Robespierre, in face of the mighty mass of corruption that stares him in the face, that it is, indeed, no child's play to found the French Republic; but, like Robespierre, he must purify it from the vices of the Monarchy. Robespierre adopted the savage purification of the guillotine. In the more enlightened times in which we live, the public exposure of the names and crimes of the offenders will have the same effect, and inflict upon the delinquents an equally effective punishment—the moral guillotine of public contempt. It is to be hoped that the Provisional Government will show no tenderness upon this subject; that they will hide nothing, whatever may be the name, the fame, or the station of the criminal; and that they will give to the world, supported by the documents in their possession, the true history of the reign of Louis Philippe. They have uplifted a portion of the veil; let them draw it aside entirely. Of their own integrity there is no doubt, or shadow of a doubt. The men who assume power amid such convulsions as that from which they sprang, never can be guilty of the vices of the system which they destroy; but they owe it to the tarnished fame of their nation, and to the cause of popular liberty all over the world, to expose to the full the moral infamy which has rendered Monarchy an impossibility for France, and which leads many to despair even of the Republic. Let them publish, whoever may be ashamed, the names in Louis Philippe's private memorandum-book, labelled "Hommes à moi" ("My Men"), that France and all other free states may see in what rank of society moved the individuals who received the bribes of the Monarch for the betrayal of their country and the prostitution of their honour. Let them also publish the records of the Prefecture of Police, and those contained in the missing folios, in which the King, playing a double game, as was natural for a man in his situation, preserved the documents by which he could crush, upon any future occasion, the venality that refused to be any longer venal, and the villany that should take it into its head to become honest at an inconvenient period. All these documents should be published. All these facts should be made known, as a necessary step towards the purification of French society. It is essential to the stability and usefulness of the new Government, that it be not suspected of employing any one of these men for the sake of his knowledge, his talents, or his usefulness. There ought to be a clean sweep of them, as a preliminary to the public re-establishment of the great principle, that, without honour as its guiding-star, no Government, whether Monarchical or Republican, can successfully maintain itself at the present period of the world's history. This national honour is at present the safeguard of England. We may have grievances to complain of, but we shall redress them peaceably. We may have vital Reforms to seek, but we shall obtain them without Revolution, because, whatever exasperation and suffering may exist among the people of this country, the popular virtue has not been outraged by any meanness and vices in the Monarch, any venality in the Ministers, any scandalous traffic by any party in the emoluments of office, any debauchery and profligacy in the aristocratic classes, or any systematic corruption in the executive Government. Fortunately for the cause of rational progress, we have a Monarch whom we respect for her private virtues, and her unobtrusive and sensible discharge of her public duties; we have an aristocracy that, whatever may be thought of their privileges, are not inferior in the discharge of all the social virtues of life to any class of society. We will not make too many boasts of our purity, for the disgraceful bribery practised unblushingly in our small boroughs would rise up in judgment against us if we did; but, even with this dirty spot upon the national escutcheon, we may be permitted to rejoice that the general honour of English society is unimpugnable, and to predict, as a consequence of this state of feeling, that however extensive the REFORMS demanded at this time, and to be either now or hereafter conceded, there is no fear of REVOLUTION.

PROCESSION OF LIBERATED POLES, AT BERLIN.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

THE LIBERATED POLES.

ONE of the earliest consequences of the recent revolution in Prussia was the setting free, by Royal edict, of the Poles who had been made prisoners at Berlin since the previous year. In commemoration of this event, they re-entered the city in solemn procession: and our Artist (F. Weiss, of Berlin) has enabled us to present the reader with the accompanying tableau of the ceremony. Before leaving, M. Mieroslawski addressed the people, who received him with enthusiastic applause.

Next day, the Pole- took leave of the Berliners, in a public address, from which the following is an extract:—"Confirmed and strengthened by the sun of hope now rising in Europe, we are returning home with hearts full of gratitude to the inhabitants of Berlin, to prepare for the last and most serious fight we shall ever have to encounter—a struggle between the dark, brutal, and despotic power which has been our sworn enemy for centuries, a struggle for freedom against slavery, a struggle of life against death. We assure you that, by every means in our power, we will prevent any unnecessary spilling of blood, to preserve the public safety and order, and to promote general freedom."

Before leaving, on presenting themselves to the President of Police, Von Minutoli, to procure their passports, he addressed to them a few words of acknowledgement for the judicious and kindly conduct they had displayed towards Berlin since the 19th ult., and more particularly for their kindness in undertaking to guard the extensive buildings connected with the post-office. As their passports, and as an eternal recollection, he begged they would carry with them the arms (muskets and sabres) which had been placed in their hands.

The release of the imprisoned Poles has been regarded as an intention on the part of the King of Prussia to close his account with his former friend, the Emperor of Russia. All agree that the Russians shall not march into Prussia, unless it be over the corpses of the patriotic Poles. The Russian military posts are being doubled, and reports are current of a very large army being on the point of marching into Poland.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE

Paris continues quiet; and, although there have been some disturbances in the provinces, yet they appear to have been totally unconnected with politics, and have been in general easily suppressed.

On Friday (last week) the Central Electoral Committee for Paris published the following official communication:

"The Central Committee for the General Elections of Members of the National Assembly proceeded yesterday to scrutinise the list for the thirty-four candidates to be proposed to the citizens of the department of the Seine for national representatives. The ballot-papers were received at the Hôtel de Ville (Church Lamartine; Arago; Marie; Armand Marrast; Garnier Pagès, Albert; Ledru-Rollin; Ferdinand Flocon; Louis Blanc; Cremieux—(these eleven are the members of the Provisional Government); Recurt, Secretary-General of Paris; Duchesne, working sculptor, editor of the Atelier; Guinard, chief of the battalion of the Bastile; Dangay, a compositor, and an editor of the Atelier; Betancer; Carnot, Minister of Public Instruction; Goudchaux, Minister of Commerce and Agriculture; Lamennais; Leroux, working shoemaker, and editor of an association of his own; Buchez, a deputy mayor of Paris; Bastide, Minister of War; Hauchecorne, Secretary-General of Foreign Affairs; Dupont (de l'Eure); Savary, working shoemaker editor of the Fraternité; Pierre Lefranc, Commander-in-Chief of the National Guards of the Seine; C. Thomas, Secretary of the National; Pagnerre, Secretary-General of Paris; Lagrange, civil engineer; Treuil, physician; Lumière, working engraver; Bernard de Rennes; Philippe Le Bas, of the Institute; D'Alton Shee.

"Lagrange has since addressed a letter to the electors, declining the honour conferred on him, on the ground of his great age, and his physical inability to take part in the proceedings of a large assembly.

"By decree dated the 28th ult., the Provisional Government decides that all appointments, &c., made on the 22nd, 23rd, and 24th February, "during the existence of the factions insurrection which delivered France from a corrupting government, and found a free Republic," are annulled.

"The provisional Government has also issued the following decree:

"Art. 1. The Minister of Justice is provisionally authorised to accord all remissions to all forçats who may demand it, and who shall prove, by official or authentic documents, that they have resided in France for five years at least, and who, besides, shall produce, in support of their demand, an attestation by the Mayor of Paris, or the Prefect of Police, for the department of the Seine, and by the commissaries of the Government for the other departments, that they are worthy, in every respect, of being admitted to enjoy the rights of French citizens. Art. 2. The payment of the duties established by the law of the national Treasury, by the ordinance of 4th October, 1844, and by the law of 9th April, 1816, shall continue to be effected. The disposition of the ordinance of 4th October, 1814, authorising the said duties to be remitted wholly or in part to persons whose state of fortune may require it, shall also be maintained."

"The military camps, connected together, and consisting of a disposable force of nearly 60,000 men, are to be established at Dijon, Lyons, and Grenoble in front of the Alps, and in case of an advance on the kingdom of Sardinia, the several garrisons of the French army will be fixed at Lyons, in order to direct, from that point, the first military operations.

"The following decree was issued by the Provisional Government, dated March 31:—

"Art. 1. Every Frenchman shall be permitted to contract in that portion of the service which he chooses a voluntary engagement, the length of which cannot be less than two years.

"Art. 2. In no case can the volunteers who have so engaged themselves be placed in non-activity without their consent."

"Great excitement was occasioned at Lyons on the 27th ult. by a steamer arriving there, bringing seven of the crew, who had escaped from Valence, with a wife and family. The people by the side of the river had warned the captain to run on the flint, but he took no notice. On arriving at the Quai de Charity, at Lyons, the people quickly rushed on board the vessel, seized the captain, who would have ill-treated him, had not a company of the National Guard assembled and taken him into custody, together with all the crew and the passengers. His wife was forthwith conveyed to gaol, where she remained in a state of [illegible], and the flag was seized and dragged through the streets to the Hôtel de Ville.

On inquiry it appeared, from the captain's story, that the flag was merely used as a signal, and the sentence to be carried by the fact that it was bound by a border, and had the name of the steamer in the middle. The captain, nevertheless, was detained in gaol, and M. Arago, the Government Commissary, had issue a proclamation announcing that a judicial investigation would take place. The steamer was seized, and a placard, with the words "Propriété Nationale," was placed on it. After some hours' agitation caused by this event, order was re-established.

There was an emeute at Lyons on Thursday week among the soldiers, who rushed from their barracks and resisted one of their companions from confinement, who had been placed under arrest for breach of discipline. Order was however, at length restored, principally through the intervention of the soldier whom his companions had rescued.

At Bordeaux the efforts of M. Clement Thomas, the Government Commissioner, to conciliate the people, have proved unavailing, as M. Alexandre refuses to permit M. Chevalier to be re-appointed.

General Chabannes, late Aide-de-Camp to Louis Philippe, has written to the Journal des Débats denying the truth of the report that Louis Philippe was in treaty for the purchase of an estate in England. That assertion, says Chabannes, "is absolutely false. In addition, I can affirm, and all the persons who have known the affairs of the King will affirm with me, that, during the eighteen years of his reign, Kings Louis Philippe never invested any sum of money whatever in foreign countries; and that, adding the future fortunes of his family with that of his country, he placed all his fortune on the soil of France. The result is, that, far from being able to purchase estates in England, he lives from day to day, and in the most straitened circumstances, at Claremont, under the hospitable roof of King Leopold."

The Moniteur des Chefs announces that citizen the Abbé Lacordaire, has offered himself as a candidate for the national representation, and that he proposes, if elected, to demand the restitution of the civil church property to the amount of 40,000,000f. with the addition of 2,000,000f. Oddly enough, the club of the school of medicine has supported the pretensions of this candidate.

The state of Lyons, according to the last arrival, continues to afford subject for apprehension on the part of the lovers of order. A private letter says—"Only conceive the city of Lyons in the hands of the most turbulent, the most excitable, the most depraved, the most educated, and the most ferocious populace of Europe. Behold the formidable garrison placed in fortified barracks to overawe and control them, who are themselves now in full revolt and mutiny." The Government, apparently as a decoy, had ordered the manufacture of 43,000 silk flags and 130,000 scarfs, which would give some employment to the weavers.

On Monday Mr. Smith O'Brien and the Irish deputation attended at the Hôtel de Ville, and presented the address from the Irish Confederation to the Provisional Government. M. Lamartine made the following reply to the deputation:—

"CITIZENS OF IRELAND,

"If we required a fresh proof of the pacific influence of the proclamation of the great democratic principle, the new Christianity, bursting forth at the opportune moment, and dividing the world, as formerly, into a Pagan and Christian community—we should assuredly discern this proof of the omnipotent action of an idea, in the visits spontaneously paid in this city to Republican France, and the principles which animate her by the nations, or by fractions of the nations, of Europe.

"We are not astonished to see to-day a deputation from Ireland. Ireland knows how deeply her destinies, her sufferings, and her successive advances in the path of religious liberty, of unity, and of constitutional equality with the other nations of the United Kingdom, have at all times excited the heart of Europe!

"We said as much a few days ago to another deputation of your fellow-citizens. We said as much to all the children of that glorious Isle of [illegible], the natural germs of its inhabitants and the striking record of its history render equally symbolical of the poetry and the heroism of the nations of the north.

"Rest assured, therefore, that you will find in France, under the Republic, a response to all the sentiments which you express towards it.

"Tell your fellow-citizens that the name of Ireland is synonymous with the name of liberty courageously defended against privilege—that it is one common name to every French citizen! Tell them that the reciprocity which they invoke—that this hospitality of which they are not oblivious—the Republic will be proud to remember and to practise invariably towards the Irish. Tell them, above all, that the French Republic is not, and never will be, an ethnographic Republic, in which liberty is merely abused as the mask of privilege; but a Republic embracing the entire community, and securing to all the same rights and the same benefits. As regards other considerations, we have neither to speculate for us to hold them out, nor for you to receive them. I have already expressed the same opinion with reference to Germany, Belgium, and Italy, and I repeat it with reference to every nation which is involved in internal disputes which either divided against itself or at variance with its Government. When there is a difference of race when nations are slaves in blood, intervention is not allowable. We belong to no party in Ireland or elsewhere, except to that which contends for justice, for liberty, and for the happiness of the Irish people. No other party would be acceptable to us, in a time of peace, in the interests and the passions of foreign nations. France is desirous of reserving herself free for the maintenance of the rights of all.

"We are at peace, and we are desirous of remaining on good terms of equality, not with this or that part of Great Britain, but with Great Britain entire. We believe this peace to be useful and honourable, not only to Great Britain and the French Republic, but to the human race. We will not commit an act—we will not utter a word we will not breathe an inclination at variance with the principles of the reciprocal inviolability of nations which we have proclaimed, and of which the continent of Europe is already gathering the fruits. The fallen no more had treaties and diplomacies. Our diplomatists are nations, our treaties are sympathies! We should be insane were we openly to exchange with a diplomacy for ourselves and parties and alliances with even the most intimate parties in the countries which surround us. We are not competent either to judge them or to prefer some of them to others; by announcing our partiality in favour of one side, we should deprive ourselves of influence on the other. We do not wish to be the enemies of any of your fellow-countrymen. We wish, on the contrary, by a faithful observance of the Republican pledges, to remove all the prejudices which may mutually exist between our neighbours and ourselves.

"This course, however painful it may be, is imposed on us by the law of nations as well as by our fraternal remembrances

"Do you know what it was which most served to irritate France and estrange her from England during the first Republic? It was the civil war in a portion of our territory, supported, subsidised, and assisted by Mr. Pitt. It was the encouragement and the arms given to Frenchmen, as heroical as yourselves, but Frenchmen fighting against their fellow-citizens. This was not honourable warfare. It was a bastard partisanship mingled with the passions against the Republic. This policy is not yet, in spite of all our efforts, entirely effaced from the memory of the nation. Well, this cause of dissension between Great Britain and us, we will never renew by using any similar course. We accept with gratitude expressions of friendship from the different nationalities included in the British empire. We ardently wish that justice may found and strengthen the friendship of nations: that each may become more and more its basis; but while proclaiming with you, with her (England), and with all, the holy dogma of fraternity, we will perform only acts of brotherhood, in conformity with our principles and our feelings towards the Irish nation." (Vive la République! Vive le Gouvernement Provisoire! Vive Lamartine.)

The Paris papers continue to demonstrate the increasing difficulties of the new Republic.

The elections of officers of the National Guard commenced on Wednesday morning, and were pursued during the day, but considerable confusion would probably mark their close. The struggle is between the moderate and the ultra-Republicans, and its results may indicate the tone and complexion of the elections of members of the Constituent Assembly.

The National denies that France has hostile views on Germany, and maintains that the closest union should take place between the two countries, in order effectually to support the Peloe in the war between that people and the Russians.

The Bourse has been much agitated towards the close of the week: first, by continued apprehensions of troubles to grow out of the elections, secondly, by the transfer of the Orleans Railroad to the State; and, thirdly, by a report that, within 48 hours, a new levy of 160,000 men will be made by order of the Government.

Letters from Chambery, in Savoy, announce that a Republic was proclaimed in that city on Sunday, the 26th instant.

The Provisional Government has issued a decree, taking the Paris and Orleans Railroad into their own hands.

M. Thiers has signified his intention not to offer himself as a candidate for a seat in the National Assembly.

Abd-el-Kader is to reside in the Castle of Pau.

SPAIN

Paris, Wednesday

The Mode, a legitimist journal, and as such not very friendly to the King of the French, states, on the authority of a private letter from Caremont, that his Majesty talks incessantly and to all comers about the last revolution, and strange to say, parades in support of a policy and system of management during the time he was on the throne were the wisest and best. According to the Mode, the loquacity of the fallen monarch is so extraordinarily great as to be positively vexatious to his household. The poor man, adds your contemporary, is completely borne down by the terrible calamity which has befallen her family, and only finds a gleam of consolation in prayer and works of piety!

The week that has just elapsed has been one of the most gloomy for the better in the state of things in this country. Commerce has been completely null—employment for the working classes has diminished—distrust and anxiety have increased—money has become more scarce, and the substitute which a crown piece now-a-days will command is more than treble, has vanished—the public treasury is far from full. The crisis is a terrible one for all classes, and above all for the Government, which must either battle through it, or allow the country to sink beneath it. But still good men should not despair. France has passed through trials more terrible by far, and she is strong enough to pass triumphantly through that which now assails her.

The Government has put down the nuisance of the night-cafés and dancing-houses, which took place on the building of bands of dirty boys. Any of the persons who now cry "Du bien-pour-rien" as they pronounce it, are accommodated with a night's lodging in the police station-house. The planting of the planting of trees of liberty has also died out; in truth, there is scarcely a spare corner in all the vast city in which trees could now be planted. The plan of a dull planting have produced very little, as they obtained by anyone but on the spectators, and on the inhabitants of the nearest houses.

Alexandre Dumas announces a monthly history, "day by day and hour by hour," of the Revolution, and if the events of each day follow it up with flow it. It is to be sold at an extraordinarily low price, and will, of course, have an immense sale. In such a work the great novelist will be more at ease than in a newspaper, for he will not be obliged to write "to order." The "Dictionary," in its dictionary, meaning "romance" Georges Sands is also turning the Revolution to account by writing what she calls "Letters to the People" about it: but she does not appear to have had any great knowledge obtained by anyone but on the spectators, and on the inhabitants of the nearest houses.

Alexandre Dumas announces a monthly history, "day by day and hour by hour," of the Revolution, and if the events of each day follow it up with flow it. It is to be sold at an extraordinarily low price, and will, of course, have an immense sale. In such a work the great novelist will be more at ease than in a newspaper, for he will not be obliged to write "to order." The "Dictionary," in its dictionary, meaning "romance" Georges Sands is also turning the Revolution to account by writing what she calls "Letters to the People" about it: but she does not appear to have had any great knowledge obtained by anyone but on the spectators, and on the inhabitants of the nearest houses.

In a previous letter I noticed the strange circumstance that, in the way of illustration, nothing like justice had been done to the principal scenes in the last Revolution, except by the ILLUSTRATED NEWS. Within the last week the Parisian printsellers have relieved themselves from this reproach, by bringing out illustrations which are admirable in design and execution. But is it not extraordinary that they should have taken weeks to do what the NEWS did in a few days—nay, a few hours?

Though the Revolution has been most advantageous to the newspapers, by creating an enormous demand, it has also caused heavy losses to them by the falling-off in the advertisements. One might in fact say that advertising in Paris has been annihilated; for the papers that seven weeks ago had one, two, and even three pages full of advertisements, now come out in general with less than the quarter of a page—sometimes without a single line.

The theatres have cruelly suffered by the Revolution. Not one at present clears the half of its expenses; and some have been already obliged to close, whilst several others are preparing to follow their example.

This is a momentous day for France—the elections of Colonels and Lieutenant-Colonels of the National Guards being now in course of taking place. The choice of the man will show whether moderate or extreme opinions are most in favour: if the former, the country is saved—if the latter, the worst may be apprehended.

In a few days, the quarter's rent becomes due, and people are clamouring against being compelled to pay it. The shopkeepers send up a deputation, on Monday, to request to be relieved from that hard obligation, and that the landlords might be compelled to pay themselves out of the sum deposited in their hands as security. Nobody now likes to pay even the justest debt, if there be any decent excuse for refusing.

SPAIN

An insurrection of a serious character broke out in Madrid on the night of the 26th ult. It would appear that a plan had been formed to overthrow the Ministry by means of an insurrectionary movement, of which it was expected the military would have remained passive spectators. The leaders of the movement, having subsequently discovered that the troops were determined to resist, countermanded the orders they had given to the people. The latter, however, who had been wrought up to the highest pitch of excitement, declared that they were betrayed, and that they would fight even without leaders.

The Queen drove to the Prado at five o'clock, where the usual crowds were assembled. It was about six o'clock that the first sign of what was to follow was perceived. A man in the crowd at the Puerto del Sol fired a pistol at a guardilla or policeman, the man was passing, and the shot was replied to by several others in front of the narrow streets in the vicinity of the Calle Arenal, at a short distance. In a few minutes afterwards her Majesty passed in the same direction from the Prado, on her arrival at the Palace met an aide-de-camp to the Plaza Mayor, where the Political Chief and Municipality were, to ascertain the cause of the firing. In about half an hour after that occurrence, the movement really began in the Lavapies, and as nightfall nearly the whole city became the theatre of combat. Favoured by the darkness, the people rushed forth in all directions, and barricades were erected in a wonderfully short space of time in the Plaza de Cebada, Calle Lavapies, Calle de la Visitacion, Calle del Baño, Calle del Lobo, Calle San Jeronymo, Calle de los Peligros, and others. In the Calle San Jeronymo there were not less than four barricades, the insurgents finding the materials they used in the carts and other streets ready at hand, in consequence of their having been unpaved for the purpose of repair, and the large stones lying about in abundance.

The Government, who had on the 24th received very accurate information of what was going on, had the troops under arms, and ready to act on the first notice. Battalions came pouring fourth from all directions, and the Carabineers were issued from the Vistalon-house down the Calle Peligros, and fired a volley into the crowd in the Calle Alcala, who returned the fire.

The Calle San Jeronymo was so well fortified that it was found impossible to dislodge the insurgents from their barricades. A flank movement was made by the Calle de la Cruz, which leads to that street and the end of the Calle del Principe; and there the combat was long and obstinate. The insurgents were at length driven back. In the Plaza Mayor the fighting was also kept up for a long time. In one house only there were this morning eleven dead bodies lying in a room—three of them soldiers, the rest civilians. In the Calle Mayor the struggle was also bloody. The house of the Count of Onate, who lives nearly opposite the main guard at the Post-office, is perfectly riddled with balls. In the Post-office alone two officers and twenty-three soldiers were wounded, no of them mortally. In that part of the town and the neighbouring streets forty soldiers are said to have been killed.

But nowhere did the combat rage so violently as in the Calle de la Visitacion, leading from the Principe to the Calle del Lobo, and in the Calle del Baño. In the former street is the residence of General Concha (José), Inspector of Cavalry. He wished to go out into the street, but his aide-de-camp prevented him, as it was found impossible to pass the barricades in these streets. Behind the barricade in the Calle del Baño there were about 150 men fighting with the utmost fury, and who had kept up the struggle since daybreak. They are said to have killed more than twenty soldiers. The doors were at length forced, and they were all made prisoners. It is believed they will all be shot

In the Plaza de Cebada, eight policemen, guardillas, took refuge in a sentry-box. They were all killed. In the Café Venecia, in the Calle del Principe, thirty insurgents fortified themselves, and kept the troops at bay for a time. They were at length taken

About eight o'clock, and while the fighting was hottest, the whole of the persons found at the Progresista Club in the Calle San Jeronymo, leading to the Prado, were arrested.

An English gentleman, named Whitwell, was shot in the abdomen in the early part of the evening, as he was passing through the Calle del Principe on his way to a friend's house to dinner. He died

A number of persons entered the house belonging to the Union Bank for the purpose of procuring arms, naturally supposing they would find those usually kept in all such establishments. But they were disappointed. They were found with much courtesy. The principal combatants in that (San Jeronymo) were, to all appearance, gentlemen. They fought well and long, though such as were armed only had pistols and swords. The cries used were "Viva la Libertad!" "Abajo el Ministerio!" ("Down with the Ministry!") M. Mon was seen alighting from his carriage, and entering his house in the same street. Not less than 30 shots were fired at him.

Of the numbers engaged in this bloody conflict there were 200 manolos, who fought like desperadoes. The next largest numbers of troops, they bravely and skilfully fought their way to the barrios nuevos, in the intricacies of which they were soon lost to view.

It was in the Plaza de Cebada that the struggle was continued the latest. Redondo, the second chief of the police under Chico, was killed there.

It is difficult to ascertain with any degree of exactness the number of killed and wounded. The former is computed at 200. The wounded must be numerous, if we can judge from the number of beds and stretchers taken to the hospitals. As the fighting really commenced at 7, and continued till 3 o'clock in the morning, it is probable that the loss on both sides is great.

It was remarked that the barricades were remarkably well constructed. In the Calle Toledo, Visitacion, and Cebada, they were chiefly formed of omnibuses and other vehicles.

The Queen Mother abandoned her house in the Calle de las Rejas, and took refuge in the Palace, where she passed the night

The following decrees were published in the Gazette of the 27th:—

"In exercise of the prerogative conferred on me by the 26th article of the Constitution, and in conformity with my Council of Ministers, I hereby decree the following:—

"Sole Article.—The Session of 1847 is at an end.

"Given at the Palace this 26th March, 1848.

"Signed by the Royal hand

"(Countersigned) The Duke of VALENTIA, President of the Council of Ministers

"In conformity with my Council of Ministers, and in the exercise of the authorization granted to my Government by the law of the 14th of the present month, I decree the following

"Sole Article. The guarantees established by the 7th Article of the Constitution are declared suspended throughout the whole of the Monarchy, in virtue of the provisions of the 8th Article of the same to that effect.

"Given at the Palace this 26th March, &c.

Circulars were also addressed by the Minister of the Home Department to the Political Chief of Madrid, and those of the Provinces, of a similar kind to those addressed by the War Minister to the General-in-Chief.

The Minister of Finance has also written to the Inspector-General of Carabineers, requesting him to thank, in her Majesty's name, the Carabineers for the support they have given to the troops.

Upwards of 600 persons have been arrested. Among them are Escosura, the late Prime Minister, Cortina, and several officers of the Progresista leaders. General Prim is a prisoner in the barracks; Generals Iriarte Van Halen and Noguera have been sent to Cadiz, and are to be transported to the Philippine Islands. Mendizabal, Olozaga, and several others have escaped

Two of the prisoners taken in the émeute were tried by Court Martial and condemned to death, but they were pardoned by the Queen. Queen Christina, who [illegible]

The Court [illegible] ing for the trial of the persons engaged in the insurrection of the 26th ult., had condemned two individuals, one a Frenchman, named Bernard, to death. They were accordingly to be shot on the 29th, but it is believed their lives will be spared at the solicitation of the British Minister

Seven Generals had been banished from Madrid

ITALIAN STATES

VENICE.—The deliverance of Venice from the yoke of Austria was accomplished on the 22nd ult., on which day General Count Zichy capitulated with the Provisional Government. It appears that the general having received accounts of the insurrection of Padua, Vicenza, Treviso, and the whole of the Venetian territory as far as Verona, saw that it was impossible for him to effect his retreat on the Tyrol and Carynthia across the Venetian provinces, and that his only resource was by sea. Immediately after signing the capitulation, the whole of the Austrian garrison embarked for Trieste, having been allowed to employ the ships in the harbour for the purpose of transporting the troops.

Two of the prisoners taken in the émeute were tried by Court Martial and condemned to death, but they were pardoned by the Queen. Queen Christina, who [illegible]

The Provisional Government was composed as follows: Messrs Daniele Manin, President; Nicolas Tommaseo, Minister for Foreign Affairs; Antonio Paoletti, Minister of Marine; Jacopo Castelli, of Justice; General Francis Solera, of War; Pietro Paleocapa, of Public Works; Francesco Camerata, of Finance; Leon Pirachetti, at Israelite, of the Interior.

LOMBARDY.—The Provisional Government of Milan has published an important document, dated the 25th, stating that no political engagement of any nature has been taken with respect to the King of Sardinia, and that the latter has expressed himself as follows to the Milanese delegates: "I shall not enter Milan till I have vanquished the Austrians in battle, for I will not present myself to so brave a people till I have obtained a victory that may prove me equally brave."

The Austrians had retired by the Messegnano road to Lodi, on the Adda. The garrisons of Pavia and Piacenza, to the number of 1900 men each, finding all the roads cut off, have been obliged to canton in the villages.

Prince Schwarzenberg evacuated the city of Brescia on the 22nd, and took the direction of Lodi, which, however, had already driven the Austrians away.

The people of Lombardy have made prisoners at Brescia of an Austrian general, two colonels, sixty officers, and 800 men, besides a large quantity of ammunition and stores. Marshal Radetzky, who is at Crema, with a corps d'armée of 20,000 men, has commenced his retreat to concentrate his troops on the other side of the Mincio and the Adige.

Large bodies of volunteers are marching from all sides towards the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. From Bologna, the Romagna, Tuscany, Genoa, and other parts of the neighbouring Italian states, great numbers have already arrived.

The following official bulletin was issued by the Provisional Government of Milan on the 30th ult.;—

"The Lombard and Swiss free corps are in Brescia. General Bis, with 8000 Piedmontese, has advanced towards Chiari. General Trotti, with 3000 more, was at Lodi this day. 10,000 Romans and 7000 Tuscans are marching to the Po, by Bologna and Ferrara, and will cross it at Port Lago Scuro. It is said that at Bagnolo (Lower Brescia), the Lombard and Swiss free corps, reinforced by the Tyrolese insurgents, have surprised and taken prisoners from 700 to 800 men, amongst whom are 70 Hulans and 50 officers, with a military chest. Radetzki was, according to the latest intelligence, at Orzinovi and Soncino; the Austrians are at a standstill near the banks of the Oglio. It appears they have given up the intention of throwing themselves into Mantua, for want of provisions in the fortress. The whole country from the Po to the Alps of Tyrol has risen in arms; the enemy finds impediments of every nature. There is no doubt that, on the appearance of a body of regular troops, the army of Radetzki will be obliged to capitulate."

The Patria of the 26th ult. publishes in a supplement a letter from Reggio of the 24th, announcing that the Piedmontese had attacked the Austrians at Piacenza, and defeated them with a loss to the Austrians of 6000 men.

On the news of the insurrection of Lombardy reaching Naples there was an emeute, and the King was obliged to form a new Ministry.

ROME. The events of Lombardy have produced a deep sensation in Rome. Young men enlisted with the utmost alacrity to march to the frontiers as volunteers. On the 22rd all assembled at the Colosseum, where Father Gavazzi, Colonel Ferrari, and other persons pronounced patriotic speeches. The Government had ordered the troops to march to Bologna. Three battalions of infantry, a body of Dragoons, and a great number of volunteers, had already left for Rome. The last battalion of Fusiliers was to march on the 24th, and to be followed in a day or two by the battalions of Moveable National Guards, several thousand volunteers, and a battery of field artillery.

Orders had been issued throughout the provinces to concentrate all the troops towards Pesaro and Bologna. The Piedmontese Envoy Extraordinary had been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Army of Operation, and Colonel Ferrari, who fought in Spain and Algeria, was to take the command of the volunteers. All officers and soldiers who had been abroad had been called upon with the formation of moveable battalions. The Israelites had offered to take arms, and numbers had already enrolled their names among the volunteers. The most perfect tranquility prevailed at Rome and in the provinces.

Letters from Palermo of the 25th ult announce that the Sicilian Parliament was constituted; that Admiral Ruggiero, chief of the insurrection, had been appointed Regent, and that the political separation of Naples and Sicily was an accomplished fact.

AUSTRIA.

Advices to the 30th March inform us of serious disturbances in the Tyrol, which was formerly notorious for its staunch allegiance to the House of Hapsburg. Large bodies of rioters had destroyed the Custom-house of Trent, and thrown the furniture into the Adige (Etsch). The fiscal officers were also obliged to seek their safety in flight. A mob assembled next in front of the Town-hall, and forced the magistrates to draw up a petition to the Emperor, praying for an annexation of the Tyrol with Lombardy. The magistrates did as they were told. They were next induced to adopt the Italian colours, and illuminate the town Other place Als, for instance—were equally riotous, and great outrages were committed by the infuriated population, especially the peasants

The Allegmeine Zeitung reports the liberation of 150 State prisoners, partly Poles, partly Italians, who on the 23rd ult were dismissed from the fortress of Spielberg, famous in the annals of Austrian despotism.

Count Stadion, Governor of Bohemia, has tendered his resignation, but it remains undecided whether the Emperor will dispense with his services.

Orders have been sent to the Austrian fleet at Pola to blockade Venice, and Marshal Nugent, who has received large reinforcements, is to operate against it on the land side.

GERMAN STATES.

THE FRANKFORT DIET.—The Frankfort papers contain the following extract from the minutes of the Diet of the 30th of March:—

"The Federative Assembly, assisted by men of public confidence, has already begun to trace the outlines of a new federative constitution. For the further advancement of this important matter, the Federative Assembly resolves to call upon the Federal Governments to cause national representatives to be elected in their German States, which election shall be either held in the manner which the constitution of the respective country prescribes, or if there be no such constitutional manner, then shall the same be introduced. These national representatives shall assemble in this town, the same being the seat of the Federative Assembly, and they shall vote in effect a German constitution between the Princes and their people. Since circumstances tend to necessitate the adoption of a certain standard of the population, according to which the said national representatives are to be chosen in each federative state, it is deemed convenient to found these proceedings on the existing condition of federative matriculation, and the Federative Assembly ordains that one representative shall be elected to each 70,000 souls of each Federative State, that such States, the population of which does not amount to the aforesaid number of 70,000 souls, shall nevertheless be entitled to elect one representative."

On the 1st April, the Diet fixed the 1st May for the meeting of the Constituent Assembly, and at the same time appointed a permanent committee of 50 to remain at Frankfort till the Constituent Assembly shall have met.

BADEN.—Letters from Carlsruhe of the 1st instant announce the prohibition of the exportation of horses from the Grand Duchy of Baden. M Armand Lefebvre, the Envoy of the French Provisional Government, arrived at Carlsruhe on the 28th ult. The act of national armament was about to be introduced in the Grand Duchy of Baden. This law has one ridiculous side—viz., the violent Germanization of the names of Military charges. A regiment is about to be called a "Heeresbann," and a colonel a "Heeresbannführer." The news of 800 armed German workmen proceeding from France to invade Germany has been officially announced at Carlsruhe. A similar attack was expected from Switzerland.

HANOVER.—It is stated that the official despatch of the Holstein Provisional Government, calling upon the King to send his federal contingent to protect the duchy, arrived at Hanover on the last day of March. The King at once ordered that 13 battalions of foot, 2 regiments of hussars, and 14 pieces of artillery, should prepare to march to Harburgh. A commissary at war had the preceding day left for that town.

BELGIUM

The band of Republicans, calling themselves the Belgian Legion, which left Paris for the purpose of proclaiming a Republic in Belgium, entered the Belgian territory, on the 30th ult, at Risque-à-Tout, a village situated between Mouscron and Menin. The advanced guard of General Fleury-Duray opposed them. It was composed of 200 men of the 4th Infantry of the Line, with two pieces of cannon, and twenty-five artillerymen, and the 2nd Regiment of Mounted Chasseurs. As soon as the legion, 2000 strong, observed this small corps, it pressed forward, colours flying, and drums beating, to charge. For a few moments their fire was brisk and well maintained; but General Fleury-Duray having brought his two pieces of cannon into play, the marauders immediately slackened fire, and fled in all directions, throwing down their arms. Several prisoners were taken, and among them their leader, a Parisian. The invading legion has lost many men—it is said, 400 killed and wounded.

DENMARK AND THE DUCHIES OF SCHLESWIG HOLSTEIN

The King of Denmark has placed himself at the head of the Danish army for the purpose of putting down the insurrection in Schelswig and Holstein. The Provisional Government at Rendsburgh are without arms and without ammunition.

POLAND.

The German National Committee of Posen has issued the following proclamation:—

"TO OUR POLISH FELLOW CITIZENS IN THE GRAND DUCHY OF POSEN

"Fellow Citizens,—Patriotism is the most precious possession of a nation; hence all who are animated by this feeling, every German and nation of Europe, have the liveliest sympathy in the restoration of your political freedom.

"Do not, however, attempt to reap the harvest in ripe. Numerous cases have occurred in which, with armed superiority, you have threatened and endangered the personal safety of your German fellow-citizens. Ponder it well, and remember that such deeds of dishonourable violence are a stain upon your name.

"You weaken the sympathy which is felt for your cause in Germany and in Europe at large, by placing obstacles in the way of the union of your nation, who are endeavouring, with every feeling of honour and moderation, to pave the way for the restoration of your independence. Abstain, therefore, from every branch of the public service, before the harvest is

GRAND MASQUED FETE AT VERSAILLES.—CAR OF "LA LIBERTE."

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

Our Artists' communications, this week, are five spirited Sketches of the most recent Republican demonstrations:—

PAGEANT AT VERSAILLES.

First, is a festal scene at Versailles, on March 30, the Mi-Carême, the day of Mi-Lent, a day long since changed from its character as one of relaxation, granted by the indulgence of the Catholic Church to those unable to support too long the fasts and mortifications of Lent, into a sort of second Mardi-gras.

The display is of a very theatrical description—a stagy pageant, consisting of a cavalcade of maskers in the streets of Versailles. In the centre of the picture is a car, in which is seated the Goddess of Liberty, in her Phrygian cap; about the déesse are grouped women similarly attired; and in front of the car, which is drawn by four horses, are figures of Time, Saturn, and Neptune. Around are maskers on horseback, and a sprinkling of cuirassiers; some bear long streaming flags on poles, and beg alms from the gay company at the windows and balconies; and what with abundance of music, showy costumes, banners, and other paraphernalia, the pageant is, certainly, very imposing and effective.

A different scene presented itself at Paris; for there, we learn, the Mi-Carême was a decided failure, as a proof of a people's gaiety. The contrast between these would-be gay-looking maskers and the grave, troubled, preoccupied faces of the public in general, seemed to strike even the people; they felt the cheat, even if they were not assured of it; and, very frequently, the few maskers met with hooting and derision, instead of applause, in spite of their Republican garments. There was not even a feeling of curiosity afloat among the crowd.

TREES OF LIBERTY IN THE PLACE DE LA BOURSE.

This was the great scene of Thursday evening (30th ult.), when two Trees of Liberty planted in the Place de la Bourse, one on each side of the building, were consecrated with the splendour which our artist has here attempted to picture. This shows the fête better than a column of description. Here are a long line of suspended coloured lanterns; and the pyramidal frames of blazing pots de feu, of which the French are so fond; the trees are gaily decorated with banners, and over and anon were sent up splendid feux d'artifice, filling the vast area with a flood of intense and varied light.

On Thursday, this new fancy of planting Trees of Liberty, was pursued with even more ardour than on any preceding day of the week. About twelve o'clock, a tall poplar—its trunk and branches bound round with tri-coloured ribbons, and surmounted by a cap of liberty—was carried in state to the Place Favart, in front of the Théâtre de l'Opera Comique, and there set up amid the cheers of the National Guards and people, who surrounded it. In this instance, the blessing of the tree took place after its erection, and a very imposing affair it was. The Curé of St. Roch, attended by the entire of his clergy (14 priests) a corps of singing boys, and the Swiss (beadle) in grand costume, arrived in procession, and was received by a military salute, the drums beating "Aux Champs." The ceremony of blessing then commenced. Holy water was profusely sprinkled on the tree, which was subsequently incensed. After a brief speech, the cure and his staff returned to his church by the Boulevard des Italiens, preceded by drums and escorted by National Guards. His reverence performed a similar ceremony in the evening.

It is calculated that there will be between 400 and 500 of these Trees of Liberty planted in Paris. Some in the gardens and public squares are decked out with tri-colour flags and ribbons in the gaudiest manner. That in the Place de l'Hôtel de Ville outstrips all its fellows; for not only is every branch literally loaded with tri-colour streamers, but when strong enough, is made to bear a tri-colour flag, whilst the trunk is carefully wrapped up to a considerable height in tri-colour cloth; and, that nothing may be wanting, tri-colour lanterns are attached to the tree at night. Nor is this all: a little parterre of flowers has been formed at the foot of the tree, and this parterre is surrounded by three others, in which the words Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité are planted in box; and what makes the crowning thing of all is, that the box of one of the parterres is planted in red sand, of another in white sand, and of a third in blue sand! The whole is carefully guarded by three or four National Guards, dressed in tri-colour uniforms, and wearing tri-colour rosettes. Some of the guards have, moreover, decked out their bayonets with tri-colour ribbons. Their consecration is busy work for the priests; for, up to Thursday, the Curé of St. Medard had blessed twenty-one of these Trees. On Wednesday, the Madeleine, already possessed of a Tree of Liberty behind it, was honoured with one before it. All the clergy of this gorgeous temple were made to come forth in all the pomp of Catholic religious rites, with banner and incense, and in golden cope and stole, chorister-boys, beadles, with their halberds and all, to bless the patriotic deed; and then the curé was obliged, after his benediction, and the sprinkling of holy water, &c., to pronounce a sermon in those terms so flattering to the people, without which they can no longer exist now than the most arrant coquette. The portly old priest seemed very glad when all was over, and he was able to get into a fiacre, and avoid the honours bestowed on him by the crowd.

"TREES OF LIBERTY."—FETE IN THE PLACE DE LA BOURSE, PARIS.

PATROL IN THE STREETS OF PARIS.

ATTACK ON THE OFFICE OF "LA PRESSE."

This extraordinary scene took place on Wednesday, the 29th ult., at the office of La Presse, 131, Rue Montmartre; when a great number of copies of the journal were thrown out of the office, and destroyed by the infuriated mob, but the arrival of a party of National Guards soon stayed further excesses.

ATTACK ON THE OFFICE OF "LA PRESSE."

Another scene is thus described by the Correspondent of the Morning Chronicle:—"At about eight o'clock on Wednesday evening, several persons hastened out of breath to the offices of the Presse, some coming from the Boulevard in the direction of the Porte St. Denis, the others from that in the direction of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and warned M. de Girardin that large and threatening crowds from the two opposite points were in march, crying 'Down with the Presse! Death to Girardin!' and that there was not a minute to be lost to be enabled to resist violence by force. M. de Girardin replied that it was sufficient for him to resist violence by right; and that nothing was to be done, but to await the column which was in march, to allow it to enter, and to ask, 'What do you desire? Do you wish to destroy the presses? Enter—there they are. Destroy the liberty of the press, in the name of which you have made two revolutions! Do you desire to kill M. de Girardin? He presents himself to you unarmed—slay him!' Being terrified, the porter of the house closed the gate opening into the street; but M. de Girardin insisted that it should be opened, and that delegates should be invited to come and explain themselves. M. de Girardin did not display the least violence in his language. When questioned as to the articles or expressions which had occasioned this menacing demonstration, the delegates could not point out anything else than these words:—'M. de Lamartine has the same confidence in his eloquence as M. Guizot had in his. M. Ledru-Rollin only differs from M. Duchatel by less reserve in the instructions which he gives to his agents relative to the manner of assuring a compact and devoted ministerial majority.' This comparison, the delegates said, had greatly pained them. Three columns would not suffice to reproduce the whole of a speech of more than an hour's length by M. de Girardin, in which the questions of labour, order, and credit were treated. We shall therefore confine ourselves to saying that M. de Girardin was only interrupted by these expressions of the delegates frequently repeated. 'They did not tell us that! They told us that you were against the workmen! Ah! it is a different thing if you desire the welfare of the people! But we were told the contrary. We had not read the Presse. We did not know that this morning you had demanded that the Government should purchase the railways, in order to be able to give work!' The last words of this discussion, which from menace soon passed to confidence, were those addressed by M. de Girardin to the delegates:—Well, gentlemen, now that we know each other, and that you declare that you were deceived, I count on you to defend me when you hear me falsely attacked. I should have had the right to cause the Presse to appear to-morrow on a blank sheet, with these words, "Liberty of the 24th February, 1848. The censorship, abolished in law, is re-established in fact." But I will not do it—I will not exaggerate the importance of a mistake, and of disguised schemes. Before parting, let us shake hands. And, after shaking hands, the delegates left. M. de Girardin with the conviction stronger than ever that the reason of the people is equal to its courage."

LES BRAVES BELGES.

This group has been sketched from among the band of Belgians who made a grand demonstration in Paris previously to their setting out upon their revolutionary invasion of Belgium. They mostly wore white blouses and tunics, with leathern belts, and the chapeau à la Rubens, and some carried banners.

THE BELGIAN DEMONSTRATION AT PARIS.

THE PATROL.

The cavalcade are here patrolling the streets of Paris; they are sabretaires, mounted on the horses of the late Municipal Guard, and are commanded by the young military students of St. Cyr. Each carries a long sabre; and the effect of this new force has been, generally, to keep the city in order and security.

Signs of the Times.—During the week ending Saturday last the Commissioners in Bankruptcy have disposed in London alone of no less than 116 cases. Of these 21 were brewers, hotel-keepers, or licensed victuallers; 20 warehousemen, drapers, or tailors; 11 cheesemongers and grocers; 10 builders, two scriveners, two underwriters, a newspaper proprietor and a newspaper editor, and, lastly, two undertakers. The remaining 46 were composed of chemists, straw-plait dealers, hatters, tanners, butchers, coal-merchants, &c.

Important Decision with respect to Debts of Students in the University.—A case of considerable importance, and involving a decision which will materially affect tradesmen in university towns, and others who supply goods to college students, came before J. B. Perry, Esq., at the County Court, Oxford, on Monday last. It will be recollected that some weeks since a young gentleman, named Edward Napleton Jennings, an under-graduate at Worcester College, in the University of Oxford, appeared before the Insolvent Debtors' Court, the schedule containing an immense array of debts, many of which had been contracted for articles for which the insolvent had not the slightest occasion. The father of the insolvent, a beneficed clergyman in Yorkshire, allowed his son £100 a year during his residence at the University, which sum for some time sufficed, but having been betrayed into expensive habits, he was led to incur an enormous amount of debt. The plaintiffs in the present case were Messrs. Herbert and Embling, upholsterers, of Oxford; and the defendant was the Rev. Henry Jennings, M.A., the father of the insolvent above mentioned. The action was brought to recover the sum of £9 13s. 6d. for furniture supplied to his son during his minority. After hearing the case, the Judge said that if the father supplied his son with sufficient money, he was not liable, unless he authorised him to contract debts. The law of liability was founded on reason and justice. If a father allowed his son £400 a year in the University, it would be amply sufficient if he acted properly. But if he acted improperly, it would be wrong for the defendant, who was an innocent party, to suffer for the extravagance of his son. He should therefore give judgment for the defendant, and also allow him costs.

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—Attractive arrangements, and Last Performances before Easter MONDAY NEXT, APRIL 10, will be announced shortly by new Comedy, entitled LA DERNIER CONQUETE, as recently performed at the Theatre des Variétés, Paris, with the greatest success. Principal characters by M. Lafont, Mdme. Paul Ernest, and Mdlle. Petit, artistes of the Theatre des Variétés, Paris. On the same Evening will be given the favourite Comedy of LE CHEVALIER DU GUET. Original characters by M. Lafont, M. Guyon, M. Montaland, Mdlle. Baptiste, and Mdlle. Page.

Mr. Mitchell respectfully announces that the above will be re-opened at Easter by a combination of the engagements of M. Lafont, Mdlle. Paul Ernest, and Mdlle. Petit. The attractions will be augmented by the first appearances of M. Achard, and Mdlle. Hagheney, from the Theatre du Gymnase, Paris, her first appearance in England; who will be succeeded by the following eminent artistes of the Theatre de la Ste Royal Paris:—M. Ravel, M. Lemesle, M. Alcide Tousez, M. Sainville (his first appearance in England), and M. Grassot (his first appearance in England) Mdlle Servedon, Mdlle Alphonse, Mdlle. Jacquemin, Mdlle Modin, Mdlle. Duval, and Mdlle. Lemesle (their first appearances in England). With this combination of talent the performances of the season assure a full treasure.

Boxes and Stalls may be secured at Mr. MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE.—CIRQUE NATIONAL DE PARIS.—LAST WEEK previous to the Easter Holidays.—On MONDAY, April 10, and during the week, a change of Entertainments, displaying the varied and combined talents of the whole Troupe. The Manege, on 4 raised horses, by the accomplished artistes, Mdlles. Carré, Lami, and Mathilde. New and Original Acts of Equitation by the distinguished female riders, Mdlles. Pallegrin Assia, Corralle Dacca, Amaglia, Henriette, Z. Stanley, La petite Assia, &c. &c. Extraordinary Gymnastic Feats, Wonderful Equestrian Performances, Novel Pantomimic Representations, &c. &c., by MM. Adolphe Franconi, Louis, and Auc. A. Bagnat, Henri, Leroy, Nicolo, Felix, C. Seguin, Victor, Miel, Adam, Masters, Newsome, Candler, the Spanish Dwarf (Don Francisco Hidalgo), Le Petit Loisset, &c. &c. English and Oriental Entertainments of the Grand Finale. Victor and his Clowns, and Grand Ballet. A GRAND MORNING PERFORMANCE on THURSDAY, APRIL 13th. Acting Manager, Mr. Edmund Macarthy.

LAST THREE NIGHTS OF THE LENT SEASON.—LOVE'S ENTERTAINMENTS, Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate-street. On Wednesday, April 12, and Friday, April 14, LOVE will present his last new Entertainment on a novel construction, to which are added new and appropriate Illustrative Costume and Appointments (for which is entitled "The WOLF in SHEEP'S CLOTHING, or The Bear Biter." with Love's Lecture Lancashire, and other Entertainments. Welsh harp, Roberts, Pandemonium, May 1. On Monday, April 10, LOVE will appear at the Lecture Hall, 107, Upper-street, Islington, in an Illustrated and Philosophical Lecture on the Occult Powers of the Human Voice and its Contributory Organs, a Lecture on Peculiarities of Character, and other Entertainments. On Thursday, April 13, at the Lecture Hall, Wellington-street, North, Strand. On Tuesday, May 2, at the Institution, Wellworth. Begin at Eight o'clock. Tickets, 2s.; Gallery, 1s.; Books, 6d.

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES, Princess's Concert Rooms.—Last Five Nights. MONDAY, APRIL 10, and following Evenings at Nine o'clock precisely. An Instrumental and Vocal Concert of the most Fashionable Character, Mr. Weippert's Full Band, with Vocal and Instrumental Assistance. Conductor, Mr. Weippert. Tickets, 5s.; Single Tickets, 4s.; Triple Tickets, £2 8s., to be had at the Box-office, 33, Regent-street.

OXFORD COMMEMORATION, 1848.—A GRAND MUSICAL FESTIVAL will take place during the ensuing Commemoration at Oxford, consisting of Three Concerts in the Theatre on Tuesday the 4th and Wednesday the 5th of July, and a Performance in the Town Hall on Thursday the 6th of July. Principal Vocalists and Instrumentalists will be duly announced.

WELLINGTON CLUB and METROPOLITAN ATHENÆUM, PALL-MALL, CONCERT.—The FIRST CONCERT is fixed for Tuesday, 11th inst. Mr. Nelson's Quadrilles and Waltzes. Vocal Choruses are expected. Further particulars may be had at the Offices. G. W. LAPP, Secretary. 6th April, 1848.—Offices, 49, Strand.

ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL. GRAY'S-INN-ROAD. His Grace the Duke of BUCCLEUCH, K.G., President.
John Masterman, Esq., M.P., Treasurer.

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY FESTIVAL will take place at the LONDON TAVERN, on THURSDAY, the 13th of APRIL.
The right Honourable the EARL of HARROWBY in the Chair.
STEWARDS

| | |
|---|---|
| The Marquis of Lansdowne, K.G. | The Hon. & Reverend Hugh Pelham Pelham Villiers, M.P. |
| The Marquis of Donegal, G.C.H. | The Rev. Edward Rice, D.D. |
| The Earl of Caledon | Thomas Barnard, Esq |
| The Earl of Dalhousie | Herbert Ingram, Esq |
| The Earl of Effingham | John P. Bell, Esq |
| The Earl of Rosslyn | Wm. Cubitt, Esq., Sheriff, M.P. |
| The Earl of Rothes | Hiber Goodman, Esq |
| The Earl of Zetland | Matthew Forster, Esq., M.P. |
| Viscount Sandon, M.P. | Edmund Hawes, Esq |
| Viscount Lake | The Right Hon. Thomas Milner Gibson, M.P. |
| Lord Southampton | William Hart, Esq |
| Lord Ashburton | R. H. Horne, Esq |
| Viscount Ashbrooke, M.P. | C. W. Lowndes, Esq., M.P. |
| Viscount Bridport, M.P. | T. Mayne Reade, Esq |
| Viscount Lifford, M.P. | Richard Bosworth Berkeley, Esq |
| Lord Alfred Paget, M.P. | Richard Thornton Perkins, Esq |
| Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P. | Alexander Raphael, Esq., M.P. |
| Lord Alfred Paget, M.P. | Charles Rogers, Esq |
| Lord Worsley, M.P. | George Simpson, Esq |
| Sir Charles Douglas, M.P. | John Tidey, Esq., Alderman, M.P. |
| Sir Edward Buxton, M.P. | Thomas Thornton, Esq |
| Sir Culling Eardley, M.P. | J. N. Mayhew, Esq., M.P. |
| Sir Thomas Fremantle, M.P. | John Thomas Ireland, Esq |
| Sir Robert Harry Inglis, Bart., M.P. | George Thompson, Esq., M.P. |
| Sir Stephen Lushington, M.P. | Thomas Wakley, Esq., M.P. |
| Sir Thomas Wilde, M.P. | Wm. Wallace, Esq., M.P. |
| Sir Wm. Wiseman, Bart. | John Walter, Esq |
| Sir John Yarde Buller, Bart., M.P. | John Warren, Esq |
| Sir Culling Eardley, Bart. | W. D. Watson, Esq |
| | John Weyland, Esq |

Contributions received by the Treasurer, John Masterman, Esq., M.P., 8, Nicholas-lane; also by Messrs. Coutts and Co., Drummonds, Barclay and Co., Herries and Co., Barnett and Co., Prescott, Grote and Co. Smith, Payne, and Co.; Glyn and Co., Jones Loyd and Co., Barnard and Co., Dimsdale and Co., Williams Deacons and Co., Gosling and Co., and Remmett-street, Shoreditch, Masterman and Co.; and at the Hospital. By order of the Weekly Board, ELW. RICE, D.D., Chairman.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK

SUNDAY, April 9.—Fifth Sunday in Lent
MONDAY, 10.—The Moon enters her first quarter at 2h. 56m. P.M. The planet Jupiter and the Moon are near together
TUESDAY, 11.—The length of the day is 13h. 33m.; and it is 5h. 48m. longer than the shortest day
WEDNESDAY, 12.—Day breaks at 3h. 5m., and twilight ends at 8h. 58m.
THURSDAY, 13.—The Sun rises at 5h. 11m., and sets at 6h. 52m.
FRIDAY, 14.—Cambridge Term ends.
SATURDAY, 15.—Venus rises at 4h. 30m. A.M.; Mars sets at 9h. 47m. A.M.; Jupiter sets at 1h. 39m. A.M.; Saturn rises at 4h. 18m. A.M.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 15

| Sat. | Monday | Tuesday | Wednesday | Thursday | Friday | Saturday |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| M. | 1 A | M. | A. | M. | A. | M. |
| h. | 1 | h. | h. | h. | h. | h. |
| m. | 2 | m. | m. | m. | m. | m. |
| h. | 3 | h. | h. | h. | h. | h. |
| m. | 4 | m. | m. | m. | m. | m. |
| h. | 5 | h. | h. | h. | h. | h. |
| m. | 6 | m. | m. | m. | m. | m. |
| h. | 7 | h. | h. | h. | h. | h. |
| m. | 8 | m. | m. | m. | m. | m. |
| h. | 9 | h. | h. | h. | h. | h. |
| m. | 10 | m. | m. | m. | m. | m. |
| h. | 11 | h. | h. | h. | h. | h. |
| m. | 12 | m. | m. | m. | m. | m. |
| 6 | 6 | 7 | 7 | 8 | 8 | 9 |
| 17 | 53 | 37 | 57 | 35 | 59 | 20 |
| 7 | 8 | 8 | 8 | 9 | 9 | 10 |
| 35 | 17 | 55 | 35 | 13 | 50 | 8 |

* On Friday afternoon the time of high water is midnight; and during the morning of Saturday there will be no high tide.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"R. F. D."—The Spanish fowl possesses flesh of the best and whitest quality, and acquires it with rapidity; whilst the laying of eggs is very great, and is only surpassed secundum by the Cochin China. The Sussex is also excellent stock. (See a valuable paper "On the Breeds of Poultry best suited to the Farm," by H. D. Richardson, in "The Agricultural and Horticultural Journal of Ireland," No. 1, just published

"Fanz"—"Scraps for Corners" will not suit.

"A Subscriber."—The price of "The Cyclopedia of Practical Receipts" is 7s. 6d.; it may be had by order of any bookseller

"Ruticator."—We suspect the placard to be a publisher's ruse.

"V."—The Art Manufacturer to London are not issued to the public, nor have their prices been fixed. Apply at 12, Old Bond street.

"A Country Subscriber."—We are not aware of the publication of any Dictionary of Short-hand

"Crawley."—There are poisonous wafers made for destroying beetles; or set a deep pan with some linseed oil in it

"E. F. N." Liverpool.—We do not intervene in disputes at cards

"H. T." St. Pancras, will find a view of Old St. Pancras Church in No. XXV. of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

"G. T. N." Leamington.—The excellent Portrait of Madame Anna Thilon appeared in No. CVII. of our Journal The music of the song in question may be had of any music-seller

"An Inquirer."—R.I.P. upon the tomb or Roman Catholics, signifies Requiescat in Pace ("May he or she rest in peace")

"Agricola."—Our queries on the question would not be.

"M. B." should apply at the Companies' Offices respecting the salaries

"A Constant Subscriber," Holywell.—The non-delivery complained of should be stated to the newsmen who supplies the paper

"Novice"—Silver leaf will not stand so well as gold.

"Simon Cuppis."—A description and illustration of Cartelet's Chacken-hatching Apparatus appeared in our Journal for Jan. 8, 1848.

"A Carthusian."—Ink may be removed from paper by a solution of salt of sorrel, or oxalic acid.

"Grandsire."—" Walker's Rhyming Dictionary."

"A. D." —" Lindley's School Botany."

"J. P. B." —"A Young Agriculturist."—" Balmain's Lessons on Chemistry" is a useful work, as also is "The Agricultural Student and Young Agriculturist."

"J. M." Forres.—Ephraim Bonus, etched by Rembrandt, was a Jewish Physician: he is represented coming down a staircase, with his right hand on the balustrade; his head is seen nearly in front, with a high cap on: his face is full. This piece is, perhaps, the finest of Rembrandt's portraits; it bears the date 1647, and is scarce. 2. There is no etching by Rembrandt of an old Jew seated in an easy chair, with his hands clasped. One Correspondent has, probably, got some print after one of Rembrandt's paintings, which is of little or no value.

"C. F.," Moorgate-street, is thanked: but we have not room.

"L. B." Kinsale. The part of an Journal containing the account of the French Revolution, and the large View of Paris, may be had. Price 2s

"C. C." Poonah, is requested to accept our thanks for his obliging offer, though we cannot avail ourselves of the favour.

"L. M. K." Amesbury. Taylor's Short-hand, improved by Harding.

"E. W., Daventry. Reviewed.

"A Subscriber," Bermondsey. 1. The Civil List Allowance, as settled in the year of her Majesty's accession, is £385,000 per annum. 2. About £40,000 per annum. An Irish Subscriber."—The price of "Accidents and Emergencies," published by Churchill, is 6d.; if sent post free, 10d.

"A. B. H. K."—Write to the Secretary to the Art Union of London, Trafalgar-square, Charing Cross.

"H. M." Cannot

"Gunnynote" may obtain of Ackermann, Strand, the orders for viewing the State Apartments in Windsor Castle.

"U.," a Subscriber.—Apply at No. 175, Fleet-street

"J. C. J." "C. B.," "A Dramatic Youth," "Melar," "Humanulus;" "One of the Middle Classes?" "J. R.," "Z. Z." "F. A. D. and W.," "H. H." Dublin.—It does not fall within the province of this Journal to reply to your questions.

"An Old Subscriber"—The solemnization of marriages in Lent is forbidden by Canon law; the prohibition has, however, been disregarded since the Reformation, though it does not appear to have been ever formally repealed. (See Neale's "Feasts and Fasts," p. 219.)

"W. G. M."—The notion that it is illegal to carry an Air Gun is a popular error. It has been more properly regarded as a philosophical toy, except in the few instances where it has been the instrument of covert and cowardly revenge. (See "Popular Errors," explained and illustrated.)

"A Sugar Planter," Berbice.—If the power of attorney that enables your broker to receive your dividends does not also authorise the transfer and sale of stock, to do either would be a forgery, and the Bank of England would replace the amount. In the event of any other person forging your name, the Bank of England are equally responsible. With regard to life annuities, the dividends are payable only in London, but can be received by power of attorney, and readily remitted. A Government annuity is the preferable investment As a spot for retirement, the south coast of England, from Lyme Regis to Plymouth, offers numberless abodes, both sunny and sheltered. Living there is generally cheap; but it must be obvious that to particularise is not in our power

"Inquex," Somerset.—We do not recommend our Journal to be bound in yearly volumes.

"Brooke's Gazetteer, improved by Pardley."

"A Country Gentleman."—The principles of the so-called "Charter" are, universal suffrage, vote by ballot, no property qualification, short parliaments, paying members, &c

"Blockley."—The "Magna Charta" at the British Museum is but the fac simile of a copy of the original Charter

"A Constant Subscriber," Bedford.—Newspapers (2d each) and letters must be pre-paid to Madeira; sent three times a month.

"Druill," Bradford.—Terms preparing for our Journal from the commencement of any Volume are charged 6d. for each No. Odd Numbers, one month old, are charged 1s. each.

"Inkstreille."—The setting of Steel Traps and Spring Guns is a misdemeanour.

"A Z." is recommended to remain at England

"A C. M."—Newspapers may be sent to China via Southampton at 2d. each.

"A Subscriber" should purchase "Three Years in North America"

"A Subscriber" may procure a copy of Robinet's work, "De la Nature," through Dulau and Co., Soho-square

"Interrogeat" will find a definition of Pragmatic (Sanction) in "Buchanan's Technological Dictionary."

"Woodstockensis" is recommended to buy the "Stepney Postal Directory," reprinted from the "Post-Office London Directory" for 1848.

THE REVOLUTION IN BERLIN.—These Illustrations, in the present Number, and in our Journal of last week, are from clever Sketches by Julius Wagner, Ludwig Burger, Adalbert Müller, and F. Weise, al. distinguished Artists of Berlin.

BOOKS, &c. RECEIVED.

Alma Mater, a Satire —Imperial Dictionary. Parts 10 to 14.—Howard's Lectures on Painting, Part 1.—Guvarni in London. —Ord's History of Cleveland.—Memoirs of Admiral Mahanne.—Webster's Royal Red Book. —Prince and England, by Lamartine.

Mosto.—Can a Bosom so gentle remain.—Tell me where do Fairies dwell. —Love and Time.—The Master's Dream.—Lisz the Evergreen, so shall our Friendship be.—Mary, the Village Quean.—The Old Palace.—I'm a Clerk on a Hundred a Year Knitting and Netting and Crochet.—What are the Wild Waves saying?—The Domestic Wife

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1848.

THE Emperor of Russia has at length issued his manifesto against the growing Constitutionalism of the west of Europe. The document is a characteristic one—characteristic of Nicholas, both as a man, and as the despotic ruler of the largest empire in the world. His hatred against France vents itself in violent and unbecoming language. The efforts of the Germans to obtain freedom of the press and responsible Government, moderate and wise as we know them to have been, are stigmatised as audacity. The same efforts in Prussia and Austria are denounced as a "devastating plague," which, in its "blind fury," is menacing even his "own" Russia. By this is meant, we suppose, that particular portion of Russia which the free men of the west of Europe persist in calling Poland The Emperor declares that he is ready to meet any enemies whatsoever, to defend the honour of the Russian name, and the inviolability of the Russian territory. "God is on our side," he exclaims; "understand this, ye peoples, and SUBMIT, for God is on our side." When the peoples of Europe shall understand that the partition of Poland, and the system of spoliation and murder carried on by Russian Emperors, and by none more wickedly than by this, who fulminates this proclamation, is not a crime of the highest magnitude; when they shall understand that God is on the side of robbery and murder—whether the perpetrator of these crimes be a low plebeian of the streets, or the crowned and ermined ruler of a large empire—they may "submit;" but not till then will they acknowledge that God is on the side of the Emperor of Russia.

THE affairs of Italy and Germany continue to complicate themselves, but amidst all their complication there seems every reason to hope that the cause of constitutional freedom will make steady and peaceful progress in both countries. The ambition of the King of Sardinia, to assume the high position of King or Emperor of United Italy, and of Ferdinand William of Prussia, who is playing an equally desperate game for the Empership of United Germany, has been thwarted; and there is little likelihood that either will gain anything but mortification for the pains he has taken. The King of Prussia, like Louis Philippe, was "too late;" and the distrust felt towards him throughout Germany will strengthen and not diminish in the progress of events. The King of Sardinia is so openly swayed by desire of personal aggrandisement rather than by a sincere desire for the freedom and prosperity of Italy, that the opposition he has already excited cannot fail to be increased. The brave Milanese, and the people of the Roman States, to say nothing of the other portions of Italy, are not likely to become the tools of a merely personal ambition; and already the Pope, by sending reinforcements to the Milanese, has taken up a position incompatible with the coveted supremacy of Charles Albert. The details supplied by the daily papers, of the expulsion of the Austrians from Lombardy, are full of interest, and will excite throughout Europe the utmost sympathy and admiration for the courageous and patriotic Milanese. Their struggle has been the noblest yet recorded in this great year of Revolutions.

THE Revenue Returns for the year and quarter ending on the 5th of April show a decrease on the year of £2,218,511, and an increase on the quarter of £408,575. This increase, however, is more apparent than real, and affords no grounds for congratulation, having been caused by the receipt of £455,021 of Chinese compensation money. The decrease under the various heads of Customs, Excise, Stamp Duties, and Property and Income Tax, amounts on the year to £1,694,736, and shows how much the productive and trading classes of the community have suffered and are still suffering. It shows, at the same time, the necessity, and will, we trust, convince our rulers of the expediency and prudence of an immediate and systematic reduction of the national expenditure. The task may be difficult, but it is imperative. The country can bear no new taxes, unless old ones are repealed. If they were imposed, they would be unproductive. The problem remains to be solved in one of two ways—whether expenditure may not be greatly reduced without impairing the efficiency of the public service? or whether, by a total revision of our fiscal system, leading to the relief of industry and to the placing of the public burdens upon the backs best able to bear them, the national revenues may not be rendered more productive? At all events, income and expenditure must be made to meet without additional taxation—without recourse to the easy but pernicious system of adding to the national debt. The Ministry may have no liking for the subject—they may attempt to stave it off, and say with Prince Metternich "after them the deluge;" but if they are wise, they will grapple with it manfully, or, by resigning office, allow others to perform a task which is too great for their genius. The best interests of the country require that there be no further delay or trifling upon a matter so momentous.

THE INTENDED CHARTIST MEETING.

GOVERNMENT PROCLAMATION.

The following proclamation has been published:—

"NOTICE!!

"Whereas the assemblage of large numbers of people, accompanied with circumstances tending to excite terror and alarm in the minds of her Majesty's subjects, is criminal and unlawful;

"And whereas not only those persons who take an active part in such assemblage, but those also who by their presence wilfully countenance it, are acting contrary to law, and are liable to punishment; and whereas an Act of Parliament, passed in the 13th year of the reign of his late Majesty King Charles II., intituled "An Act against tumults and disorders upon pretence of preparing or presenting public petitions or other addresses to his Majesty in the Parliament,' it was enacted, 'that no person or persons whatsoever shall repair to his Majesty or both or either of the Houses of Parliament for the purpose of presenting or delivering any petition, complaint, remonstrance, or declaration, or other addresses, accompanied with excessive numbers of people, nor at any one time with above the number of ten persons:

"And whereas a meeting has been called to assemble on Monday next, the 10th inst., at Kennington-common, and it is announced in the printed notices calling such meeting, that it is intended by certain persons to repair thence in procession to the House of Commons, accompanied with excessive numbers of people, upon pretence of presenting a petition to the Commons House of Parliament; and whereas information has been received that persons have been advised to procure arms and weapons, with the purpose of carrying the same in such procession; and whereas the proposed procession is calculated to excite terror and alarm in the minds of her Majesty's subjects;

"All persons are hereby cautioned and strictly enjoined not to attend, or take part in, or be present at, any such assemblage or procession.

"And all well-disposed persons are hereby called upon and required to aid in enforcing the provisions of the law, and effectually to protect the public peace, and suppress any attempt at the disturbance thereof.

(Signed) "C. ROWAN,
"R. MAYNE,
"Commissioners of the Police of the Metropolis.

"Metropolitan Police-office, Whitehall-place, April 6, 1848."

THE REVENUE.

The official report of the Revenue Returns for the year and quarter ending Wednesday the 5th instant, have been published, and they show a decrease on the whole year of £2,218,511, while for the quarter, as compared with the corresponding quarter of last year, there is an increase of £408,575. The items of this increase are in "the ordinary revenue:"—Excise, £349,736; Taxes, £13,010; Property Tax, £8568; and Post Office, £9000, making a sum of £781,314, which is added "Other items," giving a total of £979,335, from which the decrease on the other items of revenue in the quarter (which includes a decrease in Customs of £55,023) being deducted, the balance in favour of increase in the sum above given, viz. £408,575.

The increase under the head of "taxes" seems to be attributable to the unusual activity of the collectors, which had been generally noticed for some time past.

In only two items of the ordinary revenue is there an increase on the year; and in both there is an increase on the quarter also One of these items is "taxes," already adverted to. The other item is "property:" it is the "Post-office," and an increase of £46,000 on the year and £9000 on the quarter shows that, amid all official impediments and the obstacles of a distracted time, the inherent soundness of the new system continues to assert and vindicate its value.

In the ordinary revenue the increase on the quarter is about £70,000

The main features of the falling off on the whole year can be little matter of surprise, as the discussions in Parliament already prepared the public for a deficit very nearly approaching the amount now officially published.

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the past week has been of a most unusual kind, and altogether different from that due to the season. It has been distinguished by several days whose temperature exceeded that for the average for the season by seven degrees, ranging from 59° to 176°. The great change in the aspect of temperature was sudden. On March 21 the average temperature for the day was 38°, and on April 3 and 4 it was 69° nearly on both days. The transition was almost that from winter to summer

The following are some particulars of each day.—

On Thursday the sky was mostly covered by cloud till towards the evening; at night it was clear. The direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature of the day was 53°, being nearly 10° above the average for the season. On Friday the sky was mostly covered by cumuli, cirro-cumuli, and cirri till night, and cloudy the other part; the direction of the wind was S.E., and the average temperature of the day was 55°, exceeding the average for the season by 12°. On Saturday the sky was nearly cloudless throughout the day; there were gentle airs from the N.E., but at times the air was in a calm state, the temperature was again high, its average value was 56°, on Monday the sky was nearly cloudless, and the day was fine; and its average temperature was 59°. On Tuesday, the sky was rather more cloudy than it was on Monday, but the day was fine; its average temperature was 59°. On Wednesday, the sky was mostly covered by a thin cirrostratus; the day was fine, and its average temperature was 59°, still exceeding the average value for the season by 8°, although it was 7° less than the value for the preceding day. The average temperature of the air for the week ending this day was 56°.

The extreme thermometrical readings for each day were:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Thursday, March 30, the highest during the day was 61 deg., and the lowest was 45 deg. | | |
| Friday, | March 31, | 71° ..... 40 |
| Saturday, | April 1, | 72 ..... 40 |
| Sunday, | April 2, | 73 ..... 41 |
| Monday, | April 3, | 70 ..... 44 |
| Tuesday, | April 4, | 74 ..... 45 |
| Wednesday, | April 5, | 65 ..... 42 |

Blackheath, Thursday, April 6, 1848. J. G.

PRINCE METTERNICH.—Prince Metternich arrived at Arnheim on Saturday He alighted with his suite at the Hotel at Hof Van Holland. He was slightly indisposed, but intends to go to London, vid Rotterdam, in a few days.

REVOLUTIONS AND ARTISTS.—The Revolutions at Vienna by like causes, and only arrived on Thursday. Mdlle. Taglioni has not yet reached London, but is expected every moment.

STREET OF ARMS AT THE PUBLIC OFFICES.—Government is taking every precaution, in case there should be any manifestation of an outbreak among the working classes, who, it is stated, are to assemble, on Monday next, on Kennington-common. A large supply of firearms and cuirasses have been sent from the Tower to the East India-house, and their different warehouses, the Custom-house, Excise-office, the Post-office, Bank of England, the Mansion-house, the various departments at Somerset-house, the Ordnance-office, Pall-mall, the Admiralty, and the different Government offices at the West-end, also to a great many of the banking-houses in the City, and the dock companies. The clerks and persons employed in these establishments will be ready to act, if absolutely necessary, against any outrage that may be committed by the mob. The swearing-in of special constables is proceeding rapidly in Lambeth, Walworth, Camberwell, the Borough, and the districts on the Surrey side of the water, where the tradespeople and householders all show their desire to protect the public peace if called upon.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

The Income-Tax Bill passed through committee, and was ordered to be reported on Monday next.—Adjourned

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

THE CHARTIST PROCESSION

A long and desultory discussion took place on this subject, emanating from a question put to Sir G. Grey; and in reply to which the right hon. Baronet repeated the intention of the Government to persevere in the course they had already indicated

Mr. F. O'Connor denied he had ever contemplated a violation of the peace in the proposed proceedings of Monday, or that he had spoken in favour of a violent course being adopted

Mr. Alderman Thompson read a report of a speech, which was far from being of a pacific or constitutional character, and which he declared was delivered a few nights ago at a private meeting in a coffee house in Cripplegate (City), by the hon. member for Nottingham (Mr. F. O'Connor)

Mr. F. O'Connor denied his having uttered the sentiments attributed to him; and, after a somewhat angry discussion, the subject dropped.

PROTECTION OF THE CROWN AND GOVERNMENT.

Sir G. Grey moved for leave to bring in a bill to provide for the better security of the Crown and Government of the United Kingdom. His proposal was to assimilate the law of treason in Ireland to the law of treason in England, by extending, in the former country, the 36th of Geo. III., which very much enlarged the general law of treason, but which had never prevailed in Ireland. He purposed, however, in so extending the law to modify its provisions so as not to render the punishments less severe. For treasonable speaking and writing, which would be declared felony, the punishment would be transportation for life, subject to the discretion of the Judge to reduce the period to seven years. That portion of the law which related to seditious speaking would be henceforth applied to the whole of the United Kingdom; and it comprised speaking with the intention of misleasing or insulting the death of the Queen or overawing Parliament.

Mr. Hume, Mr. F. O'Connor, Mr. J. O'Connell, and other hon. members opposed the motion, which, on a division, was carried by a majority of 283 to 34.

The Landlord and Tenant Bill (Ireland) was read a second time, and ordered to be referred to a Select Committee.—Adjourned at half-past one o'clock.

Windsor, Friday.—A rumour has been current in the town during yesterday and to-day, to the effect that her Majesty will arrive at Frogmore House (the Castle not being in a fit state, from the number of works in progress connected with the Jubilee, for the reception of the Court) to-morrow afternoon, and remain there until Monday. It is stated that this arrangement has been determined upon in order that her Majesty might have the earliest intelligence (by means of electric telegraph from Paddington to Slough) of the proceedings of the Chartists on Monday; on the afternoon of which day, her Majesty, according to the rumour, will leave for the Farnborough station en route to the Isle of Wight. The upholsterers and other tradesmen, are now busily engaged in making the necessary preparations at Frogmore, for the Duchess of Kent, who will arrive tomorrow afternoon, from town. It is stated that the state rooms at her Royal Highness' residence are being prepared than usual; and this circumstance may have given rise to the rumour referred to, which may have no other foundation.

Mr Curzon has been re-elected M P for Ryc

Resignation of Alderman Hughes.—This gentleman has sent his resignation of the office of Alderman for Broad-street Ward (to which he was elected in 1843) to the Lord Mayor, and such resignation he (Sir Chas. Pearson) will officially announce at the next meeting of the Court of Aldermen. Mr. Lawrence, builder, is the only candidate at present announced for the vacant gown

The Queen v. Cuttebeara. The trial of Mr Cuttebera on a criminal information filed against him for the publication of a libel reflecting on the character of the Bishop of Manchester, and imputing to the Right Rev. Prelate the crimes of drunkenness, falsehood, and neglect of his duty as a Christian pastor, commenced at Warwick on Monday, before Chief Justice Wilde The Right Rev. Prelate appeared as a witness, and was subjected to a rigorous cross-examination by the defendant, who conducted his case in person. The trial occupied the greater part of the week, and on Friday (yesterday), Chief Justice Wilde having summed up, the Jury returned a verdict of Guilty against the defendant, who will be brought up for judgment in the course of next term, which begins on the 15th instant.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

Reports were current on Thursday evening that M. Garnier Pagès, the present Minister of Finance, is to take the Marine Department in the place of M Arago, who has been Minister of War. M. Achelle Fould, during the Commission already appointed has been spoken of as successor of M. Pagès. M. Fould is a banker and an eminent authority on financial matters

The elections of officers for the National Guard have been concluded. M. Clement Thomas has been declared Colonel of the 2nd Legion. In the 12th Legion, the well known Barbes has been elected; and in the 11th, the celebrated professor and writer, Jubinal. The 6th Legion has elected M. Lagrange; the 7th, M. Dauphin; the 8th, M. Bourdon; and the 9th, M. Yautier; and the cavalry legion, M. Trelat. None of the gentlemen elected, except M. Quinet and M Barbes, are much known out of France

In order to remove the objection which exists as to the elections for the N. tional Assembly taking place on a Sunday, the Minister of Public Worship and Justice has ordered that the poll shall be kept open also on the Sunday

Lyons papers arrived yesterday (Friday), to contradict the account of the revolution in Savoy, and the proclamation of the Republic at Chambery, which has appeared in some papers.

AUSTRIA

We learn by a letter from Prague of the 24th ult., that some disturbances had taken place in that city, on account of the answer given at Vienna to the deputation which went up to demand reforms not being considered satisfactory. The students declared that if the reforms were not acceded, they would capture the arsenal

A letter from Gratz, in Styria, of the 27th of March, says that Count Mazzacheld had sent the news there that a column of 30,000 Piedmontese, Swiss, &c., who used to march from Switzerland on Milan, had not only been defeated, but almost destroyed.

PRUSSIA

The new law of elections is said to have been received with universal satisfaction by the people. At a preparatory meeting of the Deputies, they agreed to consent to the projects for the new Code, without any discussion, and to move a vote of confidence in the Ministry The Diet was to meet again on Tuesday last, and, agreeable to the feelings and wishes of the people, would most likely be dissolved on that or the next following day

The Exhibition of Arts at Berlin was to open on Sunday, the 9th instant (tomorrow) It is said that the present will be the best that has ever been seen. It takes place in the building belonging to the academy

All labour in prisons and in barracks is to be abolished, in order that the State may not come into competition with the working classes.

The news of the arrival of the Prince of Prussia in London has excited some attention at Berlin. The commercial affairs of that capital, we learn, are daily growing worse. On last Saturday, a large banker, of the name of Ri ch, suspended payment; his debts are said to amount to more than three millions of dollars, and his property will not pay more than twelve groschen in every thaler, about six shillings in the pound. Four other well-known names, also, have been mentioned

The lower orders are becoming excited against the newly established clubs. On Sunday evening the political clubs were threatened with a visit by a mob of four or five hundred armed men, amongst whom were some members of the burgher guard. On nearing the locality where the club held its sittings, they were met by one of the members, Herr von Halvendorff, who begged of them before they proceeded to attack the club, to send some of their body of taste number into the place of meeting, that they might see, hear, and judge for themselves. This judicious advice was acted upon, and during the absence of their commissioners the mob remained quietly assembled in their rear. On their reappearance they made a short communication to the mob, and after a little discussion it immediately separated without attempting anything against the club. There are no doubt urged on by a class of men who are using their utmost endeavours to put this particular club down, and who declare that most of its members are French Communists and Red Poles, whose only aim is to disturb the returning peace and quiet of the country

The Breslau papers continue to present the most melancholy statements of the distress in Silesia. Many parts of Prussian Poland: they are mostly among the agricultural labourers and small farmers against the landed proprietors. In one of them it is stated that in Russian Poland, whenever any person is caught reading a newspaper and he is immediately seized, and sent hung upon the nearest tree. The papers contain no news whatever from Warsaw

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

On Monday, at Rendsburgh, the first sitting of the General Assembly of Schleswig Holstein, convened by the Provisional Government of the united duchies, took place in the theatre, which was densely filled at the commencement of the proceedings, and so continued to their close. There were seventy-five members present. The propos. of the Provisional Government for the annexation of Schleswig to the Germanic Union was carried with but two dissentients. The resolutions of the General Assembly on that day embraced the following objects:

1. The appointment of a provisional administration for the future government of the country.

2. The nomination of a committee for preparing a draft of a constitution for the independent state of Schleswig Holstein.

3. The union, for the present, of the existing taxes.

4. Confirmation of the proposition of the Provisional Government for union of Schleswig with the Germanic Confederation.

5. Approval of the proclamations of the Provisional Government, securing—1, the right of public assembly and discussion; 2, the arming of the burghers; and 3, the freedom of the press.

The Bishopric of Chester.—On Friday (last week) Dr. Graham was elected Bishop of Chester by the Dean and Chapter, in accordance with the recommendation of her Majesty

Attorneys in Gowns.—On Thursday, in the City Small Debts Court, no little surprise was evinced at some of the attorneys entering the court in black gowns, which, it is said, they are entitled to wear One also wore the white bands similar to a barrister. The high bailiff also wore a gown for the first time. No order, however, had been given for that purpose.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

MORTALITY IN THE METROPOLIS

Number of deaths from all causes registered in the week ending Saturday, April 1, 1848 .. .. .. .. 1294

| | Population Enumerated. 1841. | Average weekly Deaths 1838-7. 3 Winters. | Deaths in the Week |
|---|---|---|---|
| West Districts | 300,711 | 161 | 186 |
| North Districts | 376,971 | 209 | 232 |
| Central Districts | 54,111 | 26 | 21 |
| East Districts | 141 | 24 | 31 |
| South Districts | 2 | 29 | 34 |
| Totals. | 1,148,42 | 1,107 | 1,294 |

| | |
|---|---|
| Males | 650 |
| Females | 644 |
| Total | 1,294 |

BIRTHS IN THE WEEK

| | |
|---|---|
| Males | 830 |
| Females | 842 |
| Total | 1,672 |

PUBLIC MEETINGS

Marylebone Vestry.—On Saturday last a meeting of the vestry of St. Marylebone took place, the Rev. Dr. Spry in the chair. An address to her Majesty, on the birth of a Princess, was brought up and read; considerable discussion ensued. Ultimately: the three first paragraphs were unanimously adopted, the remainder of the address being considered ill-timed and unnecessary by several of the speakers, with whom the majority of the meeting concurred The vestry clerk then read a petition for adoption, with regard to the destruction of property in the metropolis and other parts of the kingdom during the late riots, and praying for protection. After some discussion, the petition was unanimously adopted. Monday, the 8th of May, was fixed for the annual election of vestrymen, after which the meeting separated

London Provident Institution.—Savings' Bank of the Moorfields District.—The pressure of the times seems not to have spared this institution The report of the superintending committee for the quarter ending 20th November last, shows a decrease of three hundred and ninety-seven in the number of counts, and of £117,165 in the aggregate balance; the actual repayments, exclusive of the expenses, have been £334,902 16s. 10d., while the receipts were only £254,350 14s. 9d., exclusive of the interest received of the Government. The total number of transactions has not varied much from the last year, although the receipts have decreased 3630 in number, and the payments have increased 3793 as compared with the previous year Never since the year 1838 has there been a decrease of such magnitude in the funds of this institution. One of the most prominent causes for the withdrawals of the deposits appearing to be the reduction of the rate of interest, the committee with a view to aid the depositors, and to prevent any further decrease in the funds, have resolved to fix the Government rate of interest, viz., 2½ per cent. A statement of the payments and receipts for the year, are urging him to raise interest again to its former rate; and they understand that other institutions have adopted a similar course, but as yet no answer to their application has received

Meeting on account of Railway Workmen Expelled from France. A Public Meeting of the engineers, engine-men, &c., employed on the English lines of railway, was held on Monday night at the Green Man, Foley-street, to take into consideration the situation of their fellow-countrymen recently employed on French railways, and to give expression to a warm feeling of sympathy in behalf of the English workmen who have been expelled from France by the recent revolution, in many instances with the loss of their tools and furnitures, a loss which amongst this class alone is estimated at not less than £3000 The meeting was very fully attended. Mr. J Ward, the chairman, read several letters connected with the subject, and the following resolution was unanimously carried "That this meeting having heard the statements of their fellow working men who had been violently expelled from France and robbed of their property and deprived of their wages, after having been induced from this country to undertake works there, are of opinion that they are peculiarly entitled to public sympathy in their present distressed and unfortunate situation." A resolution was also carried, that the sum, consisting of engineers, drivers, and fitters, now engaged in various lines of English ways, do most heartily concur in the propriety of a subscription being immediately entered into for the purpose of relieving the necessities already subjected to prosecute the claims of the injured parties to compensation, in such mode as they shall be advised to adopt, and pledging the meeting to support the subscription." The principal parties who addressed the meeting were Mr. Dixon, of the South-Eastern Railway; Mr. Dyer, of the London and Brighton Railway; Mr Simpson, of the Great Western Railway; and Mr. Scott, of the South-Eastern Railway The meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman

The Royal Society.—The Marquis of Northampton, as president of the Royal Society, gave his annual grand entertainment to the council of that learned body on Saturday last, at his Lordship's mansion on the Terrace, Piccadilly. The noble Marquis was supported (right and left) by Sir Robert Inglis, M P., and Mr. George Rennie The following members of the council were also of the party: Sir James Clark, Sir Henry de la Beche, Mr T. Graham (Vice-President of the Society), Dr. Robert Brown, Mr. J. T. Graves, M A., Mr. W. Hopkins, M.A., Mr. G. B. Porter, Mr. J. P. Gassiot, Mr. F. Baily, Mr. S Cooper, Dr. Roget, and Mr. S. H. Christie, M.A., the English Secretaries, and Lieut.-Colonel Sabine, R.A., the foreign Secretary to the Society. Viscount Alford and Lord William Compton, the former a son-in-law, and the latter son of the noble President, had the honour of joining the party. After the banquet, the company, numbering a third less than the present season, on which occasion his Lordship was honoured with the presence of his Royal Highness the Prince Consort, and one of the most crowded assemblies of the season, the rooms being filled to repletion together within the walls of his hospitable mansion. The meeting was also rendered more than usually interesting by the generally-understood fact that the noble Marquis is about to resign the chair of President of the Society at the next meeting on the 10th inst. will be the last which will take place under the immediate auspices of his Lordship This circumstance was the subject of frequent remark on Saturday evening, and very sincere expressions of regret escaped in several quarters at the determination of the noble Marquis to retire from his high and honourable office. The saloons were as usual studded with works of art and models of new inventions. Among the most interesting relics we observed was a rough sketch-book filled by the pencil of Salvator Rosa, the contribution of Mr. Auldjo. His Royal Highness Prince Albert arrived at half-past nine o'clock, attended by the Marquis of Aberdeen, Lord George Lennox, and Colonel Seymour.

Metropolitan Commission of Sewers. A general court of the Commissioners for Sewers for the Metropolis was held at seven o'clock on Saturday. Resolutions, vindicating the commissioners from the charges of extravagance which had been brought against them, and declaring that, in their opinion, it was necessary that a triangulation and block survey of the metropolis should be completed, were adopted, and were agreed to. The following resolutions were also proposed "11. That it be recommended to the Court to order rates to be raised for defraying the expense of completing the survey. 12. That powers be sought to complete the work, and to replace the requisite immediate outlay by money borrowed at interest, and to repay by equal annual instalments of principal and interest the money so borrowed." But the consideration of these was postponed

City Commission of Sewers.—On Tuesday the Commissioners sat at Guildhall upon general business. Sussex-hall Literary Institution claimed exemption from sewers rates upon the ground of being used for literary, scientific, and charitable purposes. The question was referred to a committee for the consideration of the law officers of the Crown. It was reported to the board that Mr. Walker and other eminent engineers had willingly undertaken the survey of examining and reporting upon the sewers constructed under the authority of the City Commissioners, but it was necessary that they should be supplied with certain plans and maps, &c. The surveyor stated that the plans and maps were in a very confused state and would be completed in two or three weeks. Adjourned

Chartist Meetings.—Clerkenwell.—On Monday at a public meeting, called by the London Chartists, was held on Clerkenwell-green, "for the purpose of electing three fit and proper persons to represent the metropolis in the National Chartist Convention." The chair was taken by Mr. Dixon; and after speeches by Jones, Clark, and other Chartist orators, Messrs. Bronterre O'Brien, Cuffey, and Clark were elected delegates to the National Convention, which commenced its proceedings on Tuesday. The meeting, which numbered about 1500 persons, quietly dispersed about three o'clock. A strong body of police were in attendance, but their services were not required, no breach of the peace having occurred

Chartist National Convention. The delegates met last by the different large towns of Great Britain, "to assist in carrying the People's Charter," assembled at the Literary Institution, John-street, Fitzroy-square, on Monday, and sat from day to day during the week, under the presidency of Mr. Philip M'Grath. Mr. Feargus O'Connor, M.P., was present during the proceedings. The Convention consists of 49 Chartist delegates from every part of the kingdom, assembled to concert measures for the presentation of the "People's Petition" for the Charter, which will be presented to the House of Commons by Mr. Feargus O'Connor, on Monday next, on 10th inst. The petition is announced, will contain 5,000,000 signatures, and will be conveyed to the House of Commons by a procession of 300,000 persons. A circular has been issued, headed "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity," calling upon all the working men in the metropolis to accompany the procession to the House of Commons, each trade marching with its respective insignia and banners, and assembling at Kennington-common on the morning of the 10th inst. The proposal to be taken is over Blackfriars-bridge and along Fleet-street and the Strand to Trafalgar-square and the Houses of Parliament, unless in the interval the authorities should interfere to prevent the inconvenience and suspension of business which always ensue when crowded assemblages and processions take possession of the busy thoroughfares of the metropolis. During the last few Chartist meetings have been held in every district of London, and in large towns, and at many of these assemblages the language of the chief men of the most revolutionary character. It is expected that the deliberations of the National Convention are regarded by the Chartist body with great interest, as the delegates will have to deliberate upon the "decisive measures" necessary to be adopted should the House of Commons reject the prayer of the "monster petition."

COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Saturday, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen, at Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, attended by Colonel Seymour, Equerry in Waiting. The Royal children took their usual walks and rides. His Royal Highness Prince Albert honoured the Marquis of Northampton with his company in the evening, at his residence in Piccadilly

On Sunday, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Ladies and Gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household attended Divine Service in the private chapel in Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent attended the afternoon service in the private chapel, in the Palace. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice took their accustomed pony and walking exercise Her Royal Highness the Princess Helena was taken an airing in the Royal gardens. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty in the evening, at Buckingham Palace.

On Tuesday evening her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent honoured performance at Her Majesty's Theatre with her presence. Her Royal Highness attended by Lady Augusta Bruce, Sir George Couper, and Lord Jermay. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge and the Princess Mary, and his Serene Highness Prince Frederick of Hesse, honoured the performance at the Royal Italian Opera with their presence. Their Royal Highnesses were attended by Baroness Bose, Baron Knesebeck, and Mr. Edmond Mildmay

On Wednesday the Queen took an airing in the garden of Buckingham Palace. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, at ended by Major Stephens, honoured the performance of the Vocal Concert of Ancient Music, at the Hanover-square Rooms, with his presence in the evening Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent took an airing in a carriage. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester visited the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, at Cambridge house

The Court removed to the Isle of Wight from Buckingham Palace on Saturday (this day)

The Queen's Visit to Ireland.—It is stated in a positive manner that her Majesty has determined to visit Ireland about the first week in July next, it is asserted that the Lord-Lieutenant has received an intimation that Dublin Castle and the Viice-Regal Lodge in the Phœnix Park will be repaired for the accommodation of the Royal family during their sojourn in this country. Dublin Evening Post contains the following paragraph. "Rumours prevail we generally hear, that it is the intention of her Majesty to visit her royal city of this about the beginning of July next. These reports prevail in the high circles; but, although we do not vouch for their accuracy, we should confess hope that it may soon be in our power to make an authentic announcement the determination of our beloved Sovereign to afford the Irish people a family of exhibiting their devoted attachment to her person and throne

The Orleanist Exiles The Count and Countess de Neuilly, with the members of their family circle, remain in the strictest retirement at Claremont. Nothing can exceed the plain and unostentatious manner in which the household of the illustrious exiles is ordered, the most rigid economy being observed in all its arrangements The Count and Countess, since their arrival at Claremont, have received visits from a very number of their old and nobility. The following gentlemen have made themselves voluntary exiles with the King, and remain with the family at Claremont:—General Dumouriez, Duchess, General d'Orsonfosse, M. Vatrout, the ex-King's Notaries, and Dr Pigache, physician to the exiled family. The Countess Mountjoy has been in attendance on the ex-Queen Not the least to be prized in the catalogue of Nothing can exceed the plain and unostentatious manner in which the household of the ex-Royal family from the Tuileries. Many of these had been in the service for years, during which time they had, of course, amassed considerable property in presents and other things, of which not the value of a single sixpence was saved by any one of the

The Prince of Prussia.—Lord John Russell paid a complimentary visit to Prince Hardenberg, the Prussian Minister, at the levee on Monday, at the Prussian Legation, on Carlton House-terrace. His Serene Highness Prince Frederick of Hesse also honoured the Prince with a visit in the course of the same morning. The Prince took equestrian exercise in the afternoon, horses having been provided from the Royal stables; and in the evening honoured the theatre performance at Drury-lane Theatre with his presence His Royal Highness was a great number of complimentary visits from members of the Corps Diplomatique in the course of the week

The Rev. James Blomfield, rector of Ingoldsby, in Lincolnshire, and brother to the member for Westminster, was married on Tuesday last, at Bromley Chapham, the new Bishop of Chester, in the manner usual on such occasions.

THE ROMAN CARNIVAL.

The sojourn of one of our most successful Artists in Rome has enabled us to illustrate in our Journal the great event of the year in the Eternal City—the Carnival

The Festival has been too often described by tourists to render necessary any explanation of its glories A Correspondent of The Examiner, a faithful judge, duly commenced) tells us, of this year's Carnival, that both in carnival-making than the unfailing good temper, modesty, and sobriety which prevail amidst such general license. The adjacent streets, within hearing of the merry Corso, within sight of its grotesque maskers, and sometimes, too, within range of a wet shot from its minute artillery of confetteri, bouquets, and other less refined and less graceful ammunition, are as quiet and orderly as at other times. Even the Corso itself, an hour or two after the Ripresa dei barbi removed to its wonted gravity; nor is there at any time, even in the midst of the fray, anything at all on the surface to remind one of those scenes which so invariably accompany an English race-course or village fair. How no doubt there is a darker side to this picture (it is very improbable that it should be otherwise—children are not always good on a holiday); but if all were as innocent as it appears, the Church would not whisper the warnings and admonitions which she does, both on the approach and during the celebration of the Carnival.

"You already know as much as I can tell you of the gay frivolities of the Corso; the brightly decorated balconies, equipages, and playful cannonading; the race of the little ridiculous horses at the end of each day's entertainments; and, as the ordinary finale of the whole, though this year omitted, as a slight expression of sympathy with our suffering brothers in London," of the ran the anonymous address distributed among the people, in which "this little sacrifice" was requested of them—the pretty illumination of the moccoli, with the accompanying but good-humoured struggle between evening and first-passenger h ager to preserve his own light, and to put out his neighbour's. The private theatricals and the Carnevale Sentifacata are not so notorious."

"Think, then, for what may be called the Church Carnival, or the Carneval Santifeato. There are the regular spiritual exercises, or retreats, which both the Jesuits and the Passionists give at this time in their respective houses to those who are able to leave their business, and shut themselves up in a monastery during the whole ten days; there is the beautiful devotion of the Via Crucis, practised in the Coliseum every afternoon of the Carnival by members of the third order of St. Francis, and only during the week of Lent; and there is a choice to accompany them; and this is followed by a collection as soon as the procession has returned to their church of SS. Cosmo and Damiano in the Forum. There are also similar exercises, but of a more private kind, at the most attractive feature of all in the ecclesiastical aspect of Rome during these days is undoubtedly the Quarant' Ore, which is now branched with more than ordinary splendour in numerous churches at once It was set up on Sunday, for instance, in St. Peter's, in St. Mary Major's, in Sta. Maria della Scala, and, more splendidly than in any of these, in the Gesù "The entertainments in the colleges consist of plays, the scenes, dresses, and acting, a great deal better than the average of public performances; between the acts are choruses, and overtures, all very good, and executed either by the students or their friends.

The Race is, however, one of the most striking out-door scenes. The horses are without riders, but they have spurs, sheets of tin, and all sorts of things about them, to urge them on: a rope is stretched across the end of the street, and the horses are brought up in a line to it; that is, as nearly as possible, for the steeds seem actually wild, plunging and kicking about tremendously trying to get over the rope, so eager do they seem for the start. In a second two the rope is let go, and away the horses fly, at a fearful rate, down the Corso, which is crowded with people, and presents a dense mass of heads, on four, and a hundred-weight is ammunition for a carriage-full of roisterers, such as we see in the foreground of the picture. The costumes are gay, varied, and picturesque

Another Correspondent of The Examiner says the diversions of the day begin with four discharges of cannon "They were carried on with more than usual spirit. On the day the horse-race came, which on all other carnivals days a last amusement. The same horse was which had won me of the previous days and which some men, jealous of the repeated success, attempted to stop in the Ripresa dei Barberi on the night before. No glass appeared, short time the Corso began to thin; and, so the Carnival ended street, as I was going home, I saw one man lead enough to show a moccolo (a taper which was forbidden), but he was obliged, by the cries of the crowd, to extinguish it immediately. A Carnival senza moccolo will long be remembered. It will be one of the tricks which will take place among the great events of the new anno mirabile, 1848.

THE CARNIVAL AT ROME.

THE START FOR THE RACE IN THE CORSO.

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

ZULEIKA. PAINTED BY O'NEILL.

In our first notice of the present Exhibition of the British Institution, we commended this work as a very sweetly-painted head, excellent in detail.

Zuleika is "the Bride of Abydos," and one of the loveliest of the female characters of Lord Byron's poems. How touching is the noble poet's portraiture of this "Child of Gentleness!"—

"Fair as the first that fell of womankind,
When on that dread, yet lovely serpent smiling,
Whose image then was stamp'd upon her mind
But once beguiled—and evermore beguiling;
Dazzling as that, oh! too transcendent vision,
To Sorrow's phantom-people slumber given,
When heart meets heart again in dreams Elysian,
And paints the lost on Earth received in Heaven;
Soft as the memory of buried love;
Pure as the prayer which Childhood wafts above.

"Was she—the daughter of that rude old Chief,
Who met the maid with tears—but not of grief,
Who hath not proved how feebly words essay
To fix one spark of Beauty's heavenly ray?
Who doth not feel, until his fading sight
Faints into dimness with its own delight,
His changing cheek, his sinking heart confess
The might—the majesty of Loveliness?

"Such was Zuleika—such around her shone
The nameless charms unmark'd by her alone;
Its light of love, the purity of grace,
The mind, the music breathing from her face,
The heart whose softness harmonised the whole,
And, oh! that eye was in itself a soul!

"Her graceful arms in meekness bending
Across her gently budding breast;
At one kind word those arms extending
To clasp the neck of him who blest
His [illegible] breast,
Zuleika [illegible]
His [illegible] melt:
Not that against her fancied weal
His heart though stern could ever feel;
Affection chain'd her to that heart;
Ambition tore the links apart."

Mr. George Ellis says: "Never was there a more faultless character more delicately or more justly delineated" than that of Zuleika. "Her piety, her intelligence, her strict sense of duty, and her undeviating love of truth, appear to have been originally blended in her mind, rather than inculcated by education. She is always natural, always attractive, always affectionate; and it must be admitted that her affections are not unworthily bestowed."

The epigraphs are from that elegant work, "the Gallery of Byron Beauties."

ZULEIKA.—PAINTED BY O'NEILL.

JOSEPH INTERPRETING THE DREAM OF THE CHIEF BAKER. PAINTED BY SIR GEORGE HAYTER, M.A.S.L.

We spoke in high terms of this important picture, in the Exhibition notice, in our Journal of Feb. 19. In the Catalogue it has the following:—

Joseph, having interpreted the Dream of the Chief Butler of Pharaoh (Osirtasen the First), is interpreting the Dream of the Chief Baker.

And Joseph answered, and said, This is the interpretation thereof:
Yet within three days shall Pharaoh lift up thy head from off thee, and hang thee on a tree: &c.—Genesis, xl., 18, 19

We are in possession of these interesting facts connected with the composition of the Picture, which appears to be a commission given to the Painter by the Rev. Mr. Finch, so long ago as 1818! The Artist's first composition, varying very little from the Picture as it is painted, was made in the above year; and the Sketch was shown to Sir Thomas Lawrence, who was much struck with the qualities of the story as a subject for the pencil, and he kindly encouraged the Artist to proceed with the Picture. A few days subsequently it was bruited that Sir Thomas Lawrence had proposed the subject to the Students of the Royal Academy, for the Gold Medal Prize. Mr. Hayter, not feeling himself justified in competing with the younger students, then gave up the idea of painting the Picture. The friend who had given him the commission, however, from time to time, pressed the subject on his recollection, so that he never entirely lost sight of it. One of the results has been, that the magnificent work by Rosellini, on Egypt (published in the interim), has supplied the painter with much valuable information; and the learned Jew, Dr. Loëwe's knowledge of the ancient race of Egypt has suggested a beautiful type for the Joseph. With these great advantages, came the costume of the 12th dynasty of Egypt: in short, nothing has been introduced into the picture which is not guaranteed by authority. The second Pyramid was built 200 years previously to Joseph's being in Egypt; and both are seen from the site of the prison to this day. It must always be borne in mind that the Chief Butler and the Chief Baker were great lords, princes, and priests, from their office. The Lord High Steward, and the Seigneur presiding over all the Corn Lands of Egypt, [are the two persons in question.

We have only to add, that for a correct anatomical detail, as well as composition, this Picture deserves very high praise, and the circumstances we have detailed enhance its authoritative value

JOSEPH INTERPRETING THE DREAM OF PHARAOH'S CHIEF BAKER.—PAINTED BY SIR GEORGE HAYTER, M.A.S.L.

EXHIBITION AT THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS

CARRICK express but one opinion, as far as we have heard, of the present exhibition at the Society of British Artists. Though, in some respects, an advance on former years, it is an Exhibition of only very average excellence. We had been led to look for something better,—for the works sent in we know were numerous, and some of the exhibitors were of high and well-merited reputation; while we were aware, and on this we relied, perhaps prematurely, that the Society had established a School of Art, from which, though of recent origin, much might be effected even in a short period. The seed, it is true, is sown, but we must wait to let the plant grow before we look for the fruit. In the meantime there is much to commend in what the Society has already accomplished, and in this, its second Exhibition since its charter of incorporation, it is easy to find several works of no ordinary excellence, which patrons may purchase and critics commend with equal safety. The exhibition consists of eight hundred works of art, contributed by 338 different exhibitors. Landscapes, as heretofore, form the staple of the exhibition, and some of these are of considerable truth and beauty. Mr. Pyne, to whom the palm of excellence must incontestibly be awarded, exhibits altogether nine, his great work being No. 106—"Pallanza, on the Lago Maggiore, North Italy"—in which he has sought to embody, as he tells us, the poetry and feeling of the following lines:

> "Clear and transparent lies the silver lake;
> Far-seen mossy forms its peaceful surface break;
> And calm and deep beneath its placid breast,
> Glittering, a lovely landscape lies at rest."

This is really a very wonderful work for truth, beauty, perspective, and distances. It is, in many respects, by far the finest work in the Exhibition, and in every way a better picture than his view on the Lago Maggiore of last year. One can fancy what a panorama would be like painted by Mr. Pyne, who, it is evident, comprehends so thoroughly the resources of his art and all the sound and mysterious principles of perspective.

[After Mr. Pyne, and in the same landscape line of art, Mr. J. W. Allen, Mr. A. Glint, Mr. M. Nixon, junior, and Mr. Tennant, make the greatest figure in the Exhibition. Mr. Allen has a fine eye for lanes and water-mills; Mr. Clint for bays and broad places; Mr. Wilson for waves and stormy skies; and Mr. Tennant for rocks and river scenery. There are others, too, who follow in the footsteps of the artists we have named, and, moreover, at no mean distance; and we would more particularly allude on this occasion to Mr Boddington and Mr Mogford, who have several clever works; and to Mr. S Read, who contributes a water-colour drawing entitled "The Mosted Grange" a moonlight scene such as Tennyson might compose a poem about, and a critic mistake for the performance of that great master in water-colour art, Mr. Hagbe But the works of excellence in the Exhibition are not confined to the performances of our landscape-painters. Mr. Gill exhibits "Preparing for May Day" (No. 47) a well-considered picture, and careful in its execution, but somewhat hard. Mr. J. J. Hill has sent "A Shepherd Boy"—

> "A shepherd boy he seeks no better name"— small length, conceived with great beauty and with great expression, and [illegible] a warmer colour to lift it into real excellence. Mr. Steedman exhibits a Rustic Kitchen" (No. 87), a very small picture, in the Wilkie and Webster, style, and Mr. Clayter a large picture, an interior with many figures, entitled "L. Merry-making," in which some of the groups are arranged with care, and he story is well told, while the execution is somewhat hard and poor. Mr Anthony has a very large picture, entitled "Landscape and Figures—The Village Green," an extraordinary performance, and natural, but of so yellow a nature that few will stay to examine the varied excellences concealed in the coat of gamboge which this really able artist delights to spread over everything; for trees, cows, children, women, and men all come in alike for a coat of yellow. Mr. Anthony will no doubt find this eccentricity of style by the example of Mr. Turner; but defend it as he will, he will fail in convincing any sane person that to represent landscape and human nature upon canvas, you must give it a thick coat, or even a wash of gamboge and sunset. Mr. Harlstone (the President) exhibits "Medicantf of the Piazza Navona, Rome," in which we see the influence of his Italian studies; Mr. Latilla, an ambitious picture, entitled "The Victim of Sin and Death" a Mural, as the title asserts it, representing a youth revelling in the embraces of Sin; Mr C. Baxter, some nicely painted heads, much in his last year's manner; Mr. J. Gilbert, "The Paralyte Lady Card-Player," described by Cowper in his "Task:"—

> "The paralytic who may hold her cards,
> But cannot play them, borrows a friend's hand
> To deal and shuffle, to divide and sort
> Her manifold suits and sequences, and with > Tremulous interest eyes the pack so dealt
> "And silent cipher, while her proxy plays."

The old lady is full of character and expression—her proxy, young and extremely pretty and the whole picture one of the most successful of Mr. Gilbert's recent efforts. We may add a wish that Mr. Gilbert will in future paint subjects of the same character, for which his talent is well adapted, and where he seems sure to succeed; while in history (where he has been lately working) his success has been somewhat uncertain.

We shall resume the subject of the Exhibition in our next week's Number.

MUSIC.

ANCIENT CONCERTS.

Earl Howe was the director of the second concert on Wednesday night; and, this selection did not exhibit remarkable novelty, it contained nothing that was object nable. The scheme opened with the "Messiah" overture, followed by Mr. Lockey's excellent rendering of the air "Thy rebuke," and the chorus, "And the glory." Miss Bassano sang Handel's "Holy, Holy," and then came gleanings from one of Mozart's masses. Signor Salvi sang Handel's "Lord, remember David," in the "Redemption," with Latin words, it is said, but it was no loss for his voice. After a chorale, by Luther, Miss Birch gave Dr Crotch's air, "In frantic converse," from "Palestine," pleasingly. The "Alla trinita beata" hymn and Handel's chorus, "How excellently," closed the first part.

Weber's jubilee overture, in which our National Anthem is so skilfully interwoven at the close, commenced the second act, the company loyally rising at the Anthem. A simple duo from one of Winter's operas was nicely rendered by Madame Caradori and Signor Salvi. The scena from Paer's "Griselda" was effectively sung by Miss Birch, Blagrove's violin obligato being beautifully executed. Horsley's glee "Cold is Cadwalla's tongue," was smoothly sung by Messrs. Barnby, Lockey, Peck, Bradbury, and Machin. The selection from Gluck's "Orfeo" is a standing dish at these concerts, of which we never tire. The policy of reviving any of Salieri's trashy compositions is questionable, but Madame Caradori's artistical talents did more than justice to his air "Sola mesta." Of After Salieri, came a great rivals "O cara immagine!" divinely sung by Salvi, and proving what a worthless competitor Mozart must have had in Salieri. The somewhat hackneyed "Sul aria" duo, sung by Madame Caradori and Miss Birch, and the stupendous finale from "Fidelio," "Sad Leppy day!" terminated the night's programme

Owing to the banquet given to Lord Hardinge, the élite of the subscribers were absent. The third concert, under the direction of the Earl of Cawdor, will take place on the 3rd of May.

MR. TEMPLETON'S MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENTS.—Mr. Templeton, the tenor, gave a concert on Monday evening at the Western Literary and Scientific Institution, with Mr. Blewitt as accompanyist. The songs sung by Mr Templeton were of the English, Scotch, and Irish ballad school

BERMONDSEY QUARTETT SOCIETY.—The second meeting took place on Monday at the Beethoven Rooms, in Harley-street; Molique, Sainton Hill and Rousselot were the executants.

CLASSICAL QUARTET CONCERTS. The fifth meeting of Mr. Dando's series of classical chamber music took place on Monday evening, at Crosby Hall; the attendance of amateurs was considerable. Part the first was opened with Haydn's quartett, No. 3, in E flat major, neatly executed by Messrs. Dando, Gattie, W. Thomas, and Lucas. A MS. scnata in E, composed by Miss Kate Loder, and played by her (piano) and by Dando (violin), afforded much pleasure to the connoisseurs assembled, and was deservedly encored. The accompanyment Part the second opened with Beethoven's trio in C minor, Op. 4, for violin (Dando), viola (W. Thomas), and violoncello (Lucas), which was rendered in masterly style. Mendelssohn's quartett in E flat major, No. 3 of Op 44, terminated the scheme. The vocal gleanings comprised a ballad by Hills, "When Lubin sings," sung by Mr. Benson, who gave it in English, and Horsley, "I took my lute." Of a higher class were Mendelssohn's duet, "When on my couch," in which the Misses Williams were encored; and a song by Weber, "My way was on the banks of the Rhine," well sung by Mr. Kench. The sixth and last concert will be on the 24th inst

MUSIC AT THE NORTH POLE. The Board of Admiralty is in search of a Professor to join the expedition to the North Pole under Sir John Ross. The Musician is to have £40 per annum for his services as Composer, Conductor, and First Violin to the orchestra which is to enliven the Aborigines of the northern regions. He will be somewhat in the position of the single instrumentalist left in one of Haydn's symphonies he will have the musical glory entirely to himself, although he will certainly have a cold audience

MUSIC FOR THE WEEK.—On Monday, the third Philharmonic Concert. On Tuesday, the second meeting of the Musical Union. On Wednesday, Mr Lucas's third Musical Evening; Herr Brandt's Soiree; and Mendelssohn's "Elijah," at Exeter Hall. On Friday, ninth anniversary festival of the Western Madrigal Society. On Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, Italian Opera at Her Majesty's and Covent-garden Theatres; and English Opera every evening at the Strand Theatre.

MUSICAL ARRIVALS.—Osborne, the pianist and composer, has arrived from Paris to pass the season in London. Emile Prudent, the celebrated pianist, has also arrived. Charles Halle and the famed Chopin are daily expected. Leopold de Meyer arrives in May: Herman, the violinist, is here: Sivori is looked for next month; and visits from Ernst and Ole Bull are threatened. The continental troubles will send all the great musical professors to this country

MUNIFICENT GIFT TO THE MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.—We have much pleasure in stating that the Rev. Deacon Morrell has afforded liberal and well-timed aid to the funds of this useful charity by a donation of £300.

THE THEATRES.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Rarely has the enthusiasm of an audience been more strikingly manifested than on the first representation this season o Rossini's "Semiramide," on Tuesday. The return of Grisi and Tamburini, the re-appearance of Alboni in the part in which she took the London amateurs by storm last year, the increased orchestral and chorus forces organised by Costa, excited unusual interest, and the house was brilliantly attended by Royalty, rank, and fashion. Although the two tenor airs assig ed to Arsace in the original work have been excised, and the performance lasted more than three hours and a half, the delight of the amateurs never seemed to abate, except in the long scena of Assur with the Satraps in the sixth scene of the last act, which song might now be more advantageously omitted. Commending the spirit that prevails to respect the integrity of composers' scores, still is it expedient that pieces which, in themselves, possess no great interest, and only interfere with the rapid denouement of the drama, should be withdrawn

The execution of Rossini's fine work the one in which such a complete transformation took place in his style (it was written for Venice in 1823)—was in every point of view remarkable. Not even in the palmy days of the great French opera in Paris, have we heard such splendid choral singing as in "Semiramide;" and it is an additional gratification to the lover of music to see the chorus of ninety-four voices is nearly entirely composed of English singers. As an instance of delicacy and precision, of delicious observance of the nuances, we may point out the chorus of ladies in the garden, in six-eight time, preceding and during the cavatina "Bel raggio" The finale of the first act, with its opening quintet, so replete with rich and flowing harmonies, was marvellously well sung The quickness of the sound were managed with a master-hand, the crescendos most artfully developed, and the chorus of supernatural awe and terror attained by the combined vocal and instrumental means was positively sublime. This finale, which for effect may vie with that of Mozart's "Don Giovanni," quite startled the auditory, and the cheering was tremendous

Grisi is still the grand imperious Semiramide, every inch a Queen,—commanding in action, dignified in demeanour, and powerful in vocalisation. Her declamation of the recitatives on the throne in the finale of the first act was in the loftiest style of musical eloquence; her expression of terror and remorse at the sight of Ninus was terribly in earnest; her scorn of Assur, withering and overwhelming; and when the military band proclaimed the arrival of Arsace, her exultation was perfectly overpowering.

Alboni's Arsace rather disappointed us. In acting, it was tamer than last season, and her voice did not seem at her command, as was particularly remarkable in the air "In dar fra poco." In the lower notes the organ of the voice weakens portion of her register—have failed her recently. The luscious tones of her voice were, perhaps, best heard in the duo in the second act, of "Giorno d'orrore," although in the vocal duel of the division she allowed Grisi to gain the ascendancy

Tamburini is about the last of the great school of Rossinian singers. No one else now can approach him in the execution of the florid divisions in Assur, although his voice is not what it was, and is at times scarcely adequate to the calls upon it. Intelligence, energy, and good taste carry him through his task; and he had some unquestionably fine points. Even was particularly cordial Tagliafico and Polonini, in Oreo and Nireo, rendered small parts prominent by their artistical style; but Lavia's intonation in Idreno, in the opening scene, was sadly at fault; he rallied so cleverly in the finale, that we trust it was only nervousness which affected him at the beginning

The favourite ballet of "Le Diable à Quatre," with its sparkling agreeable music, and amusing intelligible plot, was revived on Saturday evening with great effect; Mdlle. Flora Fabbri being the basket-maker's dancing wife We shall be very much mistaken if Mdlle. Melina Marmet, who played the Countess, does not attain a very high position

On Thursday Rosani's "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," and the scena "In si Barbara," from "Semiramide," sung by Mdlle. Albeni, with the ballet of "Le Diable à Quatre," were the performances for the extra night not included in the subscription. In the "Barbiere," Signor Salvi as Count Almaviva, Severe as Bartolo, and Ronconi as Figaro, made their first appearance this season, and were enthusiastically greeted. Ronconi was in first-rate voice and excellent spirits. He was encored in "Largo al factotum." His brother artists were frequently brought to a stand-still from the buoyancy of spirits. Severe sang the music of Bartolo like a conscientious and consummate artist. Salvi's beautiful tenor voice and refined style are well known. Tagliafico appeared for the first time as Basilio, and sang the fine bass song "La Calunnia," most artistically Selli and Polonini added to the ensemble by filling the secondary parts. The great triumph was, however, to Madame Persiani's Rosina. Never did this gifted vocalist post forth a more delicious display of her powers. Her study seemed to be inexhaustible her ornaments assumed every variety of form: and the more intricate the difficulties, the more did she achieve marvels. The house rose en masse to cheer her. Her "Una voce poco fa," and the "Bravura" air, "Il vorrei pur," with variations; the orchestra joining heartily in the applause. The finale of the first act was superbly executed, both by vocal and orchestral forces.

STRAND.

The operas of continental composers are sorely maltreated frequently on their first importation into this country, and perhaps no writer has more severely suffered in this respect than Auber, whose works have been so overlaid with clumsy adapters, as scarcely to leave a trace of their original form. Such was the fate that attended the production of his "Haydée," on Monday night, at the Strand Theatre. Our Paris correspondent, who described in the most enthusiastic terms the original representation of this work at the Opera Comique, in the columns of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, would not have recognised the present English version. Even with the superior abilities of Miss Poole for part of Haydée, it must be avowed that the Strand resources were not adequate to the mounting of such an opera, which requires a vast combination of histrionic and vocal talents, and splendour of scenic display.

The character of Lorelane, the Venetian Admiral, is one exacting qualities little short of dramatic genius to embody success-fu ly, and Rogar is perhaps the only tenor who is in possession of the vocal powers to realise Scribe's clever creation and Auber's musical inspiration. As the opera of "Haydée, or the Secret," will be presented at the Royal Italian Opera in the course of the season, with Roger in the part, we forbear to enter into any analysis of the piece; but we are spared the necessity of narrating the plot, but, unlike as the present adaptation is to the original opera in every respect, the audience seemed to appreciate the excellence of the acting and singing of Miss Poole Mr. Tully, the conductor, is pains-taking and zealous with his choral and instrumental forces, and he deserves a larger arena for the exercise of his capabilities as a musical director

HAYMARKET

The following announcement appeared at the top of the Haymarket bills on Monday: "Mr. Gustavus Brooke having chosen, without the slightest grounds, to violate the engagement solemnly declared entered into with the lessee of this establishment, the first piece this evening will be 'The School for Scandal'"

Mr. Brooke's extraordinary conduct with respect to this transaction, has quite lost him the position he had attained. We expect that neither the public nor the press will be inclined to feel much interest in his future career

A new comic drama was produced on Thursday, entitled "Old Honesty." It was not stated in the bills to be original, and, we imagine, is of French growth; but if so, the incidents have been very well adapted to the English stage, and it forms altogether an agreeable piece, which will, we have no doubt, be played for many nights. The plot is very simple, turning on the discovery of some hidden treasure by an honest brick-layer, Michael Bradshaw, (Mr. Webster) in the house of an absconding banker, Hardcastle (Mr. Chester) from whom his daughter Ellen (Miss Reynolds) made a very interesting daughter, and sang a song, by Mr. German Reed, which was encored.

The piece was entirely successful The curtain fell amidst very hearty and general applause, and directly rose again for the re-appearance of the dramatis personæ. Mr. Webster then stepped forward and announced it for repetition every evening until further notice. We heard that the drama had been translated by Mr. Maddison Morton. We thank him for an agreeable importation

The Theatres have not been doing well this last week or two, as much from lack of novelty, however, as from the occupation of the public mind by other matters

The LYCEUM closes this evening, until after Easter.

Even the preparations for Easter novelties appear to be less spirited than usual. Many changes in the theatrical world are also likely to take place at this time, more especially with the houses of the suburbs We wish, however, to have them authenticated before giving them forth

A new opera, by Signor Lanza, has been rehearsed at the Princess' Theatre, it is entitled "Hamet and Zolena," and will introduce a fair debutante, Mdlle. R Lanza

MARYLEBONE

The anxiety shown by Mrs. Warner in bringing forward the most practical productions of the Elizabethan writers is unremitting. On Monday evening "The Double Marriage" of Beaumont and Fletcher was revived, with the same care and attention that has characterized all the reproductions under this management. A few alterations, to suit it to modern audiences, have been made in this piece by Mr. Serle, who, however, has not interfered with the action of the original play.

In the part of Sebana, the heroic wife of the king, opportunities occur for [illegible], which were seized upon with the utmost skill by Mrs. Warner. Mr. [illegible], in the conspirator Virolid, showed much discretion; and Miss Vining sustained the part of Aurora with great spirit. Mr. H. Webber made the most of a sorry jester, whose display of humour did not impress us with a very high notion of the current fun of the day in which he was supposed to live.

After all, perhaps, the acting up of this piece was the real feature; at any rate it was the most satisfactory There is a scene of the dock of a pirate ship, with preparations for action, which vies with the best "sets" in the old days of the nautical dramas of the Adelphi.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Croxton Park, Catterick Bridge, and Epsom Spring Meetings gave assurance that with the present week the racing season had set in downright earnestly The latter, from an occasion of little or no account, has grown into quite a monster affair—a fitting prototype of the exhibition of all fair universities—the Derby Day. The April afternoon which constitutes this tryst of happy auspices, is under the especial patronage and protection of that influential class of the community with which the financial contrivance, the Racing Lottery, "first had its being." It happened, in the present instance, so to fall as to supply a comment—if the expression be no breach of privilege, upon a matter which occupied the attention of the legislature in the House of Lords.—As the practical part of the problem will be elsewhere dealt with, it will not be inconvenient to discuss its theoretical application in manner of prologue

This most richly-endowed of any national prize on the British turf is the Great Metropolitan Handicap, run for in the Epsom Spring Meeting, towards which a sum of five hundred pounds is contributed by the licensed victuallers of London and its vicinity. Nearly contemporaneous with the contest for this goodly trophy, an inquiry was made in the Upper House by a Peer of Parliament as to the manner of Government ourselves. In the sweeps and lotteries which are drawn at all public-houses in town and country, and in the greater of course as first mounted or distilled liquors. The reply of the Minister was, that he did not know it would seem to be a peculiar point of modern political etiquette to read, mark, and learn with especial tardiness. The last case in point is one which became aware that it is in the full blaze of a revolution is now the individual most concerned in the fact he was "ill" fold to be wise?" where should interference begin?—as freedom a right to do what you please with your own—and every-body's else? If a pair of charity-boys were about to meet in single combat on Monday Common, Kennington common, it might not be constitutional to keep all the troops in the metropolis under arms for the day; but if five hundred thousand blackguards, and as many pair of miscellaneous fists to wield them, were assembled, it would perhaps be as well to have some precautions. Now were here and there a few gentlemen of enterprize and spirit engaged, or about to engage, in a "sweep," or anything else whereby they might jeopardy for rather long odds money, its unfortunate would have no right to interfere; but where a great encouragement is held out to apprentices to tap ti.ls, and to needy [illegible] to expose the stomachs of their wives and children to little or no [illegible] for their neighbours are the most slow philanthropists in creation, or they find their account in it If they find, it follows that somebody must lose. If those losses were confined to the shutters of the loser, it might not be a national concern; but ever "silent hyperbe" is too often the "silent propensity." For this cause [illegible] nabling on a large scale is a heavy social evil.

EPSOM SPRING MEETING.

Friday, with a cold northerly wind, put this new metropolitan holiday on the scene with great eclat. The attendance was very large, and the sport capital. The matches being unpromised, the racing commenced with the Epsom Trial Stakes, won by Sponge, in a canter The Great Metropolitan Handicap followed with a field of twenty-four, and produced a splendid race. Won by Glen Gallant, Jericho, Remembrance, a close third; and Jericho, not placed—a capital finish. Then comes the Two-Year-Old Stakes, won by Christiana by a head, Farthingale second; and afterwards a couple of races in heats, the details of which can be spared. It was a day of intrinsic worth, and full of good shadows of the future.

TATTERSALL'S

MONDAY.—The betting was almost wholly confined to the Metropolitan Handicap, and was so far important that it elevated Cracow to the top of the tree, as little as 4 to 1 having been laid before long before the close of the room: Tutbanter declined, and Rat-Trap was priceless; in fact, next to the favourite, Jericho and Lady Wildair were the only horses actually in favour. Loadstone improved for the Derby, but business was quite a limited scale.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1 to [illegible] Ballad of [illegible] | [illegible] | 7 to 2, at Bowstring |

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| [illegible] | 1 agst [illegible] | 10 to 1 agst Inheritress |
| 7 to 1 — [illegible] | 18 to 1 — Lady Wildair (t) | 30 to 1 — Washington-Barrow |
| 10 to 1 — Marquis of Co- [illegible] ingham | 18 to 1 — Gunner | Without |
| | 20 to 1 — Blackbird | 25 to 1 — Exeter |
| 10 to 1 — Glen Saddel | 20 to 1 — Remembrance | 30 to 1 — Maid of Lyne |
| [illegible] | 20 to 1 — Rat-trap | 40 to 1 — Mowbray |

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES

5 to 2 agst Blaze (t) 5 to 1 Agst Flatcatcher (t)

CHESTER CUP

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 20 to 1 agst War Whoop | 40 to 1 agst Remembrance | 1000 to 60 agst Pyrrhus the First |
| 40 to 1 — Cracow | 40 to 1 — Peep-o'-Day-Boy | |

DERBY

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 9 to 1 agst Springy Jack | 25 to 1 agst Scorn | 66 to 1 agst Whiskine |
| 10 to 1 — Surplice | 40 to 1 — Sancteria (t) | 66 to 1 — The Sheriff |
| 10 to 1 — Glendower | 40 to 1 — The Fowler (t) | 66 to 1 — Eagle's Plume |
| 10 to 1 — Loadstone | 40 to 1 — Jacobite | |

THURSDAY. There was a full attendance this afternoon, but, as is often the case now-a-days, very little business was transacted. The Metropolitan Handicap, for which nearly the whole field was speculated upon to a moderate amount, Jericho, Lady Wildair, and Maid of Lyme having strong parties, Cracow and Rat-trap were on the "go." The Derby betting was remarkable for the anxiety to lay against Springy Jack and Surplice, and to back Loadstone, Decrstalker, and Eagle's Plume; Glendower was first favourite.

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 11 to 2 agst Jericho (t) | 12 to 1 agst Lady Wildair | 30 to 1 agst Remembrance |
| 8 to 1 — Cracow | 18 to 1 — Maid of Lyne | 33 to 1 — Inheritress |
| 10 to 1 — Tutbanter | 18 to 1 — Gunner | 30 to 1 — Mowbray |
| 10 to 1 — Rat-trap | 20 to 1 — Washington Barrow | 30 to 1 — Bacchanalian |
| 11 to 1 — Glen Saddel | Without | 40 to 1 — Pottinger |

EPSOM TWO-YEAR-OLD STAKES.

2 to 1 agst Farthingale (t)

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.

2 to 1 agst Blaze. 5 to 1 on the field against Blaze and Flatcatcher.

CHESTER CUP.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 10 to 1 agst War Eagle | 40 to 1 agst Maid of my Soul (t) | 66 to 1 agst Malt |

DERBY

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 10 to 1 agst Glendower | 14 to 1 agst Loadstone (t) | 50 to 1 agst The Sheriff |
| 11 to 1 — Springy Jack (t) | 40 to 1 — Sancteria (t) | 2000 even between Surplice and Deerstalker (t) |
| 11 to 1 — Springy Jack and Surplice (t) | 40 to 1 — Deerstalker (t) | |
| | 40 to 1 — Eagle's Plume (t) | 1000 to 800 on Cerasian aget Backbiter |
| 12 to 1 — Surplice | | |

IRELAND.

ORDERS have been received to provide quarters in the barracks at Dublin, &c., for 2000 additional troops

The declaration of confidence in the Lord-Lieutenant has already received upwards of 2s0,000 signatures

PIKE-MAKING IN DUBLIN.—David Hyland, blacksmith, of 10, Charles-street, appeared on Monday in his own recognizance, to give evidence in the case of Thomas Kirwan, against whom information had been taken by Mr. O'Callaghan, on Saturday, for purchasing pike heads for an illegal purpose. Colonel Browne said he wished to offer a few words on that subject, which would not be matter at rest. He wished to state in the presence of the bench and gentlemen assembled in the office, that he had received intelligence that pikes were manufactured in different parts of the city of Dublin. In fact, he had in his possession the names of blacksmiths who were engaged in making them, and of persons who watched the process of manufacture. Every one must allow that it was only his duty to have these inquiries set on foot. With regard to the man Hyland, against whom informations were sworn on Saturday, he had no hesitation in declaring he was one of the persons so employed by him for the purpose he had mentioned. He had been furnished with the names of those persons, as he was informed, were manufacturing pike-heads to a large amount; but, as there was nothing in the present state of the law to prevent such doings, he had not interfered with the parties. In the case of the law should any such pikes, or have them in his possession whether unfortunately or otherwise was freely a matter of opinion. But it was his (Col Browne's) duty, holding the responsible position he did, to have the information fully sifted with everything that was passing in the city of Dublin, and he therefore avowed that he did take steps to make himself acquainted with all the circumstances connected with the manufacture and sale of pike-heads in the city. In fact, he had in his possession patterns of every kind of pike which had been hitherto made; and, if there was any odium to be attached to any one for these measures, he took it all upon himself. He regretted the necessity, and was sorry that he should be compelled to procure all the information in his power relative to the manufacture of pikes, to lay it before the Government Every man of common sense must know that pikes were daily being made in every forge in the city of Dublin. He knew the different places where these proceedings were carried on; he made himself acquainted with all the particulars in his power respecting them, and he felt that, as Lord-Lieutenant, he was only fulfilling his duty to the Government. After Dr. Grey and Mr. Mitchell had addressed the Bench, the prisoner was discharged, on the ground that the law did not prohibit the purchase of pikes

The usual weekly meeting of the Repeal Association was held on Monday, Mr. Daniel O'Connell presided. The rent for the week amounted to £87 10s. 11d.

A CABINET COUNCIL was held at twelve o'clock on Tuesday at the Foreign Office The Ministers present were Lord John Russell, the Lord Chancellor, Sir George Grey, Viscount Palmerston, Earl Grey, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir John Hobhouse, the Earl of Auckland, Lord Campbell, the Right Hon H. Labouchere, the Marquis of Clanricarde, Viscount Morpeth, and the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay. The Council sat two hours.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

The Earl of Aberdeen, in reference to the important events which had recently taken place in the north of Italy, was desirous of putting a question to her Majesty's Government. It would be recollected by their Lordships that the Lord President had some weeks ago laid on the table of the House copies of a correspondence which had taken place as to the possibility of any interference by Austria in the affairs of Italy, which concluded with the declaration that "any aggression on the territories or rights of the King of Sardinia would not be viewed by the Government of Great Britain with indifference." Whether a similar representation was made at the same time to the court of Sardinia, as to the Austrian states in Italy, he did not know, but such undoubtedly ought to have been the case; for what had been the result? Why, amidst the confusions which they had witnessed around—convulsions of an unexampled, alarming, and portentous character—the King of Sardinia had been the first power who had directly violated the public law of Europe, by commanding his troops to enter the territory of a neighbouring friendly and allied power, without the slightest pretext of a grievance, without any provocation, without any complaint or reason whatsoever assigned, and in direct violation of engagements by which he, as well as this country, was bound. He had no opinion to give as to the endeavour of the people of Lombardy to shake off the Austrian yoke. If it was their wish, he only hoped they would be as successful prospects hereafter as they had been for the three centuries during which they had been governed by the Emperor and his family. It was the violation of treaties and public law alone that he wished to notice; and, therefore, he begged to ask whether her Majesty's Government had at any time expressed to that of Sardinia a similar opinion to that expressed to Austria, that any act of aggression, such as he had referred to, would not be viewed by Great Britain with indifference?

The Marquis of Lansdowne, without being prepared to state at that moment any particular course which it was the intention of the Government to pursue, had no wish of the opportunity thus afforded him to state, that although it was quite impossible her Majesty's ministers could have received any application from Austria on the subject, England was being bound, by any treaties to assist that power, yet they had thought it right to desire their minister to express their hope and confidence that, in the present state of all the countries in that part of Europe, the King of Sardinia might be advised to observe a perfect neutrality. No doubt, in the then state of the Milanese territory, the King of Sardinia had thought he was justified in taking the course which he had subsequently adopted; but that course had been taken not only without the concurrence of the British Government, but against their advice.

Lord Stanley thought that the course adopted by Austria, in not interfering with the international affairs of Naples, Italy, and Sardinia, ought to have secured her against the armed invasion of the latter power. Great Britain, with all her outlying possessions, ought to be the first to protest against the right of any individual nation, whether from compact with supposed grievances or otherwise, to interfere in the affairs of another; and if this principle were not repudiated and put down by Europe and the civilised world, the best efforts of the British government to prevent a general and sanguinary war would be unavailing.

Earl Grey, in reply to Lord Stanley, stated with reference to the Emigration Bill pending in the Canadian Legislature, that he had addressed a despatch to the Governor-General, recommending the amendment of the objectionable clauses, which he trusted would arrive out before the bill had passed

The Marquis of Lansdowne, in reply to Lord Lyttelton, stated that the Government were not prepared at present to take any steps with reference to "racing sweeps" held at public-houses.

The Earl of Rosslyn understood that these "lotteries" or "sweeps" were held at licensed public-houses only, and on the fairest principles. When they could not interfere with betting which took place at clubs, he thought it would be unjust to put down the practice in public-houses

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

State of Public Business.—Lord Morpeth, in reply to Mr. Cardwell, expressed his hope that the state of public business would allow the Public Health Bill to be committed on Monday next. Lord John Russell, in answer to Lord Mahon, said he should submit a motion this day for a further investigation of the allegations of corrupt practices at the late election for the borough of Horsham. Mr. Labouchere, in reply to Mr. Baigut, said the Government would not be justified in setting aside the Navigation laws, for the purpose of admitting cotton from Havre under any circumstances.—The Attorney-General, in reply to Mr. Childers, stated as regarded the case of the Bishop of Exeter and the Rev. Mr. Gorham, that the subject was under serious consideration, with the view if possible of giving the latter gentleman an opportunity of showing the correctness of his doctrines.—Lord J. Russell, in answer to Mr. Ewart, intimated that the Government were ready to give the general subject of taxation their best consideration with a view to its revision.—The subject of Galway gaol was again referred to by Mr. F. Scrope.

State of Ireland. Lord J. Russell, in reply to Lord Jocelyn as to the state of Ireland, after referring to the language which had been used in that country, exciting the people to rebellion, stated that it had been followed by the manufacture of pikes, by the formation of rifle clubs, and other preparations, which objects were openly avowed by a portion of the Irish press to be done with a view to carrying on a war against the Queen. Such proceedings could be the causes or the objects of the instigators of civil war what they might, it was not so much her Majesty's crown, it was not so much the institutions of the country as the rights, as the peace of Ireland, as the well-being of all classes, especially those engaged in the occupations of trade and commerce, and his belief certainly was, that those who used the language to which he had adverted alone so far from raising themselves were careless of the bloodshed and ruin they might occasion. He trusted it was hardly necessary for him to assure the House that while the Lord-Lieutenant had no desire to interfere with the free discussion of public matters, it was his earnest wish to listen to and promote as far as he could any measures for remedying distress or for ameliorating evils which afflict that country. Lord Clarendon had already left Government, with whom of course he was in constant communication, that while on the one hand there were evident preparations for rebellion, on the other he had received the most gratifying assurances of loyalty and support from the members of all creeds and professions, from landlords as well as merchants, from Protestants as well as Roman Catholics, and from all parts of that country. If the Lord-Lieutenant should come to the opinion that further powers were needed on the part of Government, he should then feel it to be his duty to come down to the House and ask that the Government be entrusted with them, determined as they were to do all in their power to support the loyal people of Ireland, and to maintain the peace of that country.

Business of the House.—The period at which the bill for the alteration of the Navigation Laws should be brought in led to some discussion, Lord John Russell intimating that by stating that, before the Easter recess, he would either fix a day for introducing the measure, or the President of the Board of Trade would make some decided statement on the subject.

Jewish Disabilities.—The motion of going into committee on the Jewish Disabilities Bill, Mr. Goring moved, by way of amendment, that so long at least as the House of Commons exercise the authority which it at present does exercise over the Established Church, no Jew ought to possess the franchise, much less be allowed to sit in that house. After some debate, the amendment was withdrawn, and the House went into committee, various clauses giving rise to discussion and proposed amendments, but without leading to division.

The Distilling from Sugar Bill also went through committee, and, on a division, the Election Recognisances Bill was read a third time, by a majority of 44 —the numbers being 118 to 74—and was passed.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Tuesday.

Their Lordships sat only for a few minutes, and nothing occurred there to call for particular notice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—Tuesday.

ECCLESIASTICAL REVENUES.

Mr. Horsman moved a resolution:—"That the distinction between the episcopal and common funds (under the direction of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners), restricting the application of the surplus revenues of the Archbishops and Bishops to episcopal purposes, and permitting no part of it, in any circumstances, to be applied to the relief of parochial destitution, is inexpedient, and ought not to be continued." The honourable member having briefly explained the origin of the distinction between the two funds which were the object of his motion, stated that the striking instances and effects of inequality in the distribution of ecclesiastical revenues, and enlarged on the injustice of permitting so much spiritual destitution to exist in a large number of parishes throughout the country in the face of the accumulation of the episcopal fund.

Lord Ashley seconded the motion, expressly on the grounds so clearly and emphatically laid down by his honourable friend. He believed the fusion of the two funds to be essential necessary to the peace of the church and the satisfaction of all parties in it, in order that all might feel that full and impartial justice had been dealt out to them prepared to say that no circumstances could arise under which an increase in the episcopal staff would not also be necessary. Rather, he would say, let there be an extension in all classes of the church from the highest to the lowest. All we wished to see its agency carried out as it ought to be to the furthest extent for the good of all, and the promotion of the highest interests of social progress and civilisation. The House ought not to interfere with the present distribution without having the honourable gentleman's plan before it in a distinct and detailed shape embodied in a bill. By doing so they would foster the discretion of the House with respect to any future bill which might be proposed to carry out those amendments in the system of the Ecclesiastical Commission which had already engaged attention.

After a few words from Mr. Plumtre, Lord Seymour, and Sir H. Inglis,

Sir R. Peel, after protesting against the affirmance of abstract resolutions, and declaring his preference for proceeding by legislation, said he should be exceedingly sorry to express an opinion unfavourable to the principle of the motion. He eulogized the conduct of the prelates of the Church of England, whose number he should be happy to see increased, if ample means existed for the purpose. But it was impossible, in considering the subject, to overlook the condition of the masses of our population, for whose benefit the church itself was established. He referred to the report of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for remarkable cases of spiritual destitution in some of the most populous and important districts of the country; and the inadequacy of the provision made, whether for the accommodation of congregations, or the stipends of the working clergy. He wished to see the existing inequalities in the incomes of the Bishops redressed by some well-considered arrangement undertaken by the Government of the day; and for this purpose, as it would be attended with considerable difficulty, it would be better to proceed by bill. He wished, also, to see removed the barrier which at present prevented the requisite increase of parochial superintendence. He hoped that, considering the spirit of the discussion, and the feeling which evidently animated both sides of the House, the honourable gentleman would not press his motion to a division.

Mr. V. Smith supported the resolution.

Mr. Baring contended that the great increase of population in amongst the Dissenters, who would not avail themselves of additional church accommodation, even if provided them

Mr. Gladstone thought it was not enough to declare the fusion of the two funds expedient: something more was required in the way of framing good rules for the just distribution of the proceeds. Having taken a luminous view of the religious condition and ecclesiastical provision of various districts among the most deficient in this respect, he deprecated the proposal of cutting off the greater surplus absolutely from the creation of new bishoprics, as if this would be mere waste and extravagance. The great effects which had flowed from the colonial bishoprics sufficiently proved there might sometimes be good economy in this course. He should vote with her Majesty's Government for the previous question.

Mr. W. P. Wood did not see why the two funds should not be blended into one, with the view of succouring spiritual deglitution wheresoever it might be found to exist

Lord J. Russell would not, so far as the abstract proposition was concerned, controvert the resolution now laid down; but he feared no practical purpose would be attained by it. Experience had justified the Ecclesiastical Commission in the arrangements they had made. He was unwilling to agree to the resolution, because he really did not know to what the House and the Government might be considered as pledged if it were carried, every different opinions having been expressed as to the objects to which the proceeds of the funds should be devoted. Considering the constitution of the Church of England, the extent to which required episcopal superintendence, and the extent also to which pastoral aids might be augmented through episcopal instrumentality, it would be wrong to exclude that object altogether. The noble Lord, in conclusion, stated that having placed himself in communication with the Archbishop of Canterbury, he should be loth to give any definitive opinion to the House on any new amendments of the ecclesiastical system that might be required, before he had ascertained the views of that right reverend prelate, in whose experience, as well as in the singleness of view to the interests of religion, he placed entire confidence. He hoped the hon. member for Manchester would in future address the House on such subjects in rather a more kindly spirit, and reminded that champion of dissent that even Bishops were entitled to toleration

Mr. Hume thought it certain that, if an attempt were made to create more new Bishops, the question would be immediately raised whether the present Bishops were not too many. As for the appointment of colonial Bishops, it had produced more evil than good

Mr. Horsman, in reply, observed that he felt he had virtually succeeded in obtaining the affirmation of his resolution. He was very glad to hear from the noble Lord that he had further measures in contemplation. He was quite ready to leave the subject in the hands of Government, but neither the House nor the country would be satisfied without an extensive consideration of the subject.

The motion and the amendment were then by leave withdrawn.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The House sat from noon till six o'clock.

A select committee was appointed to inquire into the composition and management of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England and Wales

The Poor Houses (Ireland) Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Wednesday

OUT-GOING TENANTS.—(IRELAND.)

The adjourned debate on the second reading of the Out-going Tenants Bill was resumed by

Mr. Napier, who contended that the bill was one to give perpetuity of tenure to the tenants of Ireland, or, in other words, to transfer to the occupiers of land in Ireland the property of the soil. If improvements of land were necessary, and were approved of by landlord and tenant, then no legislative measure was necessary to carry them out, because they would be effected by the mutual goodwill of the parties; but if the tenant proposed improvements to which the landlord objected, he did not think the latter ought to be compelled to pay for such improvements

Mr. J. O'Connell supported the bill, which he believed well calculated to confer essential benefits on the people of Ireland.

Lord Castlereagh thought the bill was well-intentioned, and should therefore be considered in committee

After some observations from Mr. Archbald,

Mr. J. Walsh opposed the bill, but did not thereby wish himself to be understood as opposed to the tenant right of Ireland

Mr. F. O'Connor supported the bill, contending that it was impossible to expect any improvement on the part of the tenant until tenant-right was conceded to him.

Sir G. Grey thought that the evils of the system at present existing in Ireland could only be remedied by the landlords on the one hand themselves, and not by any legislative measure. He thought this measure, if carried, would be destructive of that proper understanding between landlord and tenant which was essential to the interests of both as the peace of Ireland, as the result to legislate for tenant-right of Ulster, even in Ulster itself, where it only existed as a custom, and it would be still more unadvisable to extend it to other parts of Ireland

After some observations from Mr. Fagan in support of the bill, and from Colonel Blackall against it,

Mr. P. Scrope said the House could expect little from perseverling in the old course of leaving things down themselves and allowing an alteration indispensable, he would support the second reading of the bill.

Colonel Hawpon supported the second reading of the bill in deference to the feelings of the people of Ireland, but reserved to himself the right of supporting alterations in it in the Committee

After some observations from Mr. Scully and Mr. S. Crawford in reply,

The House divided, and the second reading of the bill was negatived by a majority of 145 to 22.

The Great Yarmouth Disfranchisement Bill was read a second time, and was ordered to be committed on Wednesday next.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

Property and Income-Tax.—The Marquis of Lansdowne moved the second reading of this bill.—A short discussion ensued, in the course of which Lord Stanley protested against the substitution of the principle of direct for indirect taxation. The bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

THE PROPOSED CHARTIST PROCESSION GOVERNMENT PROCLAMATION

Mr. J. Walsh inquired of the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if the attention of the Government had been directed to the notice issued by the Chartist body, of their intention to hold a numerous public meeting on Kennington Common on Monday next, and to go thence in procession to the House of Commons, for the purpose of presenting a petition in favour of "the people's charter;" and if the right hon. Baronet was prepared to take any steps to prevent the independence of the House of Commons from being overawed by any public meeting, or to protect the loyal and peaceable inhabitants of London?

Sir G. Grey replied that the attention of her Majesty's Government had been directed to the notice in question, emanating from a convention consisting of 49 delegates elected at public meetings held in several of the large towns of the empire. This notice stated that those delegates met in London for the purpose of superintending the presentation of a petition in favour of the Charter to the House of Commons, and to adopt any other course that might be deemed advisable in order to secure the passing of the Charter into law. It also stated that a great public meeting would be held on Kennington Common on Monday next, and that the part es composing that assemblage would march in a procession, regulated and superintended by marshals, with their petition, to the house of Commons. The attention of the Government having been called to that notice, and other information having reached them respecting the intended proceedings, the Government had directed a notice to be issued, which would be published in the course of half-an-hour throughout London, pointing out that, by the statute and common law of those realms, the intended procession was illegal, warning the loyal and peaceable subjects of her Majesty to abstain from taking part in the procession, and calling upon them to give their best aid to the constituted authorities towards preventing any disturbance, maintaining public order, and preserving the public peace.

Mr. F. O'Connor said, if there were the slightest intimation of committing a breach of the peace on the occasion of this procession, he would not be a party to the proceeding—that the parties concerned in the affair were personally disposed—and that every man of them would consider himself as a special constable, upon whom the preservation of peace was incumbent. Their whole object was to present to that House a petition signed by between five and six millions of the people. The present announcement would certainly take the people by surprise.

Sir G. Grey could not see how they could be taken by surprise. The Government had, at the earliest moment, taken the subject into deliberation, and resolved to take the course he had indicated.

Mr. Hume was sorry to find the Government had taken up the subject so seriously, and advised them to rescind the proclamation.

The subject then dropped.

Waste Lands (Ireland).—On the motion of Mr. Fitzstephen French, leave was given to bring in a bill to reclaim the waste lands of Ireland.

Frost, Williams, and Jones, the Chartist Convicts.—Mr. F. O'Connor moved an address to her Majesty that she would be graciously pleased to extend her Royal pard on to John Frost, Zephania Williams, and William Jones, and all other political offenders. The motion on a division, was negatived by a majority of 91 to 23

A lengthened discussion took place on the case of the late ex-Rajah of Sattara, which occupied the House the remainder of the evening.—Adjourned.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Mr. J. Romilly, M.P., who had vacated his seat in Parliament for Devonport by accepting the office of Solicitor-General, vacant by the retirement of Mr. Dundas, was re-elected for that borough on Monday last.

Nearly £3000 were drawn out of the Limerick Savings' Bank by depositors of the industrious class on Monday (last week). Notices for the withdrawal of £5000 were lodged for Monday in the present week

Lord Henry Seymour, residing at Paris, has recovered the plate of which his butler had robbed him. It had been pledged for about 19,000f. at the Mont de Piété, and the duplicates had been left behind.

Several English residents have already given notice of their intention of availing themselves of the decree of the Provisional Government at Paris, by which foreigners may be naturalised if they have been five years resident at the country

From official returns made to the authorities of the county of Middlesex, it appears that in the following metropolitan boroughs and the county, there are 80,057 voters on the register, viz. Marylebone, 16,812; Westminster, 14,126; Tower Hamlets, 13,351; Finsbury, 15,822; and Middlesex, 13,917.

At the meeting of the Van Diemen's Land Company, held lately, the yearly report of the directors was adopted, the contents of which presented rather a more favourable exposition of affairs than could have been anticipated.

The planting of trees of liberty at Paris has become such a nuisance, that the Government has at last determined to put an end to the practice.

It is in contemplation to erect a range of batteries on the cliffs at the north side of Weymouth bay, to act in connexion, as occasion may require, with the extensive fortifications about to be established in the Island of Portland.

An authenticated contradiction has been published of the statement that M. Guizot had applied to the French Provisional Government for the amount of salary due to him as Minister for Foreign Affairs for the month of February last

The Duke of Argyll, it is thought, will receive the Green Ribbon vacant by the demise of the Marquis of Bute.

The proposal for a testimonial to George Cruikshank is assuming substance and shape, a committee having been formed for the purpose of taking the steps necessary to carry the project into effect. It is not, however, as yet decided what the form of testimonial shall be, and the decision will no doubt be in some degree dependent on the amount of the subscription

Lady Julia Brabazon died on the 28th ultimo, at her residence in Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin, aged 82. She was daughter of the late, and sister of the present, Earl of Meath.

Lord Charles J. F. Russell has been appointed by the Lord Chamberlain to the office of Sergeant-at-Arms to the House of Commons, vacant by the death of Col. Sir W. Gossett.

A naval court-martial has been held at Toulon, on Captain Balleul, of the 3-mast luggar, for the loss of the steamer Simoun. The captain was honourably acquitted, and thanked for the efforts he had made to save the vessel

The amount of commercial bills in the hands of the Bank of France, which fell due on Saturday last, was above 22,000,000 of francs, and of these several millions were paid in the course of the day

The Prince of Prussia visited the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and Prince Frederick of Hesse, on Sunday, at Cambridge House.

Yesterday (Friday) above 180 officers, members of the United Service Club gave a grand banquet to Viscount Hardinge, on his return from India The Duke of Wellington and Prince Albert were present on the occasion.

Volunteers are daily setting out from Ferrara for Lombardy; 360 pupils of the University, with 1060 men from Leghorn and 500 Aretins, have just left.

The University of Sienna has sent a deputation to the Tuscan Government to express its resolution to go to the aid of the Lombards with or without permission.

Mrs. Bray, formerly Miss Walker, of Newcastle, in the county of Limerick, who was employed as nurse to the Princess Royal, has been also engaged in the same capacity for the infant Princess born a few days since.

Dom Miguel de Braganza, attended by Viscount de Queburs and Colonel Lemos de Oxoria, has left town on a visit to Mr. Sarsfield, at Lucan. Mr. Sarsfield is the only member of the Prince's suite remaining in London.

The Prince of Saxe-Coburg and his consort, the Princess Clementine, daughter of the late ex-King of the French, travelling as the Baron and Baroness Erlenthas, passed through Ostend on the 29th ult., en route for Germany.

The Sydney (Australia) papers announce the death of Lady Mary Pitzroy, and at the same time state that Sir Charles was lying in a dangerous state from the effects of an accident

By the Seagull packet, arrived at Falmouth, on Sunday, from Brazils, freight, consideration to about £21,000, has been brought. Two passengers, Messrs. Bidwell and Edmiss, had the care of it.

The Liverpool Albion mentions that on Friday, last week, two trading vessels, outward-bound, when in the Channel, a few miles from that port, hoisted the Irish tricolour on their mainmasts. The captains, after her Majesty's Government tender, observing the movement, gave chase, when the flags were instantly lowered, and the vessels were allowed to proceed.

The property of the Northern Railroad of Spain, presented, on Sunday last, at the Hôtel de Ville, a donation of 8900f. to the Provisional Government

The Italian and French revolutionary feeling has extended to Malta. The Portafoglio, the organ of the anti-English party, wants a Constitution and a House of Representatives—of course exclusively Maltese members

The Prince of Capua, who is staying at Malta and has hitherto showed no demonstration of party in the affairs of the Two Sicilies, has lately hoisted the Sardan tricolour on his terrace

On Saturday last, a large body of the workmen of Paris went to offer to the Provisional Government a sum of 3000 francs, being the amount of a day's pay. Many other bodies of workmen also made donations.

Several Jesuits, from various countries, have taken refuge at Malta, and taken up their residence in the convent of St. Calcedouro, at Floriun. The Government have supplied them with new bedding and beds borrowed from the store of the Civil Hospital.

Father Matthew is expected on a visit to the United States, and preparations are being made there to give the Apostle of Temperance a hearty welcome. The partisans engaged in the Presidential election were ready to make the most of the reverend father's arrival, in the hope of influencing the votes of the Irish.

Serious disturbances have taken place at Lillebonne, in Normandy Martial law had been proclaimed, and, on one occasion last week, four summonses to disperse having been read without effect, orders were given to rape force by force. Six persons fell dead, and fourteen were wounded by a discharge of musketry, and their culpable accomplices fled in all directions.

Sir Samuel Rush Meyrick, K.H., LL.D., so well known for his know ledge of ancient armour, in testimony to which he was knighted by William IV in 1832, died on the 2nd inst., at his seat, Goodrich Court, Herefordshire, in t 80th year of his age.

We have been informed that the John Bull newspaper has just passe into new hands. Under the new management it becomes, we believe, the y engaged weekly organ of the Conservative party. The first number under the new auspices appeared on Saturday last, certain y with evidences of new life.

Among other things which the inhabitants of Berlin have conquered by the revolution, is the right of smoking in the streets, and it is as much prised as any political privilege in prospect.

The York convicts, George Calvert and James Mellor, are reprieved; and the execution of Michael Stokes is respited till the 13th of May, that the opinion of the Judges may be taken on the objection to the indictment.

The East India Company gave a grand entertainment to Viscount Hardinge, at the London Tavern, on Wednesday The Duke of Wellington, Lord J. Russell, Viscount Palmerston, Sir J. C. Robbuck, Earl Grey, and a distinguished party received invitations

The price of wheat at Hobart Town, Van Diemen's Land, on the 30th October, was from 5s. to 5s. 3d. per bushel, and flour £13 per ton.

The persons who, during the revolution in Paris, wantonly destroyed the Railway Bridge at Asnières have been convicted and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, varying from one to five years.

It is said that the Albert, ouvrier (or workman), who forms one of the Provisional Government of Paris, is the Dr. Albert who was formerly a teacher of French in Liverpool, and afterwards a chemist at Carlsbad and Longsight, in Manchester.

At Marseilles the papers of late have not been published, because the compositors and pressmen had turned out when in the middle of their labours.

The whole of the Paris papers express deep indignation at the attack made by the mob on M. de Girardin and the office of the Presse newspaper.

The mortal remains of the late Madame Guizot, the mother of the ex-Minister of France, who died on Friday (last week) at her son's residence at Broughton, were on Tuesday interred in the cemetery at Kensal-green. The Earl of Aberdeen's and other carriages of the nobility were in attendance

The Lord Mayor received, on Monday last, the sum of £16 18s, from the clergyman who officiates at the French Protestant Church, in St. Martin's-le-Grand, as the collection at that place of worship on Sunday, in behalf of the British workmen expelled from France.

Admiral Rosamel, former Minister of Marine in France, died at Paris on Tuesday, in the 74th year of his age.

The deliveries of tea last week were 507,891lb, being an increase over the preceding week.

Notwithstanding the great heat during the last ten days, on Tuesday se'night the snow was a foot deep on the Mendip Hills

The Town Council of Hull have just resolved to raise £12,000 for the erection of baths and washhouses on the plans of the model establishment in Goulston-square, Whitechapel.

Mr. John Shaw Lefevre has been appointed successor to the late Mr. Carrey, as principal clerk in the House of Lords; and not Sir David Dundas, who, in consequence of having resigned the Solicitor-Generalship, was reported to have accepted the office of Clerk-Assistant.

BURIAL OF THE VICTIMS OF THE REVOLUTION AT BERLIN.

THIS impressive scene represents the ceremony of consigning to the earth the remains of the persons who fell in the late conflict at Berlin. Th solemnities in front of the Neuen Kirche were illustrated and detailed in our Journal of last week, when, also, we described the scene now engraved. We repeat a portion of the details, from the time of the cortège leaving the front of the church:—

"When the procession arrived before the Königs Thor, the other end could hardly have left the market-place. It proceeded up the short ascent immediately on leaving the gate, and turning short round to the right, entered a field, which is, perhaps, higher than any other spot in the neighbourhood. In the middle of this field a large circular hole had been dug, in the middle of which was a platform, on which stood the families and friends of the deceased, the clergymen, and other authorities of the town: round this platform, and covered with evergreen wreaths, flowers, and sprigs of holly, were placed the coffins. After a sort of funeral sermon and some sacred music, the assembled multitude was again addressed by several clergymen and others. All listened in solemn silence; the speaker being only now and then interrupted by a long-drawn heartfelt sigh from the breasts of the many thousands who surrounded the grave. The bürger corps of marksmen had the honour of firing several volleys over the grave of their departed friends and fellow combatants; and after more sacred music, vocal and instrumental, the vast concourse peacefully separated."

This was the great funereal ceremony; but processions were frequent for some days, attended with touching incidents. Thus, a letter of date subsequent to the above, states:—

"Several funeral processions, accompanied by detachments of the Burgher Guard, and preceded by a band of music playing funeral hymns, have occurred during the last three or four days: at this moment, a procession conveying three coffins is passing beneath my window, and the guard on duty opposite are presenting arms in token of respect to the fallen."

PRUSSIA.

The King has dismissed Count Arnim, and appointed a new Ministry. The following is the composition of the new Cabinet:—

M. Camphausen, President of the Chamber of Commerce at Cologne, President of the Council.

M. Hansemann, President of the Chamber of Commerce at Aix-la-Chapelle, Minister of Finance.

M. Beurmeann, Minister of Justice.

Baron Arnim, formerly Prussian Minister at Brussels and at Paris, Minister of Foreign Affairs.

M. D'Auerswald, a manufacturer at Creveld, and the most eminent Member of the late General Diet, Minister of Interior.

General de Reier, Minister of War.

The appointment of Minister of Public Worship remains unfilled.

The King started for Potsdam as soon as he had completed the formation of this new Ministry.

Intelligence from Pomerania and Brandeburg shows that these countries are opposed to what has been done at Berlin. A proclamation has been published in Pomerania, protesting in strong terms against the right arrogated to itself by the capital to demand concessions and cause the soldiers to be sent away, without the co-operation of the provinces. In consequence, deputies, it says, are to be named on the 17th of April, to proceed on the 18th to Berlin, and declare to the Presidents of the Burgesses:—1st. That Pomerania does not acknowledge their right to act as they have done. 2nd. That she has seen with regret the massacre of the troops, who only obeyed the King's order. 3rd. To demand from the said Presidents, if they are inclined to return to their sentiments of fidelity to the King, and if they wish to co-operate with Pomerania in restoring order in the country.

A deputation from the merchants of Stettin had been sent to Berlin to consult the Minister for Foreign Affairs concerning the dangerous position of the Prussian trade in the Baltic. The Minister assured them that a note had already been despatched to the British Foreign Office, with a view to induce the English Government to protect trade in those seas, if the Schleswig-Holstein question should make such protection necessary. The same paper adds, that English trade is so much interested in the Baltic trade, that Lord Palmerston must necessarily accede to the demands of Prussia.

Letters from Posen and Breslau confirm former reports of the disorderly state of the Grand Duchy. The Poles are preparing for war, while the German inhabitants of the Grand Duchy excite their hate by protesting against the intended separation from the German empire. Breslau, part of the province of Silesia, on the other hand, seems to have overcome the convulsions which necessarily attend so sudden a change as Prussia has undergone. The citizens, who keep order admirably, are armed, and muster a force of no less than 12,000 men. The country districts are still agitated, and exhibit the melancholy consequences of protracted fiscal misrule. Bands of armed peasants are still here and there attacking the Royal domains and seats of noblemen. They destroyed the palace of Count Saurma, at Gelsch, and robbed him of his plate. Their depredations in this single instance amount to 50,000 dollars. Count York, of Wartenburg, the newly-appointed Chief President of the province of Silesia, is said to be very unpopular, and it is expected that he will be forced to resign.

The Princess of Prussia has given 15,000 dollars for the widows and orphans of the victims of the Berlin revolution, and she has promised to give the same sum every year.

The opening of the second United Diet took place on the 2nd April, at twelve o'clock.

After the members of the Diet had assembled, the President of the Ministry, Camphausen, accompanied by all the Ministers, entered the Hall, where he delivered a speech suitable to the occasion, and which he thus concluded:—

"The Prussian nation, while it has commenced the free discussion of its most momentous affair by the press, and in open proceedings, cannot but recognise that, in the contest of principles, only truth appears, and that, for the defence of liberty, every person must be at liberty to express his individual opinion, with full right, and without impediment. Although the High United Diet, both in its constitution and in its privileges, will differ essentially from the future popular representations, the Government lays great stress upon its counsels at the present juncture; and in this spirit I have the honour to lay before you the Royal propositions for your investigation and deliberation.

"DECREE OF PROPOSITIONS.

"We, Frederick William, by the grace of God, King of Prussia, &c. &c.,

"Send our Royal greeting to the assembled States of our Second United Diet.

"For the purpose of calling into action the constitutional administration promised to our faithful people on the most extensive basis, it is indispensable that it should be intrinsically combined with an an assembly of competent popular representatives, freely elected.

"We have, therefore, projected a Provisional Electoral Law, containing proposals, according to which the Permanent Assembly is to be elected and constituted. While we submit this project to the United Diet, which is assembled for the last time in its present form, we recommend its speedy decision, in order that by the immediate establishment of the permanent and open administration Justice all those blessings may result which it is our conscientious endeavour obtain for our faithful people by the complete and thorough development of a fr constitution.

"This constitution, the project of which we shall submit to the Assembl which is about to be founded on the basis of the electoral law, shall, accordi to our view, and for the purpose of completely attaining its object, approac in its form to the preponderating majority of the Constitutional Governments Germany, and be in unison with the formation of a universal German Fede Administration.

"Given at Potsdam, April 2, 1848.

(Signed) "FREDERICK WILLIAM.

"Countersigned by the Cabinet Ministers."

Here follows the project of electoral law, which embraces eleven heads also, a project of the fundamental principles of the new Prussian legislation.

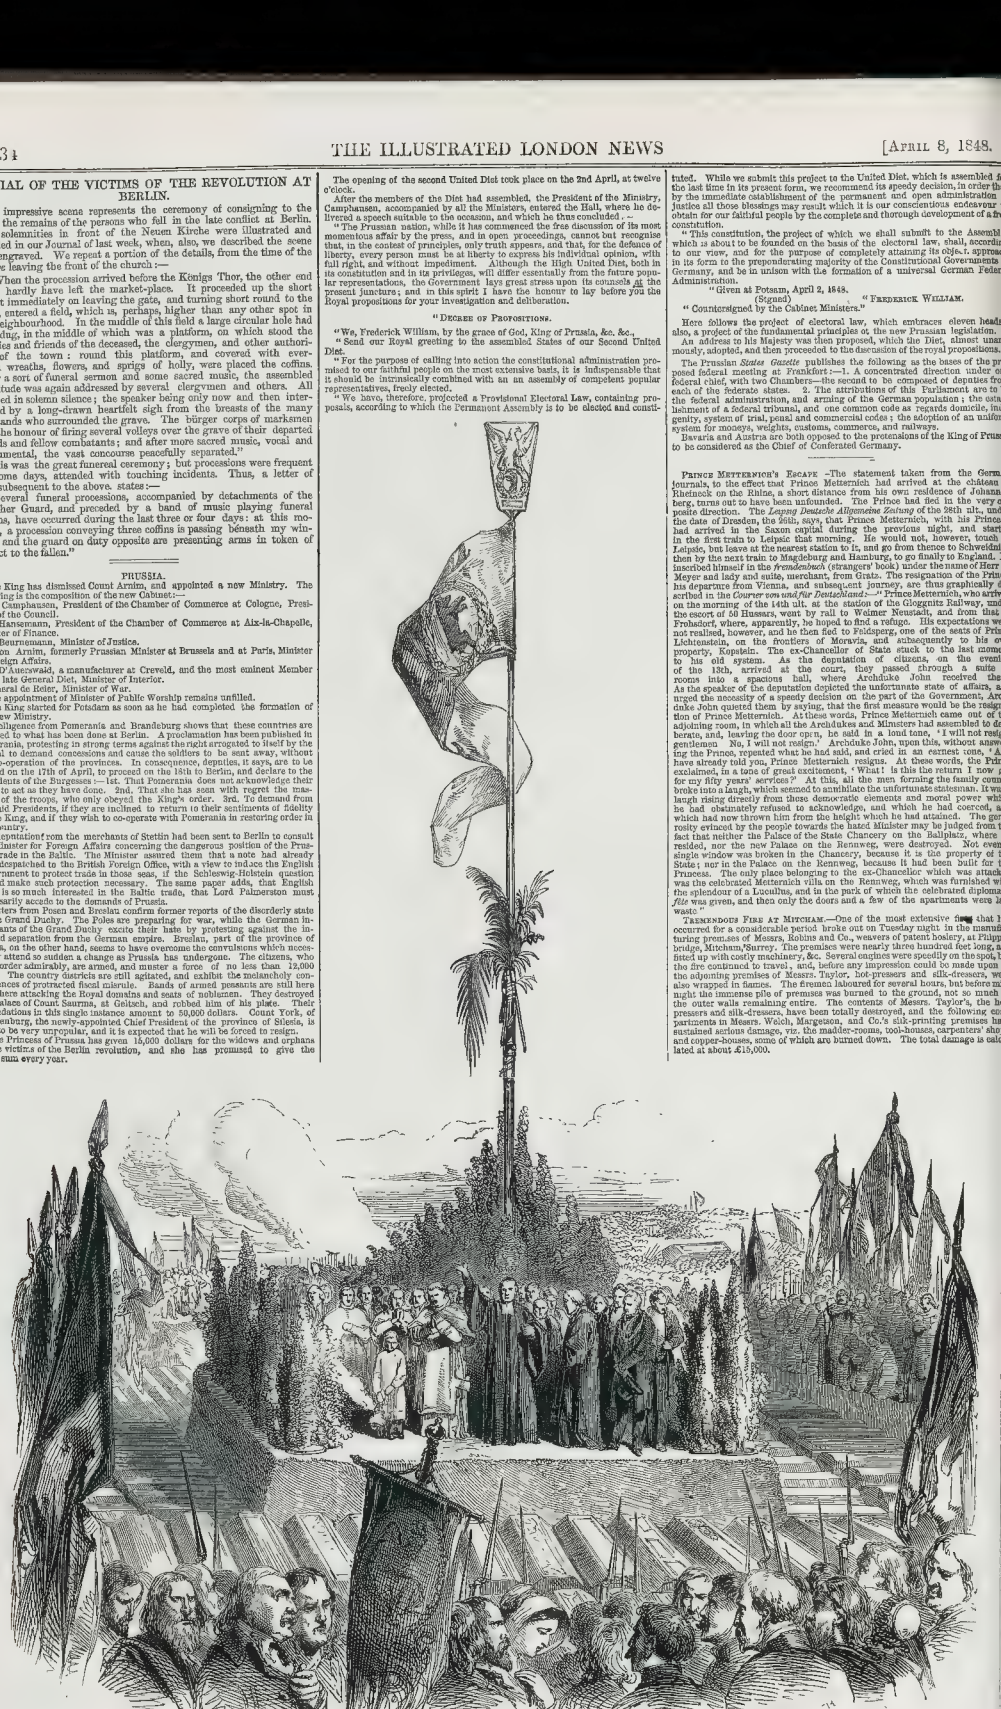
An address to his Majesty was then proposed, which the Diet, almost unanimously, adopted, and then proceeded to the discussion of the royal propositions.

The Prussian States Gazette publishes the following as the bases of the pr posed federal meeting at Frankfort:—1. A concentrated direction under federal chief, with two Chambers—the second to be composed of deputies fro each of the federate states. 2. The attributions of this Parliament are to the federal administration, and arming of the German population; the esta lishment of a federal tribunal, and one common code as regards domicile, in genity, system of trial, penal and commercial codes; the adoption of an uniform system for moneys, weights, customs, commerce, and railways.

Bavaria and Austria are both opposed to the pretensions of the King of Prus to be considered as the Chief of Confederate Germany.

PRINCE METTERNICH'S ESCAPE.—The statement taken from the Germ journals, to the effect that Prince Metternich had arrived at the château Rheineck on the Rhine, a short distance from his own residence of Johann berg, turns out to have been unfounded. The Prince had fled in the very o posite direction. The Leipzig Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung of the 28th ult., und the date of Dresden, the 26th, says, that Prince Metternich, with his Princ had arrived in the Saxon capital during the previous night, and start in the first train to Leipsic that morning. He would not, however, touch Leipsic, but leave at the nearest station to it, and go from thence to Schweidn then by the next train to Magdeburg and Hamburg, to go finally to England. inscribed himself in the fremdenbuch (strangers' book) under the name of Herr Meyer and lady and suite, merchant, from Gratz. The resignation of the Prin his departure from Vienna, and subsequent journey, are thus graphically scribed in the Courier von und für Deutschland:—"Prince Metternich, who arriv on the morning of the 14th ult. at the station of the Gloggnitz Railway, m the escort of 50 Hussars, went by rail to Weimer Neustadt, and from tha Frohsdorf, where, apparently, he hoped to find a refuge. His expectations w not realised, however, and he then fled to Feldsperg, one of the seats of Pri Lichtenstein, on the frontiers of Moravia, and subsequently to his o property, Kopstein. The ex-Chancellor of State stuck to the last mom to his old system. As the deputation of citizens, on the event of the 13th, arrived at the court, they passed through a suite rooms into a spacious hall, where Archduke John received the As the speaker of the deputation depicted the unfortunate state of affairs, a urged the necessity of a speedy decision on the part of the Government, Ar duke John quieted them by saying, that the first measure would be the resig tion of Prince Metternich. At these words, Prince Metternich came out of t adjoining room, in which all the Archdukes and Ministers had assembled to d berate, and, leaving the door open, he said in a loud tone, 'I will not resi gentlemen. No, I will not resign.' Archduke John, upon this, without answe ing the Prince, repeated what he had said, and cried in an earnest tone, 'A have already told you, Prince Metternich resigns. At these words, the Prin exclaimed, in a tone of great excitement, 'What! is this the return I now for my fifty years' services?' At this, all the men forming the family circ broke into a laugh, which seemed to annihilate the unfortunate statesman. It w laugh rising directly from those democratic elements and moral power wh he had absolutely refused to acknowledge, and which he had coerced, a which had now thrown him from the height which he had attained. The ge rosity evinced by the people towards the hated Minister may be judged from t fact that neither the Palace of the State Chancery on the Ballplatz, where resided, nor the new Palace on the Renweg, were destroyed. Not even single window was broken in the Chancery, because it is the property of t State; nor in the Palace on the Renweg, because it had been built for t Princess. The only place belonging to the ex-Chancellor which was attack was the celebrated Metternich villa on the Renweg, which was furnished w the splendour of a Lucullus, and in the park of which the celebrated diploma fête was given, and then only the doors and a few of the apartments were l waste."

TREMENDOUS FIRE AT MITCHAM.—One of the most extensive fires that h occurred for a considerable period broke out on Tuesday night in the manufa turing premises of Messrs. Robins and Co., weavers of patent bookary, at Filsp bridge, Mitcham, Surrey. The premises were nearly three hundred feet long, a fitted up with costly machinery, &c. Several engines were speedily on the spot, b the fire continued to travel, and, before any impression could be made upon the adjoining premises of Messrs. Taylor, hot-pressers and silk-dressers, w also wrapped in flames. The firemen laboured for several hours, but before m night the immense pile of premises was burned to the ground, not so much the outer walls remaining entire. The contents of Messrs. Taylor's, the h pressers and silk-dressers, have been totally destroyed, and the following em partments in Messrs. Welch, Margesson, and Co.'s silk-printing premises ha sustained serious damage, viz. the madder-rooms, tool-houses, carpenters' sho and copper-houses, some of which are burned down. The total damage is calc lated at about £15,000.



BURIAL OF THE VICTIMS OF THE REVOLUTION NEAR BERLIN

WANTAGE CHAPEL, BERKS.

a picturesque little Chapel has recently been erected in the market-n of Wantage, Berks. The building is capable of accommodating people; yet the cost has not exceeded £600. This is another of the ral instances which our Engravings have indicated, of the growing osition of the various communities to adopt for the character of their es of worship our own sadly-neglected but peculiar English style;
essing so many associations, and capable of such an interesting di-sity of picturesque outline.

The form of the plan of the Wantage Chapel is a simple parallelogram,
t. 6in. long, 29ft. 8in. wide, communicating at the end with a school-
m, 30ft. long, 19ft. wide, over which is placed the vestry, divided reifren by a screen of tracery woodwork. At the west end is a galy, approached by a small staircase lighted at the side by a lancet ndow. The design is by Mr. Redwick W. Ordish, architect, of John-et, Adelphi; the builder is Mr. G. Major, of Swindon.

NEW WESLEYAN CHAPEL, AT WANTAGE.

To the zeal of the late Thomas Bush, Esq., of Lambourn, Wantage is iefly indebted for this place of worship. The town contains very few pecimens of antiquity, but is interesting from its having been the birth-lace of Alfred the Great, and in possessing two churches in one church-ard, one of which is now used for a school-room. Wantage is situate ithin five miles of the railway, and has a good patched corn market.

MOHAMMED BEN HADDAD. BEHKIR HADDAD.

ARABS WHO ASSISTED AT THE WRECK OF THE "AVENGER."

THE SUTLEJ MEDALS.

THE SUTLEJ SILVER MEDAL.

THE MEDALS ordered by her Majesty for distribution amongst the officers and soldiers of her Majesty's and the Company's Service, who took part in the late campaign in the Punjaub, have at length been completed. The design, which is by Mr. W. Wyon, R.A., of the Mint, is one of great beauty. It is appropriate, and marked by classical feeling. The obverse gives an excellent profile of the Queen, with the name; while the reverse represents a figure of Victory, holding out a wreath to the army of the Sutlej in one hand, and in the other she bears a palm branch; at her feet are military weapons, tastefully grouped. In the exergue, are the names of the battles in which the particular wearer took part. Medals have been sent to the several regiments at present in England; and 20,000 have been forwarded to India. It is expected that about 44,000 will be struck. The tie is a blue ribbon, with a red border. As in the case of the Waterloo Medal, there will be no distinction made in the value of the decoration; all will be of silver.

THE MUSEUM OF ECONOMIC GEOLOGY.

The pile of building now erecting between Piccadilly and Jermyn-street (and having frontages in either thoroughfare), for the Museum of Economic Geology, is a very handsome structure, and one of the most striking in appearance of the recent additions to the public buildings of the metropolis. The style of architecture adopted is that known as the Italian "Palazzo," and either front has much good design in it, but, as we illustrate the façade in Piccadilly only this week, reserving till the completion of the building our view of the Jermyn-street or entrance front, when we purpose also to describe and delineate the interior of the Museum, we shall confine our notice to observations on the former.

The Piccadilly façade is distinguished by great boldness and originality of character in design, and possesses one angular feature, that there is no doorway in it, the entrance being, as before observed, in Jermyn-street. This peculiarity of construction allows the whole width of the lower story of the building to be occupied by the windows, of which there are six, circular-headed, and which, deeply recessed and splayed to the pavement, produce the effect of an arcade, and, by the depth of tone which they give, an admirable light and shade is obtained adding piquancy to the whole façade. The spandrils over the arches are paneled, and above each window a patera is introduced in the paneling. In the upper story are six windows, to correspond with those below, having pedimented heads, and very richly ornamented dressings. A richly-ornamented cornice gives character to the upper part of the front; and quoins, chamfered, add to the architectural richness of the building. The whole reflects the highest credit on its architect, Mr. Pennethorne.

PICCADILLY FRONT OF THE MUSEUM OF ECONOMIC GEOLOGY.

LOSS OF THE "AVENGER."

(To the Editor.)

Tunis, 16th March, 1848.

It gives me great pleasure to be able to forward you a sketch of Mohammed Ben Haddad and his father, drawn by L. Ferriere, Esq., H.B.M. Vice-Consul for Tunis. Mohammed is the Arab who saved the lives of a portion of the crew of the Avenger. He is a native of Sidi Mansoor, and a shepherd by employment. He is a middle-sized man, of about thirty-five years of age. His complexion is swarthy, his hair black, and his eyes large and lively. Humanity, kindness, and amiability are distinctly discerned in his countenance. Though he has but seldom left the heights of his wild and lofty native mountains, yet I found him surprisingly intelligent. His disinterested conduct towards the survivors of the ill-fated steamer sufficiently proves him to be very different in disposition from the generality of the inhabitants of the wild shores of Barbary. I have had him living with me nearly a month, and can bear the highest testimony to his character.

Some of your readers may probably desire to know how I came in contact with Haddad. I will explain this, especially as it may convey interest or intelligence to some of those who have so unexpectedly been called upon to mourn the loss of some dear relative.

No sooner did we ascertain that the Avenger was entirely wrecked, than I formed the resolution to visit the coast in a westerly direction, in search of the bodies which I expected might be washed ashore. Accordingly, I left this for Biserta, accompanied by the Rev. Mr. Margoliouth, where we learnt on our arrival that the son of Mr. Maunsell, our Consular agent, had started with three boats for Jalita, or Galata, in order to order to obtain more information respecting the steamer. We were anxious to hear the result of Mr. Maunsell's mission, but through it remained till the 31st at Biserta no tidings of the boat had reached that place. Indeed, it could hardly have been expected, as the weather was of a most awful nature. The rain came down in torrents, and the wind was most boisterous. In such weather I started on my melancholy excursion. Mr. Margoliouth remaining here in the hope that his services might be required on the return of the boats.

I took with me seven men on horseback and eight on foot. The latter were to search those parts of the coast which were inaccessible for horses. After eight hours' ride we reached Kasaar-el-Ahmar without finding the least vestige of the object for which I came here. In the course of inquiry, however, I was informed that a body was found at Sidi Mansour. After fourteen hours' ride on the 1st of January I reached its spot, and found on the beach the body of a sailor. His left arm was eaten either by fish or jackals. I placed a guard over the body; and, as it was late, I sought for shelter, which I found in the hospitable hut of Haddad.

The following day I found another body near the spot where the boat was upset in the surf. It was that of S. Ayling, as I afterwards discovered from a pic of his shirt, on which this name was in marking ink

These bodies I buried on the 3rd, in the presence of upwards of forty Arabs, near the spot where Haddad found the only survivors of the fatal wreck of the Avenger

From the steamer it is unlikely any bodies should ever be wasted ashore. These are from the boat which upset. As there was no chance of my finding more, I returned to Tunis, taking Haddad with me, to receive the reward I considered he had a right to. I remarked with great pleasure that the case of Haddad had been brought before the House of Lords on the 29th ult., when the Earl of Malmesbury stated whether the Government intended to manifest any token of gratitude in the shape of reward to the Arab who saved the lives of a portion of the crew of the Avenger. To this the Earl of Auckland replied, that immediately on the receipt of the information relative to the gallant conduct of the fishermen (shepherds, and not fishermen), rewards were conferred upon them. There can be no doubt but that their Lordships were truly anxious to show to Haddad that their highly praiseworthy exertion in behalf of humanity, and to stimulate his countrymen to imitate, when an opportunity offers itself, his noble example. But it is only just that I mention that after taking poor Mohammed, who was accompanied by his father, and his brother-in-law, to Tunis, and after keeping them away from their homes and families nearly a month, the long expected reward came. The so-much-talked-of and eulogised Arab received the sum of 400 piasters, or £191. This sum he brought to me, to divide it between himself, the father, and his brother-in-law, who, you must know, had nothing to do in the saving of Lieutenant Rooke and his party! I advised him to take at least half of the money for himself, and to give the other half to his companions, which he did very readily. The expenses during their stay here were, however, paid

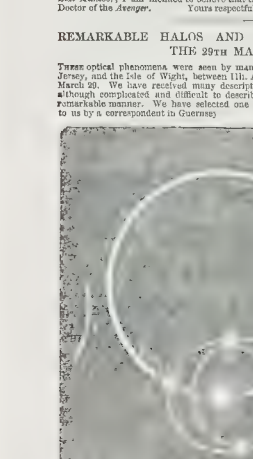
Ahmed Bey behaved himself far more generously towards them Besides giving them a present of fifty piasters each, he gave them new suits of clothes

Shortly before the departure of the Arabs for their homes, I was informed that another body had been washed ashore, which, according to my orders, was interred near the two others. There is only one more from the boat missing. From the particulars I have received from an Arab, who came lately here from Sidi Mansour, I am inclined to believe that the last body found is that of the Doctor of the Avenger.

Yours respectfully, N. DAVIS.

REMARKABLE HALOS AND PARHELIA SEEN ON THE 29TH MARCH.

THESE optical phenomena were seen by many persons in England, Guernsey, Jersey, and the isle of Wight, between 11h. A.M. and 5h. P.M., on Wednesday, March 29. We have received many descriptions of the phenomena, which, although complicated and difficult to describe, confirm each other in a remarkable manner. We have selected one drawing for engraving furnished to us by a correspondent in Guernsey



The circle D was large, white, and brilliant, parallel to the horizon, and passing through the sun. Two small, circles, shown by A, were situated near the sun, and intersecting each other, as well as the circle D. At the latter intersecting points were two parhelia, shown at B. Parts of the smaller circles exhibited the prismatic colours very vividly. C, C, C, C, are arcs accompanying the obscured coronas.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. W. F."—You will see by our solution of Problem 218, that your attempt was a failure.

"J. E. C."—Your suggestions shall be considered.

"K. B."—The move of Q to her 5th at the 8th move of the defence to the Muzio Gambit is not fully treated of in the elementary works, because it is known to be disadvantageous to the player. Your game to show the benefit he derives from it proves nothing, as White at his 13th move overlooks an obvious mate in two moves

"Woodstockensis."—The first seems to be both ingenious and correct. That marked No. 4 is also a great improvement on your former efforts

"Amboliator."—It shall have a place among the Enigmas by and by

"Juvenis."—Number four did a very advanced age; Lancelot Thomas and M. Donnell both in the prime of life.

"Zampa."—A King cannot escape, while in check, by castling

"Typo."—The King cannot Castle when in check

"R. B." Kinsale—See your solution to Problem 218.

"W. L."—When you apply for solutions of by-gone Enigmas, be good enough always to send the positions.

"D. J.," Newark. Chess Club.—Much too simple for our columns

"Philo Chess."—Here's King, the inventor of many of the most subtle and beautiful end-games of the day, is a Professor of Music, and would, doubtless, be happy to afford you the instruction you require

"W. W. M." Spanish Town, Jamaica.—We are greatly d to hear of the progress Chess is making in the Colonies, and should be glad to see Co-respondent's communication; as but two must protest — and his subjecting us to the expence of postage on his letters. The games shall be examined

Solutions by "S. A. H.," "Sapyrnite," "S. S.," "W. D.," "J. W. J.," "Victor," "Sigma," "Bingham," "C. W. C.," "W. L." are correct. Those by "P.," "H. S.," or "G. T.," are wrong.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 218.

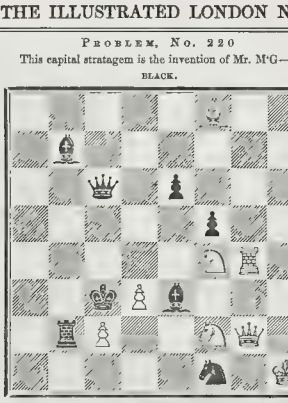
| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 B to Q B 4th | Kt to K Kt 4th | 3. K takes Kt | B to Q 4th |
| 2 Q P one sq | K B P one sq | 4. K takes B | Mate |

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 219.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 Q takes B (ch) | K takes Q (best) | 4 R to K B 8th (ch) | R to Q Kt sq |
| 2. Q takes K Kt | Q makes K Kt | 5. R takes R—mate | |
| 3. Q R takes Q | Q R to Q Kt 2d | | |

PROBLEM, NO. 220

This capital stratagem is the invention of Mr. M'G——Y.



White playing first can mate in five moves.

MATCH OF CHESS, BY CORRESPONDENCE, BETWEEN THE LONDON AND AMSTERDAM CHESS CLUBS.

Up to the present time, the following moves only have been made in this contest.

| WHITE (Amsterdam.) | BLACK (London.) | WHITE (Amsterdam.) | BLACK (London.) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. P to Q 4th | P to K 3d | 3. Q Kt to B 3d | K Kt to B 3d |
| 2. P to Q B 4th | P to K P 4th | Amsterdam to move. | |

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 295.—By H. R. A., an American Amateur.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at Q R 5th | K at Q B 4th | Ps at K 2d and 4th, Ps at K 4th and Q 5th, and Q Kt Q 2d | |
| B at K B 4th | | | |
| B at K R 6th | | | |

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 296.—By Mr. M'G——y

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at Q R 2d | K at Kt Q 6th | Kt at Q 6th | Kt at K B sq |
| B at K 5th | Q at K Kt sq | P at K 7th | |

White to play, and obtain a winning game in three moves.

No. 297.—By Mr. HOWITT

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at K B sq | K at his 5th | B at his 3d 5th | |
| Q at Q Kt 8th | | Kt at Q 4th | |

White to play, and mate in three moves.

THE FIRST A CHILD.—At the end of the table a tiny flirtation has been going on all supper-time, between a little silly lady of five years old, and a young gentleman who has not yet exchanged his tunic for a jacket. He holds her baby hand in his, and looks terrible things at Master Howard, who sits on the other side and will keep putting his arm round her neck and kissing her, which is a shocking thing to do at any time of life—in company. Then the first puts the little bette closer to him, and says that she shall be her wife; and, did not an elder sister set them all to rights, the consequences would be dreadful. When Master Howard is pushed the two sides are together closer than ever, and the little girl explains—"I love him, with his sweets and things, and he never forgets that only belongs to that age. And then there is some little joke between them, not known to anybody else, but of such subtle excellence that it is only sufficient for them to look at one another to burst out into the merriest and most musical laughter — Natural History of the Fast, by Albert Smith.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The commercial engagements falling due on the 4th of the month were unusually numerous, and the amount of bills presented to bankers was satisfactorily met. Money still continues abundant, and the difficulty of employment is slightly diminished. The only class of paper now in the market is inland; foreign bills, formerly so highly estimated, being now regarded with the greatest distrust.

Consols, on Monday, opened a point lower than the closing quotation of the preceding week. From 81 they gradually declined to 80¾, but afterwards rallied, closing at 80⅞. The precise cause of this heaviness could be scarcely defined, but a vague feeling of uneasiness generally prevailed, and it was not until the arrival of the papers on Tuesday containing M. Lamartine's reply to the Irish deputation, that an improvement occurred. Upon its import becoming known, Consols advanced from 80⅛ to 81⅛, sellers, which was the last quotation. Business, without any material alteration, was the prevalent tone of Wednesday's market; but, on Thursday, Consols opened heavily, at 80⅞, soon after receding to 80⅛ ⅜. They unlocked for depression, notwithstanding the favourable revenue returns, was variously accounted for. By many it was attributed to the approaching settlement; and as transfers indicating sales had been made in the stocks recently opened, it was considered that the account might yet turn in favour of the Bears. The alarmists talked loudly about the proposed Chartist meeting at Kennington, while the news of an increase in the already enormous standing army of France again inspired apprehensions for the peace of Europe. One fact must, however, be obvious, it was not scarcity of money. The unfunded debt paying a mere fractional interest more than Consols, quotes 40s. to 42s. premium. Bank Stock is heavy, the large unemployed reserves not being favourable to the creation of dividends. New Three-and-a-quarter Cents have been done as low as 79⅞ to 80 ex div. The market at the close of the week was anything but buoyant, as the following prices indicate:—Bank Stock, 186 ⅛ ⅜; Reduced Anns., 79¾ ⅞ ⅝; New Three-and-a-Quarters per Cents, Anns., 79¾ x d; Long Anns, to expire January, 1860, 8⅛ x d; Ditto 30 years, Jan. 5, 1860, 8 5-16; India Bonds under £1000, 21 pm.; Consols for Account, 80; Exchequer Bills, £6,000, 39 pm., £500, 40 pm.; Small, 39 pm.

All the European Stocks continue most depressed, and Russian has again receded. Dutch quoted 55 to 55, and Russian 70 to 80; Belgian Four per Cents, 40 to 60; Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 20 to 30. It is almost useless to add that such wide quotations are scarcely more than nominal, as the real feeling indicated in indisposition to deal. Mexican was the only Stock firm at the opening, but it soon after receded to 14⅞ ⅜. The downward tendency has continued to increase as the week advanced, Mexican being the exception, it having quoted 15⅛. At the close of the market, which was very heavy, with little doing, prices stood, for Brazilian Bonds, 54; Mexican, 5 per Cent, 1846, 14⅞; Ditto Account, 14⅜; Peruvian Bonds, 6 per Cents, 24; Russian Bonds, 75; Spanish 5 per Cent, 1840, 5⅜; Ditto, Account, 9⅜; Ditto, Passive, 2⅜; Ditto 3 per Cent, Account, 17⅜; Venezuela Bonds, 2¼ per Cent, 17; Dutch 2½ per Cent, 12 Guild., 35; Ditto, 4 per Cent Certificates, 52 x d.

Shares continue to decline, from a belief that the inability of the Companies to procure loans must render it inevitably necessary to call up the unpaid capital, and thus tend to diminish dividends, besides compelling sales, on the part of holders unable to meet the calls. To this may be added a species of panic which seems to possess the public mind with regard to the solvency of even the best lines. The result of these feelings will be seen by a glance at the accompanying list of closing prices:—Aberdeen, 23; Caledonian, 23; Chester and Holyhead, 12; East Anglia, £25, L. and E. and L. and D., 6½; Do., A 3 10s., 3; Eastern Counties, 13; Do. Extension, 5 per Cent., No. 1, 5⅛; Do., do., No. 2, 4⅝ x d; East Lancashire, 17¼; Do., New, 6½; East Lincolnshire, 14½; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 37; Great Northern, 3; Great South. and West (Ireland), 10¾; Great North of England, 222; Great Western, 83; Do., Quarter Shares, 18½; Do., New, £17, 7½; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 90½; Do., Half Sh., 45; Do., Do. Sths, 7½; Do. 3rds (Reg.), 7⅜ dis; Leeds & Thirsk, 1; London & Blackwall, 4½; Do. New, No. 2, 2½ dis; London, Bright., & S. Coast, 57; Do. Consos. Eighths, 16½; London and North-Western, 122; Do., New, 3 10s., 3½; Ditto 12½ ths, 6¾; Ditto £10 (M. and B.) B 2, 8¼; London and South-Western, 49½; Ditto New, £50, 23½; Midland, 92; Ditto, ditto, £50 Shares, 8; Ditto Consolidated Bristol and Birmingham, 6 per Cent, 145; North British, 20½; Ditto Half Shares, 9¼; Ditto Quarters, 3¾; Ditto Thirds, 1; North Staffordshire, 7; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 194; Scottish Central, 35¾; South-Eastern, 22, Ditto, No. 4, 2¾; South Yorkshire, Doncaster, and Goole, 5; Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, 13; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 29. Ditto Original New and Berwick, 27½; Ditto Extension, No. 1, 15¾; Ditto ditto, No. 2, 8½; Ditto, Great Northern and Eastern Preference, 7½; Boulogne and Amiens, 5; Northern of France, 14; Orleans and Bordeaux, 1½; Paris and Lyons, 9¾; Paris and Rouen, 11½; Sambre and Meuse 4.

SATURDAY MORNING. There was an improved feeling visible in the Market yesterday, arising from the energy displayed by the Government in relation to the Chartist demonstration. Consols opened at 81⅛ ⅜, and did not vary materially during the day, closing at 80⅞ ⅜ for Money and Time. French securities were nearly unsaleable, in consequence of the intention of the Provisional Government to "devote the railways to the public service," giving rentes in exchange for stock.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday). Notwithstanding the arrivals of English wheat, coastwise and by land carriage, have been on a very moderate scale, the supply on offer to-day exceeded the wants of the dealers, hence the demand for all descriptions was in a very inactive state, and, in some instances, the prices were in her quarter lower than on Monday The best foreign wheats were held at full currencies, but the middling and inferior kinds were easier to purchase. All kinds of barley were very dull, and some of the holders were ready to give 2s per quarter less money. We had a very slow inquiry for malt, and when sales were pressed, 2s per quarter less money was generally taken. In oats next to nothing was doing. Prices, however, rulled about stationary. Beans and peas without alteration. Indian corn and meal were decidedly lower.

ARRIVALS.—English wheat, 2760; bar ley 2420 oats, 1040. Irish: oats, ——. Foreign: wheat, 6630; barley, 5090; oats, 11,320 quarters. Flour, 3270 sacks; malt, 3470 quarters

English. Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 54s; ditto white, 42s to 56s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 42s to 48s; ditto, white, 46s to 54s; rye, 32s to 34s; grinding barley, 29s to 31s; distilling ditto, 32s to 34s; malting ditto, 34s to 40s Norfolk and Lincoln malt 54s to 56s; brown ditto, 48s to 52s; Kingston and Ware, 54s to 56s; Chevalier, 57s to 58s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 17s to 19s; potato ditto 20s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 16s to 18s; ditto, white, 17s to 19s; tick beans, new, 32s to 34s; ditto, old, 42s to 44s; grey peas, 32s to 34s; maple, 33s to 36s; white, 34s to 36s; boilers, 36s to 40s, per quarter Town-made flour 45s to 46s; Suffolk, 35s to 38s; Stockton and Yorkshire 35s to 36s, per 280 lbs —

Foreign: Dantzig red wheat, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 22s to 27s per barrel; Baltic —s to —s per barrel

The Seed Market Red clover seed is in moderate request, at full prices; otherwise the trade is heavy; tares are lower to purchase

Linseed, English, sowing 56s to 60s; Baltic, crushing, 42s to 48s Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 46s Hempseed, 32s to 36s per quarter Coriander, 14s to 20s per cwt.; Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 10s; white ditto 6s to 9s 6d Tares, 3s 6d to 6s 6d per bushel. English brown rapeseed, £24 per last of 10 quarters Linseed cakes, English, £19 10s to £19 15s; foreign, £9 5s to £9 10s per ton Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 10s per ton. Canary, 60s to 70s per quarter Rape for Clover seed, red, 40s to 44s extra; —s to —s; white, —s to —s extra; hop do., 2s to 3s Foreign, red, —s to —s extra; white, —s to —s extra, —s per cwt

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7½d to 8d; of household ditto, 6d to 7d, per 4lb loaf

Imperial Gazette Averages. Wheat, 51s 10d; barley, 31s 5d; oats, 20s 2d; rye, 32s 8d; beans, 30s 7d; peas, 30s 3d

The Star Packets' Averages.—Wheat, 50s 7d; barley, 30s 9d, oats, 20s 6d; rye, 30s 3d; beans, 30s 6d, peas, 29s 9d

Returns on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 7s 6d; barley, 2s 8d; oats, 2s 6d; rye, 2s 6d, beans, 2s 6d; peas 2s 8d

Tea. The market is very dull and prices had a downward tendency A few packages were brought to public sale on Thursday, and partly disposed of, at a slight abatement in value

Sugar.—For all kinds of sugar—raw as well as refined—the demand is heavy, and the quotations have fallen from 6d to 1s per cwt The stocks in warehouse are very large, the time of year considered

Coffee.—No material alteration can be noticed in the value of any kind of coffee, the demand for which still rules inactive

Rice.—Several large parcels have been brought to the hammer this week The middlings have ruled inactive, and prices have not been supported.

Provisions. The best parcels of Irish butter are in steady request, at fully last week's quotations The bulk of other kinds continue very dull, and prices are unaltered. Bacon, 56s to 58s; Cleanse., 60s to 66s; Cork, 54s to 56s; Limerick, 52s to 52s, and Tralee, 52s to 54s per cwt. English butter has continued to be in pretty good request, with a full average amount of business doing. Fine new Dorset, 106s to 110s; middling ditto, 96s to 100s per cwt., and Fresh, 15s 6d to 16s per dozen pots. Fine Limerick butter meets a ready sale, at full prices. Fine Friesland, 100s to 105s; Kiel, 100s to 102s; and other qualities 76s to 100s per cwt. Bacon is in moderate request, at very full prices. Prime Waterford, sizeable, 66s to 70s; and heavy, 57s to 60s per cwt. Irish lards, as well as barrel-ed beef and pork, are firm. Lard, a slow inquiry, at 62s to 63s per cwt for kegs

Tallow.—This market is by no means so active as last week. P Y C on the spot is quoted at 52s 3d per cwt

Oils.—For all kinds we have to report a very slow demand, and prices are with difficulty supported

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 0s to £4 0s; clover ditto, £4 0s to £5 0s; and straw, £1 5s to £1 12s per load

Potatoes.—As the supplies exceed the demand, late currencies are with difficulty supported. Present rates vary from 60s to 150s per ton

Spirits.—In rum considerably little is doing, at barely late rates; but brandy and sort spirits are in good request, at very full prices

Coals (Friday) Wallsend, 16s; Hetwell, 15s; Russell's Hetton, 16s 6d, Hough Hall, 15s 6d, Tess, 17s, and Cowpen Hartley, 15s per ton

Hops (Friday)—Our market still continues without animation. The finest hops of last year's growth, the quantity of which on offer is small, are held at full prices but old parcels have been sold on somewhat lower terms. Sussex pockets, £3 to £3 9s, Weald of Kent, ditto, £4 to £5 10s, Mid and East Kent ditto, £3 3s to £5 5s per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday)—The supply of beasts on sale in to-day's market was very moderate, and of middling quality. Although the attendance of buyers was by no means large, the best trade was slow by, and in some instances the quotations of the primest Scots advanced 2d per 8lb. The value of all other breeds being supported. The number of foreign beasts and calves was good, that of sheep limited. With English sheep we were very scantily supplied, with fine wethers, and the few calves on sale the wants of the demand for that description of stock was somewhat active, at an improvement in prices of 2d per 8lbs—the best old Downs produced 4s per 8lb. Calves moved off slowly at 2d per 8lbs more money. In pigs a moderate business was doing, at late rates Milch cows were dull, at from £16 to £18 each, causing their sale to drag

Per 8lb to sink the offals—Coarse and inferior beasts 3s 6d to 3s 8d, second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d, prime large ditto, 3s 10d to 4s, prime small ditto, 4s, 4s 2d to 4s 4d, coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 8d to 3s 10d; second quality ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d, prime South Downs, ditto, in the wool, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; ditto out of the wool, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; large coarse calves, 4s 0d to 4s 6d prime small ditto, 4s 8d to 5s 2d; large hogs, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; lambs, 8s 0d to 7s 0d. Suckling calves 16s to 27s, and quarter of veal sizes pigs, 18s to 22s each; bacons, 750, cows, 141; sheep and lambs, 2460; calves, 196, pigs, 286

Newgate and Leadenhall Provisions.—We had a very steady demand for each kind of meat to-day, at a slight improvement in value

Per 8 lb by the carcase.—Inferior beef, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; middling ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime large ditto 3s 4d to 3s 6d, prime small ditto, 3s 8s, to 3s 10d. large pork, 2s 8d to 3s 0d, inferior mutton, 2s 8d to 3s 0d, they making ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 6d, prime ditto, 4s 8d to 5s 0d, veal, 3s 10d to 5s 0d, small pork, 4s 6d to 5s 0d, lamb, 5s 10d to 6s 10d.

ROBT HERBERT.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, APRIL 4.

BANKRUPTS

H D C COLE, Earl's-court, Old Brompton, bearing-housekeeper J COBB, Northumberland-street, Strand, boarding-housekeeper H ROOSE, Salisbury-street, Strand, merchant W CHILD, Cornhill, publisher. J MILLER and G RICHITSON, Great Dover-st eet, Southwark, d spers J Alderson, Thanetall, druggist W RIDGWAY, Hanley, manufacturer of earthenware. L FARNANDS, Nottingham, bookseller T EDWARDS, Burslem, manufacturer of earthenware M DAY, Weston-super-Mare, miller. J H DAVIES, Merthyr Tydvil, grocer J CARRETT, Exeter, post-master H REDFEARN, Sheffield, saw-manufacturer. W LOMPARDINI, Huddersfield, carver and gilder C TURNER, Pudsey, Yorkshi e, clothier. A BARKER, Bradford, Yo kshire, worsted-manufacturer. T M'CREGARY, Liverpool, corn-dealer W BAINES, Blackpool, cabinet-maker W JONES, Manchester, stationer J HORSFIELD, Sunderland, merchant tailor. E MESNARD, Sunderland, merchant.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS

R MACKENZIE, Edinburgh J and J WEDDELL, Carluke, wood-merchants. P MATTHEW, Gourdielhill, Perthshire grain-dea er J MAIN, Glasgow, hair-dresser J M'PHUN, Glasgow, smith. W CAMPBELL, Glasgow, merchant J PIRIE, Edinburgh, chemist W DITTIE, Inv ness, Alves, Slateinglaire, manufacturer. W JUST, Arbroath, merchant. W ELGIN, Aberdeen, teacher

FRIDAY, APRIL 7

WAR OFFICE, APRIL 7.

14th Light Dragoons Troop Sergeant-Major G Shenton to be Quartermaster, vice Palmer 16th Brevet-Col C Baker to be Major, vice T H Pearse, Brevet-Major L Pyler to be Major, vice Baker. Lieut R Radley to be Captain, vice Pyler; Cornet T W Wt to be Lieutenant, vice Bailey, R Goff to be Cornet, vice White

Coldstream Regiment of Foot Guards: Lieut and Captain E C W M Milman to be Captain and Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Kingcote, Ensign and Lieut Sir G F E Wrixon-Hart, to be Lieutenant and Captain, vice Milman, H W Lutt to be Ensign and Lieutenant; vice Sir G F E Walker

Scots Fusilier Guards Ensign the Hon W C W Coke to be Ensign and Lieutenant, vice Sir E Poore, Bart

Rifle Brigade Ensign F W Gore to be Lieutenant, vice Pennefather, V A Spoor to be Ensign, vice Gore 17th Lieut-Colonel J Steele to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Pennycuick 18th Lieut G C Abbott to be Lieutenant, vice Hall 20th Lieut H James to be Lieutenant, vice Abbott, Sergeant-Major F Padfield to be Quarter-master, vice Taylor. 24th Lieut-Co. J Pennycuick, to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice Steele; Lieut. Sir Capel, vice Hamilton 27th Brevet-Major D Riley, Ensign G B Payne to be Lieut, vice Bazalgette; Ensign J C W Alleyne to be Ensign, vice Payne 30th Lieut-Colonel, vice Kingcote, Ensign and Lieut Sir G F E Wrixon-Hart, to be Lieutenant and Captain, vice Milman, H W Lutt to be Ensign and Lieutenant; vice Sir G F E Walker

Scots Fusilier Guards Ensign the Hon W C W Coke to be Ensign and Lieutenant, vice Sir E Poore, Bart

Rifle Brigade Ensign F W Gore to be Lieutenant, vice Pennefather, V A Spoor to be Ensign, vice Gore 17th Lieut-Colonel J Steele to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Pennycuick 18th Lieut G C Abbott to be Lieutenant, vice Hall 20th Lieut H James to be Lieutenant, vice Abbott, Sergeant-Major F Padfield to be Quarter-master, vice Taylor. 24th Lieut-Co. J Pennycuick, to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice Steele; Lieut. Sir Capel, vice Hamilton 27th Brevet-Major D Riley, Ensign G B Payne to be Lieut, vice Bazalgette; Ensign J C W Alleyne to be Ensign, vice Payne 30th Lieut-Colonel Hind, Captain H B Ryle to be Major, vice Fraser, Lieut J B Fellowes to be Captain, vice Ryle; Ensign F Cust to be Lieutenant, vice Fellowes, Lieutenant

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

THE SPECIAL POLKA, inscribed to the Special Constables of the Nation, by JOHN COOPER, is now ready, and we feel sure every Special Constable will present his Wife, Daughter, or Sister with a copy, if only to commemorate the gallant 10th. Price 3s. 6d. Published by H. TOLKIEN, 36, King William-street, City where may be had "The Special Quadrilles," price 3s.

HENRY WYLDE'S PIANOFORTE WORKS, including a New Grand Sonata, Introduction and Rondo, "Die Landschaft," &c. &c., just Published by R. MILLS (late BIRCHALL), 140, New Bond-street

Now Ready, just published, Price 3s.,

CAN A BOSOM SO GENTLE REMAIN ? The Words by SHENSTONE A Glee for Five Voices. Composed and dedicated to Vincent Novello Esq., by MRS LAURA W. BARKER.—London: Sacred Music Warehouse, 240, Regent-street, Soho, and 24, Poultry

Just Published, Price 2s. 6d.,

LOYAL SONGS.— OLD ENGLAND'S the LAND of the FREE.' THE PIANISTA for MAY (No. contains this new National Song, as sung at all the loyal meetings Also, "God Save the Queen," newly harmonized for one, two, three or four voices. "Rule Britannia," with all the verses. "Marseillaise" now in Paris," "Le Chant du Depart," the "Marseillaise Hymn. "La Parisienne" The whole for 8s., instead of 8s each piece, post-free, 36 stamps Catalogues of this popular Musical Work.

"THERE'S A GOOD TIME COMING,' Just Published, Price 2s. 6d.,

THE NEW NATIONAL SONG, sung at almost enthusiasm by all audiences. The Song and Chorus, eloquently poised in music form, with pianoforte accompaniment, and the accuracy authenticated by Mr Russe's autograph on every copy DAVIDSON, Pianoforte Dealer, Composer to the Queen Dowager, St. Paul's and Thames's row, the only authorized publisher of the frequently encored Airs of the composers, Henry Russell Lists gratis of 'Twenty, including the Wife's Dream, just ready

STARTLING NOVELTIES in the LADIES SHAWL and MANTLE trade, price 1s. 6 Plates 80 Patterns and 150 Patterns of Walking Dresses. Vallon, 1 Rue de la Paix Dresses &c. all of extraordinary low-ttle A coloured fashion plate of Fashions for Show Dresses, &c. A fine steel En graving of the Royal Family, 6d extra Post-free, 1s. 6d. 1 Vallon, 1 Rue de la Paix, Regent-street, London.

THE YOUNG COMPOSER; or, Progressive Lessons on the Pianoforte. By JAMES CALKIN.

A SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY By JAMES CORNWELL, Ph D "Dr Cornwell has produced some of our most valuable school books. His Grammars of the English Language, and a treatise to facilitate the study of composition, have been extensively adopted. His Manual of Geography is the most complete we have met with, and no teacher can neglect to take it into his hands."—Educational Times. Sold by all booksellers, and at the Author's Establishment, 3, Pentonville-hill, Islington.

VOLUME XVII. of the MEDICAL TIMES is now ready, price, cloth, 10s. 6d. Containing 48 Original Lectures, by Professors South, Ancock, Mantell, Daniell and Bush, 97 Original Communications, by Dr Hagar Rogwell, Wal. Todd, Simpson, Kiwe, and about 60 other practitioner the profession, 200 Scientific Articles, w Medical Times, Reviews of all the New Medical Books, Editorial Articles, and notices of every event affecting the honour and interest of the profession The Medical Times is published every with two volumes lists of all the Journals and the United States, and is each Volume, with the Index, forms a complete and valuable Medical Library. Sold by all booksellers, and at the Office, 6, Wellington-street, Strand.

Illustrated volumes of scientific information, equal in interest to fiction. Library New volumes. JAMES ANGERSTEIN CARPAEL, 69, Essex-street, Strand

Just published, price 6s. with Key, 4s. 6d.,

GERMAN IN ONE VOLUME; Containing a Grammar, Exercises, a Reading-book, and a Vocabulary of 4500 words synonymous in German and ENGLISH.

"We consider the Volume to be a It comprehends all that is ne and rapid progress in the study It is especially adapted for those who desire to learn Germ

WILHELM A. ... Maria-lane, and at 38, Ludgate-hill. ... Russell-street, Co...

AN ELEGANT PRESENT.

THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT, (AUTHORISED VERSION)

Beautifully bound in leather, embossed and gilt sides, gilt edges, price Five Shillings In paper cover, with Wood Cuts, only Sixpence Splendid Engravings from Drawings executed by Eminent Artists, engraved by the Brothers Dalziel, Pictorial, Explanatory, and Descriptive, and embodied in a novel Panoramic Picture of the Holy Land, as it appeared during the time when the principal events recorded in the Old and New Testaments

ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT contains some fine brief imaginative sketches Much that has been shown in the choicest subjects, and even those which have been ... are united with originality of conception and ... "A publication characterised by the spirit of its well-known proprietors of the 'Illustrated London News,' and illustrated, we doubt not, in the first style of excellence, which the Messrs Dalziel have acquired by a daring originality, and finished with a boldness and beauty that must ... from numerously attracted."—Spectator.

London: Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, and sold by all Booksellers

CHEAP BOOKS.—S. SAYWELL'S CATALOGUE of 1500 important and interesting Works in the best branches of Light Literature, at very low prices, is now ready, and may be had gratis, on application, or will, on receipt of two postage stamps, be sent, pre paid, to any address. 180, High Holborn, opposite Gray's-inn.

NATURALISATION.—To ALIENS resident in this country who are desirous of being Naturalised, so that they may hold Freehold and long Leasehold Property, with the other Rights and Capacities of a Natural Born British Subject, at a trifling expense, by applying to W. H. HAPPERS Winchester Buildings, Broad-street London.

GOOD FEMALE SERVANTS are obtained at the CITY DOMESTICS BAZAAR, 33, Ludgate-hill, which is conducted by a Lady of the highest respectability. Servants wanting good characters will find at the best office in London. Respectable situations. Open from Ten till Four, Saturday excepted.

BATHS.—R. and J. SLACK, 336, Strand, opposite Somerset House, are offering the most extensive assortment of Bath and Toilet Wares in London, at prices much less than other houses where quality is considered. Hand Shower, Portable Baths, and curtain, 8s; Hip Baths, 10s; Sponging Baths, 5s 6d.—Illustrated Catalogues gratis and post-paid.

PAPER HANGINGS.—Economy and ... 2,000 pieces New Designs always in stock ... Rooms Paper... Prevent Fire, 6d, 9d, 1s, 1s 6d, 2s Roman Patterns 2 6d Relief (Ivory), Statuette 1 4d Decorative Steppers, various prices. Wood-carved Brackets, various prices Water Vases &c. Jugs (glass), various prices. The Simplified Shakespeare 3 3s Fish Carvers (silver) 10 10 0 Waverley 3 3s Ditto (electro) Tea-urn 2 5s Bundy 3 3s Ditto Tea-urn 2 5s Shakespeare 3 3s Stone Ware (Antique Tablet mask) Gilt Beauties, each 3 3s Ditto (Bacchus mask) 2 10 0 Gilt Wire Baskets 3 3s Ditto Sugar Bowl 2 5s Sedan-waiter Glasses, various prices Britannia Metal Teapot 6 16 0 Ditto Tea-urn 2 5s Tea-pot (silver) 3 3 0 Brush Dish 0 10 0 (plated) 2 0 0 Urn and the Lion (Parian) 2 2s Tea-caddy Spoon (silver) 2 5s Dorothea (Parian) 2 2s Tea caddy in wood, various prices Nonnenwerther 2 2s New Bread Knife 1 1 0 New Bread Platter, various prices. 2 0 New Fish Platter, various prices. 2 0 Tureen Cutlet Brackets, 3 3 0

Now ready, to be had of all First-class Dealers.

SUMMERLY'S ART-MANUFACTURES, by Sir Henry Cole, C.B., Richard Redgrave, Townsend, Wornum, &c. Price 1s. each, or 12s. per Annum. Review of No. 1 in the Times, 6th April. Relief (Ivory), Statuette 1 4 0 Decorative Steppers, various prices. Wood-carved Brackets, various prices Water Vases &c. Jugs (glass), various prices. The Simplified Shakespeare 3 3 0 Fish Carvers (silver) 10 10 0 Waverley 3 3 0 Ditto (electro) 2 5 0 Bundy 3 3 0 Ditto Tea-urn 2 5 0 Shakespeare 3 3 0 Stone Ware (Antique Tablet mask) Gilt Beauties, each 3 3 0 (Bacchus mask) 2 10 0 Gilt Wire Baskets 3 3 0 Ditto Sugar Bowl 2 5 0 Sedan-waiter Glasses, various prices Britannia Metal Teapot 6 16 0 Brush Dish 0 10 0 Ditto Tea-urn 2 5 0 Urn and the Lion (Parian) 2 2 0 Tea-caddy Spoon (silver) 2 5 0 Dorothea (Parian) 2 2 0 Tea caddy in wood, various prices Nonnenwerther 2 2 0 New Bread Knife 1 1 0 New Bread Platter, various prices. 2 0 New Fish Platter, various prices. 2 0 Tureen Cutlet Brackets, 3 3 0

Now ready, to be had of all First-class Dealers.

SUMMERLY'S ART-MANUFACTURES, by Sir Henry Cole, C.B., Richard Redgrave, Townsend, Wornum, &c. Price 1s. each, or 12s. per Annum. Review of No. 1 in the Times, 6th April. Relief (Ivory), Statuette 1 4 0 Decorative Steppers, various prices. Wood-carved Brackets, various prices Water Vases &c. Jugs (glass), various prices. The Simplified Shakespeare 3 3 0 Fish Carvers (silver) 10 10 0 Waverley 3 3 0 Ditto (electro) 2 5 0 Bundy 3 3 0 Ditto Tea-urn 2 5 0 Shakespeare 3 3 0 Stone Ware (Antique Tablet mask) Gilt Beauties, each 3 3 0 (Bacchus mask) 2 10 0 Gilt Wire Baskets 3 3 0 Ditto Sugar Bowl 2 5 0 Sedan-waiter Glasses, various prices Britannia Metal Teapot 6 16 0 Brush Dish 0 10 0 Ditto Tea-urn 2 5 0 Urn and the Lion (Parian) 2 2 0 Tea-caddy Spoon (silver) 2 5 0 Dorothea (Parian) 2 2 0 Tea caddy in wood, various prices Nonnenwerther 2 2 0 New Bread Knife 1 1 0 New Bread Platter, various prices. 2 0 New Fish Platter, various prices. 2 0 Tureen Cutlet Brackets, 3 3 0

THE AMERICAN METALLIC TABLET SALVOLATILE and Cephalic Snuff, the first cutlets in Europe, and the only remedies that will relieve the nerves when they are in a state of irritation, and may be used without any other method. Gentlemen are invited to try them, and, after one trial, will never buy any other. Sold by them before their purchase For sale at 229, Strand.

SMITH and Co.'S REGISTERED BOMBULE, a gelatinous covering for pills tasteless May be had of all Druggists in boxes, at 6d and 1s each.

DO YOU SUFFER TOOTHACHE? If so, use the SPANISH EXARCH for ... two drops of opera. An ... will be instantly ... Sold by ... 6d 8d and 1s

VARICOSE VEINS.—Surgical Elastic Stockings, Caps, of a new and ingenious fabric for the above complaints, and for Swellings of the Limbs, Sprains, &c., are prepared on every form by POPE and PLANTE, 4, Waterloo-place, Pall-Mall. This peculiar elastic fabric is woven in the loom in any required length, and in any size, WITHOUT THE TROUBLE OF LACING OR UNLACING Particulars for measure and prices, Instructions for measure on application, and the article sent by WALKER'S NEEDLES, by authority of Her Majesty the Queen. Useful Inquiry.—For proof of the extreme durability, power of cleansing and ... economy, ask all who have used Meircalfe's Brushes The Tooth brush performs the highly important office of scarifying thoroughly into the fibrilous, and cleaning in the most extraordinary manner... hairs never come loose ... Decidedly penetrative Hair brushes ... bristles, which will not ... The common hair Improved Clothes-brush, that cleans harmlessly in one-third the time The new Velvet-brush, and numerous novelties of genuine unbleached Smyrna Sponges, at METCALFE and CO.'s only Establishment, 130a, Oxford-street, one door from Rolles-street.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY ANNUAL MEETING, EXETER HALL, THURSDAY, MAY 11. William Cash, Esq. in the Chair. Doors open at 5. Chair taken at 6 o'clock. Cards of Admission may be obtained at the Office of the Society, 11, Fokesbouse yard.

TO THE NOBILITY AND GENTRY.— VENTRILOQUISM.—Mr. NEWMAN will be happy to attend Private Parties and Juvenile Assemblies for Charity or other purposes after the 20th of May, to give his New Entertainment. Apply for particulars to the Librarian of the Westminster Literary Institution, Smith-street, Westminster.

Hafen von Great Grimsby.—Anzeige an Kaufleute und Manern Ab oder von Rotterdam. Das die Dampfschiff-Verbindung zwischen Rotterdam und Great-Grimsby einstanden mogen, auf 10 pence per reg lirte Ton meiner Maschinen-Kraft, worden viele neue Docken gegen das Ende des Jahres 1849 bei und 9 gen Grund von Bauquemlichkeit und Sicherheit dem Verkehr haben, und Schiffe anfuanehmen.

Durch Grimsby werden die Waaren Reisenden, per den meisten andere englischen Hafen anerbieten, das sie in allen Better, ausgenommen ein paar Stunden bei niedrigem Wasser auch den Gezeugzahlen Hafen, 6 legt sind.

Der Dorten hiesst eine Bahnhof gegen Ungewetter von allen Seiten und der Seefahrer hat den Manager in Gegenden und um alles was sie bei verreisen Kaufmannschaft vor nutzen Bequemlichkeiten von Manchester, Sheffield und der Grafschaft Lincoln, erfahren und complet sein.

PARASOLS.—Ladies are respectfully invited to Robert W. and J. ... to see a most extensive assortment of PARASOLS, ... every shape, every size, and every pattern, and in the most fashionable colours of the season, from 5s. to 21s. each.—Stamp-... Patentees. 140, Regent-street, 94, Fleet-street, and 10, Royal Exchange.

SPRING FASHIONS.—Mrs. TUCK begs respectfully to inform Ladies and gentlemen that her MILLINERY ROOMS are now replete with every novelty for the present season, in which she solicits their early inspection, and to the same tasteful patterns which have always characterised this Establishment. Mourning orders executed with the utmost dispatch and economy.—6, New Cavendish-street, Portland-place.

SHIRTS.—Six very superior SHIRTS for 26s. 48 and 50 S. Shirt Maker, 39 Saint Martin's-lane. N. B. The largest and best Assortment of Shirtings in London.

NUMBER NINE, POULTRY.—HENRY WITHERS, SHIRT MAKER supplies an excellent quality SHIRT, at 8s 6d., a finer quality at 9s 6d., and the best at 7s 6d. These Shirts are of a remarkable long cloth, the fronts, wristbands, &c., of fine linen, and the neckbands of the best make, so that the quality cannot possibly be surpassed.—Number Nine, Poultry.

SIX VERY SUPERIOR SHIRTS for 25s.— The be tless durable Long Cloth, with very superior Irish Linen Fronts, Collars, and Wristbands, long Cloth Shirts, Irish Linen Fronts, Bands, and Wristbands, each No. 1, 3s 6d; No 2, 4s 6d; No 3, 5s 6d; No 4, 6s 6d; No 5, 7s 6d. Linen Shirts, extra Fine Fronts and Wrists, No 2, 5s 6d; No 3, 6s 6d; No 4, 7s 6d; No 5, 8s 6d Coloured Shirts, such as Regents, Oxonians, Cambridges, Clarences, Dukes, &c., of the most distinct Lancashire fabrics, made to order, and fitted on the shortest notice. Patterns, with directions for self-measurement, forwarded, post-paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of a post-office order, payable to RICHARD FORD, 38, Strand, London, who will receive immediate attention.

INDIA SILK HANDKERCHIEFS.—FORD, 38, Strand, begs to announce he will SIX very Superior INDIA SILK HANDKERCHIEFS for 14s 6d. weighing two ounces each and warranted all a yard square. The following prices are for hand-dozens and the handkerchief will measure a yard square: Rare old Indian, very scarce, No 1, 11s 6d; No 2, 12s 6d; No 3, 13s 6d; best 20s. Printed light and dark grounds, 11s 6d., 12s 6d., 13s 6d., best, 20s. Unbleached or Indian silk free of charge. Post-office Orders, payable to RICHARD FORD, 38, Strand, will receive immediate attention.

JAMES DOBSON, OUTFITTER AND ... begs to inform ... that he has ... premises, ... Strand, ... Gentlemen ... throughout the country Also ... Dresses of ... silks figured ... fashion.

DOUBLE REASONS REILLY, Gun Maker, ... the numerous New hunting are 26 to 36 ... very powerful, and ... the best ... the very best materials, must highly ... to every sportsman ... Rifles, Pistols, ...

HOOPER'S DANDELION or TARAXICUM COFFEE, Cocoa, &c., is so easily ... by the most ... tasty. Dr. Prout, Rigby, Chambers, Bright, Latham, Watson, Ashburner, and others ... the extract of Taraxicum as ... a wholesome ... to couple ... of the ... bilious and ... Dr. Watson ... Hooper's Dandelion Coffee ... many ... to promote a regular and healthy secretion of bile I have found none equal to it for ... Hundreds are ... to the most ... HOOPER, Operative Chymist, 7, Pall-mall East, London.

PROUT'S Large and Fashionable Assortment of LADIES' COMBS is unequalled for elegance, cheapness and variety The Public are invited to inspect a List and Assortment, free from ... extent, affords a choice that is not to be met with elsewhere 247, Strand, and 4, Duke-street, Adelphi, will receive the benefit of ... all the late improvements, are celebrated for their durability and efficiency Combs ... in every part of the world, with ... Prout's Hair Brushes stand ... and are proof against the ... Prout's Hair ... Brushes of ... ivory, or ladies' ... all ... fancy ... with every article for the ... toilet, the quality of which may be depended on, and at the lowest ... PROUT, Brush and Comb Maker, 229, Strand, London, near Temple-bar.

DEANE'S DOMESTIC BATHS.—The Ascension of Saviour after a long ... and ... and ... almost saffers from the effects of that epidemic which has prevailed so much, and so fatally, renders it desirable that all should at ... Water Bathing. Deane's Bath Department is now ... with every novelty, and every description of bath, whether ... which, renders the operation easy and agreeable As a guide ... Deane's Domestic Bath, the subject of Baths and Bathing, which is "at published, and may be obtained at their Warehouses, or of their ... which are daily in all parts of the Metropolis Baths separate, or for use in the most possible changes. Prices ... Deane's Bath ... Warehouse, 46, King William-street, London-bridge, and 214, Strand.

Now ready, to be had of all First-class Dealers.

SUMMERLY'S ART-MANUFACTURES, by Sir Henry Cole, C.B., Richard Redgrave, Townsend, Wornum, &c. Price 1s. each, or 12s. per Annum. Review of No. 1 in the Times, 6th April. Relief (Ivory), Statuette 1 4 0 Decorative Steppers, various prices. Wood-carved Brackets, various prices Water Vases &c. Jugs (glass), various prices. The Simplified Shakespeare 3 3 0 Fish Carvers (silver) 10 10 0 Waverley 3 3 0 Ditto (electro) 2 5 0 Bundy 3 3 0 Ditto Tea-urn 2 5 0 Shakespeare 3 3 0 Stone Ware (Antique Tablet mask) Gilt Beauties, each 3 3 0 (Bacchus mask) 2 10 0 Gilt Wire Baskets 3 3 0 Ditto Sugar Bowl 2 5 0 Sedan-waiter Glasses, various prices Britannia Metal Teapot 6 16 0 Brush Dish 0 10 0 Ditto Tea-urn 2 5 0 Urn and the Lion (Parian) 2 2 0 Tea-caddy Spoon (silver) 2 5 0 Dorothea (Parian) 2 2 0 Tea caddy in wood, various prices Nonnenwerther 2 2 0 New Bread Knife 1 1 0 New Bread Platter, various prices. 2 0 New Fish Platter, various prices. 2 0 Tureen Cutlet Brackets, 3 3 0

LUX DAMES.—La Célébrité dont le ROWLAND'S KALYDOR confirme à jour comme extirpateur actif et agréable de toutes les impuretés de la peau et de toutes ses rugosités, l'engage à des prétentions. Cette préparation exempte et balsamique fait disparaître en peu de temps le hâle, la rougeur, l'aspérité et la sécheresse et par son ... rend à toute ... l'extraction de toutes rougeurs, tons boutons. Le bon teint qu'il donne, a l'honneur et la célébrité de ... Kalydor ... Rowland's Kalydor ... Rowland's Kalydor ... Rowland's

ROMAN AND MEDIÆVAL POTTERY, RECENTLY FOUND NEAR LINCOLN.

ANCIENT POTTERY LATELY FOUND NEAR LINCOLN.

These interesting specimens of Roman and Mediæval Pottery were turned up in excavations recently made, chiefly for railway purposes, in the immediate neighbourhood of Lincoln. They are in the collection of a gentleman of the county, who has obligingly forwarded sketches of them for representation.

In our Illustration we have grouped the Roman Pottery on the ground, and the Mediæval remains on an elevated platform behind. The specimens of Roman workmanship are excellent examples of the grey, red, and whitish earthenware; and amongst them will be found some nicely-ornamented vases, some also with handles, and some oddly-formed vessels of uncertain use. The colander (Fig. 5) is a singular specimen, and was discovered amongst the rubbish of an ancient pottery, evidently thrown on one side as unfit for use, from being cracked in the manufacture. The lamp is a neat example of the earthen lamps of the Romans.

Of the Mediæval Pottery, Fig. 1 represents a jug of reddish-coloured clay, having the upper portion covered with a green glaze, and ornamented with brown spots, raised. The finger-marks made in inserting the bottom of the jug are deeply impressed. This vessel is about 10 inches high and was, perhaps, made in the thirteenth century.

Fig. 2 is a portion of the upper part of a large jug, having a head in relief upon it, and it is singular from having had three handles. This fragment is of about the same antiquity as Fig. 1, and like it is coated with a green glaze.

Fig. 3 is a vessel resembling in form the save-alls manufactured at the present day. When found, it contained a number of Roman bronze coins. Similar vessels, also containing coins, have been turned up on the Continent, and, like this specimen, are not more than two centuries old. Fig. 4 is probably a crucible.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

"Attila" has been given twice during the past week at Her Majesty's Theatre, and the music of this striking opera is found greatly to gain—as is always the case with Verdi—upon repeated hearings. The grandeur of style of this composer is peculiarly suited to the wild, barbarous, highly dramatic character of the subject he has chosen, while its chief interpreters, above all Belletti and Cruvelli, so admirably adapted to their respective parts, give to its performance the utmost effect of which it is capable. Belletti's Attila displays the powers of this great artist as a tragedian more fully than any other opera in which we have seen him; and his performance in this and in the "Barbiere" shows him to be possessed of great powers in the most opposite styles of lyrical and dramatic art. A sort of wild, reckless, haughtiness of manner, look, and gesture assumed by Belletti, stamps the semi-barbarous character of the "scourge of the earth," as the total failure of all courage and strength of mind, immediately be [illegible] by superstitious terrors, is in admirable accord with the character of the ignorant, uncultured, [illegible] Mlle Cruvelli is, as usual, all spirit and enthusiasm in the part of Odabella—a character admirably suited to her in every respect.

On Tuesday Lablache announced his arrival by his presence in the house at the performance of "Attila;" and we suppose we shall soon enjoy the pleasure of hearing and seeing the Gros de Naples, who is undiminished in bulk, as we hope in voice likewise. The revolutionary movements throughout the Continent have interfered, it appears, with the arrival of the musical celebrities expected at this theatre, amongst them, Mdme. Tadolini, and the contralto, Mdlle. Schwartz, and, as we hear also, Jenny Lind—the two former, if not all three, were, we believe, to have been here by this time, but their arrival will not now be long delayed.

The pretty little ballet of "Thea" has been re-produced at this theatre with the same success it enjoyed last year—and most deservedly, as not only has it lost nothing of its own intrinsic merit, but the two charming danseuses who appear therein, Rosati and Marie Taglioni, have gained in every way since their brilliant début of last year.

Our Illustration represents the last scene of "Attila;" that in which Odabella summons, at last, courage to imitate the example of Judith, and kill the tyrant and scourge of her country. This opera, and the character of Odabella particularly, is replete the most interest of which it is susceptible, ought to be contemplated, as regards the present feelings and ideas of the Italians. Verdi's music itself reflects the sombre, volcanic dramatic energy which, for a long time past, however strongly compressed, has characterized the Italians, who, before they found an opportunity of wreaking their vengeance, naturally found a charm in operas which accorded with the workings of their minds. Odabella's first splendid cavatina, "Donne Italiche," &c. ("We Italian maidens watch in arms, whilst the women of the Barbarians weep"), was always received with the most heartiest applause, and encored several times in Italy; and the concluding scene never failed always gave rise to interminable ovations. This explains, independent of the music, the extraordinary and most successful exertions of Cruvelli and Tadolini in the part of Odabella. They have now found so many Italian women to imitate them in real scenes of bloodshed, that all the stages on which they won their theatrical laurels are now closed.

M. Thalberg has been exclusively engaged for the concerts at Her Majesty's Theatre, which will include the whole force, vocal and instrumental, of the establishment. He will perform nowhere else this season. The four pieces announced for his performance at the first concert, on the 17th instant, are the most attractive in the repertoire of the Prince of Pianists. Selections from the "Stabat Mater," morceaux from Beethoven, Mozart, Rossini, Weber, Gluck, &c., will be performed; but perhaps the most novel and attractive devices for this occasion are the Nonette of Spohr, and likewise a grand Trio from Meyerbeer, to be sung by those extraordinary bass voices, Colletti, Belletti, and Lablache.

VERDI'S OPERA OF "ATTILA," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—THE LAST SCENE.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, April 8, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 312.—Vol. XII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE CHARTIST DEMONSTRATION.

The Chartists have had their demonstration. London has been startled from its propriety. French ultra-democrats have indulged the enthusiastic hope that we too were to be revolutionized and republicanized. Mr. Feargus O'Connor has shown that quality which was as good as valour in Sir John Falstaff, and which was still better than valour in him—discretion. The minor divinities of Chartism have imitated their leader. Three hundred thousand Chartists summoned to Kennington Common, have dwindled down to fifteen thousand. One hundred and fifty thousand special constables, watchful for the preservation of order, have grasped their useless truncheons, and have paraded the streets without meeting a foe or breaking a sconce. The great Duke has lain in ambush, and has not shown his dragoons. The mountain has laboured: the mouse has been born. The Chartist petition for the six points has been peaceably received. The alarm has subsided. Not even a baker's cart has been pillaged, as at the previous meeting. England has disappointed the Republican propaganda, and offers at present, with the uncongenial exception of Russia, the spectacle of the only stable government in Europe. In all this there is very much to rejoice at and to be thankful for: but amid our rejoicing let us not forget that danger evaded, is not always overcome; and that in issuing unharmed from the jaws of one difficulty, there may be other difficulties before us requiring still greater energy, prudence, and skill to surmount successfully.

While, therefore, the country has the greatest reason to be thankful, that, owing to the wise precautions of those entrusted with the public security, and to the cordial support given to those in authority by the great bulk of the trading and industrial community, as well as to the discretion of men from whom there was too much reason to fear indiscretion, Monday last passed over without bloodshed, or even serious disturbance, and with merely the loss of a day's trade or day's labour, it must now consider seriously whether this despised Chartism have not, after all, some possible truth and some real vitality in it. Wherever there is a smoke there is a fire, say Mr. Carlyle and the proverb which he has made the motto of his book. It is time that we should investigate what social fire it is which produces the ugly smoke of Chartism, and sends up such dangerous sparks as Mr. O'Connor and Mr. Ernest Jones as evidences that it is burning. Mr. O'Connor and his friends may commit the stupid folly of asserting that their petition for the "six points" was signed by upwards of five millions and a half of people; and cooler and more impartial men, who are not Chartists, may remember that there are not in Great Britain six millions of adult males in the whole population; yet, although the Chartist leaders may have manufactured signatures by wholesale—though they may have infamously exaggerated the numbers that they have placed upon the petition—though all the blackguard street urchins of London, Manchester, Birmingham, Liverpool, Leeds, and Glasgow may have appended their names to it twenty times over, we must not forget that, even if a hundredth or even a five hundredth part of the signatures are bonâ fide, it is a petition which the Legislature of England ought to receive with seriousness. If even one thousand men request the House of Commons, in respectful language, to consider whether Universal Suffrage, Vote by Ballot, the Division of the Country into Electoral Districts, Annual Parliaments, the Abolition of the Property Qualification, and the Payment of Members would not conduce to the welfare of Great Britain generally, and to the elevation of the condition of the labouring classes particularly, the Ministerial majority in the House of Commons should consider the subject. They may disagree from the petitioners. They may consider Annual Parliaments an annual nuisance; they may deny the policy of according Universal Suffrage to an uneducated people; they may prefer open to secret voting; they may think it expedient to maintain the present division of counties and boroughs; they may not coincide in opinion with the Chartists on any one of their six points; but, if they are wise, they should remember that they are bound, as the representatives of the people—deriving their only real power from the people—to consider the questions raised with careful attention, and to abstain from any insolent or overbearing contempt of the opinions or wishes of any portion of them. The Parliamentary reports in the daily papers of Tuesday state that the Chartist petition was, "amidst great laughter, ordered to be brought up." They further state, that, when Mr. Lushington, the member for Westminster, gave notice that on Friday (last night), the night appointed for the discussion upon the petition, he should ask the Prime Minister whether he could hold out any distinct hope that he would, during the present session, introduce or support any measure for the extension of the suffrage, the House received the mere mention of the subject with cheers and laughter.

Some other circumstances which have arisen from this demonstration are of a nature to cause much future agitation throughout the country, and perhaps to prove fatal to the existence of the present Ministry. The country may look upon the latter result with the most stoical indifference, but it cannot look with indifference upon a protracted and bitter agitation of political parties. If the danger to be apprehended from a Chartist insurrection be, as as we think it, and as the Ministry and all their supporters assert it to be, very small, it is surely the worst policy, and a most unjust aggression upon popular rights, to take advantage of that small danger to introduce and bring forward measures which only a great danger can justify. If the Crown of this country be, as the enrolment of one hundred and fifty thousand or two hundred thousand special constables of Monday last so loudly testifies, safe from all hostile aggression from any portion of the people, and so [illegible] the steady affection of the middle, upper, and many of the workm[illegible] classes, why attempt to make it more secure by interfering with the liberty of speech? To make the law of Ireland the same as the law of England, in cases of treason and sedition, is right and fair; but under this pretext to diminish the liberty of speech hitherto enjoyed in England, is wrong and most unfair. It is one of the unhappy fatalities attendant upon the conduct of violent men, that they justify the aggressions of their opponents; and that in attempting too much liberty, they arm Governments with sufficient audacity to diminish the liberty which already exists. For this evil the Chartists are now responsible. The right of public meeting and the right of free speech are justly dear to the people of this country; and though the Duke of Wellington, Lord Brougham, Colonel Sibthorp, and Sir Robert Inglis may be glad of an opportunity to suppress free discussion, it is disheartening to see such men as Lord John Russell and the Whig leaders carried away by their fears of the Chartists to such an extent as to lead a willing hand to the destruction of the principles which are identified with their names. If there are special constables enough to coerce and quench Chartism, what need is there of further coercion? If the old law be sufficient, why a new law? What need, too, have we of an Alien Act? The introduction of Sir George Grey's bill for the better security of the Crown—which needs no such security—was bad enough; but to take the additional lesson of an Alien Act from the evil days of the close of the last century, is a misjudgment of error which might prove fatal to a much stronger Administration than that of Lord John Russell. There may be whiskered and bearded Frenchmen in our streets in more than their usual numbers; but our constables being so strong, our physical force Chartists so weak, and the game of violent revolution being "up" in London, the bearded and whiskered Gauls will disappear of themselves. There is no need of a tyrannical Act of Parliament, unconstitutional to the popular feeling of this country, to deport them. There is some excuse for the errors of the people, because they spring from ignorance and from undoubted suffering; but there is no excuse for the errors of the Ministers, who, because a portion of the people have upon their liberty, inflict upon the whole people a system which gives us less. At all events, whether Whigs or Conservatives, they should leave us as we were. Our present Ministers have decided upon not doing so; and, whatever may be the demerits of Chartism, it seems clear to us that the Ministry has entered upon a very dangerous course.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND IN A STATE OF DEFENCE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

One of the defended points in the route of the procession on Monday was the Bank of England, with its heaps of bullion, and rest, which, to borrow a piece of wit from Ben Jonson, but for the defensative means provided, might have been "all means of unrest."

These preparations may be said to have been begun at the Bank on Friday [illegible], before the commencement of the business. Alderman Thompson [illegible] Goodman, sworn in upwards of 800 [illegible] of the establishment in the Bank parlour, where he, [illegible] Mr. [illegible] were administered to the whole number in a few minutes.

On Sunday morning the military defence of the Bank was commenced by a company of Sappers and Miners taking up their quarters there, and commencing to build platforms on the roof of the edifice. Massive timber erections, with loopholes sufficiently large for the mouth of cannon, were placed on the several parts of the roof; and several thousand bags filled with sand were piled up as high as a man, round the roof, with apertures between them for placing muskets, so that, in the event of necessity requiring it, a continued volley might be fired without fear of a similar discharge from the mob injuring the military. A considerable number of soldiers took up their quarters within.

Thus, in the words of a contemporary, the Bank became "the strange sight in 'Merry England' of a public building clothed with all the gloomy care of a besieged stronghold," or, in other words, a sort of tableau de guerre spectacle.

Something may have been said from time to time during the riots in 1780—it is only to be attributed to the thoughtlessness of the mob that little allusion was ever made to the [illegible] which [illegible] tion: when the news came that the rioters, headed by a man on horseback, [illegible] with the trophies of Newgate, were on their way, the Governor was absent: he soon reached his post, he fear, and preparation were made [illegible] reception. The old soldiers were also [illegible] a strong force was [illegible] within, while the military waited the [illegible] without the walls.

The officers of the establishment were called upon to assist, and another force was placed upon the roofs to fire upon the assailants if they entered. The colonnades of London also formed a [illegible] with the artillery, the [illegible] shaken off their lethargy, distinguished themselves in defending the Bank. When the rioters saw the display made by the Bank, their attacks were feebly conducted. Wilkes is said, on this occasion, to have roused out during the pauses which occurred in the attack, and dragged some of the ringleaders from their fellow rabble, who had not yet ventured into the immediate [illegible] of the magistrates dared not venture out of their houses. This bold and patriotic step, in such circumstances, re-stored Wilkes to the favour of his Sovereign, of whom he had been disliked for many years; and the mob, who had assisted the mob: their second attempt was unsuccessful, for [illegible] many [illegible] were killed, and many wounded in the skirmish. Since the danger which the Bank thus escaped, a military force has been placed nightly in the interior of the establishment; and a dinner is provided for the officer on guard and two friends.*

However, these are historical anecdotes of nearly 70 years since. How happy a contrast did the metropolis on Monday present to that of 1780, "when it presented in many places the image of a city recently stormed and sacked: all business at an end; houses and shops shut up; the Royal Exchange, public buildings, and streets possessed and occupied by troops; smoking and burning ruins, with a dreadful void and silence in scenes of the greatest tumult."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

THE MEETING ON KENNINGTON COMMON.

The Marquis of Lansdowne, in reply to a question from the Marquis of Northampton, stated that the meeting which had caused so much alarm throughout the metropolis had taken place at Kennington Common that day, and the [illegible] had been completely [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

HOUSE OF COMMONS—THURSDAY.

NATIONAL PETITION.

Mr. THORNELEY brought up the report of the Committee on Public Petitions which stated that, upon the 26th of November last, a Committee was appointed to report to the House the number of signatures attached to all petitions presented to that House, and that they had held regular daily meetings, and had a special report to the House upon the subject of the National Petition, presented on the 10th of April by the hon. member for Nottingham, signed by millions of the British Crown. The Committee attached the utmost value to the right of petitioning, and to the exercise of that most important privilege on the subjects of this realm, and felt deeply the necessity of preserving the due exercise of such a prerogative, and having also a due regard to the importance of a petition so very numerously signed, had made that petition the subject of their present report. They felt bound, in the discharge of their duty, to express to the House their belief that the petition to that petition there had been a gross abuse of that privilege. (Hear, hear.) The Hon Member for Nottingham had, upon presenting the petition, had stated that the petition was signed by 5,706,000 persons. Upon the most careful examination of the number of signatures in the Committee, with the assistance of thirteen law-stationers' clerks, who acted under the superintendence of the various clerks of the Committee, the number of signatures attached to the petition does not, in the opinion of the Committee, exceed 1,975,496. (Hear.) It is further found, that a large number of the signatures were consecutively written by the same hand. It was also observed that a large number of the signatures were those of persons who could not be supposed to have concurred in its prayer; among those were the names of her Majesty, signed Victoria Rex, the Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Peel, &c. &c. There was also noticed a large number of names which were evidently fictitious, such as "Pugnose," "Longnose," "Hatless" "Punch," "Smoaks," "Filch," and other humorous signature names, which the committee would not offend the House or its dignity by repeating, but which evidently belonged to no human being. (Hear, hear.)

Upon the motion that the report do lie upon the table, a somewhat angry and personal discussion arose, in which Mr. CRIPPS was very severe in his censure of the conduct of Mr. O'Connor, in alleging that upwards of five millions of signatures had been attached to the petition.

The motion was then agreed to

ARREST OF MR. F. O'CONNOR. At the conclusion of the discussion Mr. F. O'Connor left the House; and a hostile meeting took place between him and Mr. Cripps having been presumed likely, in consequence of the personal nature of what passed. Mr. O'Connor was, on order of the House at a late period of the evening, taken into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, but was subsequently discharged, and a reconciliation with Mr. Cripps effected

MINISTERS' MONEY (IRELAND).—A motion for a Committee of Inquiry on this subject occupied the House during the latter part of the evening. It was after a tediously long discussion, agreed to. Adjourned

NEW REGISTERED RING-BRACELET.—This unique specimen of ornamental work may be adopted, at the pleasure of the wearer, to the two-fold purposes of a Ring and Bracelet. First, it is a handsome ring, between Him and Mrs. Cripps having been presumed likely, in consequence of the personal nature of what passed. Mr. O'Connor was, on order of the House at a late period of the evening, taken into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, but was subsequently discharged, and a reconciliation with Mr. Cripps effected

MINISTERS' MONEY (IRELAND).—A motion for a Committee of Inquiry on this subject occupied the House during the latter part of the evening. It was after a tedi

THE MEETING ON KENNINGTON-COMMON.—FROM A DAGUERREOTYPE.

[illegible]ling the coolsteady courage of the police, the latter were, at intervals, separated. The special constables at these times were very roughly handled, a great many of them having their hats broken and being deprived of their staves. Showers of large stones were every few minutes thrown on the bridge, and the police received many severe blows, but gave more than equivalent in return with their batons. A great number of men who were seized by the police for throwing stones were rescued, and the yells and shouts were deafening. At half-past three o'clock the pressure of the concourse was so great that the line of police was forced, and a great many of them carried with the throng over the bridge, holding their staves up as they were borne along. On the City side of the bridge a great many arrests were made, and the mob, which seemed inclined for a minute to make a stand, were uniformly repulsed by the horse patrol, the sight of whose drawn sabres, wielded over the heads of the mob, soon put the more noisy and mischievous to flight. Both on that and the other side of the bridge there were numbers of men with their heads bleeding, who were led away by their friends.

WATERLOO-BRIDGE.

Waterloo-bridge—thanks to its toll—would, but for the police, have presented the same peaceful appearance as on other days. The toll-bars were guarded by companies of the force, while the seats over the piers were occupied by their comrades, either lounging, or sleeping, or eating, or enjoying the pleasures of a pipe. Could they have been seen by their busy brethren on the next bridge, they would have been much envied.

HUNGERFORD-BRIDGE.

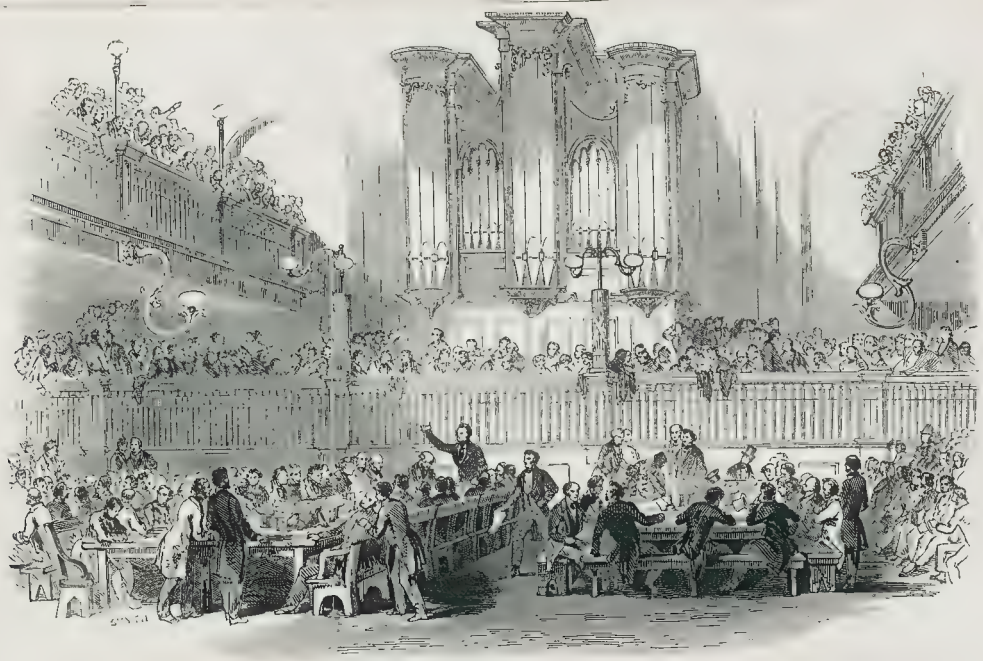
The toll of the Charing-cross-bridge seemed, also, to have a protective influence over it. It was quite quiet

WESTMINSTER-BRIDGE.

Westminster-bridge, being that over which the gigantic petition was threatened to be drawn in procession, was filled with the bustle of mounted and foot police.

At an early hour in the day crowds of persons had assembled in its neighbourhood, and in that of the House of Commons, to await the arrival of the procession, which was expected to cross the bridge from Kennington-common. Up to twelve o'clock very little progress appeared to have been made for their reception. But as the day wore on and the crowd became more dense, the police might be observed walking about in large bodies, and compelling the people to "move on"—a command which was obeyed sometimes with an ill grace, but in no case with any manifestations which resulted in a breach of the peace. This bridge, it was supposed, would be the scene of any collision which might take place. The report, however, which had been set afloat respecting artillery, &c., appeared to be totally unfounded, for there was no appearance of anything of the kind. Bills were posted on the bridge, warning the public not to assemble there in large numbers, as it was apprehended that the wooden hoarding which supplies the place of the former stone balustrade would give way on a pressure of a nature by no means inconsiderable. The public, however, which always considers itself the best judge of matters connected with its own safety, treated the warning with a degree of contempt, which was manifested by the increased density of the crowd upon the [illegible] spot. Shortly before two o'clock the police began to emerge from their [illegible] state of inactivity. A troop of the horse patrol proceeded on to the bridge, and set about the somewhat arduous task [illegible] earing it. Stationing themselves at the foot of the bridge, on the Surrey [illegible], they succeeded in driving the mass inch by inch, and step by step, completely to the other end. At the corner of Bridge-street there were several additional bodies of the force to receive them, so that the majority had no resource but to escape up Parliament-street, the road to the House being efficiently guarded. A considerable number, however, still continued to occupy Bridge-street. They consisted principally of idlers and bad characters, having no political object in view, and being employed for the most part in the indulgence of various little popular pleasantries at the expense of the police and the special constables, the latter being especially victimised in this manner. Thus the time passed away, until the arrival of

PART OF THE PROCESSION.—SKETCHED AT BLACKFRIARS-BRIDGE.



THE CHARTIST CONVENTION, JOHN-STREET, FITZROY-SQUARE.

THE PETITION,

which took place shortly before three o'clock. The demonstration was not very strong or alarming in its appearance. It consisted simply of two hackney coaches, containing three members of the deputation and the petition itself. The latter, which consisted of several very ponderous piles of paper, was conveyed by instalments into the house, and delivered over to the proper authorities. The deputation returned immediately on foot, and was loudly cheered on its way.

The great event being thus got over, the crowd began gradually to disperse, and in a comparatively short space of time the thoroughfares were clear. A portion of the police, however, remained for some hours on the spot and in the immediate neighbourhood.

Except what is recorded above, there was no casualty, either arising from accident or unpleasant feeling between the executive and the public.

It is due to the higher authorities to point out, that their arrangements—with the single exception of keeping the bridges closed some hours longer than necessary—appear to have been most efficiently planned.

MR. FEARGUS O'CONNOR, M.P.

Mr. O'Connor, who took so active a part in the proceedings of Monday, sits in Parliament for Nottingham. He is the son of the late Roger O'Connor, Esq., of Connorville, Bantry Bay, Ireland, and nephew of the late Arthur O'Connor, who resided many years in Paris, in consequence of the part he bore in the Irish insurrection of 1798. Mr. Feargus O'Connor is a member of the Irish Bar, and has been for many years proprietor of the Northern Star newspaper. We shall, doubtless, be spared the detail of his services as the leading supporter of "the People's Charter." Of his Parliamentary career, it may be sufficient to state that he sat for the county of Cork from 1832 to 1835; was again returned in 1835, but unseated on petition; was an unsuccessful candidate for Oldham, in July, 1835, on the death of Mr. Cobbett; and was returned for Nottingham at the general election last year.

MR. FEARGUS O'CONNOR, M.P.

A résumé of his political life was given so early as the 22nd No. of our Journal.

THE ROCK OF CASHEL.

The town of Cashel, distant fourteen miles from Clonmel, county Tipperary, is chiefly built round the southern and eastern side of an insulated mass of limestone, called "the Rock of Cashel." The most majestic portion of this olden monument of Erin slipped or fell, a short time since. This event has created some excitement amongst the country people, especially as an alleged prophecy of St Columkille is in the mouths of the peasantry—that "the Rock of Cashel would fall in the same year in which a revolution would break out in England." Leaving this fulfilment out of the question, the Rock is a very interesting spot.

On this great natural platform, which rises abruptly in the midst of a rich plain, and commands an extensive view, formerly stood the residence of the petty Kings of Munster. Sir James Ware, who lived so lately as 1666, informs us that he has here seen the stone on which those potentates were inaugurated, and where, it is said, they received the tribute of their subordinate toparchs. From the latter circumstance the name of the place has been derived, cash-tel being interpreted by some "the stone of tribute;" but cashel seems to be an original Celtic word, the same in all respects with the Latinized castellum; and the probability is, that the place was so called from the castle or dun of the chieftain on its summit. A roll or schedule of the tribute payable here is still preserved; and the enumeration of the different articles of use and luxury which formed the rude substitute for rent is sufficiently curious—arms, clothing, provisions, live stock, and slaves, both male and female, being the dues ordinarily specified.

The summit of the rock, as our Illustration shows, is crowned with a pile of picturesque buildings, which, from its commanding situation, massive proportions, and singular variety of outline, is justly considered the finest of the kind in Ireland. The structures of which it is composed are, in the words of a correspondent, to present in the county—1st. An Ecclesiastical Round Tower, in good preservation. 2d. Cormack's Chapel, a small stone-roofed church with two side towers in the Norman style of the eleventh and twelfth centuries. 3rd. A Cathedral, with nave, choir, and transepts in the pointed style of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. 4th. A strong castle, which served as the Palace of the Archbishops of Cashel. 5th. The Vicar's hall and the mansions of the inferior Ecclesiastical officers of the Cathedral. Cormac M'Carthy, King of Munster, is supposed to have built Cormac's Chapel early in the twelfth century; and later in the same century, the cathedral, 210 feet in length, and 170 in breadth, was erected by Donald O'Brian, King of Limerick. In the middle of the last century, the chancel, which was then used for divine service, was unroofed and deteriorated, and a new cathedral built in the city of Cashel by Archbishop Agar. It was remarked by Sir Walter Scott, that, as a whole, there was nothing to be found in the British empire comparable in interest with the Rock of Cashel.

Cormac's Chapel, by the way, is by far the most perfect specimen of this description of building in these islands; and it gives a convincing proof not only of the existence, but of the excellence of some works in stone and lime, exclusive of round towers, in Ireland before the coming of the English.

Rear Admiral Sir Francis A. Collier, K.B., K.C.H., appointed Commander-in-Chief of the East India station, will go out overland to Bombay, and at once hoist his flag. Captain Morgan will, in the meantime, fit out the Hastings, 72, at Portsmouth, and join him as soon as possible. Lieut. W. N. L. Lockyer, nephew of the late Captain Lockyer, will be Sir Francis's flag lieutenant.

Sir Charles Napier's Squadron.—The St. Vincent, flag-ship, 120, Captain Sidney Colpoys Dacres; the Prince Regent, 98, Captain W. F. Martin; the Canopus, 84, Captain Moresby, C.B.; and the Resistance, troop-frigate, Commander Lowe, were at Cork on the 9th instant. The Resistance arrived there, from Portsmouth and Plymouth, with 200 marines, on the night of the 7th. The Portsmouth steam-frigate, Captain W. J. Williams, left Cork at 5 30 A.M on the 9th, and arrived at Kingstown on the 10th instant. The Dragon, 6, steam-frigate, Captain W. H. Hall, remains at Kingstown. The Admiral, steam-packet, Lieutenant-Commander Felch, and the Medina, steam-packet, Lieutenant Commander Raymond, were at Cork, having been placed under the orders of Sir C. Napier. The Pluto, steam-vessel, Lieutenant Commander Richardson, having been paid advance, is ordered to leave Portsmouth this day for Kingstown, to follow the orders of Sir Charles Napier.

THE ROCK OF CASHEL.—(FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH.)

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT-GARDEN.—The Directors have the honour to announce that the GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place at the Royal Italian Opera on TUESDAY NEXT, APRIL 18th, 1848.

The programme will include Rossini's celebrated STABAT MATER, and the CONCERT will present to the following eminent artistes:—Madame Persiani, Madame Rosconi, Mademoiselle Staffanoni, Mademoiselle Corbari, Madame Castellan, Madame de Meric, Signor Mario, Signor Salvi, Signor Ronconi, Signor Tamburini, Signor Marini, Signor Ferlotti, Signor Lablache, and Lavia.

In addition to the above unrivalled artistic attraction, much pleasure is anticipated that the above entered into an engagement with Monsieur Jullien to produce (the renowned Prima Donna, who will make his First Appearance in England on that occasion.—Conductor, Mr. Costa.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:—Boxes, £3 3s., Ditto, £2 2s; Dress Circle, £1 1s. 6d., Orchestra Stalls, 10s. 6d., Pit Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Ditto, 5s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 5s.; 2s. 6d.; Pit, 2s.; Gallery, 1s.

The Concert will commence at Seven o'Clock. Tickets, Boxes, Stalls, &c., may be secured on application at the Box-office, and at the principal Libraries and Hatsellers.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY, Exeter Hall.—On WEDNESDAY APRIL 19, Haydn's Oratorio THE CREATION will be performed. Handel's Oratorio MESSIAH. Principal Vocal Performers—Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. H. Phillips. The Band and Chorus will consist of above 500 performers. Tickets, 5s. each, Reserved Stalls 7s. Admission to Gallery, 1s.; may be obtained of the principal Musicsellers; of Mr. BOWLEY, 53, Cheapside; of Mr. MITCHELL, 102 Strand, or at the Office of the Society, No. 6, Exeter Hall.

JOHN S. BELL, Sec.

LAST NIGHT of the LENT SEASON.—LOVE'S ENTERTAINMENTS.—CHOVEL Hall.—On WEDNESDAY, APRIL 19th, LOVE will attend at 8 and 9 o'clock, and has engaged Mr. Parry, Jun., and Mr. Frank Matthews, to assist him in new and appropriate illustrative entertainments. Music interwoven throughout, and of THE WORLD'S CHOICEST COMPOSERS, viz. The Three Bishops with Love's Dream Lullaby—Mozart's Non Piu Andrai, Farfallone Amoroso, which are expressed in the bills. Welsh Harp, Roberts; Pastime, Bishop; Il Balen—On Monday, April 17, Love will appear at 8 and 9 o'clock, and will visit the street, Islington, in his second Historical and Philosophical Lecture on the Greek Powers of the Human Voice and its Counterbeauty; Programme entirely different from that delivered on a former occasion. To be followed by a Zoological Concert. To conclude with a Travestie

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

[illegible] the House —] Lord STANLEY, in placing on their Lordships' table [illegible] made of conducting business in both Houses of Parliament, [illegible] which, the first three months of each session were passed by their Lordships' House in complete idleness, while the last three had so much business crowded into them, that most defective legislation was but too frequently [illegible]

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The House met at noon

CROWN AND GOVERNMENT SECURITY BILL.

[illegible] who presumed, and, [illegible]

[illegible]

INDIA HOUSE. On Thursday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when the new Directors, elected on Wednesday last, viz. Henry Alexander, Esq., the Hon. William Henry Leslie Melville, Major James Oliphant, John Shepherd, Esq., Francis Warden, Esq., and Major-General James Caulfield, C.B., took the oath and their seats. Lieutenant-General Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B., was chosen Chairman, and Major-General Archibald Galloway, C.B., Deputy-Chairman for the year ensuing.

BANK OF ENGLAND.—The desirable arrangement made by the City bankers for [illegible] balance at four o'clock on and after the 1st of May, is not likely to be necessary, by the banking firms at the West-end. The majority of them, it is stated, would be strongly favourable to the measure, but, being unable to overcome the objections of some of their body, they are compelled, as the step is one in which unanimity is essential, to forego for the present its adoption.

MEETING OF REFORM MEMBERS.—A meeting of members of the House of Commons was held on Thursday, at 14, St. James's-square, at which it was unanimously resolved—"That it appears to this meeting that a more cordial union [illegible] and co-operation are urgently required among such members of Parliament as are favourable to the extension [illegible] economy, retrenchment, and reduction, a reduction of expenditure, and [illegible] Reform principles throughout Great Britain and Ireland [illegible] M.P., be chairman; that Richard Cobden, M.P., be deputy-chairman; that Joshua Walmsley, M.P., be honorary secretary; and that [illegible] power to add to their numbers."

CABINET COUNCIL.—The Firequeen steamer is under orders to convey the Cabinet Ministers from Portsmouth to Osborn House on this day (Saturday).

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN. COMMENCEMENT OF HOSTILITIES.

The hostile forces of Denmark and her rebellious Duchies of Schleswig-Holstein, have come into collision. A fierce battle has been fought at Bau, near Flens[illegible] [illegible] compelled to retreat towards Ret[illegible]

The loss of life has been [illegible]

The Prussians have received orders to driv[illegible] the Danes [illegible] in order to the re-establishment of the status quo ante.

This being done, the King of Denmark is to be informed that, should he, in retaliation for this step on the part of the German powers, stop the passage of the Sound, the Prussian forces would immediately advance into the Danish territories, and vigorously prosecute the war.

[illegible] and Lord [illegible] Wall[illegible] [illegible] for Berlin, with orders for the Prussian troops to enter Schleswig. Two Prussian [illegible] have already [illegible] that they [illegible]

[illegible] to such an extent, that it prevents for ever the [illegible] to his Prince's rank in society; seeing that, [illegible] scarcely avenging the harmless criminal, [illegible] as it gives an irreparable blow to the repu[illegible] offender; and thereby causes the spectacle of such exposure extinguish in the sentiment of pity, familiarises the public to the sight of crime.

In consequence of the opposition to the Government proposal to take [illegible] ways, it has been determined to refer the subject to the Navy [illegible]

[illegible] any of the Alps to hold itself in [illegible] ness to march into Italy [illegible] with the states of the Italian [illegible]

SPAIN.

By the accounts from Madrid of the 7th inst., we learn that the Duke [illegible] M. Olozaga has been appointed Ambassador to the Court of [illegible] it is thought has left to Gibraltar.

Madrid was quiet, but the arbitrary conduct of the Government was produc[illegible]

ITALY.

[illegible], the Provisional Government of Milan places under [illegible] all the property possessed by the Imperial Family in Lombardy [illegible] 30th of March [illegible] consisting of nine vessels, arrived in the Bay of Naples on [illegible]

THE WEATHER.

[illegible] the week ending April 8, numbered [illegible] [illegible] the preceding week can take place in this climate between two consecutive periods. The former week was distinguished by warm, summer-like weather, and the latter by cold, winter-like weather. The sky has been mostly overcast; rain, hail, sleet, or snow has been falling very frequently; and during the first four days the mass of air passed from the North. The following are some particulars of each day:—

Thursday, the sky was chiefly overcast till 6h. P.M., and clear after this time; [illegible] in all the property possessed by the Imperial Family in Lombardy [illegible] 30th of March [illegible] consisting of nine vessels, arrived in the Bay of Naples on [illegible] average for the season. On the Monday and Tuesday preceding, the average temperature was 56°; thus, the mean temperature suddenly fell from nearly 56° to 44°. On Friday the sky was overcast throughout the day; frequent showers of rain and hail fell during the afternoon, and rain was falling steadily after 8h. P.M.; the direction of the wind was N., and the average temperature of the air was 44°. On Saturday the sky was generally overcast; showers of rain, hail, and sleet fell during the morning, and rain was falling at noon; the direction of the wind was N., and the air was very cold, its average value for the day was 40°? On Monday the sky was for the most part cloudy; during the early part of the morning there was rather a heavy fall of snow for the season, and which laid on the ground for a considerable time; during the morning there was a solar halo, exhibiting the prismatic colours; the direction of the wind [illegible] the average temperature of the air for the day was 42°. On Tuesday the sky early in the morning was clear; during the morning there were frequent heavy squalls of rain and wind; the direction of the wind was W. S.W.; and the average temperature of the air was 52°, and that for the week ending this day was 43°.

[illegible] 34° nearly below that of the preceding week.

[illegible] the extreme thermometrical readings for each day:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| [illegible] | [illegible] | [illegible] |
| Thursday | April 6 | [illegible] |
| Saturday | April 8 | [illegible] |
| Sunday | April 9 | [illegible] |
| Monday | April 10 | [illegible] |
| Tuesday | April 11 | [illegible] |

J. G.

[illegible], April 13, 1848.

THE NEW SYSTEM OF MEASURING IN THE MAY[illegible] YARD.—[illegible] the work in her Majesty's Dockyard, Portsmouth, to obtain a practical knowledge of the details of the system about to be introduced into that yard, and which it was first intended should be in force at that yard, where it was first introduced, before any other dockyard was to put the new arrangement into practice. While [illegible] ordinary and keen pursuit of duties, it holds out a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE [illegible]BLAND FERRY, ON THE HUMBER, BELONGING TO THE MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, AND [illegible]SHIRE RAILWAY

THE FIRST LOCOMOTIVE PASSING GREAT GRIMSBY CHURCH, ON THE MANCHESTER SHEFFIELD, AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY.

THE MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY

[illegible]

by dangerous small clumsy sailing-vessels; even the broadest [illegible]es had no better accommodation: gradually steamers have supplanted the sailing-boats, but they were difficult to reach and depart from. It was and is common, at present, to send, first to attain the steamer by a boat, then cross the river, and then retake the boat to land on the other side. This is, even now, the case on the Humber [illegible] ject to this inconvenience and delay. [illegible] gauge." But the bill we have already alluded to proposes, by erection [illegible] ascend again under covered steps on the opposite side of the river. Goods, cattle carriages, &c. will also benefit by the improvements. But not only has [illegible] Humber Ferries, but they are constructing works at New Holland, opposite to Hull, of great extent, and calculated to afford immense accommodation for the local traffic, which is of a very large and mixed character. At present, there are little more than a few cottages and a way-side inn at New Holland, but we [illegible] around them.

The main st[illegible]

The [illegible] in the beginning of last month, with considerable éclat and [illegible]

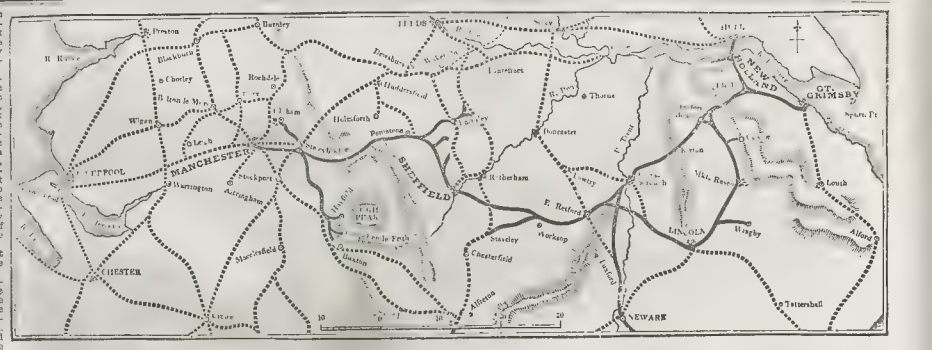
[illegible] ALL [illegible]

Grimsby especially; and this portion of the line passes near the hunting-seat of Lord Yarborough, at Brocklesby, and close to the ruins of Thornton College, which now only serves the purpose of a romantic spot for pic-nic parties.

Thornton College, before the dissolution of the monasteries, was one of the wealthiest of the Lincolnshire abbeys. It was founded in A.D. 1139, and canons distinguished by black gowns sought refuge and solitude within its walls: a few years afterwards the priory was raised to the rank of an abbey. Harry the Eighth visited the abbot there A.D. 1541, and the hospitality he received induced him to spare the establishment at the general suppression, and to convert it into a palace. In the reign of his successor, Edward VI., it was granted to the Earl of Rutland, and the property was exchanged with the Bishop of Lincoln. Our illustration gives the principal features now remaining.

Of the old, miserable port of Great Grimsby we shall speak on a future occasion, when we describe the magnificent docks now in course of construction. For the present, we are content to let our artist depict the scene of the opening, whilst the locomotive is passing the old, battered Norman church of the town. The Company purchased the old docks at a cheap price, and the mere advent of the railway has increased the revenue of the Customs in four years fifteen-fold. The present docks are already overcrowded with shipping, which betokens somewhat the increase to be expected when the new docks are completed: this will be the case in about two years. Great Grimsby will then offer one of the largest, safest, and cheapest ports in England.

It has been well observed that "this is one of the termini from which there are legitimate expectations that a considerable import and export trade for the benefit of the railway will be derived. Tracing our course back, we find every important town and district on the direct road to the manufacturing districts interested in such a manner that the clothing districts of Yorkshire, the hardware districts of Sheffield, Manchester and its surrounding cotton villages, and Liverpool and the Mersey, in effect form the many-branched terminal for Lincolnshire produce. So that, whether the farmers of Lincolnshire are desirous of drawing supplies of any kind from the manufacturing districts, or of sending produce to those largely-consuming districts, they will have, by these railways, the means of doing it multiplied a hundred-fold, and be enabled to go as far in twenty-four hours as previously in as many days. Thus will great mutual and important local objects be combined—the Humber and the Mersey brought within six hours' distance—the richest agricultural county united by an iron road to the richest manufacturing counties. Railways will tenfold increase the facilities for transporting lime and clay, street-sweepings, woollen rags, artificial manures, and bones and guano; and, while they do this, will enable the farmer to reap in extended markets ample profits for his enterprise. In ten years' time we shall expect a Report on agricultural progress in Lincolnshire as remarkable as that of Mr. Pusey in 1844.



Burnley
Blackburn
Chorley
Wigan
MANCHESTER
Stockport
Ashton-under-Lyne
Oldham
Rochdale
Halifax
Huddersfield
Dewsbury
Wakefield
Pontefract
Leeds
Selby
Thorne
Doncaster
SHEFFIELD
Rotherham
Barnsley
Penistone
Chesterfield
Mansfield
Worksop
Retford
Gainsborough
Lincoln
Boston
Sleaford
Grantham
Peterborough
Spalding
Wisbech
Ely
Cambridge
Bedford
Hitchin
Hertford
Welwyn
Hatfield
Barnet
Hendon
Harrow
Watford
Rickmansworth
Uxbridge
Slough
Windsor
Staines
Egham
Weybridge
Guildford
Godalming
Dorking
Epsom
Croydon
Reigate
Redhill
Tonbridge
Sevenoaks
Maidstone
Ashford
Canterbury
Dover
Deal
Ramsgate
Margate
Sandwich
Faversham
Rochester
Chatham
Gravesend
Dartford
Erith
Woolwich
Greenwich
Deptford
Blackheath
Bromley
Croydon
Kingston
Richmond
Brentford
Hounslow
Chertsey
Woking
Basingstoke
Farnham
Alton
Winchester
Southampton
Salisbury
Andover
Newbury
Reading
Wallingford
Oxford
Abingdon
Faringdon
Swindon
Cirencester
Tetbury
Malmesbury
Chippenham
Bath
Bristol
Gloucester
Tewkesbury
Worcester
Droitwich
Kidderminster
Stourbridge
Dudley
Wolverhampton
Walsall
Birmingham
Coventry
Rugby
Northampton
Wellingborough
Kettering
Oundle
Stamford
Peterborough
Market Harborough
Leicester
Loughborough
Melton Mowbray
Nottingham
Newark
Grantham
Sleaford
Boston

The failure of a bank at Leipsic that chiefly did business with the Saxon manufacturers, has been announced. It will very materially interfere with the working classes. The amount is stated at 2,000,000 of dollars.

Accounts from Erzgebirge continue very alarming. The weather, destruction of everything of value is being removed, has already begun at Penig. At Chemnitz, Glauchau everything of value is being removed, as the greatest apprehension of fire and plunder are entertained. A number of the Schildwache had left Leipsic, and two companies of military were sent for from Wurzen. A general rising of all the working classes and of the peasantry for the Erzgebirge was anticipated.

Brunswick.—The States of Brunswick were opened, on the 2nd, with a speech from the throne, in which there is an explicit promise of military assistance to the Duchies of Schleswig-Holstein.

Frankfort-on-the-Maine.—The committee of fifty members, which the preparatory Assembly nominated before leaving, actively pursue their duties. In their sitting of the 7th inst. they decided the admission of six assistant deputies, for which they have chosen Mm. Schwarzen. Adriani, Bach, Schuler, Paltzky, and Semmelink. Another important decision was also taken. The Vice-President of the Committee, M. Abegg, observed that an important difference existed, concerning the election for the first German Parliament, between the existing decision of the Germanic Diet and the decision of the Preparatory Assembly. The Diet decided that a deputy is to be elected for every seventy thousand souls, and the decision of the Preparatory Assembly decided that a deputy shall be elected for 50,000 souls. The Diet decided that the elections should take place constitutionally, and the Assembly that they are to take place forthwith. Now that it will not be always possible to observe the strict constitutional form, the Diet mentions only the countries belonging actually to the Germanic Confederation; the Assembly decided that the Duchy of Schleswig, and the province of Prussia, are to send deputies to the German Parliament.

The committee passed several resolutions authorising the President and Vice-President to take the necessary steps, that the Diet may modify their decisions and cause the admission of Schleswig into the Confederation.

The riots among the country people of the states of South Germany continue. The castle of Willenburg, in the province of Saxony, belonging to Prince Schönburg, was burned down on the 4th of March. The Prince fled to Altenburg. The troops called up from Leipsic and Zeitzken were too feeble to [illegible]. A serious anxiety existed for the safety of the castle and town of Glauchau. A serious insurrection amongst the night riders of Saxony was imminent. At Donaueschingen, in Wurtemberg, a bloody conflict took place between the population and a detachment of Wurtembergese troops, which came to occupy the Schwarzwald. Both parties had several killed and wounded.

SWITZERLAND.

A letter from Berne states that the Federal Directory, after deliberating upon two diplomatic notes delivered by several representatives of German states, and among them from the Prussian Envoy, the Baron de Sydow, issued a decision on the 4th, declaring that all association and all assemblages in arms on the frontiers, with a hostile intention against any friendly state, are forbidden in every part of the Helvetic Confederation. All associations of this nature must be immediately dissolved under the penalty, on refusal, of immediate expulsion of the persons who may belong to them. An official communication of this decree was made to all the members of the German diplomatic corps.

The Federal Directory of Switzerland has issued the following circular [illegible]

[illegible] Independence of the Italian States, appears likely to render a European war inevitable; whilst on the other hand Germany finds herself in full parliamentary [illegible] tional regeneration—a circumstance which may also bring about the same result. All these considerations have induced the Federal Directory to take into mature consideration the non-execution of the Diet, which has been prorogued. Deliberations may be speedily necessary, and decisions may be required, for which the Federal Directory cannot and will not assume the responsibility. But Independently of these great political considerations, the High Diet has to terminate other affairs still pending and connected with the Sonderbund, and of which the solution belongs naturally to the Diet. For these reasons the Federal Directory has resolved to convoke anew for the 13th of this month the Diet that has been prorogued, and it, in consequence, calls on all the States to send their deputies for the day so mentioned."

ITALIAN STATES

Lombardy.—King Charles Albert entered Crema on the 3rd, at the head of a division of his army. On the same day a second division reached Brescia, where it was received with open arms by the population. The Italian Tyrol has sent its adhesion to the Government of Milan. The Friuli had also joined the move-

[illegible]

[illegible] advancing from Peschiera to the relief of Mantua.

The Piedmontese Gazette contains the following official information from Milan, dated the 5th. The legion under the command of Manara was to have left Cremona from Sale on the 2nd, and to extend to open by themselves a passage by Crosalina from Sale on the 2nd, and to extend to open by themselves a passage by the Valtelline. The Austrians evacuated Montebaruo, Calcinate, and Lonato on the night of the 4th, and took the roads of Mantua and Verona. Parties of Montemorese are advancing towards the latter city. General Bixio has occupied Montemorese are advancing towards the latter city. General Bixio has occupied Montechiaro. A proclamation of General Radetsky declares Verona in a state of siege. Verona is said to be garrisoned by 11,000 men. The Austrians [illegible] was to pass the Po on the 5th. Its head-quarters were to be at Pozzuolo and the first corps at Marcaria. The Austrians leave all their positions, and cross the Mincio. General Zucchi, at the head of the Venetian column, has arrived at Mantua, a force of 4000 immediately. The Austrian Generals Gulay and Nugent have assembled their regiments to retake it, if possible.

Piedmont, Savoy, &c.—The last attempt to establish a Republic in Chambery has resulted by the total dispersion of the insurgents, and the loss on each side was three men killed. The French Government has claimed the prisoners made as French citizens.

The citizens of Parma have, it is said, repented of their acceptance of the [illegible]

[illegible]

Naples and Sicily.—The Sicilian Parliament was opened at Palermo on the 25th ult., with extraordinary pomp, in the Church of St. Domenic. At eleven o'clock, a.m., the Senate of Palermo, the Supreme Court of Justice, the high functionaries of the State, all the superior officers of the land and sea forces, and of the National and Municipal Guards, the archbishops, bishops, abbots, [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] civil and military functionaries, the diplomatic and consular agents, and a considerable number of Italian place themselves on the right and left, and the people crowded the aisles. After mass, a Veni Creator was sung, and the Salve celebrated amidst the ringing of bells, and the reports of artillery, fired from the forts of Castellamare and Gaeta, and the ships of war.

The Nouvelliste of Marseilles has news from Naples, per saltum to which the Earl of Minto has returned to that city, and publicly testified his disapprobation at the "versatile" conduct of the King, who, on his side, has treacherously withdrawn all his promises to the Sicilians, and resolved to treat them as rebels! It is said that the Sicilians have offered 10,000 soldiers to Charles Albert and the Italians.

Rome.—Letters from Rome, of the 30th ult., state that the city has been comparatively tranquil since the departure of the civic guards and volunteers for the frontier. The expulsion of the Jesuits had been decreed by the Pontifical Government. On the 29th a deputation of the Casini of Rome having waited on M. Galletti, Minister of Police, to demand the dissolution of that order, the Minister replied—"I am happy to inform you that, as the Council held yesterday, and on the proposition of his Holiness Pope Pius IX. himself, the dispersion of that body was resolved upon. His Holiness, moreover, directed me to make known that sovereign resolution." [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

We this week resume our illustrated notice of this Exhibition with Engravings of two of its most attractive pictures.

THE LIGHT OF THE CROSS, PAINTED BY SANT.

The devotional fervour of the figure gazing upon the Cross is not the least successful portion of this picture. The lights are very cleverly managed; and, as a composition illustrating the intensity of adoration, the work is entitled to special commendation.

THE CAPTIVE, PAINTED BY FISHER.

We have already described at page [illegible] this cheerful picture as [illegible] highly artistical merit.

We are reminded by it of what Lord Jeffrey has said of Byron, that [illegible] of the gentler and [illegible] Eastern females, as contrasted with the lordly pride and martial ferocity of the men; and though we suspect he has lent them more soul than of right belongs to them, as well as more delicacy and reflection, yet there is something so true to female nature [illegible] in his representations [illegible], and so much of the Oriental softness and acquiescence in his particular delineations, that it is scarcely possible to refuse the picture [illegible] of being characteristic and picturesque, as well as eminently sweet and beautiful in itself."

EXHIBITION AT THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

When we promised a further notice of the present Exhibition in Suffolk-street, we made the promise in the full and earnest hope that a second visit would enable us to detect in a collection of eight hundred works of a dozen or two of additional pictures not already referred to in our former notice. In this we have been mistaken. The Exhibition is so uniformly bad, that when we have nothing more to say than "This is very poor," or, "This is destitute of character [illegible]," or, "Here is a portrait [illegible] of T. Edwards, Esq., by H. Hawkins, M.S.B.A., that really is nothing more than a capital performance in the Tottenham Court tea-tray style of art; or, "Here is a landscape without distance, with a dull heavy foreground, and trees that look like gooseberry bushes at the best;" the repetition would become so wearisome, that our readers would turn to another part of our paper before the column was half concluded, and we should have wasted our space, so particularly valuable at this moment. Surely the members of this now incorporated Society should lessen the number of pictures another year, and instead of displaying everything sent in, should exercise a sound discretion in separating the chaff from the corn—the really bad from the really good. Let us conceive for a single moment that a society was formed of literary men for the purpose of printing and circulating the contributions of the members themselves, and of every would-be poet, tale-teller, or essayist who chose to send his productions to the society. And it is easy to see what a collection of rubbish would be brought together in this way. Or let us suppose that the editor of a magazine was silly enough to print the whole of the communications he receives, and we may readily imagine what a monster volume he would produce of the most impotent attempts at writing well. It is just the same in art. Why should every picture or attempt at a picture be intruded on the public eye, or form a part of a public exhibition of a Society incorporated by Royal Charter for the advancement of art and artists? It is precisely true that young men perceive their defects more readily when their works are hung on the same wall with the productions of those [illegible] in the same line of art and that thus far their exhibition is good; but the rule of selection and exclusion is still, we think, a matter, whether we consider the welfare of the Society, or the gratification and growing taste of the public for what is really good.

"LIGHT OF THE CROSS."—PAINTED BY J. SANT.

"THE CAPTIVE."—PAINTED BY W. FISHER.

Manning the Navy.—The following is an extract from a copy of the report of a Committee appointed by the Admiralty to inquire into the supply of seamen to the British navy from the mercantile marine, which report has been presented to the House of Commons [illegible] 1847 to March last, [illegible] from the muster-books of her Majesty's ships in commission, and find, that of 68,509 men entered, about one-third of that total, 22,543, were said to be merchant seamen, and filled the ratings of working petty officers, able and ordinary; that 8940 were first entries into the service, of landsmen, artificers of various descriptions, and persons in the capacity of cooks, stewards, and other servants, and that 37,076, petty, able, and ordinary, had previously served [illegible] the navy. [illegible] seamen who [illegible] from the service of merchant seamen, and [illegible] from the shore had been in the proportion of 26 per cent. upon the total of the entries for the above period of eight years, and but 15 per cent. upon the total number of seamen who had previously served in the navy for the same time. [illegible] of men borne for the last [illegible] 29,903. In conclusion, we beg to remark that, of the seamen entered during a period of eight years (landsmen, artificers, &c., deducted), nearly two-fifths appear to be from the merchant service, and nearly three-fifths seamen who had previously served in the navy."

THE INSURRECTION AT MILAN.—SCENE NEAR THE CHURCH OF THE GRAZIA.—DRAWN BY W. PARROT.

THE INSURRECTION AT MILAN.

The leading events of the Revolutionary proceedings at Milan have already been detailed in our Journal of April 1. The scene illustrated in our Engraving is from the intelligence of the 22nd ult., when the people advanced close to the Porta Tosa, and their riflemen, profiting by an aqueduct, from which the water had been turned off, cleared the temporary bastions raised by the enemy, and at the very opposite side of the town advanced on the Porta Vercellina, as far as the Church of the Grazia.

The thick of the conflict is thus given in the recital of the events up to the 23rd, the day of deliverance:—

"After the terrible words, 'It is to-day,' of the 18th, the insurrection spread on every hand, the tocsin sounded from all the churches, and barricades were raised in all the streets. A civic guard was organized under the orders of General Perchi. The troops, during the night, seized upon the Government and the municipality. On Sunday, the 19th, the firing was resumed on both sides with a great degree of fury. The Austrian cannon swept several streets; but the Milanese, although without arms, got the advantage on many points, and fought everywhere with the greatest courage. The city was threatened with a bombardment.

"During this time, the people, under the guidance of some old officers, fought everywhere with fury. On every point taken from the troops barricades were raised, of which some were formed of rich furniture, of wardrobes, pianos, secretaires, and damask sofas. In proportion as the ardour of the people rose, the courage of the troops appeared to weaken. On several points important posts were taken almost without fighting. The people next took possession of the palace of the Viceroy, and of the Cathedral, on the top of which floated the tri-coloured flag. The offices of the Director-General of police also fell into the hands of the people, who pillaged them from top to bottom. The only place which remained in the possession of the troops was the hotel of the military Commandant-General, before which all the efforts of the people failed, in face of a terrible cannonade, but in the course of the night that hotel was evacuated, and the troops remained masters of only the gates of the city.

"On the 23d the combat recommenced with vigour at the Tosa and Romana gates. The cannon did not cease to thunder on that side and on the side of the citadel. But in a short time the Tosa gate and the gate of Como were taken by the armed peasants, who had just arrived from Lecco. At three o'clock in he morning of the night of the 23d to the 24th the citadel was evacuated, and the troops retired in two columns on Verona and Mantua. The a finished a struggle of five days, in which—after being engaged without arms, without ammunition, without any military organisation, against a garrison of 15,000 or 16,000 men, provided with everything, strong in a formidable artillery, of which it made great use—the people have conquered, without any foreign aid, and solely by their individual courage, which was only equalled by their moderation and humanity; whilst the Austrians appear to have added the last moments of their residence in the town by acts of cruelty and barbarity which are really savage."

VOLUNTEERS ON THEIR MARCH FROM ROME TO THE FRONTIER OF THE PAPAL STATES.

Among the strategies practised by the Milanese was that of employing little balloons, which they sent off from the battlements; they fell into the hands, and being opened by the populace of the neighbourhood, they were found to contain proclamations inviting them to take arms, and come to the aid of the city, as well as to destroy all the bridges on the roads to Verona, Mantua, and other points, in order to prevent the arrival of reinforcements of artillery for the enemy.

The edifice of Santa Maria della Grazie, shown in our illustration, has a peculiar interest for artists, for, in the refectory of the former convent is the famous Lord's Supper, by Leonardo da Vinci: though sadly injured, it is not yet quite obliterated.

THE REVOLUTION IN LOMBARDY.

As soon as the great movements in Lombardy became known in Rome, they produced a deep sensation in that capital. Young men enlisted with the utmost alacrity to march to the frontiers as volunteers. On the 23rd ult. all assembled at the Colisseum, where Father Gavazzi, Colonel Ferrari, and other persons delivered patriotic speeches. On the 24th the first enrolment was closed; and in the morning, before daybreak, the first of the volunteers took their departure from Rome. Our Artist's Sketch shows them just crossing the Ponte Mole, about two miles from the city, on the road to Bologna.

"The most ardent spirit of patriotism," says the Gazetta di Roma, "animated the troops which, notwithstanding the early hour at which they departed, were saluted by the vivas and the prayers of a large concourse of people."

Our Correspondent notes: "When the news of the Revolution in Lombardy reached Rome, troops were sent off to the frontier; there also went a large number of the Civic Guard; and next, the Volunteers. Of course, the Government could not send them to assist the Lombards, without declaring war against Austria: the troops are, therefore, designated an army of observation, for the frontier of the Papal States; but the men themselves regard it as direct assistance of their brothers, the Milanese, Venetians, &c. The Government have furnished them with arms, and in fact provided for them altogether. Several Englishmen have joined this volunteer band. The men are mostly an oddlooking set: each has a musket, ammunition, &c.; a great coat, shoes, and knapsack; a loaf, and three bajocchi per day. Some wear ordinary clothes, but most of them wear a great coat—coarse, ill-made, and of pepper-and-salt colour; and they are in appearance between convicts and poor-law-union inmates. There are, however, some fine-looking fellows amongst them, and the officers are regulars.

The locality, with the stirring incident, makes an interesting picture. In the foreground are shown portions of a tower and arch built on the end of the bridge; and, a few yards in advance, are two statues, one on each side of the road: they represent the Saviour and St. John the Baptist, the latter with a bowl in his hand. A little of the river is seen behind the statue; and in the distance is Rome, with St. Peter's.

The outfits denote a "ragged regiment:" the drummers are very shabby, not dressed uniformly, their clothes being taken apparently from different regiments. The favourite head-dress seems to be a sort of artist's hat, turned up on one side, with a cockade and feather; there were, however, several ordinary hats and caps worn. There are several Israelites among them.

In short, the Ministerial proclamations clearly denote the desire of Pope Pius IX. to prove himself the head of the church "militant" in a very literal sense. All the military officers and subalterns have been called upon to present themselves at the War-office, in order to be placed in the battalions that are being despatched to the frontiers. In addition to this is the enrolment of volunteers.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

" J. S. H."—The subscription to "The Chess-Player's Chronicle" is one guinea per annum, postage included. Through a bookseller it may be obtained, of course, for less. The "American Chess Magazine" is defunct.

" F. K. S." Our Chess Problems are nearly all original, and obtained exclusively for the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. They are not to be obtained in any other way than by the purchase of the paper.

" L. W. S." Hardly ingenious enough for our columns. Try once more.

" J. B." Grey's fun.—Your Problem is not correct as solved to 3. Kg8

" Rasfa Terra." -Your first is wrong. The second is pretty good, but not difficult enough. Try again.

" J. B. C."—It is not clear to us that when the second Kt is added to your Problem that Black may not interpose a Kt at his first move, and thus evade the mate. Perhaps you will carefully consider the result of the interposition before we make the Problem public.

"R. T. F." and others.—The original and unrivalled collection of Problems, published in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, can only be obtained by the purchase of the back volumes, which we always on sale.

" R. S. T." Portsea.—Enigma 222 is perfectly sound, and one of the most ingenious and end-games we have met with. We recommend you to try it again.

W. L."—The mate in Enigma No. 226 must be delayed beyond four moves, as we have before stated. In Mr. Andrews' Enigma, No. 228, White wins by Castling.

" L. W. S." The Problem was duly received, and shall be examined. We have received the same suggestion respecting Problem No. 218 from several Correspondents, and will submit it to the author himself.

" Hutt." " R. S. T." " S. B." " F. R." " J. S. F." " M. P." " Bonpham." " F. R. S." and others.—The variation proposed, to delay the mate another move, in Mr. Stanley's Problem, No. 218, shall be submitted to that gentleman.

" W. G. C."—To what letter do you allude? We remember none such your initials But you write so illegibly, that your communication was probably designed.

" Sopraccita."—You have failed, as have all our correspondents, in the beautiful Enigma No. 225. In your way of solving it, Black could escape by first checking with his K at K B 6th, and then playing P to K 4. Try again.

' Check in the East."—The Problems and games from India have safely come to hand, and shall appear in due course.

" L." Delhi.—We shall be glad to receive the promised article on Chess in India.

" A. L." Holkham. Always acceptable. Some of your former ones have long been married for wantion, and have only been postponed for want of space.

" T. A. P."—In these hurried times the Chess world must suffer curtailment, to make room for important political intelligence; but, even abridged as the games, you cannot, surely, complain of paucity. This week, for example, we give no less than six Problems, the last received of the day—all original, and all excellent.

" R. A."—Von der Lasa's "Lustfahrt für Shachspieler," can be got of Williams and Norgate, the Foreign Booksellers, of Covent Garden.

" Cetus."—If you want "a puzzler" in a few moves, we commend to your attention Enigma 301 in to-day's paper. Try that without moving the men, and send us the result.

" Beta." St. Neot's; " A. D." Ghent; " Melville P."—We have little doubt you are right, but we have not the diagram at hand to refer to at this moment.

" Alpha."—Mate cannot possibly be given in Problem No. 220 as you propose.

Solutions by " C. A. M. K." " A. B. C." " Omega." " W. L." " Ada." " S. F." Royal Artillery, " T. W. P." Malvern College, " S. P. Q." Addiscombe, " vegvisir," " Eva." " W. G. C." " Woodstockians," " Johannes," " S. S." " M. P." " J. W. F." are correct.

⁂ The answers to many Correspondents are of necessity deferred till next week.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 298.—By Mr. ARNET.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at Q Kt sq | K at his 4th | Q B 5th | |
| Q at R 3rd | Kt at K 6th | Pa at K Kt 3d and K 5th | |
| Kts at K B 5th and Q 4th | | | |

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 299.—By the Same.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE | BLACK |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at his Kt 3d | K at Q sq | R at Q B sq | Kt at Q R 3d |
| Q at K 5th | Q at K B sq | Kt at Q B 4th | |
| R at his 1st | B at Q Kt sq | White to play, and mate in three moves. | |

No 300 — By HERR KLING.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at Q 6th | K at his 5th | P at Q Kt 4th | |
| Q at K B sq | P's at Q 2d and Q Kt 4th | White playing first, can mate in two moves. | |
| Kts at K 3d and Q 5th | | | |

No. 301.—By D. J., an American Amateur.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at K R 4th | K at Q B 5th | Kt at K 4th | |
| R at K 8th | P at Q 3d | P at Q B 3d and Q Kt 4th | |
| B at Q sq | | K 4th | |

White to play, and mate in four moves.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No 220.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. Kt to Q sq (ch) | K to Q 6th | 4. Q to K 4th (ch) | P takes Q |
| 2. Kt to Q 8th (disch) | K to his 4th (best) | 5. R to K 4th | |
| 3. P to Q 4th (ch) | B takes P | | Mate. |

PROBLEM No. 221.

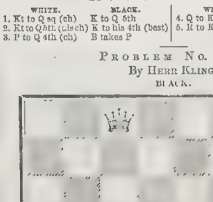
By HERR KLING.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

John Gully, one of the Emperor Probus's successors as a considerable body of Yo[illegible] Gamins à Leicester-Square.

The most unpopular movement of modern times in the country was undoubtedly that of transit by steam. Our lives were in our hands as well as that of being turned into sausage-meat and cat-skins by railway accidents. Another fearful evil was from the plague. Our Universities, Commerce answered them; and Fashion suspended them sans ménace. Anon a change came over the spirit of this nightmare, and it became a sine qua non after which mankind [illegible] everywhere else ran like [illegible] possessed. Nay, there were ex-options [illegible] never was unanimous upon the point. Even Newmarket with all its votes confessed, that, like the Liverpool Probus, its line would transport a considerable body of Vandals into Cambridgeshire. The prediction has not, however, yet been fulfilled. The Chesterfield "branch," indeed, was opened for the meeting of the current week; but the season was out of joint for merry-making. So bad a Craven has not been known for many a year. Independent of all approach to the character of a pleasure-festival, the Ring was as gloomy as the Rotunda. Its finds have [illegible] turned into another channel—its capital has gone to the "Sweeps," and its financiers are going to the dogs. Such is the fact, from which every reader may make his own deduction.

The Goodwood stud has undergone another change. Lord Chesterfield succeeds Mr Mostyn, who took to it after Lord George Bentinck's decease. Nevertheless, how is the order of the turf. Handicapping has brought about its usual [illegible] No better [illegible] than breeds or buys good or bad horses. His [illegible] of winning [illegible] Last year Lord Eglinton had [illegible] Van Tromp, that won the Leger, carrying 8st 7lb.; this year Lord [illegible] Light Glen Saddel, that wins the Great Metropolitan, by grace of half a hundredweight less on his back. It's all up with "the talents." One of the Alecs—an authority [illegible] has been abroad in every start this year. He tried the Great Northamptonshire, the Great Metropolitan, and the Newmarket Stakes; and out of a dozen attempts, so far from naming a winner, all I not even hit upon a single animal that was [illegible] The Chesterfield "branch," indeed, was opened for the meeting of the current week; but the season was out of joint for merry-making. So bad a Craven has not been known for many a year. Independent of all approach to the character of a pleasure-festival, the Ring was as gloomy as the Rotunda. Its finds have [illegible] turned into another channel—its capital has gone to the "Sweeps," and its financiers are going to the dogs. Such is the fact, from which every reader may make his own deduction.

The Goodwood stud has undergone another change. Lord Chesterfield succeeds Mr Mostyn, who took to it after Lord George Bentinck's decease. Nevertheless, how is the order of the turf. Handicapping has brought about its usual [illegible] No better [illegible] than breeds or buys good or bad horses. His [illegible] of winning [illegible] Last year Lord Eglinton had [illegible] Van Tromp, that won the Leger, carrying 8st 7lb.; this year Lord [illegible] Light Glen Saddel, that wins the Great Metropolitan, by grace of half a hundredweight less on his back. It's all up with "the talents." One of the Alecs—an authority [illegible] has been abroad in every start this year. He tried the Great Northamptonshire, the Great Metropolitan, and the Newmarket Stakes; and out of a dozen attempts, so far from naming a winner, all I not even hit upon a single animal that was [illegible]

The Middlewiches have [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] records the [illegible] account. [illegible] was a full one—but how was it filled with [illegible] to quail [illegible] Here we have [illegible] animal in one of the great weights [illegible] pulches whose weight is 8st. 11lb., and yet that him built to fit in one of the handicaps, carrying some three stone less! The majority of the horses were formed on their condition—but showed little promise of being [illegible] by [illegible] The balance [illegible] we are justified in anticipating that [illegible] compromises the First Spring Meeting will be one of the most brilliant and interesting that has occurred within the last score of years.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—[illegible] English wheat has been but moderately [illegible] of corn [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

COMPLETION OF DOMBEY AND SON
On the 15th of April will be published, in Monthly Volume Six with Forty Illustrations on Steel by H[illegible] each, or Ten Shillings and Sixpence bound in morocco, and DEALINGS with the FIRM of DOMBEY AND SON, Wholesale, Retail, and for Exp[illegible]
By CHARLES DICKENS. [illegible]
London: BRADBURY and EVANS, 90, Bouver[illegible]

Now ready, 1st published, Price 3s.
CAN A BOSOM SO GENTLE REMAIN
The Words by SHELSTONE. A new Air for Five Voices. Im[illegible] posed and dedicated to Vincent Novello, Esq. Miss LAURA W[illegible]
Edward Kay. Wesbourne, 69

[illegible] published, in monthly Nos., price 1s.
LECTURES ON PAINTING, delivered at the ROYAL ACADEMY. By the late HENRY HOWARD, Esq. R.A. With a Memoir of the Author, by Mrs. CHARLES R[illegible]
Esq. HENRY C. [illegible], York street, C

Just published, in 1 vol. 12mo. price 6s.
THE BEE-KEEPER'S MANUAL; or, [illegible]
[illegible] on the Management and complete Preservation [illegible]
[illegible] ROBINSON and SONS, Publishers, 2 [illegible]

MR JAMES'S NEW NOVEL
Just ready, in 3 vols. post 8vo. [illegible]
SIR THEODORE BROUGHTON; or, [illegible]
LAUREL WATER. By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq. Author of [illegible]
"Darnley," &c. &c. &c.
"A Novel by the Author of 'Darnley.' Any one [illegible]
HOLBY and HOLBY may be [illegible]
A Regular-built Jac[illegible]
SMITH, ELDER, and [illegible]

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHORS OF "THE GREAT PLAGUE OF LIFE."
On the 31st of March will appear No. I of a New Work. This Cheap Story (to be completed in Six non-shilling Parts), by the AUTHORS OF "THE MAYHEW, entitled
THE IMAGE OF HIS FATHER:
"One Boy is more trouble than a dozen little ones."—Old Proverb.
"A Young Monkey." With 10 Illustrations by "Phiz."
London: H. Kay Wallace-street, Cheapside.

NEW WORK BY GEORGE HERBERT ROOWELL, Esq.
On the 29th of April will be published, in Monthly Nos., No. I of [illegible] Work, to be entitled
OLD LONDON BRIDGE, by G. H. ROOWELL, illustrated with a highly-finished [illegible] drawing (or Sketch) of the Bridge, by an eminent Artist. The [illegible] numbers will each contain two or more Illustrations.
J. and D. A. DARLING, 125, Bishopsgate-street Corner[illegible]

SUMMER FASHIONS of Extraordinary Novelty are given in the LADIES' DIARETT of FASHION for April, price 1s., the only Work that contains the newest Fashions. Plates. 70 Figures and 100 Patterns of Walking [illegible] Dresses, Cloaks, Visites, Dinner & Dress[illegible] and every [illegible] Costume Descriptions of the Fashions. Tables, [illegible] &c. Price for 6d extra.—G. BERGER, Holywell-street, [illegible] and all Booksellers.

LADIES' GAZETTE of FASHION for MAY, price 1s., contains double the [illegible] of FASHIONS given in any other work. A superb Coloured Plate [illegible] of the Royal [illegible] Also [illegible] Sketch and other [illegible] Bonnets, Children's Dresses & [illegible] and all Descriptions [illegible] Now [illegible]

HER MAJESTY'S CIVIL LIST REDUCTIONS IN SALARIES.—To salaries of all persons in appointments at Court, with the nature and extent of the duties attaching to them, parentage, &c., with a list of sums to be [illegible] appointed to either wholly abolished or the SALARIES [illegible] the present duties.
SKETCHES OF HER [illegible] with Historical Notes, Pedigree, Comments, [illegible] Real Estate, &c. now publishing, by M. STRANGE, 21, Paternoster-row; [illegible] consist of will be each

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "RANCHLEE."
ROSE, BLANCHE, and VIOLET
By G. P. R. JAMES,
Author of "Ranchorpe," "A Biographical History of Parlia[illegible]

JANE EYRE; an Autobiography. By [illegible] Edition, with Illustrations. [illegible]

ADVENTURES of an AIDE-DE-CAMP, or [illegible] By JAMES GRANT, Esq. Author of "The [illegible] Lennox," "Letitia Hyde," &c. &c. [illegible]

Second in an Elegant Cover [illegible] One Shilling each Volume.
THE FAVOURITE LIBRARY. A New [illegible] of Books for Children, each volume to consist [illegible] of a work worth a much greater amount, the whole [illegible] Illustrated by a well-known Artist.
1. THE ESKDALE HERD-BOY. A Scottish Tale. By LADY [illegible] With an Illustration.
2. THE ORPHAN [illegible] Or, Aunt Ann. By [illegible]
3. MRS. LEICESTER'S SCHOOL. By CHARLES [illegible] LAMB. With an Illustration by J. Absolon. Price 1s. (Shortly.)
GRANT and GRIFFITH, Corner of St. Paul's Church-yard, and CUTHILL, Old Bond-street.

NOTICE!
COMPLETION OF THE LIVES OF THE QUEENS OF ENGLAND
The 12th VOLUME, completing the Work, is NOW READY, embellished with a Portrait of the Authoress, and other Illustrations.
[illegible] in IV
BURTON, Publisher, [illegible]

NEW EDITION, Revised to the present time, [illegible] personal communications of the Nobility, &c.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

COMPLETE AND CHEAP EDITION.
THE LONDON TELEGRAPH.
DAILY NEWSPAPER.—PRICE THREE-HALFPENCE.
The Proprietors of the London Daily Paper beg to return their sincere thanks for the support already given by the Public to this newspaper and to assure them that no exertion shall be wanting on their part to render it worthy of their continued support.
THE LONDON TELEGRAPH is Published every day at twelve o'clock at noon. The Edition is also Published for the Four Provinces, containing News, Corn, Money, and Share Markets to the [illegible]
London: 345, Strand, and 19, Cornhill.

THE LONDON LITERARY and MUSICAL OBSERVER. Price 1½d. "The work fills an important gap, and does not [illegible] articles which are original, are [illegible] critic writes, full of [illegible] information, concise and clothed with appropriate [illegible] language. [illegible] reading, calculated to please every one." The [illegible] and elegant Engraving of Jenny Lind, in character as the [illegible] number contains [illegible] Frontispiece, by C. Delmont, and is [illegible] worth five times the money.—PUBRESS, 89, Dean-street, [illegible] Covent-garden, Vivaldi's, 8, Leicester-square, and [illegible] Town and Country.

[illegible] Edition, just published, price [illegible]
THE RIGHT of the ARISTOCRACY to the [illegible] CONSIDERED. By JOHN NOAKES.—"[illegible] Liberal [illegible] newly private, but public property; often [illegible] public property, and [illegible] merely derived from Crown Lands and the Feudal Dues paid by the Aristocracy for the [illegible] of their Crown Lands.—The Crown Lands [illegible] originally alienated from public uses, and appropriated by the [illegible] The Feudal Dues exacted [illegible] and the revenue derived [illegible] from [illegible] strong truths."—Weekly Times. "A [illegible] LEON, Royal Exchange.

DR. GULLY ON THE WATER-CURE
Just published, Second Edition, 8vo., 6s.
THE WATER-CURE in CHRONIC DISEASE; an Exposition of the Cold Water Treatment, Pra[illegible] various Chronic Diseases of the Digestive Organs, Lungs [illegible] Nerves, Skin, &c. By JAMES MANBY GULLY, M.D. [illegible] Water and other Establishments.
LONG CHURCHILL, Prince's-street, Soho.

This day is published, No. II of Dr. Winn on's Quarterly Journal of Psychological Medicine, in the government of Psychological Medicine and Insanity, and of the Jurisprudence of Insanity, [illegible] Medical and Judicial Treatment of Insane [illegible] and quarters. [illegible] Persons wishing to have the Journal transmitted to them by post, are requested to intimate the same to the Editor or Publish[illegible]
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

NOTICE.—ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION. Incorporated by Royal Charter in 1839.—Lectures and Manufactures of the Useful and Ornamental Arts, and [illegible] Science, for the most [illegible] Public, or by Subscription, and [illegible] Admission to the Exhibition of the Collection.—The Institution will be [illegible] EVENING.
R. J. LONGBOTTOM, Secretary.

ORGAN EXHIBITION.—G. M. HOLDICH, Organ-builder (late of The Rev. Thos. Holdich, [illegible] for the Jubilee Singers, Lothbury, Hope, Queen, Surrey, and other [illegible] Chapels), begs to announce that he has [illegible] a most valuable instrument, possessing a two-rank organ stop, to any in the kingdom, for [illegible] and [illegible] purposes. The [illegible] will be performed upon at the Manufactory on TUESDAY, the 25th, [illegible] Gentlemen [illegible] Organ, and [illegible] Grand Organ Built Tuned, and [illegible] Manufactory 12, Gross-street, Sadler's-square, London.

MEDICAL, LEGAL, and GENERAL [illegible] ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 126, Strand, London. This Society is the only one connected with the medical or legal profession, and the only one [illegible] Members assured in this Society during the present year will be entitled to participate in the first and every succeeding division of profits.
S. W. MORRIS, Actuary and Secretary.

COUNTY FIRE OFFICE, 50, Regent-street, and 2, Royal Exchange buildings.
ESTABLISHED 1807.
[illegible] notified to parties holding policies in the office, that a Bonus of 3 Shillings and 6d. per cent. thereon [illegible] shall be paid on and after the 1st of April. The [illegible] are lying at the [illegible] Office are highly advantageous to the [illegible] Assured, [illegible] and liberality. [illegible] partnership will be [illegible] prohibited to parties applying personally, or by post, to the [illegible] or any of its Agents who are appointed in all the principal towns of the United Kingdom.
JOHN R. MACNAY, Managing Director.

FOUR FIFTHS, or EIGHTY PER CENT, of the profits of the LIFE INSURANCE [illegible] yield amongst the participating Policy-holders of THE ROYAL FARMERS' and GENERAL FIRE, LIFE, and HAIL INSURANCE INSTITUTION.
Offices Strand, London.
Capital, £500,000. Empowered by Special Act of Parliament.
The Committee of Management and Examination of the Assurance Accounts, [illegible] PARTNERSHIP, Low Rates of Premium, Liberal Conditions to Assurers.
FIRE ASSURANCES of every description effected at moderate premiums.
The triennial profits for premiums on policies falling due at any Date are now ready [illegible] the head office, or in the hands of the Agents in the country, and until [illegible] or before the 8th day of May next, the fifteen days allowed by this office over and above the time for which they are [illegible] will entire.
Prospectuses and every information may be obtained of the Agents, and of the Head Office.
WM. SHAW, Managing Director.

MEDICAL, LEGAL, and GENERAL MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.
126, Strand, London.
TRUSTEES
James Copland, M.D., F.R.S. [illegible]
[illegible] John Hambly, Esq., Q.C., M.P.
[illegible] James Hunter, Esq., Q.C.
DIRECTORS.
JOHN BELLINGHAM BARNARD, Esq., Q.C., Chairman.
G. H. Barlow, M.D. John Perrott, Esq.
D. G. Corrance, Esq. R. Partridge, Esq., F.R.S.
J. Farre, M.D., F.L.S. R. Quain, Esq., F.R.S.
Thomas Webb Jones, Esq. Robert Smith, Esq.
Richard Webb, Esq. F. T. White, Esq.
James G. W. Lucas, M.D. J. R. Wilderspin, Esq.
W. J. Little, M.D.
This Society is the only one connected with the medical or legal profession founded on the mutual principles.
By entire assurance, the whole net profits become divisible amongst the Members assured in this Society during the present year will be [illegible]
A branch of assurance business is conducted by this society.
And as well as healthy lives assured, acceptable and moderate
R. WILSON MORRIS, Actuary and Secretary.

MUTUAL INSURANCE BENEFIT INSTITUTION, 3, Wandsworth-street, Loudon.
Under the Patronage of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, &c. &c.
Established 1840.
Empowered and Enrolled by Act of Parliament.
This Institution places within the reach of all, Advantages similar to those [illegible] Assurance Offices, viz. Annuity and Life Assurance Companies, upon easy Terms, payable Monthly or Quarterly, and Insurance against the Casualties of each Individual.
The funds of this Institution are invested in the surest Securities bearing a Government Guarantee of Interest.
ANNUITIES, OR ANNUAL INCOMES FOR LIFE, commencing immediately or at any future period, [illegible] by a sum of money paid down, or by easy Monthly or Quarterly payments.
ASSURANCES OF LIFE, FOR CHILDREN, OR FOR PERIODS OF ANY AGE, from £10 to £200, payable at 14, 21, or any other age, or after any number of Years.
ENDOWMENTS FOR WIDOWS AND ORPHANS, by sums of Money, from £10 to £50, payable at the Death of the Assured.
ASSURANCES AGAINST ACCIDENTS, from 8s. to £1 per week.
Prospectuses, Forms, and every information, may be obtained, on personal application at the Offices, 3, Wandsworth-street, London.
UNDER THE EARL [illegible] PATRONAGE OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN
THE ROYAL NAVAL, MILITARY, EAST INDIA, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 3, WATERLOO-PLACE, LONDON.
DIRECTORS.
CHAIRMAN—Col. Sir Frederick Smith, K.H., R.E.
DEPUTY CHAIRMAN—Major Shadwell Clerke, K.H., F.R.S.
Admiral the Right Hon. Sir G. Madden, G.C.B., G.C.S.
Major-Gen. Arnold, K.H., K.C.
Deodatus, G.C.B., M.P. [illegible]
J. Cockburn, Esq. Lieut.-Col. H. Hamner, R.N., late [illegible]
[illegible] Bradford, Archibald Hair, Esq., M.D., late [illegible]
[illegible] Ross, G.C.M.G., Captain William Lancey, R.E.
[illegible] William Ghost, Esq., Navy Agent.
[illegible] Benjamin Taylor, Esq.
[illegible] Hew D. Ross, Major-Gen. Sir John Jeth, K.C.B.
[illegible] Bank, R.N.
Major-Gen. [illegible] Westcott, C.B.
BANKERS.—Messrs. Coutts and Co., 59, Strand
SECRETARY—John Finlason.
Insurances may be effected with this Society at home and abroad, and for every part of the world, upon policies fully assured by the Parent Society, and the Premiums received from one country to another without remitting their policies.
A Bonus amounting to 30 per Cent. on the actual value of the policies, was appropriated to the assured at the first septennial Meeting, and in the year 1845.
CHARLES CHESTERTON, Secretary.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.
BEFORE THE PUBLIC.
The Annual General Meeting, held at the Society's Office, on Tuesday, March 28, 1848,
Having, at the Meeting held in January, 1847, presented to the Proprietors and Assured a very full account of the Society's affairs, now presents a further brief statement for the present occasion.
It may, however, be satisfactory to those now assembled to learn that, notwithstanding the unfavourable [illegible] circumstances arising on the recent establishment of many new Life Assurance Offices, the business of the Society still continues in advance.
In proof of this, it will be sufficient to state the following facts:—
I. The number of Policies granted on the lives of Gentlemen, a class [illegible] June 30th, 1846, amounted to £129,000 in the year ending June 30th, 1847.
II. The number of NEW POLICIES issued within the year has been 403, and the annual Assured thereby £26,079, being an increase both in the number assured and in the sum assured over those of any preceding year.
In conclusion, the Directors are happy to inform the Proprietors that the Society has not in any degree suffered from the great mortality that has prevailed throughout the kingdom, the claims, both in the course of the year ending June 30th, 1847, and also within the six months ending December last, having been moderate, either in amount or number, those of preceding years.
Tables of Rates and Forms of Proposal may be obtained of any of the Society's Agents, or by addressing a letter to
GEO. H. LINGHAM, Resident Secretary.
Office, No. 99, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury London.

Agen von Great Grimsby.—Anzeige an Kaufleute und Banen-Meister in Anderde.
Da der Abgeber der Schiffe, welche nach Grimsby in Great-Britannien gehen, mit dem Anfange des 1848sten Jahres die Agentschaft der Hollenschen Dampfschiffahrt, um Güter auf meinem Boden [illegible] Grimsby, Hull und Selby [illegible] Agentschaft übernommen, und [illegible] Güter

ELECTION OF THE OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL GUARD AT PARIS.—COUNTING THE VOTES.

ELECTION OF THE OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL GUARD.

The Illustration which our Paris Artist has sketched shows the interior of the Riding School (Manège Leblanc), in the Faubourg Montmartre, during the election of the Officers of the 12th Legion (Cavalry). The precise stage is the dépouillement du scrutin (counting the votes). There is not a single person in uniform, but all are in plain dress. Around a table are seated the secretaries, entering the votes; two others are drawing the tickets from a box, and calling aloud the names inscribed on them; whilst one of the candidates, mounted on a chair, is addressing the assembly. Others are seated on tables, chairs, &c.; others are talking, smoking cigars, &c. Such is the general picture of the Election of the National Guards' Officers; for "everywhere," says our Correspondent, "it is pretty much the same as this."

The details of the Election have been given at page 240.

THE ABBE LACORDAIRE.

Among the many eminent men whom the ecclesiastical body in France has from time to time produced, few have equalled, and none excelled, the subject of this notice, in brilliancy of genius and fervid and flowing eloquence. He has shown himself well worthy to take rank in that distinguished host which reckons amongst its members Bossuet, Bourdaloue, Massillon, and the famous Jansenists, Pascal, De Sacy, the two Arnaulds, &c. Like several other great ecclesiastical orators, M. Lacordaire was educated for the bar, which at an early age he abandoned for the Church. He was born on the 12th of May, 1802, at Recey-sur-Ource, a village of Burgundy, in the department of Châtillon-sur-Seine. His father and grandfather were both distinguished members of the medical profession, and his mother was the daughter of an advocate. M. Lacordaire died young, in 1806, leaving four sons, of whom the Abbé (who received at baptism the names of John Baptist Henry) was the second; the others have since distinguished themselves in various professions.

John Baptist was educated at the Lyceum of Dijon: his success in rhetoric was brilliant: his character, mild and placid in general, was remarkable for occasional outbursts of a fiery independent spirit, notwithstanding which he was a great favourite among his fellow students, on account of his natural amiability and even cheerfulness of temper, as well as by reason of the admiration which his great intellectual abilities excited. He left the Lyceum in 1819, when he devoted himself to the study of the law. In the autumn of 1822 he went to Paris, and took up his residence with an advocate of the Court of Cassation. In the capital he made the acquaintance of the great Legitimist lawyer, M. Berryer, the Abbé Gerbet, and that erratic genius the Abbé Lamennais, and other distinguished men. His intimacy with the Abbé Gerbet led to his renunciation of the deistical opinions which he had imbibed in the College at Dijon, and he became a professed member of the Roman Catholic Church in the beginning of 1824, and shortly afterwards entered the Seminary of St. Sulpice to study for the priesthood. He was ordained on the 22nd of September, 1827.

His career since that period has been marked with the most distinguished success in the pulpit. His connexion with M. Lamennais, in the editing of the Avenir journal, after the Revolution of July, in the columns of which the severance of Church and State, and many other politico-religious doctrines then altogether novel and startling in France, drew a halo of ambiguous fame about his name at that epoch; but the course which he and his friends pursued having been condemned by the Papal See, he retired for a time from the public eye, and gave up all intimacy with the Abbé Lamennais, who had refused to abide by the decision of the Roman Pontiff.

THE ABBE LACORDAIRE.

His sermons during Lent, both in Notre Dame, at Paris, and in the provinces, have completely established his fame as one of the greatest of modern preachers; and, within the last few years, he has had the address to obtain the re-establishment in France of the Dominican order of Friars—Preachers, whose house at Chalais, some leagues from Grenoble and from the Grand Chartreuse, he presides over with much administrative talent.

It was M. Lacordaire who preached the funeral oration of O'Connell lately, in Notre Dame, at Paris; and, last week, this remarkable man announced his intention of offering himself as a candidate at the approaching election of members for the National Assembly of the Republic, in which he purposes to propose the restoration of the Church property confiscated in the Great Revolution.

ST. MATTHEW'S CHURCH, CITY ROAD.

This Church, consecrated on Tuesday last, is of very effective and pleasing architectural character, its lofty and beautiful tower and spire, in particular, deserving great commendation. The Church stands in Berkeley-crescent, of recent erection, on the north side of the City-road, and is consequently built parallel with the road. It is divided into a nave, aisles, and chancel, and at the eastern end of the southern aisle the tower and spire rear their lofty forms. The nave is lighted by windows in the clerestory, each of single light, and the windows to the aisles are of two lights, and have simple mouldings to them. Near the western end of the south aisle, a porch, with high pitched roof, projects from the main body of the building and relieves the sameness of outline in this part of the Church, its recessed doorway giving additional character to the whole. The eastern end has five lancet windows in it, diminishing in height with the gable, which has a cross on its apex; a similar cross is also at the western gable.

THE NEW CHURCH OF ST. MATTHEW, CITY ROAD, CONSECRATED ON TUESDAY.

The tower, on which more ornament has been bestowed than on the other portions of the building, is, as mentioned before, very striking. It is divided by string-courses into four stories of unequal heights, and has buttresses at its respective angles. In the lower story are small single light windows; in the second, circular windows, with quatrefoil mouldings; in the third, small single light windows; and in the upper story are large windows of two lights, deeply recessed and moulded. At the commencement of the fourth story the buttresses take the form of turrets, small arches being splayed from the sides of the tower to meet the fronts of the buttresses, and similar arches at the angles of the tower between the buttresses, so as to form octagons in plan; and these turrets are crowned by small spires. An arched corbel moulding runs along the top of the tower and turrets. A very lofty spire rises from the tower, and is pierced with eight quatrefoil lights, in two series, on its faces. The interior of the Church is very elegant, the nave arches having zig-zag mouldings. Great praise must be awarded to the architect, Mr. Scott, for this addition to the modern ecclesiastical edifices of London.

The Church was consecrated with the accustomed ceremony on Tuesday, by the Lord Bishop of London, in the presence of a numerous and highly respectable congregation. The Reverend R. H. Howard has been appointed incumbent of the Church.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, April 15, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 313.—Vol. XII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1848. [Sixpence.

PEACE AND TRANQUILLITY.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, in compliance with the direction of the Privy Council, has drawn up a Prayer for the maintenance of peace and tranquillity in these realms, which appears in another part of our Paper. It is the first State Prayer which his Grace has been called upon to prepare since his elevation to the Archiepiscopal seat; and a more important subject, or one more congenial to his feelings, could not have occupied his pen. Peace and Tranquillity to our country—to any country, indeed—is of the last and most vital consequence. Almost every nation in Europe is either at this moment distracted by civil war, or labouring under a continual and pressing fear of it. And what is the inevitable result of such an evil? Confidence shaken, trade paralysed, property insecure, and industry unemployed! Wisely, then, do we supplicate that domestic divisions may be far from us; that we may be preserved from a war which would be incomparably worse than even the direst pestilence. But while we pray thus, as our rulers direct us to do, it behoves them on their part, with the greatest earnestness and care, to take all human means, to make use of the utmost exertion, to watch with the keenest vigilance, in order to prevent the calamity we deprecate. A nation's welfare is bound up with its tranquillity. In proportion as the one is disturbed, the other suffers. We have no fears for England so long as honest industry and willing labour can secure a remunerative employment; that is, as long as a man can live by his work. But if a state of society should exist, in which the wages of the workman will not enable him to procure the necessaries of life—whatever may be the causes of such a state of things, they must either be amended by those who have the power to do so, or they will amend themselves. We cannot shut our eyes nor close our ears against this sad truth, that there is a vast amount of poverty in these realms—of unwilling poverty; we mean the poverty of such as are desirous and eager to work, but cannot procure sufficient to enable them to supply even their moderate and necessary wants. We speak not of the idle, but of the industrious; not of vicious, but of virtuous, poverty. And when we read in the Archbishop's Form of Prayer, that we are to supplicate the Throne of Grace "that our people may eat their own bread in quietness," we cannot help feeling that, alas! there is too much reason to fear we have equal cause to pray that all may have bread to eat.

The people of England are peaceably disposed; they have lately proved this most satisfactorily. They do not desire to see the form of Government under which they live destroyed or overthrown; but they wish to see modifications and reforms. And who can deny but that such are absolutely necessary? When there is so much distress and want forcing itself upon our observation at every turn, and when the pallid face too plainly tells of the insufficiently nurtured body, it becomes the duty of those in power not to see how more taxes can be levied, but rather how the expenditure can be diminished. Are there no exorbitant salaries that can be largely reduced? Are there no sinecure places which can be abolished, without any loss of that lustre which we should like to see surround the Crown, and without lessening the comforts of those who, having in their youth worked hard in the toils and business of the state, may seem to deserve that the decline of their years may be passed free from pecuniary anxieties and cares? Against such as these, who have earned their reward, we have nothing to adduce.

But we complain loudly, and justly too, that the drones consume what the workers ought to share; that money is lavishly bestowed, where there is no commensurate merit to lay claim to such deservings. It is cases such as these, and it is notorious that there are many such, which not only offend our reason and right feeling, but which can neither be defended nor justified. If sinecures should exist at all, they should be for those who at least have done something, not for the emolument of those who never have done, and never will do, anything; nay, who are perhaps incapable, even if they were willing. But sinecures ought not to be. Then as to the large salaries attached to certain offices about the court: are they necessary? Are they wanted as a means of support by those lords and ladies who are thus paid? They themselves would scout such a thought; they would be offended at the mere hint of such a thing. Are there not, then, numbers of the high and noble who would accept these posts from the mere honour which they are supposed to convey, and from the pleasure, as they would deem it, of being within the influence of a Court, and occasionally in the presence of Royalty.

We do not desire what some would call a cheap Government; but, at the same time, we do not want a wasteful one. We know that parsimony is no virtue, but we know also that prodigality is a pernicious and a fatal vice. We do not object even to a little luxury; because luxury itself does not merely tend to the idleness or pampering of the rich, but counterbalances a portion of its evil by [illegible] to the wants and the employment of the poor. But some may say, indeed we have heard it said, that the whole of the reductions which we desire would be so small, even in their aggregate amount, that little good could be effected by them. We deny he truth of such an assertion most unequivocally. The amount would not be trifling. But even if it were, is the principle nothing?

DEMONSTRATION AT THE HOTEL DE VILLE, PARIS, ON SUNDAY LAST.—LAMARTINE ADDRESSING THE CROWD.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul.

If economy were to be the moving spring, not in this particular instance, or in that, but in all, we should soon see the happy re[illegible] [illegible] the Government should be, not "How much can we spend?" but "How much can we save?" not "What we can give to those who have already abundance," but "What we ought to take away, and what they ought to give up without repining." And thus they should work out in practice that part of the Archbishop's Prayer which relates to the Apostolic injunction of "bearing one another's burdens."

Let the Ministers ask themselves (and they will have leisure during the recess to do so) whether it tends to peace or to disturbance, to tranquillity or to commotion, to satisfaction or dissatisfaction, for the people to know that so much is given where so little is done, and that the industrious are oppressed so that the idle may luxuriate. It is a strong fact, which ought not to be forgotten, that the people are unequally burdened, that the cause of impulse only, but his is a calculator also. He considers well how much he has to lose; he knows the value of peace and tranquillity; he can thrive and get fat under them, and he has done so. He sees Ireland wretched and poor by agitations and divisions; and he would rather see her peaceful and rich like England, than have his own country, like her, disturbed and impoverished. His wishes and his prayers on this point are in unison, and we trust that both will be fulfilled.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

On Monday last Paris narrowly escaped being again the theatre of a sanguinary tumult, arising out of the wicked designs of the Communistes and ultra-Republicans, who seek to get into power by means of a second bouleversement, which would bring down amidst the general ruin the moderate members of the Provisional Government. M. Blanqui, the head of the Communistes, was shown up some few days back, by the publication of some documents found in the late ministerial offices, as an instrument who had been in communication with the members of M. Guizot's Government; and, in revenge for the exposure and the suspicion to which it subjects him, he organised a "monster meeting" of the trades of Paris on Sunday last, by means of which he expected, amidst the violence of a physical force demonstration, to overthrow the Government. He was frustrated, as will be seen further on.

In the Champ de Mars, a little after noon, the scene was very exciting. Delegates of all the trades and guilds of Paris were assembled, to the number of nearly 100,000 men. Banners were waving in all directions, and the surrounding crowd filled about a third of the vast space of the plain. It was with difficulty that an [illegible] could be obtained of the real object of the meeting. Its ostensible object, however, appeared to be election from among the working classes of persons officers for the staff of the National Guard; although other motives, such as the choice of candidates among them for the general elections, and various deputations to the Government to various grievances, formed with the endless organization of work, were also put forward. There is every reason to believe that the greater part of the meeting had in reality no other object in view, and that the other secret objects fostered by the Communistes were confined, at all events, to but a chosen few. About two o'clock the monster procession began to move towards the Hôtel de Ville. Along the outer boulevards, along the esplanade of the Invalides, over the Pont de la Concorde, and along the quays it moved on, like a huge serpent, bristling with tricolour banners. The end of the monster appeared to have nearly reached its destination before the tail had fully left the Champ de Mars. At this time the crowd was certainly in every street the National Guards were [illegible] to their places of meeting; columns were pushing forward, in every mouth was the cry that the Provisional Government was in danger from the anarchists of the Luxembourg. The quays were already lined, literally from one end to the other, by files of the National Guards; other battalions were advancing towards the Halls, de Ville; the legions of la Garde Mobile were [illegible] the direction of the Barrière d'Enfer, animated by the same spirit of resistance as the National Guards to the supposed coup d'état expected to be displayed by the majority of the Government. It was with difficulty that the advancing legions could proceed along with the monster procession, which seemed surprised and stupefied at the force collected [illegible] upon treasonable designs. The crowd [illegible] somewhere else, and ended, during its push on to the scene of action The Place de l'Hôtel de Ville appeared a very scaffolding, a small space only being left for the passage of the procession. The force of the armed citizens, of the Municipal Guards, and the Garde Mobile made a tremendous show. In this state matters remained [illegible] the Place for about four hours, during which the members of the Government were employed to receive the deputies of the monster meeting of the working [illegible] com[illegible]e time, however, when they appeared at the windows [illegible] building, shouts were raised by the crowds, and the caps, hats, [illegible], and all the other variations of coiffure, that suddenly burst [illegible] into the air upon every bayonet point, had a most singular effect.

This was repeated continually. During the whole of this long scene, in which each of the armed force as filled the Place kept its position, the former being to surrounder crowd was intense. Several hommes du peuple were in a state [illegible] energy and excited state [illegible] declared that the working classes were insulted by this demonstration [illegible] National Guards, that the National Guards were the enemies of the people, that the people must rise once more against them, &c. The cry against the Moderates was raised under the name of "réactionnaire" and "haut républicanisme," the counter cry was "anarchie" and "communisme." Several times the angry parties among the spectators were on the point of coming to blows, and much insulting took place. That state of things continued [illegible] to six o'clock. In addition to the lines of National Guards that still occupied the many battalions or battalions of the different legions were still pouring along towards the Hôtel de Ville even at that hour. The advancing columns [illegible] the Pont de la Concorde and the quays [illegible] in Rivoli. They were hurrying on as quickly as the intense press permitted them, shouting almost universally, "A bas les anarchistes!" or more commonly, for that was the real rallying cry, "A bas les communistes!" Certain [illegible] with an staff, was riding up and down among the advancing mass, declaring that the gouvernement n'est pas en danger, but thanking them for the demonstration of their desire to support it.

The illustration upon the preceding page shows the strange scene at the Hôtel de Ville, on Sunday, with Lamartine addressing the people, he stood on the the other members of the Provisional Government, at a large window over the entrance known as the Porte St. Antoine. The scene below is truly grotesque: every part used its bat or cap, upon his sword, gun, or flag-staff, and with days its flags, so as to form a forest of "axes of liberty," in the midst of which might be seen the Artist.

Whatever may have been the real designs and hopes of the Ultra party, it is very [illegible] that the National Guards carried off the victory of this new day of struggle between parties. They had never got over what they considered their humiliating defeat upon the occasion of the 15th, a monster demonstration of the people; and they doubtless rejoice in their hearts that they have had an occasion to show their force and prestige in such power. There can be little doubt, however, that the moderate majority of the Provisional Government secretly as much delighted at an opportunity of responding to their ambitious violent colleagues and his factious minority by showing that it could also take a force, and a considerable one, to support it against the intrigues of the Ultras. Lamartine and his party may be said to have had their day of triumph in this display of the better-thinking citizens, as Ledru-Rollin and his faction had in the [illegible] of the mob.

In the evening the Boulevards displayed an intense degree of excitement. Large crowds were formed at every ten steps, and large patrols of National Guards [illegible] Cris à Rivoli were easily distinguished. Several persons were arrested for preaching "disorde ;" and in the crowds these who professed communist doctrines were very rudely treated, hustled, driven forth, and sometimes arrested. The disappointment party is now [illegible] the name of "démocratie" alone; and the feeling is openly against them among public opinion. On Monday night a fight took place between the [illegible] and the Municipal Guards, and this fact says little for the [illegible] habits of the latter. [illegible] Some [illegible] windows against the slightest symptom [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] struggle between the Moderates and the Ultras—the ultimate [illegible] and [illegible] Communistes.

Such is the state of the city part en of the week the greatest feeling of unease still prevails. The people of Paris [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the intrigues members of the Provisional Government, viz. Ledru-Rollin, Albert, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] taxes. The Gazette also contains the official report received by the Minister of War from the head-quarters at Verona, dated April 9, giving an account of the entry of Lichtenstein's brigade into Verona.

Their Majesties the Emperor and the Empress returned to Vienna on the 11th from Presburg. His Majesty closed the sitting of the Diet in a speech from the throne, in the Hungarian language The enthusiasm of the people was unbounded. The Diet is to be re-opened at Pesth.

Up to the 13th inst. the Poles had not received any satisfactory answer, and were preparing to return. Nowhere are the elements of anarchy so rife as in Galicia. The nobles are fearful of being robbed on the spot by the peasants unless they immediately give up all the rebels, by which they would relinquish at less than three-fifths of their property and income.

GERMAN STATES

In consequence of the resolution of the Germanic Diet relative to the Duchy of Schleswig-Holstein, the Envoy of Denmark has resigned his seat

The Germanic Diet is occupying itself actively with the establishment of a German war na

BADEN.—The papers from Southern Germany are unanimous in their fears for the good faith of Baden, where the soldier Radetzkism appears to have taken root. It is repeatedly affirmed that many of the Baden Radicals were in secret correspondence with the chiefs of the German Free Corps in Switzerland and France, and that they were ready to promote an armed invasion

HESSE CASSEL.—There have been serious disturbances in Cassel, where the military wished to re-establish their former reign of physical force

A threat issued by the citizens of the town. The Duke of Hesse-Cassel has published a proclamation expressive of his indignation at the outrages committed by his guards, whose dissolution as a regiment he pronounces, and adds, that the culprits among the soldiers shall at once be tried by court-martial

SAXONY.—From the north of Germany we have sad accounts of an insurrection in the kingdom of Saxony, which the Government have not as yet been able to put down.

BAVARIA. The King has written an autograph letter to the Minister of the Interior respecting the vast sums remaining in the present concern at Munich, sent aloft of commerce, and his desire that immediate steps should be taken, by the co-operation of all parties, to effect the restoration of trade and commerce, the renewal of confidence, and the improvement of the working classes; that no thought has does not entirely depend upon the Government, he nevertheless requests the Government to take immediate steps to provide work for all who shall be inclined to work, by undertaking railways, water-works, bridges, roads, public buildings, &c., so far as the public exchequer will admit.

The First Chamber of the States at Munich has adopted the project of law for the elections to the National Assembly, modified by the former Chamber of Deputies.

The Prince de Linage has addressed a letter to the King, renouncing all his prerogatives of birth

Lieut.-General Von der Mark, Minister of War, has been released from his post at his own request.

ITALIAN STATES

LOMBARDY.—Accounts of the insurrection at Milan give details of the successful crossing of the Mincio at the bridge of Goito, near Mantua, by the King of Sardinia, and the reported capture of 2000 Austrian prisoners. The Provisional Government has ordered the disarmament of the local administrative, and has formed itself into the "Central Provisional Government," to which delegates from all towns and districts will be received. £80,000 had been received in voluntary contributions in the city of Milan alone, and the taxes due on the 20th of May were to be prepaid on the 20th of this month

A letter from Turin, of the 15th inst announces the capitulation of the fortress of Peschiera.

Peschiera, situated on the banks of the lake of Garda, on two islands formed by the Mincio on its passage from the lake, presents a pentagon flanked by five very strongly constructed bastions. It is, moreover, well defended by other fortifications erected after drawings by Vauban. The walls are on every side surrounded by a deep stream of running water, and all the internal defences are mined. The importance of Peschiera in a strategic point of view consists in its closing the direct road from Brescia to Verona, by Lonato, and in its furnishing a rallying point for the operations to be carried on against Verona or against the valley of the Adige, to cut off the road from the Tyrol, to which object it is supposed the measures adopting by Charles Albert tend. The plan of the Austrians seems to be one of defence. They purpose shutting themselves up in places of strength, as Verona, Mantua, and Peschiera.

The force of the army of King Charles Albert, which, up to the present time, amounted to only 38,000 men, 32,000 of whom were infantry and 6000 cavalry, will soon be raised to 60,000 by the arrival at the camp of the two last contingents, and by the appeal it is intended to make to the three classes of the army of reserve, which is composed of men well drilled, and in every way likely to make excellent soldiers. The artillery now consists of one hundred and ten pieces. But in the arsenal of Turin there are six new batteries, which will be ready to take the field at the end of the month; and workmen are continually employed in preparing others, to the number of two hundred. The same energy is observed in the manufacture of arms and munitions of war of all kinds. The force of the Austrian army is a matter of doubt; but it is generally believed, that of all the municipalities throughout the seven principal points now occupied by them in Italy, to amount to 50,000 men

General Marmora, appointed by the Presidency of the Naval College of Genoa, has just been sent off by the Republic of Venice, and will soon set out, with the consent of the King, for his destination. It is said that a naval expedition is to be organised against Trieste, which will hold in check the Austrian reinforcements now en route for Italy.

General Ramorino, who acquired so much celebrity in the last Polish war, in fighting at the head of the insurgents, and who fixed Savoy in 1848, in the cause of Young Italy, is at present with the camp, in which, by the appointment of the King, Charles Albert, he holds the post of Lieutenant-General

Mazzini and the duke of the Italian revolutionists continue to sojourn at Milan, which is at present the grand focus of insurrection Gioberti was to join them in the course of a few days

From the seat of war we learn that the village of Castelnuovo had been wantonly set fire to by the Croatians, who surrounded it, and drove the inhabitants, who tried to escape, back into the burning houses. The Austrians have made a rozzia from Mantua, and carried off 130 head of cattle.

VENICE.—The Gazette di Venezia of the 4th contains a large number of important articles, including an address of the Provisional Government "to the United Provinces of the Venetian Republic," assuring them that they shall all enjoy equal rights and advantages; 2nd, an important commercial decree, abolishing the duties on cotton yarn and cotton manufactures, mixed and unmixed, within the Custom House territory of the united provinces of the Republic; 3rd, a decree ordering the formation of a regular cavalry corps of 200 soldiers to serve for four years; and, lastly, a multitude of addresses of the Provisional Government to the States of Italy and other foreign Powers

ROME. Letters from Rome of the 8th inst. mention that perfect tranquillity prevailed in that capital. Lord Mount Edgcumbe had arrived there from Palermo, and Lord Minto was expected in a few days

PARMA.—The Supreme Regency of Parma publishes a letter from the Duke, dated Parma, 9th inst., in which he accepts the resignation of the Regency, and leaves the magistracy of Parma to form a Provisional Government, till the result of the arbitration offered to King Charles Albert shall have decided the fate of the Duchy

BELGIUM

The Chamber of Representatives is still occupied with the discussion of the project of law which opens a credit for the execution of various public works

The coal districts in the arrondissement of Charleroi have suffered severely by the low markets of France and Germany, suddenly closed against them, and by recent events. Of twenty-six furnaces existing therein, fifteen are extinguished. The production of coal-coke has fallen off to the extent of 4600 hectolitres per diem. The extraction of coal has diminished one-third.

The Senate has closed the general discussion of the project of law granting a credit of 9,000,000f. for the war department

The Indépendance announces the intended retirement of M. de Nothomb from the Chamber of Representatives.

The Union trade of Lille is in a very depressed state

The Minister of War has called out the volunteer militia forces of the classes of 1846 and 1841. It is proposed that they shall enter into an engagement of from six months to two years.

HOLLAND

On Monday, the 17th, the Phœnix steamer, having on board the mortal remains of his late Royal Highness Prince Alexander of the Netherlands, had arrived at Rotterdam. The funeral was to take place with great solemnity at Delft, on Friday (yesterday). The programme of the procession in the Nederlandsche of the 18th says that the procession was to leave Rotterdam [illegible] and every public time, passed by a detachment of cavalry. The members of the Royal Family were to follow the corpse

The treaty of commerce and navigation between the Netherlands and the Two Sicilies is publicly expected, greatly to facilitate and extend the commercial marine relations between those countries

The Nederlandsche Staats Courant of the 17th publishes a Royal decree, by which the governor-general of the Dutch Indies is authorised to declare Port Menado, in the isle of Celebes, a free port

The official journal also publishes the law of the 30th of March, which grants an augmentation of 2,704,000 florins to the department of War for 1848

The editor of the Bazuyn has been condemned to six months' imprisonment, a fine of 1000 florins, and ten years' privation of civil rights, for having calumniated Mr. Van Hall, the late Minister of Finance.

SPAIN

Accounts from Madrid state that perfect tranquillity continued to prevail in the capital, and the accounts from the provinces were favourable to the maintenance of order

The King of Spain has had a fall from his horse and dislocated his shoulder; it was supposed, however, that the accident would be attended with any ill result

The Duchess de Montpensier held a reception, which was attended by many eminent persons. All the members of the corps diplomatique were present, with the exception of Mr. Bulwer, who was reported ill

The Duke and Duchess of Montpensier had removed from Vista Alegre to the Queen's Palace, by the advice of the medical attendants of the Duchess

The Queen had presented several Navarre with a splendid sword, and dressed to him on the occasion a most flattering letter

SWITZERLAND.

A letter from Berne of the 8th instant states, that the delegates of the Provisional Government of Milan, at Como, had demanded a passage for a column of 1200 Austrian prisoners through the Canton of Ticino, which the Government of the latter had granted on condition that the Canton of Grisons should likewise allow them to pass through its territory. The Directory had instructed the Federal Council of War to prepare a report on the organisation of the army, so that the Confederation be not taken unawares, and be constantly ready to defend, efficaciously and energetically, the neutrality and integrity of Switzerland. It was reported at Berne that the Sardinian Minister had been directed by his Government to demand from the Vorort an army of 100,000 men, whom it King would engage in his service, to assist him in driving the Austrians out of Italy

The Representative of the French Republic, General Tillard, had received most flattering receptions at Berne, on his lately presenting himself in that city A procession, organised by the committee of the Patriotic Association, and consisting of more than 500 persons, preceded by a military band and bearing banners of France and Swiss stuff, went by torch-light, to the residence of General Tillard. The French diplomatist appeared at the window when he was most loudly cheered, and a complimentary address was delivered to him, which his excellency gracefully acknowledged

The English Chargé d'Affaires was standing at one of the windows of the General's apartment, and at a window in the story above Lola Montes made her appearance

The Diet opened its proceedings on the morning of the 12th instant, with the consideration of the project of the Federal Constitution, prepared by the Commission of thirteen of the Diet, which was appointed by the Diet in August, 1847. The following is an outline of this project

"After 1 treats of the general provisions, which are as follows:

"The preservation of the 22 sovereign cantons of Switzerland form the Swiss Confederation.

"The cantons are sovereign, in so much as their sovereignty is not limited by the federal constitution, which guarantees to them their territory, their constitutions, liberty, and the rights of the people, as well as the rights and attributions which it has conferred on the authorities

"All particular alliances and treaties of a political nature between the cantons is forbidden

"The Confederation alone has the right to declare war and to conclude peace, as well as to make alliances and treaties with foreign s

"The official relations between the cantons and foreign Governments shall be carried on through the Federal Council.

"Military capitulations are forbidden

"The Confederation has not the right to keep up a standing army. This provision does not extend to the necessary institutions for the instruction of Federal army

"The Confederation will establish a Swiss University, a Polytechnic School, and a seminary for instructors: it has the right, by paying an indemnity, to suppress in whole or in part any tolls on roads or rivers, the right of transit on highways and bridges, customs dues, &c., but it cannot receive as the Vorort under the import, export, and transit dues. It takes on itself the direction of the post-office throughout the whole of Switzerland, as well as to coin money, and also to introduce a uniformity in the weights and measures of the country. The manufacture and sale of gunpowder is also to belong to it.

"The right of free establishments for all Swiss, and the free exercise of the recognised Christian worship is guaranteed throughout the Confederation.

"The liberty of the press is guaranteed.

"Chapter 2 relates to the federal authorities.

"The supreme authority of the Confederation is exercised by the Federal assembly, which is composed of two councils—the National Council and the Council of States.

"The National Council is composed of deputies of the Swiss people, elected in the proportion of one member for every 20,000 souls; it is elected for three years, and is integrally renewed every three years.

"The Council of the States is composed of 44 deputies of the canton

"These two councils shall deliberate on all questions which the present constitution places within the limits of the Confederation.

"The directorial and superior executive power of the Confederation is exercised by a federal council, composed of five members, chosen for three years.

There shall be a federal tribunal for the administration of justice in federal matters, and a jury for penal matters. The federal tribunal shall be composed of eleven members, and five supplementary ones."

The sitting of the Diet on the 13th was not of much importance. General [illegible] was confined to local interests The cashier of the federal treasury announced that, after the payment of the expenses occasioned by the late war, which amounted to 1,900,000f., there would be a deficit of 3,813,000f., which will be covered by the loan contracted by the Confederation. The deputy for Appenzell declared that his canton would not be responsible for any part of the loan, as it would be a fit step towards involving Switzerland in a very heavy debt. Twelve states voted in favour of it.

POLAND.

The intelligence from Cracow is rather of a peaceful character. The people demanded the dismissal of all the German officials. The fears of a Russian invasion are on the decline, the Diet having officially declared that the Austrian frontier that the military preparations were directed to the defence of the kingdom of Poland against any aggression

Letters from Cracow state that the whole of Moldavia is in commotion, and that everywhere there is a tendency to join the now liberated Austria. Two battalions of infantry had been sent to Gratz, where a movement has assumed a formidable character, namely, a rising of the poor against the rich. The Proletaris (the poorest classes) have sworn to set fire to the four corners of the city the military fraternise with the people, and many of the soldiers do not return to their barracks.

From the Russian part of Poland we learn that the difficulties in the way of uniting the two populations of the duchy of Posen under one municipal are in great force. General Willisen returned to Berlin and had an interview with the King, the result of which has been a cabinet order, separating from the province of Posen the following ten circles or districts—Fraustadt, Bomst, Buntzlau, Meseritz, Czarnikau, Chodziesen, Wirsitz, Bromberg, Szubin, and Inowrazlaw; by this separation, they are excluded from the proposed organization of the Germanic nationality.

The mutual antipathies of the German and Polish populations to each other are the chief cause of all the difficulties. The Germans do not wish to give up their ascendancy which justice to the Poles requires, while the latter seek to assert their equality in the eye of the law by violence. The latest accounts state that most of the roving bands of armed peasants had laid down their arms within the time prescribed by Gen. Willisen, and that tranquillity was perhaps generally restored.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Advices to the 26th of February have been received. The papers are almost filled with Sir Harry Smith's journey from the Orange River to Natal, which place he reached on the 9th of that month; his reception was most cordial.

The Governor had been favourably received by the emigrant farmers on his road, and the Governor's impression was carried over the whole of those extensive regions, on terms with which the native chiefs and people appear to be perfectly satisfied.

The result of Sir Harry's visit to Natal is thus described in the Zuid-Afrikaan of Feb. 24:

"Not only have all differences between the Natal Government and the emigrants been satisfactorily adjusted, but the latter have also returned to the lands which they previously held. His Excellency even went a step further

He also invited those emigrants located on the range of the Drakkberg Mountains to return to their old districts, which many of them have done, on application to a land commission, one of whose members is their old and tried friend Andries Pretorius, who was lately refused an interview by Sir Henry Pottinger.

From Kaffirland the only news of importance is the death of the Tambookie Chief Umtirara, who died, as is supposed, by poison.

The Bishop of Cape Town, the Reverend Robert Gray, arrived on Sunday, the 20th, in the Persia, with two other clergymen of the Church of England, the Rev. H. Douglas and the Rev. Mr. Badnall.

UNITED STATES.

Advices have been received this week by the Caledonia.

Meetings to sympathise with the French continued to be held. The motion on that subject was rejected in the United States Senate by a vote of 22 to 21, it being considered too precipitate There was nothing new from Mexico. Commercial affairs were in a satisfactory position

Chargé des Affaires, on behalf of the United States, to the Court of Rome, has, for the present, been appointed Mr. Martin, the secretary of the American embassy at Paris, has been chosen for that station. He is a capable and qualified man especially qualified as speaking the language.

THE unhappy state of Paris has occasioned the breaking up of a British Orphan Asylum there, and on Sunday twenty-two children, destitute of home and food, arrived in London. Six of them were immediately received at the Royal Asylum of the St. Ann's Society, Streatham Hill; and six others, at the Orphan Working School. The rest will also find a temporary home in other charities in the metropolis, until means can be provided for their more permanent maintenance.

LORD BROUGHAM A FRENCH CITIZEN.—A correspondence has taken place between M. Cremieux, the French Minister of Justice, and Lord Brougham, in which the latter asks to be enrolled as a naturalised subject of France. M. Cremieux replied, that by naturalisation his Lordship would lose all his titles of nobility and the privileges and advantages he derived from being an Englishman, or from the rights conferred upon him by the British laws and customs. Lord Brougham replied that he had not doubted that by becoming a Frenchman he was to forfeit his right as an English peer and a British subject in France, but he understood that he would preserve his privileges in England. The Minister of Justice replied, in his turn, that he should make his choice: that France could not admit that a French citizen should be at the same time a citizen of another country; that he should cease to be an Englishman if he wished to become a Frenchman; that he could not be an Englishman in England, and a Frenchman in France; and that consequently it was impossible for him to accede to the demand of Lord Brougham to be naturalised in France. His Lordship, has, therefore, abandoned the idea of numbering himself among the subjects of the Republic

DEATH OF DONIZETTI.

DONIZETTI is no more! the minstrel of the southern sky has ceased to exist; his lute is silent, and its exquisite melodies are heard no more, for the strings are snapt asunder. The decease of such a composer, whose works, for nearly a quarter of a century, have so powerfully contributed to the interest of the lyric drama, is of too serious import, in the present dearth of talent in Italy, not to require an especial record of his career. Our artist presents the Portrait of the man, such as he was in the vivacity of early life, with his countenance beaming with intelligence—It is our duty to describe the career of the Musician. [illegible] our one position he held in the domain of Art, and to deplore the gap he has made in the world of instrumentative genius of his powers.

Gaetano Donizetti was born at Bergamo in 1798. He was destined by his father for the study of law, but, having devoted himself to painting, there was a composition made, by his following a musical career. He became the pupil of the celebrated Simon Mayer, and then at the Bologna Conservatory of Music, the professor of Martini Donizetti studied for nearly three years at this institute. His first essay in dramatic composition was an opera called "Enrico di Borgogna," produced at Venice in 1818, supported by Mme Cataiani, Mdlle [illegible] Corri, Veroi, Fioravanti, and Speech. From that year up to 1837 he composed the following operas, for various places: "Il Falegname di Livonia," "La Prigione in Villa," "Zoraide di Granata," "La Zingara," "La Lettera anonima," "Chiara e Serafina," "Il fortunato Inganno," "Aristea," "Una Follia," Alfredo, Il Ricco," "Olivo e Pasquale," "Emilia di Liverpool," "Rosmonda d'Inghilterra," "Alahor in Granata." "Il Castello degli Invalidi," "Elvida," "Olivo e Pasquale," "Il Borgomastro di Saardam," "Le Convenienze Teatrali," "Otto Mesi in Due Ore," (of these operas, "Zoraide," written for Rome in 1822, in which Donizetti and the sisters Mombelli sang, was the only decided success. His forms and inspirations were so closely modelled on those of Rossini, that the star of the latter, already was then in the ascendant, afforded Donizetti little chance of fame and distinction. But the moment arrived when the real genius of Donizetti was to assert its supremacy. This was in 1828, at the San Carlo, at Naples, when his "Zoraide di Roma" was brought out, sustained by Mdlle. Tosi, the tenor Winter, and the Titan of basses, Lablache. It was a transcendent triumph. There was a trio of surpassing beauty in this work, the fame of which established Donizetti's reputation. With wonderful facility he continued to write in the same year "La Regina di Golconda" and "Gianni di Calais," for Madame Comelli-Rubini, Rubini, Tamburini, and "Giovedì Grasso," for Lablache and Rubini. In the Carnival, 1829, for the San Carlo, he wrote "Il Paria," for Tosi, Lablache, and Rubini, and "Il Castello di Kenilworth," for Tosi, Madame Boccabadati, Malanotte, Carrara, Derivis, Winter, and Lablache. In 1830, Donizetti composed an oratorio for Naples, "Il Diluvio Universale," for Madame Boccabadati, Lablache, and Winter, which was performed during the Lenten season. In the same year he produced "I Pazzi per Progetto," "Francesca di Foix," "Imelda de Lambertazzi," and "La Romanziera," for Naples. For the Carnival of 1831, at the Carcano, Milan, he composed "Il Giovedì Grasso," "Anna Bolena," sustained by Mesdames Pasta, Orlandi, and Laroche, Rubini, and F. Galli. This splendid production, so replete with tragic grandeur and flowing melody, raised Donizetti's name to the highest pinnacle of glory, and every European impresario became desirous of obtaining a work from such a composer His thirty-third opera was "Fausta," for Naples," sung by Madame Rondi de Begnis, Basadonna, and Tamburini. For the Scala, in Milan, in 1832, he composed "Ugo Conte di Parigi," in which Pasta and our grand artiste, Grisi, sang with Donzelli and Negrini. In the same year came a signal success for Donizetti in comic opera, by the production of his "Elisir d'Amore," for Mdlle. Orlandi, Rosconi, and Salvi, the tenor. In the same year, for "Il San Carlo, he wrote "Sancia di Castiglia," for Madame Ronzi, Santolini, Lablache, and Basadonna. In 1834, for the Carnival at Rome, he composed "Il Furioso," for Mdlle. Orlandi, Rosconi, and Salvi, the tenor. In the same year, "Parisina," for Mdlle Unger and Duprez, was produced at Florence; and "Torquato Tasso" at Rome, expressly for Rosconi. At the Scala, in the Carnival, 1834, appeared another masterpiece, viz "Lucrezia Borgia," written for Madame Merc Laladé, the contralto Monetta Brambilla, Podresz., and Mariani. At the Pergola (Florence, in the same year, he composed "Rosmonda d'Inghilterra" for Mdlle. Fanny Corri (now Madame Persiani), Duprez, and Porto, the basso; and for the San Carlo, "Maria Stuarda," for Madame Ronzi

Donizetti seems to have been particularly attached to English history for his libretti. In 1835 the "Rosmonda d'Inghilterra" was written for the Scala, for Mdme. Ronzi, Reina the tenor, Cartagenova the baritone, the first husband of Adelaide Kemble, and Marini the basso In the same year Donizetti composed expressly for the Italian Opera in Paris "Marino Faliero," for Grisi, Rubini, Lablache, Tamburini, and Santini. This opera, which is one of Donizetti's finest works, was subsequently produced in London, and has had a great run in Italy, with Mario as the Doge In the autumn of 1835, for the San Carlo at Naples, Donizetti produced his masterpiece, "Lucia di Lammermoor," expressly composed for Mdme. Persiani, and M. Duprez, the French tenor, Cosselli, and Porto. For the Carnival, 1836, he wrote "Belisario" for Mdlles. Unger, Vera, Salvini, Vaccari, and Pasini. In the same year he produced "Il Campanello" and "Gly," for Rosconi and Salvi, and "L'Assedio di Calais," for Barroilhet and Frederick Lablache. His fifteenth work was the "Pia de Tolomei," for Lablache, at Venice, at the Carnival of 1837, for Mdme. Persiani and Rosconi; and in the autumn, at Naples, he wrote "Roberto Devereux," for Ronzi and Barroilhet

Donizetti in 1838 composed "Maria di Rudenz," for the Fenice, at Venice, for Mdlle. Unger, Moriani, and Rosconi. In the autumn of 1838 he wrote "Gianni di Parigi," for the Scala, which he was forced to take from the stage after the first night. He composed for the Opera Comique, in Paris, his celebrated opera, "La Fille du Regiment," for Mdlle Borghese, Marié, and Henri. It was in this opera, Mdlle. Jenny Lind made such enormous success at last season at her Majesty's Theatre Donizetti arranged it for Mdlle. Zoja, in Italy; and in the mention of these arti ies it be recorded that our own charming Miss Poole has achieved immense popularity The labours of Donizetti in this year (1840) were immense. In April he produced a five act opera at the Académie Royale de Musique (now the Théâtre de la National called "Les Martyrs," for Mesdames Stoltz, Dorus, Mdlle. Duprez, Massol, Derivis, Wartel, and Serda. This opera, under the title of "Polyeucte," was originally intended for Naples, for Nourrit, the unfortunate French tenor, who committed suicide in Italy. The censorship prohibited the production, and Donizetti adapted it for the French Grand Opera. In December (we still refer to 1840, [illegible] tic as appears the task) Donizetti composed one of the most superb works in the whole world; we allude to "La Favorite," written for Madame Stoltz, Duprez, Barroilhet, and Levasseur; and in the English version of which, at Drury Lane Theatre, Miss Romer so distinguished herself, first and M. Duprez, and afterwards with Mr Travers This opera has been proven, in fact, in every lyric theatre in the world with signal success, and will be one of the novelties of the season at the Royal Italian Opera, with Grisi and Mario

For the Carnival of 1841, at Rome, Donizetti wrote "Adelia," for Mdme. Strepponi, Salvi, and Marini. In 1842 he composed "Maria Padilla," for the Scala, for Mdlle. Lévey, Mdlle. Abbadia, Ronconi, and Donzelli. In the same year, Donizetti was invited by the Austrian Court to compose expressly an opera, and he produced "Linda di Chamouni," for Madame Tadolini, Brambilla, Moriani, Varesi, Derivis, and Rovere, the buffo-comico. In January, 1843, another perfect musical gem was produced to take its place by the side of the "Barbiere," the "Matrimonio Segreto," the "Il Re d'Amore!" we allude to the "Don Pasquale," expressly composed for the Italian Opera in Paris, for Grisi, Mario, Lamburini, and Lablache, four incomparable artistes, whose combination in one opera we can never hope to see again rivalled—certainly not excelled. In June in the same year he composed for Vienna—for Madame Tadolini, Ronconi, and Gazano—the lyric tragedy of "Maria di Rohan." We now approach the melancholy epoch which was to terminate the musical career of this extraordinary genius. In the autumn of 1843 he composed "Don Sebastian de Portugal," for the Académie Royale in Paris, for Mesdames Stoltz, Dupres, Barroilhet, Massol, and Levasseur; and at the same time he adapted "Maria di Rohan" for Grisi and Mario in Paris, adding a concluding part for Brambilla, in which Alboni created such a sensation last year in London.

On the Monday, in the month of November, he actually produced "Don Sebastian" at the French Opera, and on the following day (Tuesday) "Maria di Rohan" was visited by the Austrian Court to compose expressly an opera, and he produced "Linda di Chamouni," for Madame Tadolini, Brambilla, Moriani, Varesi, Derivis, and Rovere, the buffo-comico. In January, 1843, another perfect musical gem was produced to take its place by the side of the "Barbiere," the "Matrimonio Segreto," the "Il Re d'Amore!" we allude to the "Don Pasquale," expressly composed for the Italian Opera in Paris, for Grisi, Mario, Lamburini, and Lablache, four incomparable artistes, whose combination in one opera we can never hope to see again rivalled—certainly not excelled. In June in the same year he composed for Vienna—for Madame Tadolini, Ronconi, and Gazano—the lyric tragedy of "Maria di Rohan." We now approach the melancholy epoch which was to terminate the musical career of this extraordinary genius. In the autumn of 1843 he composed "Don Sebastian de Portugal," for the Académie Royale in Paris, for Mesdames Stoltz, Dupres, Barroilhet, Massol, and Levasseur; and at the same time he adapted "Maria di Rohan" for Grisi and Mario in Paris, adding a concluding part for Brambilla, in which Alboni created such a sensation last year in London.

On the Monday, in the month of November, he actually produced "Don Sebastian" at the French Opera, and on the following day (Tuesday) "Maria di Rohan" was visited by the Austrian Court to compose expressly an opera, and he produced two distinct classes of artistes to prepare and conciliate. Naturally of a very excitable temperament, his leisure hours were not devoted to repose, and a brain fever was the result. At the Carnival at Naples, in 1844, "Catarina Cornaro," his 63rd and last opera, was produced, with Mdlle. Goldberg, Fraschini, and Colleti. "Gabriella di Vergy," and "Le Duc d'Alba," two MS operas unconcluded, remain in his papers, and he was preparing another comic opera for Grisi, Mario, Ronconi, and Lablache, in Paris, when his mental faculties became quite prostrated. He was removed to a Maison de Santé, at Vitry, near Paris, and subsequently by his nephew, the son of his brother, at Constantinople, the director or music of the Sultan, was taken to a house in the Champs Elys' Some incoherent words referring to "Linda" suggested the idea that if restored to the place of his birth, under his own sunny sky, there might be hope. He was carefully conveyed to Bergamo, the nearly failing him on the journey, but recognised some months, and on the 29th of April the spirit departed from one of the greatest operatic composers Italy has ever produced. He died in the house of Signora Basini, a rich lady of Bergamo, after five days' mortal struggle, surrounded by his early friends and most ardent admirers.

Donizetti was passionately devoted to the fair sex, but was married but once His wife, Virginia Vasselli, the daughter of an advocate at Rome, died in Naples, in 1835, of the cholera, being snatched at the fatal moment. Donizetti succeeded Zingarelli in the direction of the Conservatoire at Naples; and was also appointed, after Lorado, chapel-master to the Imperial Court of Vienna. He has composed, in addition to the operas we have named, some cantatas, and several detached vocal pieces for the chamber and for albums, masses and vespers "Miserere" for Vienna, some quartets for two violins, tenor and violoncello, divers overtures, variations for the pianoforte, a mono.y for the death of Maddras, &c. Donizetti was an excellent poet, and took especial pains with his own libretti, some of which he wrote himself. In rapidity of composition he rivalled Rossini. He has been known to carry on an animated conversation on music, whilst some person was playing over a piece of music, and, to the amazement of the player, would tell him at the end all the faults or the beauties of the composition.

After he had emancipated himself from the Rossinian influence, his style became his own, and although, from the precipitation with which he wrote, many trivial scenes have been produced, the conception of his airs, the richness of his orchestral and choral writings, and the spontaneity and fruitfulness of his melodies, have soon proved in divers lyric gems. He has been known to score an opera in 24 hours, a period scarcely sufficient for the mere mechanical labour of writing down the notes. He fell into the hands of Barbaja, the sordid [illegible] lator, who made him write so many operas in one year, paying him barely the necessaries of life for his tremendous labours.

THE LATE SIGNOR DONIZETTI.

Donizetti's debut was during the Russinian ascendancy, after the schools of Cimarosa, Pessiello, Sacchini, Meyer, &c., had had their day; but, his genius finally triumphed, and Mercadante, Pacini, Vaccai, the Ricci, &c.,] had little chance against his deserved popularity.

JOHN JACOB ASTOR.

FROM intelligence just received from the United States we are informed that the death of this remarkable man took place on the morning of Wednesday, the 29th ult., at his residence, No 885, Broadway, New York. He had, within a few months, reached his eighty-fifth birth-day. His life has been a most eventful one—from the time of his landing in New York, a common steerage passenger—a poor, uneducated boy—to his accumulation of a fortune scarcely second to that of any individual on the globe; and that by projects which have become identified with the history of his country, and which will perpetuate his name for many ages to come.

John Jacob Astor was born in July, 1763, in the village of Waldorf, near Heidelberg, in the Duchy of Baden, Germany. His father was a very worthy man, and held the office of bailiff. At the age of eighteen years Astor, on the eve of leaving his home for a foreign land, resolved to be honest and industrious, and never to gamble. In March, 1784, he landed in America, a steerage passenger, having sailed from London in November, and been detained by the ice three months. On his voyage he became acquainted with a fellow-countryman of his, a furrier, who induced Mr A. to learn this art. The main portion of Mr. Astor's property at this time consisted of seven flutes from his brother's manufactory, at London, which, with a few other articles of merchandize, he sold, and invested the small proceeds in furs, and commenced learning the fur-trade in Gold-street, New York, by beating skins. He was soon after engaged as clerk in the fur establishment of Robert Bowne, a good old Quaker, who prized Mr. Astor very much for his untiring industry and fidelity. Subsequently, by the aid of a few thousands from his brother Harry, a rich Bowery butcher, he engaged in business for himself, associated with the late Cornelius Heyer.

At the close of the Revolutionary war, Oswego, Niagara, Detroit, and other posts being in possession of a foreign power, a serious embarrassment was thrown in the way of the fur-trade. Soon after Mr. Astor entered the business. In 1794-5, these posts were surrendered, when, contemplating the great opportunity offered to him, he said, "Now I will make my fortune in the fur-trade." His predictions were verified. Astor, with an industry and sagacity unparalleled, improved his opportunity, and after the lapse of six years, during the first year of the present century, he had amassed something like 250,000 dollars. By the natural cause of accumulation, this sum, at the present time, and without losses, would have amounted to 5,000,000 dollars—but in Mr. Astor's hands it has increased to more than five times that amount.

Nine years later, at the age of forty-five, Mr. Astor founded the American Fur Company, for the purpose of competing with the powerful British Associations, which were in a fair way to monopolize the traffic in furs throughout the Northern and South-Western portions of our Continent. The outposts of this new company stretched into new and hitherto untrodden fields, and secured the richest spoils of beaver, otter, and buffalo. The projection and establishment of this company did not, however, satisfy his gigantic intellect. He now set about his grand project of the Astoria settlement, to establish a series of forts along the Pacific Ocean and on the Columbia River, in connection with the United States Government, and thus monopolize the fur trade west of the Rocky Mountains. The first post, Astoria, was established in 1810, by a party of sixty men under the command of Mr. W. P Hunt. This settlement, which was destined to be the commercial emporium of the Northern Pacific, was to be supplied with commodities from New York, and the same vessel was also to convey supplies to the Russian trading settlements farther north, and receive furs in exchange. With the furs from the Russian posts and from Astoria she was to proceed to Canton, then the best market for furs, and return home with teas, silks, and nankeens. The Tonquin, the first, and the Lark, the third vessel, despatched for Astoria, were lost; yet notwithstanding, the enterprise would not have failed, had not Astoria been sold to the agents of the British North-West Fur Company, through the treachery of one of Mr. Astor's partners, a Scotchman named M'Dougal. Astoria had to struggle through many difficulties in consequence of being captured during the late war; and, just as peace was declared, and as it was to be restored, it was wrenched from Mr. Astor's hands by the treachery of his partner.

THE LATE JOHN JACOB ASTOR, OF NEW YORK.

Astoria, it will be recollected, is engraved in the second volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, No. 43, Feb. 26, 1842; at which time considerable interest was attached to the settlement, as portion of the Oregon country, the limits of which were then disputed by the British and American Governments.

BOAT FOR HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE OF WALES.

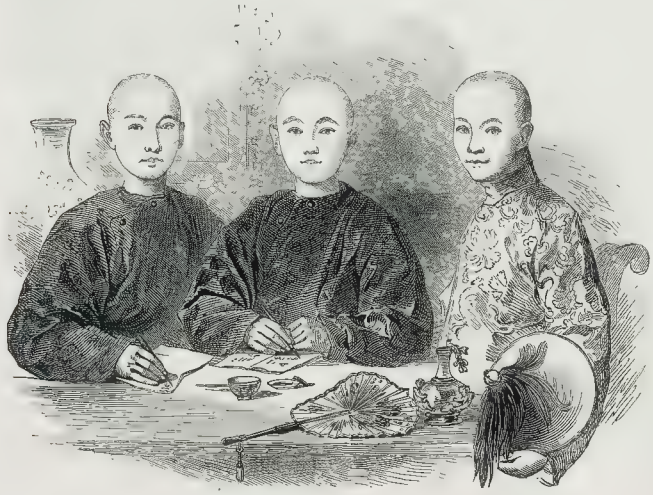
From the time of the establishment of the American Fur Company, Mr. Astor became largely engaged in commerce. His ships—freighted with furs for France, England, Germany, and Russia—and with peltries, ginsing, and dollars for China—now ploughed every sea to receive these products of the New World, and exchange them for the valuable commodities of the Old. During a good portion of his active life he resided in a large house in the lower part of Broadway, and lived in a style of princely magnificence. His house was furnished with the richest plate, and his apartments adorned with works of art, among which was a Cupid by Mignard, which was regarded as a work of rare merit, and for which Astor paid a princely sum.

Notwithstanding the magnitude and success of Mr. Astor's business operations, yet the greatest source of his wealth has resulted from the increased value of real estate consequent on the continued growth of New York. At an early day he was wont to convert two-thirds of his annual gains into real estate, not one foot of which he ever mortgaged. In this mode, together with the continually increasing value of real estate in this city, he multiplied his wealth far beyond the natural accumulation by the ordinary interest, and hence too the bulk of his property. Mr. Astor had vast tracts of land in Missouri, Wisconsin, Iowa, and other parts of the West, the prospective value of which is very great. The greater portion of his property is in real estate and mortgage in New York. The estimates of the value of his property are various; those knowing his affairs best placing it at 30,000,000 dollars, and some as high even as 50,000,000 dollars. His income on a moderate estimate must have been of late 2,000,000 dollars a year, or 166,000 dollars a month, which is about 41,500 dollars a week, 8760 dollars a day, 240 dollars an hour, and 4 dollars a minute. Mr. Astor some time since made a donation of 350,000 dollars for a library in New York, the interest of which is to be expended in employing agents to purchase books, and in the erection of a building.

Mr Astor has left two sons, Wm. B., and one who has been imbecile from his birth; one of his daughters became the Countess of Rumpff, deceased at Paris; another (deceased) was married to Mr. Bristed, an Englishman, author of a work on the Resources of America, and now a clergyman at Bristol, R. I. A grandson, Charles Bristed, is at the University of Cambridge.



CHINESE YOUTHS RECENTLY INTRODUCED TO THE QUEEN.

BOAT FOR THE PRINCE OF WALES.

THE Prince of Wales is about to be initiated in the manly and healthful exercise of rowing; for which purpose a new and beautiful single-sculling boat is now being constructed for his Royal Highness, on the latest and most improved principles, by the Messrs. Searle, her Majesty's boat-builders, of Stangate-street, near Westminster-bridge The skiff is a complete model of the boats used by gentlemen on the Thames, and a fine specimen of workmanship. It is 20 feet in length, of proportionate breadth, and is built of the finest bird's-eye maple, with mahogany lining, sax-boards, and thwarts. The spaces between the timbers are filled with a material said to be considerably more buoyant than cork, it is, in fact, a perfect life-boat in miniature. The cushion on which his Royal Highness will sit to pull his sculls is also stuffed with this material, and which, it is affirmed, will prevent the possibility of the little craft sinking. The minor appointments are of an elegant and tasteful description, and in perfect keeping with the general appearance of the boat, which has been inspected at Messrs. Searle's upper premises, near Lambeth Palace, by most of the members of the Oxford and Cambridge and other aquatic clubs, who have expressed their admiration of its perfect build and equipments. It is stated to be intended as a present for his Royal Highness from the Institution of Civil Engineers, Great George-street, Westminster, or one of the members of that Society.

CHINESE YOUTHS.

WITHOUT speculating on the importance of the results which may possibly arise from the visit of these young men to this country, what has already actually occurred is sufficient to make them objects of considerable interest. They were born in a heathen land, and of heathen parents; but, being brought under the tuition of a Christian teacher, the Rev. Dr. Legge, then at the head of the Anglo-Chinese College in Malacca, they contracted such a regard for him, and formed such an estimate of the instructions he imparted, as to willingly leave their connexions and native place to continue the advantages enjoyed under his teaching. While Dr. Legge filled the situation already named, in connexion with the London Missionary Society, the two elder, namely, Lee Kim-lin and Song Hoot-kiam, were taken by their parents to the school of the college. The youngest, Ung Man-sou, or, as abbreviated, A-sou, came under his care in a more remarkable manner. On Dr. Legge one day visiting some districts in the vicinity of the institution over which he presided, the boy, who was in charge of some buffaces, was pointed out to him as a suitable object for the benevolence of the Society for which he was acting, he being bereaved of his parents, and his friends not being able to do much for him. The boy being called, expressed his willingness to change his situation, and, the matter being adjusted with his employer, he was adopted by the Doctor, under whose kind care he has ever since remained, excepting a portion of he time subsequently to their arrival in this country.

In 1842, Hong-Kong was ceded to the British, and, in consequence, the Mission was removed, in the year following, from Malacca to that island. Dr. Legge was desirous of taking with him the six promising boys forming his first class; but their parents were inexorable, and he bid them farewell; but when he had been settled in Hong-Kong about twelve months, he heard that several of his pupils were unhappy at the suspension of their education, and would gladly join him there, if they could be received. On hearing this, he wrote to a Chinese friend in Singapore, giving instructions that, if the report were true, they might be forwarded to him; and he, in answer, had the pleasure of receiving Lee Kim-lin and Song Hoot-kiem, who, by taking a voyage of about two thousand miles, gave a practical proof of their attachment and confidence.

In 1843, Dr. Legge was compelled by the state of his health, to think of returning for a time to England, and put it to these youths whether they would like to accompany him, and so continue their education. To this proposal they assented, and arrived here in April, 1846; within a month after which they were domiciled under the roof of Dr. Legge's father, at Huntly, in Scotland, where they regularly attended the parish school, their general and religious education being superintended by the Rev. Mr. Hill, who testifies to their conduct being such as to endear them to their teachers and school companions, and to make them generally beloved in the town. Their progress in their several studies was quite satisfactory; their behaviour uniformly correct, and their acquirements in scriptural knowledge such as to make them appear proper subjects for Christian baptism, for which they applied, and the ceremony was performed at Huntly on the 15th of October last, by Dr. Legge and Mr. Hill; the formula being pronounced in Chinese by the former, and in English by the latter. There was a very large assembly of persons on the occasion, and the effect has been described as most impressive.

For about three months these interesting strangers have been located in Brompton, where they have continued their application to such branches of learning as have been deemed likely to qualify them for usefulness in the spheres contemplated for them, Lee Kim-lin having evinced considerable talent for drawing, in which he has for a few weeks been instructed, and in which he has made surprising progress. While in the neighbourhood of the metropolis, their deportment has been such as to obtain the regard of those with whom they have associated; and the friends of Missions have been highly gratified by the proof afforded in the piety and intelligence displayed by them, that their efforts on the behalf of China have not been in vain.

The subjects of this brief notice are now returning, full of purposes and plans for benefiting their countrymen; and it is hoped that, after further preparation in the Theological Seminary in Hong-Kong for the Christian Ministry, they may be very useful in propagating Christianity among the vast population of China, to which they, as Chinamen, will have free access through the length and breadth of the land, while the labours of our foreign Missionaries are limited to those places opened by the arrangements with our Government.

In addition to these facts of Missionary [illegible] a Chinese narrative the family of Dr Legge, who, after giving the most satisfactory evidence of conversion to God and truth, was, on the first Sabbath of this month, publicly baptised by him, at Trevor Chapel, Brompton, and partook of the Lord's Supper with the Church assembling there, and where the remarkable service created a very great sensation in the overflowing congregation collected on the occasion.

N.B.—In the Sketch, Song Hoot-kiem is the one on the left, Ung Mun-son in the middle, and Lee Kim-lin to the right.

On Wednesday, the 9th of February, on his return to Hong-Kong, Dr. Legge, and the three Chinese converts, were presented to her Majesty the Queen, and to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, at Buckingham Palace, by the Right Hon. Viscount Morpeth. Both the Queen and the Prince evinced great interest in the Chinese youths, and asked many questions, which it was highly gratifying to Dr. Legge to answer. On retiring, Dr. Legge placed in the hands of the Prince a memorial explanatory of the objects of his mission, and descriptive of the Theological Seminary at Hong-Kong, for the training of native evangelists.

PRESENT TO MR. COBDEN, M.P.

On Monday, a deputation of gentlemen had an interview with Mr. Cobden, at the Free Trade Club-house, in St. James's-square, for the purpose of presenting him with a Gold Box, purchased by subscription among the Commercial Travellers of the United Kingdom. Mr. Cobden having received the deputation in the library of the club-house, Mr. T. Whittard briefly addressed the hon. member, explaining that the fund for the purchase of the testimonial had been raised by small subscriptions from Commercial Travellers, who begged to present the same in token of their admiration of Mr. Cobden's triumphant exertions in the cause of Free Trade, as well as in gratitude for those signal services. The hon member accepted the present with evident satisfaction, more especially, he said, as proceeding from a class of gentlemen with whom he had held sympathy and association since his first entrance into active life. He then adverted to the recent success of Free Trade principles, maintaining that but for such results the position of the country would be much more critical than it is at this moment. Mr. Cobden next alluded to the Association of the Liberal Members of the House of Commons just formed, for the furtherance of cheap Government and the equalisation of taxation; adding, however, that as yet no plan had been positively laid down. The hon. member reiterated his thanks for the testimonial, which he greatly admired as a work of art; and the deputation then withdrew, highly gratified with the interview.

The testimonial is of very elegant design, and of upwards of 100 guineas value. The accompanying Illustration is nearly of the actual size of the box, and shows the upper face of the lid, bearing an allegorical tableau, of the genius of Free Trade, attended by Peace and Plenty, and welcomed by the four quarters of the globe: the composition is graceful and pleasing; and the framework of the picture, with its floral enrichments, is beautifully executed. The design is cleverly continued around the depth of the box, the under side of which presents a series of decorated sculpturn compartments, the central one bearing an engraving of the church of the village in Sussex at which Mr. Cobden was born. This vignette, and the accompanying ornament, are very nicely engraved; and the whole work is highly creditable to the designers and manufacturers, Messrs. Elkinton, Mason, and Co. Within the lid is engraved the following inscription:

"Presented to Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P., by a few members of the body of commercial travellers, as a testimonial of their esteem, and in grateful acknowledgment of his admirable and unwearied exertions in promoting the cause of Free Trade."

The deputation consisted of Mr. W. Tilt, one of the treasurers of the subscription; Mr. T. Whittard, Mr. F. Molland, and Mr. C. R. Carter.

GOLD BOX PRESENTED BY COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS TO MR. COBDEN, M.P.

SURVEY OF THE METROPOLIS.

Those who have had time and inclination to look about them at all, during the stirring events of the last few weeks, will have seen strange and unusual operations going on at the same time here, to which the London eye is wholly unaccustomed; and to the minds of the more timid and inexperienced, kept daily in excitement with revolutions following revolutions, some connection may have been surmised between these mysterious doings and warlike preparations in anticipation of disturbance here. Nothing short of this would appear to warrant the liberty that has been taken with Westminster Abbey and some of our other churches, in putting up signal-houses on their towers, and posts like telegraphs on the tops of our houses; and the fact is quite confirmed with some by seeing men in red coats here and there, busy with tri-colour flags and curious-looking instruments. It is one of the most peaceful of operations that is proceeding, nevertheless; nothing more than the Survey of the Metropolis—the foundation of the great work of Sanitary Improvement. This survey is of more importance than would be generally supposed. Mr. Chadwick pointed out, at a recent Court of Sewers, the enormous advantages, in a pecuniary point of view, that would have resulted, had such a survey been executed some time ago. One would have thought that there had been surveys enough already; and so there have. The cost of many complete surveys has hitherto been expended in piecemeal irresponsible work, in which no public confidence could be placed. It is now taken up as a whole, to be thoroughly and completely done; and we trust that no narrow, interested views will be allowed to interfere with the same course of proceeding as to the great works of improvement of which this survey is the base.

Our Illustration shows the erection on one of the towers of Westminster Abbey, which most of our London readers will recognise. Similar little buildings are to be seen also on St. Luke's and other towers of churches; and another is contemplated above the cross of St. Paul's. These are called "crows' nests," and are built to contain the instruments for observing the telegraph-looking posts on the houses and different points in and around the metropolis, from which the triangulation is formed and the distances are calculated. Those who have been curious to watch the proceedings of the red-coated gentry in the streets, with their flags and chains, will have seen them also driving little copper bolts into walls, or cutting hieroglyphics on the pavement, as one is here seen very busily engaged. These are termed "black marks," and serve to denote permanent points of the survey and levels, to which reference can at all times be made hereafter.

The body of men engaged in this service are the Sappers and Miners. They are a superior class of men of their order. Their work is executed in the most careful manner, and some of them, the most beautiful draughtsmen and mappers possible, common soldiers as they are. Colour-Sergeant Smith, who has charge of the London Survey, has been engaged in the most important works of the general survey of the kingdom, which, under the Ordnance department, has for years been carrying on, although these men are strangers in the streets of London. Welcome to them, we say, as harbingers of great and glorious changes, from which must spring much physical, and moral improvement of the people.

"CROW'S NEST" ON WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

CUTTING THE "BLACK MARK."

THE NEW SURVEY OF THE METROPOLIS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE. -The Nobility, Gentry, subscribers to the Opera and the Public are respectfully informed that a GRAND EXTRA ... will be duly announced.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT-GARDEN. - ... TO-DAY next ... will be performed, for the first time this season, Rossini's opera, LA DONNA DEL LAGO. Miss Elena Madame Grisi ... Michele Mlle. Alboni Albino, Madame Bellini, Giacomo ... Lavia, Principal Bards, Signor Tagliafico, Signor Polonini Signor Soldi Signor Luigi Mei, Signor Corradi-Setti, and Signor Rovere ... conductor, Signor Costa. To conclude with the ballet of LE DIABLE A QUATRE The principal characters by Mdlle Flory Fanny Cerito Mdlle Melle Marie, Mdlle Fanny, Mdlle Nantier, Mdlle O'Brien, Mdlle. Leopoldine Brasel, Mdlle Celeste Stephen, M. Goudier, M. Paltio, and M. ...

ON AND EVEN NIGHT, THURSDAY next, APRIL 27.—The Directors of the Royal Italian Opera have the honour to announce, that a Grand Extra Performance will take place Thursday next April 27 on which occasion will be performed, for the Second Time this Season, Mozart's Opera, IL DON GIOVANNI, with the original effect of Two Grand Orchestras and Double Chorus Donna Anna, Mdme Grisi, Zerlina, Mdme. Persiani. Elvira, Mdlle Carlotta Dall'Ongaro, Ottavio, Sig Mario, Don Giovanni, Signor Tamburini, Leporello Sig Revere, Masetto Sig Tagliafico. Il Commendatore, Sig Rache —To conclude with a Divertissement, in which all the principal Artistes of the Ballet will appear, viz. Mdlle Fanny Elssler, Mdlle Carlotta Grisi, Mdlle Therry, Mdlle Leopoldine Brasel, Mdlle. Celeste Stephan, Mdlle Honore, and Mdlle. Webster

Vivienne to the Pit 8s ; to the Nave Amphitheatre, 2s 6d ; Amphitheatre Stalls, 5s. The performances will commence at 8 o'clock. Tickets Stalls and Boxes for the Night or Season, to be obtained at the Box-office of the Theatre, which is open from 11 till 5 o'Clock; and at the principal Libraries and Music-sellers.

ROBERT HOUDIN.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.— Mr. ... begs to announce that at the celebrated Robert-Houdin for the Palais Royal Paris ... engaged to present a limited number of his extraordinary SOIREES FANTASTIQUES, ... Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday ... Library, ...

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE .CIRQUE NATIONAL DE PARIS ... WEEK ... Proprietor ... informed that the ... Cirque National de Paris ... 26th of May, the whole of the troupe being obliged to return to France immediately afterthat date. On EASTER MONDAY, and during the Week, the Entertainments will be of the most unique and extraordinary character, the programme consisting a selection of performances distinguished for variety and effect, expressly got up that they have been hitherto produced to this country. Among the various novelties selected for the occasion the following will be submitted to the public for the first time :—The Family of Favers, a Grand Equestrian Ballet, by Mdlles. Caroline, Matilde, Florentine and Dacre; MM Lessel, Lambert, Karoli, and Dacre. The Feats of Four Indians, by MM. Henri and Leroy "Le Pas des Grosses Tetes," by MM Hermann, Noverre, and Andre "The Clown's Miscellanea," by M. Leclair. "Bagpipes at Passe-Carreau," by MM Newsome, Siegrist and Bissels The Wandering Clown," by MM Andre and assistants.—On EVENING PERFORMANCES will be given on MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY.—Acting Manager Mr PEDWELL MACARTHY.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—EXTRAORDINARY ATTRACTION FOR THE EASTER HOLIDAYS First Appearance here for one week only, of the celebrated ... HIR and his wonderful ... Troupe of Trained animals, amongst which will be found the greatest novelty ever seen—Each Tiger, the first ever known to mingle with other animals, and his Alberts here considered untamable. On MONDAY, APRIL 24th, will be presented, first time, a Grand Romantic Spectacle, written by Rayle Bernard, Esq., expressly for the Young Lady Authoress ... reading performances, founded upon a passage in Eugene Sue's celebrated novel of the "Wandering Jew" and will be produced under the title of MONOK, THE RED-MAN. Armand Dupont, Mr Van Amburgh ... The spectacle will be succeeded by the interminable melange of Mr Batty's Scenes of the Arena, in which Signor Chiarini and Mdlle. Marriott Gratiago, from Italy, will for the first time display their first appearance in the ... PERFORMANCES will be given on MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY.—Acting Manager Mr PEDWELL MACARTHY.

THEATRE ROYAL SADLER'S WELLS.—LOVE'S ENTERTAINMENTS.—On EASTER MONDAY, TUESDAY, and WEDNESDAY, April 24, 25, and 26, Mr Love will present his Entertainments, with CURIOSITIES and Appointments entitled LOVE'S LUCK-LESSONS. To be followed by the last new and original musical entertainment, the WOLF IN SHEEP'S CLOTHING; or, the Rose Bride, to the scenes of the first Love will introduce his celebrated Dissolving Views ... with the interesting surgical operation of tooth-drawing, representing at the same time a ... view of visible and invisible, from Seven till Half-past Ten. Stalls 3s. Doors open at Seven, begin at Eight. Boxes 2s. Pit 1s. Gallery 6d. Private Boxes and Places may be secured at the Box-office of the Theatre, which is open from Ten till Four. Second Tier 1s. Upper Boxes 6d. Pit 3d. Gallery 2

POSTSCRIPT.

IRELAND.

On THURSDAY Mr. M'Cabe entered with the Clerk of the Crown, two pleas in abatement to the indictment against him

An officer of the Kilkenny Savings' Bank has decamped with £2000. A warrant has been issued for his apprehension.

In the principal towns there has been a most extensive run on the savings' banks during the week

PAUPER PROCESSION.—A circular to the Poor Law Guardians and Masters of Workhouses within the metropolitan police districts, has been issued by the Commissioners of Police, requesting them to check the formation of a procession of paupers proposed to be paraded through the streets of the metropolis on Easter Monday by Mr. C. Cochrane, and requesting them to make known to those who might be disposed to take part in the procession "that Mr. Cochrane was acquainted, by a letter of the 26th March, in reply to his offer on the subject, that the Secretary of State cannot receive the paupers during the Easter week, but it would be received at any other time, if sent in the usual way, or with a deputation of only a small number of persons." The Commissioners further add "that the duty it should be made known, also, it will be their duty to direct such precautions as may be required for keeping order and preventing any obstruction in the streets or thoroughfares by a procession or assemblage of persons; and every person who will, in regards or does not conform himself in such manner as shall be given into custody immediately by the police; and all peaceable and well-disposed persons should be cautioned and enjoined not to join in any procession." A public meeting was held on Thursday evening, at the Temperance Hall, York-street, Westminster, for the purpose of taking into consideration the condition of the paupers in the various workhouses of the metropolis. Mr. Charles Cochrane addressed the meeting at considerable length, and, in the course of his remarks, announced his determination, cost what it might, to be one of the deputation entrusted with the presentation of the petition to Sir G. Grey on Monday next.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE

No details of the great fête at Paris on Thursday, had reached us up to last night. The enjoyment of the day was marred by the extreme unfavourableness of the weather, a severe continuous rain pouring down the whole morning. Up to five o'clock P.M., all passed off quietly, notwithstanding that there were upwards of 300,000 National Guards, and 60,000 troops of the line present. In addition to the regular legions of the National Guard, the Guard Mobile, and several regiments of the line also took up positions on the Boulevards. From the Bastille to the Madeleine, upwards of three miles, the whole distance was occupied by these three kinds of troops. As the regiments of the line passed to their places, they were loudly cheered by the National Guards, and returned the compliment each time, though certainly not so energetically. The Guard Mobile also received them with acclamations, which were not very warmly responded to. Indeed, it was very generally remarked that the regular troops appeared to look slightingly at this new armed body; and both in the morning, and afterwards in the course of the day, when they passed each other, the regiments of the line, though tolerably cordial towards the National Guards, were cool, if not contemptuous, towards the Guard Mobile

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN

The Duke of Brunswick has arrived at Rendsburg, where he was received with great joy; he will take the field against the Danes, at the head of his Brunswickers. Prince Radziwil and General Malliandorf are expected to command the Prussians. The Prussian cavalry have reached Rendsburg. Reports of the want of unanimity between the Prussian and Hanoverian generals, Colonel Von Bonin and General Halkett, as to the chief command, still prevail: 1400 more Prussian infantry have also arrived.

SWEDEN

All the ministers who held portfolios at the commencement of the Diet have resigned, and their successors have been appointed. The new ministers are by no means the most tried political principles. They are men of high honour, but give no guarantee for the change of administration which is so universally desired It is said that an army of observation is to be placed at Schonen.

RUSSIA

The Russian [illegible] Persia and the various seaports of [illegible] at their posts for the protection of Russian [illegible] ally in respect to commerce and navigation. His Majesty has [illegible] and consular agents in Russia shall be recognised as hitherto.

ITALY

A proposition has been presented to Pius IX. by Deputies from the different Italian States, demanding the establishment of an Italian Diet at Rome.

SPAIN.

Accounts from Madrid of the 15th inst. have come to hand. The French Provisional Government had recognised it. It was said, that the Duc de Montpensier should be sent out of Spain. The Duke and Duchess were at Aranjuez, and were shortly to go to Seville.

INDIA.

Advices from India by the Overland Mail were received last evening (Friday). Their political contents are not important, and in commercial matters there was little alteration. We shall make more interesting items of news from the summary of the Bombay Times of the 15th ult

The Honourable Indiaman returned from Sandy on board the Asiatic on the morning of the 20th inst., and will remain there for a month, when he will return to the Pre-dency to receive his successor, Lord Falkland, expected to arrive about the 25th of April.

The Affghan Chiefs are, as usual, quarrelling with, and plundering and attacking each other. Another physico-geographical expedition has been organised, and started to proceed to Affghanistan. Complaints are generally manifested in that of the ill treatment received by British merchants at Ava, at the hands of the King. Sir H. Blackwood quitted Madmadn on the 16th ult., to rejoin the Fox, at Amherst. He is said to have spoken favourably of that port as a site for a Dockyard, Tranquility generally prevails throughout India.

DEVONSHIRE SILVER.—We engraved, a short time since, the Devon Silver Basket manufactured for her Majesty, by Messrs. Elkington and Son, of Exeter. A few days since, Mr. Elkington, jun., had the honour of delivering at Osborne an elegant silver basket, ordered expressly by her Majesty. The basket is made of fine network, ornamented with scrolls. On one end are the Royal arms, admirably chased; and on the other a design of Exeter Cathedral, both surrounded by an embossed wreath of exquisite workmanship, and "V. R." engraved on a shield. Her Majesty was graciously pleased to express her approbation of the style in which it was finished.

ARTISTS' AMATEUR PERFORMANCE. This attractive representation will take place on Thursday next, at the St. James's Theatre, under the immediate patronage of her Majesty and Prince Albert. The bill consists of the comedy of the "Heir-at-Law," and the farce of "Plot and Counterplot." The proceeds will be appropriated to the Artists' General Benevolent Institution, founded in 1814, for the relief of Artists in Distress, as well as of their Widows and Orphans. It will be recollected that the former amateur dramatic performance at the above theatre enabled the artists materially to aid the efficiency of the institution; and we understand a similarly gratifying result is anticipated from the performances of next Thursday. Tickets may be obtained of Mr. Mitchell, 33, Old Bond-street; at 193, Strand, and of the stewards for the occasion

THE COMMERCIAL BOARD of Stockholm has announced that in consequence of official advice respecting the sanitary condition of St. Petersburgh and Cronstadt, and the cessation of the cholera at Moscow, vessels arriving from that Island and Russian harbours should cease to be subjected to quarantine.

BRITISH WORKMEN EXPELLED FROM FRANCE.—On Wednesday a vessel, chartered by the Government for the conveyance of British workmen expelled from France, left the river for Calais, where she will receive on board a number of English mechanics and labourers for conveyance to South Australia. The total amount subscribed towards this fund up to yesterday was about £3749 18s. Two thousand refugees have passed through London alone, the whole of whom have received assistance from the funds. The children of the British Orphan School, at Paris, have been brought over to England, and temporarily located in the Orphan Asylums at Clapton and Hampstead, and at the St. Ann's Schools, Brixton.

THE JEWELS OF THE LATE ROYAL FAMILY OF FRANCE. The Nouvelliste de Flandre states that one of the ladies of honour of the Princess Clementine of Orleans, Princess of Saxe Coburg, arrived at Bruges, three days ago, to examine the jewels lately found in possession of the person named Van Docrne, of that town. Most of them are said to be recognised as belonging to the Princess Clementine. What was at first taken for the eagle from the Imperial crown appears to be, in fact, an ornament presented to the Princess on her marriage, by her brother-in-law, the King of Portugal. Several of the stones of this ornament, which is of great value, are missing Among the jewellery were also several articles of value, belonging to the Princess de Joinville.

PIKES MANUFACTURED AT CARRICKMACROSS.

COUNTRY NEWS.

MUNIFICENCE.—The Bishop of Durham has given the handsome sum of £300, in addition to a previous munificent donation of £1000 money, in aid of the fund for the rebuilding of the ancient chapel of St. Andrew's at Auckland

BEWDLEY ELECTION.—The nomination of candidates for the representation of the united boroughs of Bewdley and Stourport, took place on Monday at the Town-hall. The election was occasioned by a Committee of the House of Commons declaring the last election void, in consequence of bribery and treating practised by the agents of both the candidates, and by their unseating the sitting member, Mr. T. J. Ireland (Conservative), for bribery and treating by agents. The candidates were the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton, brother to Lord Lyttelton, Lord Lieutenant of the county of Worcester, (Conservative,) and Lord Mandeville (Conservative), eldest son of the Duke of Manchester. The poll was closed on Wednesday, when the election was declared to have fallen upon Lord Mandeville, the votes being, for Mandeville, 171; for Lyttelton, 156: majority for Mandeville, 15

LIVERPOOL FINANCIAL REFORM ASSOCIATION.—The following programme has been published at Liverpool, [illegible] tion recently established "The objects of the Association to consist in directing public opinion to the following principles. 1. A general retrenchment in the national expenditure. 2. The revision of the assessed taxes; of the malt tax; and of the excise and stamp duties. 3. The transfer of direct taxation of those imposts which interfere with the industry and limit the subsistence of the people. 4. The equal apportionment of all taxation. Taxation." Persons desirous of enrolling their names as members are requested to signify the same to either of the following gentlemen:—Mr. Robertson Gladstone, Mr. A. H. Wylie, Mr. J. R. Jeffrey, Mr. E. Brodribb, Mr. Bean, Mr. John Smith

THE "TOWN-HALL GUARD" is the title given to a portion of the constabulary force recently organised in Manchester. This body is highly drilled, and is said to be already very expert in various military evolutions. It is intended to form these constables into "a permanent volunteer force" to consist of two companies, each of forty eight rank and file, four captains, and eight lieutenants. Two senior captains are to command the force, which will thus muster in all a total of 122. Another similar body is about to be enrolled under the title of "The Corporation Guard."

ABBOTSFORD.—We understand that this celebrated mansion will shortly be occupied after the fashion of more princely palaces, it having been let to a Mr. Hope, a London merchant, a relation of the youthful proprietor. Whether this will interrupt the visiting to it, we cannot say. It was occupied for a short while by a family a few years ago, and two hours in the day were allowed for visiting at that time; and at present it is open from eight o'clock till dusk.

ARREST FOR PRINTING A POLITICAL PLACARD.—In the course of last week Messrs. Harrower and Brown, printers, Glasgow, were taken into custody by the authorities, for the printing of a placard, headed "Threatened Revolution in London, which was extensively posted throughout the city in the course of the day previous, and which the police, by order of the magistrates, were busily engaged in tearing down from the walls on Monday. They underwent a lengthened examination in the fiscal's office after being apprehended, and were then liberated on bail-bonds of £50 each

CAUTION TO SENDERS OF UNPAID LETTERS. The following has been issued at the General Post-office, by command of the Postmaster-General: "Under the 3rd and 4th Vict., cap. 96, and the 10th and 11th Vict., cap. 85, all persons sending letters by the post unpaid, which, from any cause whatever, cannot be delivered to the parties for whom they are addressed, are liable to pay the postage charged thereon, which, under the last Vict., c. 96, may be recovered by summary process before a magistrate. In future, such letters being returned, the senders will be compelled to pay the postage charged upon them."

THE FRENCH AND EXCISE SHOPKEEPERS. It is confidently asserted that a vast number of the shopkeepers of Paris have expressed their determination to seek London as a place of settlement and trade; and, indeed, that several have already made arrangements for business operations at the west end of the town. This movement has given rise to much alarm among the English, who perceive in the movement the germs of an opposition, which, from various causes, must prove seriously injurious if not absolutely ruinous to their interests. Standard

WRECK OF THE "SENATOR" DUBLIN STEAMER. This fine screw steamer, of 500 tons burden, which left the Thames on Saturday morning last, for Dublin was wrecked near the Land's End, on Sunday night, in a fog. She ran into Whitsand Bay, close to Sunset Cove, and got ashore, striking forcibly on. On her critical situation being discovered, the coast guard and others rendered the most effectual aid to the unfortunate persons on board, who were conducted safely on shore in safety. By the last accounts, it was difficult to say if there was any chance of the vessel getting off. She lies [illegible] several feet in the sands, and a heavy sea was kicking her broadside fearfully, and, what was worse, there was no appearance of the weather moderating

IRELAND.

SEDITIOUS LIBELS. On Saturday last, the first day of Easter Term, "true bills" were found by the Grand Jury in Dublin against Messrs. Mitchell, Meagher, and Smith O'Brien: the former, for seditious publications in the United Irishman newspaper; the two latter for uttering a seditious speech on the 15th of March last. There are two indictments against Mr. Mitchell. One is grounded on the article entitled "Striking Terror," which relates entirely to the late special commission, and may be considered as the most bloody manifesto of the whole. The second indictment is on the letter to Lord Clarendon, who is charged therein as "the general butcher of Ireland," and another article entitled "The Battle of Mahadeemo."

IT is rumoured that the Earl of Shrewsbury has become a Repealer.

ON Saturday a numerous meeting, called by the Mayor of Belfast, was held in the Council Chamber, in consequence of a requisition signed by a large number of the magistrates, bankers, merchants, &c., of the town. The objects of the meeting, as set forth in the requisition, were—"First. To declare the public abhorrence and detestation of the cowardly attempt recently made upon the capital and certain parts of the south of Ireland, and at the same time express confidence in the wisdom, energy, and power of the Executive to suppress the seditious movements now existing in that country. To tender our loyal attachment to the Throne of these realms and the legislative union of Great Britain and Ireland. 3. To offer our united services to his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant, in any way which may tend to uphold order and promote peace and good-will among all classes of her Majesty's subjects."

A SOIREE, on a large scale, and most numerously attended by members of both sexes, was given on Saturday, in Dublin, to Mr Smith O'Brien and his companions, on the return from France, whither they had been to present an address of congratulation to the Provisional Government. Various toasts, including "The Legislative Independence of Ireland, and Repeal of the Union," "the Queen of Ireland," &c., were given amidst a display of much enthusiasm. Mr. O'Brien, Mr. Mitchell, &c., addressed the assemblage, which did not separate until midnight.

ARRESTS UNDER THE DRILLING ACT.—A number of young men were arrested last Sunday evening, while performing military evolutions in a large room in Bridge-street. They were lodged in the station-house, and were brought up for examination on Monday, when they were committed for trial

CITIZENS' MEETING.—A meeting has been held here to form a league with the Protestants in the south and north of Ireland.

REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—The weekly meeting of the Association took place yesterday. The chair was occupied by Maurice Leyne, Esq. After a few observations from the Chairman, Mr. Patrick O'Connell rose and addressed the people on the necessity that existed for peaceful, though determined action, stating that if the policy which he considered the safest were not adopted, he for one would retire from the Association. Lord Mulgrave's speech delivered at considerable length reviewed several of the principal topics connected with the agitation. Galway brought up a resolution which had been agreed to in committee, conveying a strong censure on the present Administration for their conduct with regard to Ireland, and entered minutely into the present state of affairs. The Rev. Tom Miley seconded the resolution at very great length, speaking for nearly two hours. The speech contained advice to the people to be peaceful, but to show a most determined front to the present Government. The speaker stated that he hoped the cause of Ireland would succeed without any violence, but added that if necessity drove people to force the clergy would be with them, as the clergy on the Continent were with their people. The case of Poland and the Catholic ascendancy were next adverted to, and the speaker entered into proofs to show the groundlessness of such apprehensions. It was also stated by the same gentleman, that a British Peer, whose name he was not yet at liberty to mention, had just embraced Repeal opinions. Mr. John O'Connell next spoke, and adverted at much length to the proposed deputation to the Queen in favour of Repeal. The rent was £[illegible]

WE have, by the obliging aid of an authenticated sketch at Carrickmacross [illegible] received two specimens of "the Pike," as manufactured in that town and neighbourhood. The larger is the most finished weapon. Its top of steel, and about two feet long; the smaller one, when taken, was in course of formation, and under the hammer of the

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY

The last conversazione of the Members of the Royal Society, under the presidency of the Marquis of Northampton, took place on Saturday evening, at his Lordship's residence, on the Terrace, Piccadilly.

The meeting was very numerously attended. Among those present were observed his Excellency the Austrian Ambassador, the Chargé d'Affaires of the Hanse Towns, the Marquis of Lansdowne, &c.

The Noble President's saloons were, as usual, studded with models of new inventions and works of art.

With this meeting closes the Presidency of the noble Marquis over the Society. With how much honour to himself, and how much advantage to the Institution, it is long [illegible] the office, is well known to the Fellows, and we need not here enlarge on the fact; but it would be [illegible] to omit to acknowledge the extreme courtesy his Lordship has always extended to all who have had the gratification of enjoying his hospitality, which has literally been most liberally dispensed among the numerous meetings [illegible] safely to succeed to the Presidency of the Duke of Northumberland, the [illegible] and Wrottesley

MEETINGS

AUSTRALIAN [illegible] meeting of the Australian Company was held on Monday, at the [illegible] Lombard-street. Sir [illegible] in the chair. Considerable interest was excited in the meeting by the presence of Mr. Horne in the chair. The production of this report appeared to give general satisfaction to the shareholders. The mines appear already to be in a productive state, and many regular shipments of ore are expected. A most advantageous lease of an adjoining mine had been effected. The mine (the Montacute) was [illegible] low thirty tons of fine ore per month, ore is daily worth three times the value of the produce of Cornish ores, and much larger returns were expected with [illegible] terms of lease were simply to give the lessors ten per cent. on the quantity raised. The report was adopted, the [illegible] were in hand to pay the current expenses of working for the present year, provided only that the amounts the directors hoped to be able to commence regular successive shipments of ore. The report was unanimously adopted, and ordered to be printed and circulated among the shareholders

DARTMOOR CONSOLS MINE. A special meeting of this company was held on Monday, to decide upon the winding up of the affairs of the association; Mr. Hope in the chair. From a statement which was made by Mr. Mayhew, it appeared that upwards of £1400 had been raised on the first and second call of the company, but that, upon a general balance of accounts, upwards of £1000 was still due and owing. After a very long and desultory conversation, the meeting came to a resolution to dissolve the co

ROYAL NAVAL BENEVOLENT SOCIETY. The semi quarterly general court of the members of this Society was held on Monday, at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's-street; Rear-Admiral Lord Robert Stuart in the chair. The report read at the quarter succeeded to the Sailors' Orphan Fund, after expenditure, a balance of [illegible] remained. The report being then agreed to, a sum of £430 was distributed among the more deserving applicants. A nomination to the Royal Naval School was presented, to the son of one of the officers who perished in the Avenger

RURAL TAXATION LEAGUE.—During the week several meetings were held in Marylebone and other localities of the metropolis and its vicinity, with a view to the formation of district societies, to co-operate on the objects in view, by sending a gentleman deputed from each society to a central [illegible] for the purpose of [illegible] the Government and spoliation of the Landed Estates, as the name imports, has been formed for the purpose of obtaining a more equal distribution of the public burdens

GENERAL THESPIAN FUND. festival took place on Monday evening, at the London Tavern, where a large number of gentlemen sat down to dinner. The chair was occupied by Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, Bart., supported by Mr. Charles Dickens, and other gentlemen. After the customary toasts, Mr. Buckstone, as treasurer of the institution, stated that its vested property amounted to £4000, and that four aged members enjoyed annuities of £30 respectively. In the course of a humorous and characteristic address, he passed a high eulogy upon the chairman, observing, that, as money was their great object, they ought to feel happy in having the author of "Money" present upon that occasion. During the evening, a subscription, amounting to between £[illegible] and £400 was made.

DISTRIBUTION OF QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY. On Monday, according to ancient custom, the Easter bounty money of Queen Anne was distributed at the Almonry, in Middle-Scotland-yard. Upwards of 600 poor and necessitous persons, male and female, all aged at least sixty five years, the nearly all very feeble, of good character, and resident in the metropolis, were the recipients. Each shawl received 5s. in new half crowns

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE.—Professor Sharpey, well known to the public as the author of the "Surgical Dictionary," has just resigned the appointment held by him for seventeen years, at the University College, London, in consequence, it is stated, of the recent election of Professor Syme to a chair in the Institution In taking leave of the students, Professor Cooper said that his resolution was founded upon the impossibility of any agreement between himself and a few of his colleagues on certain points affecting the claims of gentlemen educated at this school, gentlemen who ought, in his opinion, not to be forgotten in the distribution of its patronage

HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, BROMPTON. Last Sunday morning a sermon on behalf of the above charitable institution was preached at the church of All Saints, Huntley-road, St. John's Wood, by the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Oxford. At the close of a very eloquent and appropriate discourse, in which the merits of the charity were most warmly dwelt upon, the sum collected amounted to £97. 1s. 8d.

SUICIDE IN BOW-STREET POLICE COURT. On Monday an unfortunate man, who was well known to the metropolitan police as an amateur thief-taker, was brought up before Mr. Hall for assaulting his wife, when he was fined 40s., or in default committed for one month. The unfortunate man, who had only a few days before been sworn in a special constable, committed suicide during the night in his cell, by fastening his neckerchief round his throat, and hanging over the air entrance above the door. The unfortunate suicide was twenty-one years of age, and had been married to his wife only three months before.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 15TH.—The number of deaths registered for the week, in the metropolitan and suburban districts, was 1240, of which 661 were males and 579 females. This number is less by 100 than that of the preceding week. The deaths registered in the same week were 1047 (557 males and 510 females). This number exceeds that of the preceding week by 30, and exceeds the average of deaths for the last five springs by 104. The births, however, it will be seen, exceed the deaths by 150

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the past week has been distinguished by frequent heavy rain, and since July by a cloudy sky. The following are some particulars of each day's weather, during the week just closed, as noted by Chad throughout the day: Monday, fine early in the morning, then cloudy and changeable, rain fell frequently during the day; the direction of the wind was S., and N.E., at different times: the average temperature for the day was 43°. Tuesday, the clouds were much broken in the morning, when the sun became powerful, and rain fell at night; the direction of the wind was S. at the former part of the day, and N.W. at the latter; the average temperature for the day was 39°. Monday, the sky was cloudy during the day and cloudless at night; rain fell frequently during the day; the direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature was 38°. Tuesday, the day was cloudy, and a steady rain was falling during the afternoon and evening; the direction of the wind was E., and the average temperature for the day was 46°. Wednesday, the sky was for the most part clear; during the day there were slight frosty clouds scattered about the sky; the direction of the wind was S.S.W., and the average temperature for the day was 49°; and that for the week ending this day was 46°.

The following are the extreme thermometrical readings for each day

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Thursday, | April 13, the highest during the day was 58°, and the lowest was | 44 | 0 |
| Friday, | [illegible] | [illegible] | [illegible] |
| Saturday, | [illegible] | [illegible] | [illegible] |
| Monday, | April 17, | 61 | 46 |
| Tuesday, | April 18, | 58½ | 40 |
| Wednesday, | April 19, | 58½ | 42 |

Blackheath, Thursday, April 20, 1848. J. G.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

According to accounts published in the Cologne papers relative to the battle at [illegible] Danes and the inhabitants of the two duchies, the Duchy of Schleswig, from the Eider to Kiel, was in the enemy's hands. The country was open to the Danes, even when they did not take possession. The loss of human life was not a great one, as we have stated, but it was sufficient, about 1400 killed on both sides. The noblest families of the country have lost their sons and brothers. The corps of students from Kiel, 180 young men, have been altogether cut up.

It appears that the students were completely sacrificed in consequence of the misguided military positions assigned to them. Upwards of 714 were taken prisoners by the Danes, and 121 of them have already arrived at Copenhagen, where they await their trial. The number of Prussian troops now at Rendsburg was 6700

A letter from Rendsburg, of 13th April, states "that the reply of the King of Denmark to the Prussian flag of truce sent by Colonel de Bonin to demand the evacuation of Schleswig, was that the Prussian troops might act as they pleased in Holstein, but that, if they set foot on the territory of Schleswig, [illegible] and declare war against Prussia. The auxiliary troops of Prussia, so on after entered Schleswig, the advanced posts of the Danes giving way before them.

The German Diet has unanimously adopted the following resolution, with the exception of some of the Danish delegates for Holstein and Lauenburg, on the subject of the Schleswig-Holstein affair:—

"The Germanic Confederation, in pursuance of its resolution of the 4th of April, deems it necessary to make the following declaration:—

SCHLESWIG AND THE CHATEAU GOTTORP.—GERMAN VOLUNTEERS ON THEIR MARCH FROM KIEL TO THE FRONTIER.

"1. That in case the cessation of hostilities on the part of the King of Denmark, and the evacuation of the Duchy of Holstein by the Danish troops who have entered it, should not have taken place, this point is to be effected by force, in order to secure the right of Holstein to a union with Schleswig, guaranteed by the Germanic Confederation.

"2. As it is the opinion of the Diet that the best guarantee for this union will be effected by the admission of Schleswig into the German Confederation, Prussia shall be requested to promote this admission by every possible means, in its office of mediator. And finally,

"3. The Germanic Confederation desires to state that it recognises the Provisional Government of Schleswig-Holstein, which is constituted with the reservation of the rights and in the name of the Duke to undertake a forced defence of the country, and expects from the Royal mediating Prussian Government that it will take the members of this Provisional Government and of its adherents under its protection."

On Thursday evening, the 13th inst., a skirmish took place near Eckenforde, in which the Danes were defeated, with a loss of 40 prisoners.

On the same day, the Danes moved forward with the greater part of the troops concentrated at their main head-quarters in Schleswig, to the number of 8,000 men, and took up a position near Dannevirke, about ten miles on the road to Rendsburg. Soon after one o'clock in the afternoon the King, escorted by two squadrons of dragoons and one of cuirassiers, and attended by a splendid staff, entered Schleswig from Flensburg, followed by the troops, rode through the town, and returned to Flensburg at five in the afternoon. Gen. Von Hedemann has the command-in-chief

The following morning the Danes continued to occupy the preceding day's position. The troops of Schleswig-Holstein are posted near Schestedt, the Prussians near Sorgbruck. The Altona Volunteer Cavalry formed the extreme advanced posts near Beckendorf.

His Majesty and the Council of Deputies at Flensburg have latterly reorganised the Provisional Government, and the burgomaster has had an interview with the King, and told him boldly, "I am a Schleswig-Holsteiner, and the worthier and larger portion of my citizens are of my sentiments: I can no longer serve the King of Denmark."

In Schleswig a corps of young men who offered to serve their country were betrayed into the hands of the Danes by two of the inhabitants, who had long been suspected to be spies, and some of them were captured.

The following are the statistics of the relative strength of the hostile powers:—

"The population of Denmark is subdivided into four classes:—

| | |
|---|---|
| 1. Denmark Proper .. .. .. .. | 1,223,807 |
| Of which the islands contain .. .. .. .. | 697,855 |
| Jutland .. .. .. .. .. .. | 525,952 |
| 2. The Duchies .. .. .. .. .. | 992,193 |
| 3. The Feroe Islands and Iceland .. .. | 58,000 |
| 4. Colonies .. .. .. .. .. | 76,000 |
| Total .. .. .. .. .. | 2,260,000 |

"The Danish army, in time of peace, consists of 39,000 men, of whom 3000 are cavalry, and 4000 artillerymen.

"The army of the German Confederation, in time of peace, consists of 435,487 men, but it can easily be augmented by calling out the reserves and conscripts; in which case the aggregate numerical force of the army would amount to 1,120,000 men, with 2,610 pieces of artillery, and 282,000 horses."

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

We are enabled, by aid of an artistical Correspondent, to append a pair of illustrations of scenes of the present struggle:—

SCHLESWIG AND THE CHATEAU GOTTORP.

Schleswig lies on the river Schlez. There are the Old and New Town, with 1300 houses and 9000 inhabitants, some very fine buildings, institutions, as well as two convents, and a very ancient Cathedral, with a fine altar-piece in carved oak by a Schleswig artist of the name of Brüggeman, who flourished in the sixteenth century. The town has several extensive manufactories of importance.

The Château Gottorp was formerly the residence of the Dukes of Schleswig and Holstein, but is now the seat of the Danish Government's President

The Dukedom of Schleswig measures 72 miles in length, and 39 in its greatest breadth, and consists of 13 towns, 11 hamlets, and 1000 villages, with 349,000 inhabitants.

THE FORTRESS OF RENDSBURG.

Rendsburg, situated on the river Eyder, where the Holstein Canal to Kiel commences, is a first-rate fortress, with about 5000 inhabitants. It has been several times besieged, but nevertaken. It is believed that Charlemagne, when he conquered Holstein, built Rendsburg, to prevent the invasion of the Danes.

At this moment it is the seat of the Provisional Government for the Duchies Prussian and Holstein troops are at present the garrison of the place. Wallmoden besieged Rendsburg in 1813, but without success

We quote the following statistical details of the Duchies, from a pamphlet which has just appeared, entitled "A Memoir on the Constitutional Rights of the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein;" presented to Viscount Palmerston, by Chevalier Bunsen, on the 8th of April, 1848; with a Postscript of the 18th of April. Published, with M. de Gruner's Essay on the Danish Question, and all the Official Documents, by Otto Von Wenckstern:—

"The southern Duchy, Holstein, with Altona and Glückstadt on the Elbe, and with Rendsburg and Kiel towards the eastern coast, near the frontiers of Schleswig, has about 500,000 exclusively German inhabitants, and was originally given, received, and handed down, as a fief of the German empire, as it is now an integral part of the German Confederation

"The Duchy of Schleswig, or the country of the Angles (the ancestors of the people of England, as to blood and name), situated between Jutland and Holstein, has about 700,000 inhabitants, amongst whom there are about 150,000 peasants of Danish origin, immigrated from the bordering districts of Jütland, almost all of whom live in the northern parts of Schleswig, and some along the middle ridge of the country down to Glücksborg. The rest are Germans; and the civilising element, in schools, and by the bible and worship, has always been, and is at present, German. This circumstance, and the common love of liberty, explain the phenomenon, that the Danish population of the Duchy has always united with the German in the assertion and support of the independence of the Duchy

"As to the small islands which belong to Schleswig, and form part of the Duchy, all those on the western coast are inhabited by Germans of the ancient tribe of the Frizes. In those on the eastern coast, the population of the two northern ones, Alsen and Aerröe, is almost exclusively Danish; whereas that of the southern, Femern, opposite Holstein, is entirely German.

"The two Duchies have been, from time immemorial, united together as parts of one and the same family, and they have kept up, during 600 years, their constitutional independence, amidst a change of princes and princely families, and against the ever-renewed attacks of the Danes, and the attempts of the dynasty to reduce those countries to a level with the kingdom of Denmark, which always had but a very limited constitutional liberty, and has been, since 1660, the only entirely absolute monarchy of Europe."

THE FORTRESS OF RENDSBURG, THE PRESENT SEAT OF THE PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT IN HOLSTEIN.—SKETCHED FROM THE CHATEAU OF THE COUNT REVENTLOW.

F I N E A R T S.

CHRIST CROWNED WITH THORNS.—DESIGNED AND ETCHED BY VANDYKE. [illegible] ION IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

Of this sublime picture—a fit illustration of our Passion Week Number—Mr. Carpenter gives some particulars in his admirable work entitled "Pictorial Notices, consisting of a memoir of Sir Anthony Vandyck," &c.

This composition consists of three figures, seen to the knees. Our Saviour is in front, his head turned towards the right shoulder; he has drapery over the loins. Behind him, on his right, is a soldier in a helmet and cuirass, whose left hand is covered with the robe he is in the act of placing on the shoulder of Christ; in his right he holds a staff. Stooping forward before Christ, stands one of the mockers, whose head, turned upwards, is seen in profile; he is offering a reed with his left hand, and his right is extended towards the bottom of the print.

After describing the etching, Mr. Carpenter gives an account of six different states. The first state is exceedingly rare, and worth, probably, from thirty to forty pounds. Only two impressions of it are known; one in the Duke of Devonshire's collection, and the second in that of Mr. Chambers Hall, formerly Mr. Sheepshanks.

Our Illustration is copied in fac simile from the finished state, of which there are three impressions in the British Museum.

We never contemplate this fine composition without being forcibly reminded of some eloquent passages in one of Dr. South's Sermons, wherein, speaking of the sorrows of Christianity, he says, "We have the affecting sadnesses of Christ's fasting, his bloody agony, his crucifixion, and the bitter scene of his whole passion, in its separate parts and appendages." The impassioned divine places these sorrows in vivid contrast with the glories, the triumphs, and the hosannas of Christianity. Then he shows us how, "in the whole narrative of our Saviour's life, no passage is related of him low or mean, but is immediately seconded, and, as it were, corrected by another high and marvellous." Thus, "when he underwent the last and violent infamy of crucifixion and death, then did the universal frame of nature give testimony to his divinity, the temple rending, the sun darkening, and the earth quaking; the whole creation seemed to sympathize with his passion. And when, afterwards, he seemed to be in the very kingdom and dominion of death by descending into the grave, he quickly confuted the dishonour of that by an astonishing resurrection; and by an argument ex abundantia proved the divinity of his person over and over, in a miraculous ascension!"

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.

It is pleasant to think that the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours, located in a gallery at the west-end of Pall-mall, should make quite a distinguished figure in this year's Exhibition, in spite of the desertion of five of its attractive members to the Old Society. The New Society relies altogether on the contributions of its members; it looks for no assistance from without, but trusts too confidently (it has since been found) on the steady adherence of all its members. Heavy secessions from year to year, in spite of fines levied to prevent them, so weakened the body of British Artists in Suffolk-street, that the Society, which formerly enumerated some of the best of the present Royal Academicians, has since sunk, with a few exceptions, into comparative obscurity. Had the Society remained true to itself, and the members true to the Society, the Exhibition in Suffolk-street would have formed at this day a formidable rival in real excellence to the much longer constituted Royal Academy. The case of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours is much the same. It has been and still is a formidable rival to its elder brother at the end of the street; but it is easy to see that it cannot stand (what body can?) a series, from year to year, of heavy secessions of members nursed within its walls, and to whom it looks properly enough for good and permanent support.

This year's Exhibition consists of 413 works of art contributed by fifty-two members, eight of whom are ladies. The President and Vice-President, Mr. Warren and Mr. Haghe, in several very clever works maintain rather than add to their already well-earned reputations. Mr. Webnert has made a step, and a long step, forward in the right direction. Mr Davidson and Mr. Vacher are two new contributors to the Society, destined to add materially to the success and value of future Exhibitions. Mr. D'Egville, in several clever views (one especially clever), shows how thoroughly he feels and sees, and can convey to paper, the beauties and peculiarities of often-painted Venice. Mr. Chase walks in the footsteps of Mr Haghe, and Mr. Hardwick in the footsteps of Mr. Nash, and both with excellencies of their own sufficient to redeem the servility of imitation. Miss Setchell, after a long illness, has returned with new health, we hope—certainly, with all her former vigour—to her favourite art, and in a single contribution of great merit confirmed the expectations that were [illegible] and from her picture of "The Momentous Question," well and widely known by an engraving which was made from it for one of the Provincial Art Unions. Miss Fanny Corbaux is as truthful and tasteful as ever; and Mrs. Margetts still continues to paint fruit and flowers worthy of Van Huysum, or the Jesuit Seghers, or even Mr. Lance himself.

In criticising the present Exhibition, we shall revert to the course we pursued in former years, of noticing the works in detail in the strict order of the Catalogue. The Duke of Wellington (an authority in such matters) pursued this course, we remember, when inspecting the recent exhibition at Westminster Hall; and all Lord Mahon's ingenuity was insufficient to induce him to look at even a work of extraordinary excellence out of the numerical order assigned it in the Catalogue. The Duke reviewed the exhibition as he would a regiment of soldiers on Hounslow Heath or Wormwood Scrubs.

11. "The Lily of the Valley." E. H. Corbould. This is a small full-length figure of a barefooted girl, with a pitcher of water at her feet, and a piece of Lily of the valley in her hand. The face is pretty, and the several accessories both appropriate and well painted. To our taste, and, as we observe, in the opinion of others, this is Mr. C[illegible]ould's best work in the present Exhibition.

41. "Venice." J. H. D'Egville. A charming Prout-like view, not of Venice but as Venice, carefully coloured, and executed with a nice feeling for breadth of effect.

54. "And ye shall walk in silk attire." Sarah Setchel. A picture of two figures—an elderly lady and a young maiden, in illustration of the well-known ballad which has found, as it deserves, a place in every collection of Scottish song since its first appearance in "Johnson's Scots' Musical Museum." The verses are pretty:—

"And ye shall walk in silk attire,
And siller hae to spare,
Gin ye'll consent to be his bride,
Nor think on Donald more.

"Oh! who would buy a silken gown
Wi' a puir broken heart?
And what's to me a siller crown,
If I from Donald part?"

The silken dresses exhibited by the elderly lady make no change in the heart or affections of the Scottish maiden her mind is made up to think of Donald still. The expressions are capital—the hands most carefully drawn and the peep-out by the doorway, and the table, &c., most palm-takingly executed. The two lights serve only to perplex the arrangement, without, as far as we could see, any particular advantage gained by such a course.

[illegible] "Capuchin Monks at Madira, in their Convent at Bruges." L. Haghe A capital picture, with all the effect and much of the warmth of a work in oil. Thirteen monks are assembled at a desk, and beneath a lamp, the light of which is thrown, by a large shade, on their shaven heads and long brown dresses. It seems hardly a fiction to fancy oneself actually present at such a meeting.

95. "The Return of the Pilgrims from Mecca." Henry Warren. The Pilgrims are supposed to have made their usual halt at a place called the Birket el Hadj, or Lake of the Pilgrims, a few miles from Cairo, where their friends come out to meet them. This is one of Mr. Warren's large pictures of Egyptian costume and [illegible] Egyptian scenery, for which he has long been deservedly famous. The effects of sky and atmosphere are quite deceptive. The whole is painted with great care, and the grouping is at once graceful and picturesque.

110. "The Rape of the Lock." Charles Wagall. The well-known incident from Pope, and nicely and carefully painted.

120. "A Country Village." Charles Davidson. A Lee-like landscape, with a large roadway tree occupying nearly the centre of the picture. It is quite an English scene, true to our country villages and our sylvan lanes. Cowper would have loved it for its close adherence to the beautiful in nature.

187 and 206. "Leah and Rachel." F. Corbaux. Two circular pictures, with, of course, a child in each. The execution is extremely careful and nothing is wanting but a diviner depth of countenance. Our great masters felt and produced a fine intensity of settled sorrow, or inward comfort; but the power of rendering either is no everyday gift

We shall continue our criticisms in our next week's Paper.

"THE SONNET." BY MULREADY

Our readers will not have forgotten a remarkable drawing executed in red and black chalk, which was exhibited some two or three years ago, at the Royal Academy, by Mr. Mulready, and which, represented a youth and girl sitting on a bank; a lover drawn with a power, like Michael Angelo's, who is watching the expression of his mistress, as sweet as though Correggio had invented her, while she is suppressing her emotion in reading a sonnet. This charming work has now been lithographed by the eldest son of Mr. John Linnell, one of the youths who distinguish themselves in reducing so faithfully the Prize Cartoons; and it is not too much to say of it, that the present work is one of the finest lithographs ever executed in England, regard being had to the masterly character of the original drawing. The production of this work originated with the Society of Arts, and they may be proud to have done so. It is intended for preservation to the subscribers to the fund for promoting the formation of a National Gallery of British Art by voluntary contributions (as well from an [illegible] of its pictures and sketches. The funds to be thus raised will be applied, first, in giving the Artist whose works are exhibited a commission for a picture; and, secondly, in the purchase of pictures already painted. These pictures will be presented, from time to time, to the National Gallery, and thus, together with the works of British Artists already the property of the nation, help to form a gallery which shall worthily represent British Art, and thus accomplish what has been urged in vain so long upon successive governments.

The Pictures of Mr. Mulready will form the first Annual Exhibition, to be opened in June, 1848. We are glad to learn that the Queen, and other possessors of Mulready's works, have promised to lend them for this occasion; and Her Majesty and Prince Albert have subscribed for the lithograph.

Among the Pictures to be exhibited are "The Wolf and the Lamb," and [illegible] picture, from her Majesty's collection; "The Barber's Shop," (Earl of Ducie); "The Careless Messenger," (Lord of Durham); "Idle Boys," and "Leading a Bite," (Earl Grey); two small early pictures, (Lord Colborne); "Boy firing a Cannon," (Sir Robert Peel); "Punch and Judy," (Sir J. Swinburne); "Painter's Studio," (Mrs. Bacon [illegible] tonian Controversy" [illegible] (T. Hope, [illegible] rupted." [illegible] Love," "Wedding Gown," [illegible] (the late W. Wells, Esq.) If we recollect rightly, Mr. Vernon has three pictures by Mr. Mulready, which, doubtless, he will be happy to lend the Society.

MUSIC.

GRAND CONCERT AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.

The performance of Rossini's "Stabat Mater," one of the master-pieces of the Swan of Pesaro, on Monday night, by the Royal Italian Opera forces, conducted by Costa, was distinguished by the utmost perfection. We never heard (not even from the most experienced singing societies in Germany) finer choral execution than was displayed in the "Eia Mater," the solo of which was splendidly declaimed by Tamburini, and in the fugued finale—the difficult points in the latter being taken up with extraordinary vigour and precision. Gris and Alboni received encores—the former for her energetic interpretation of the "Inflammatus," in which she sounded to C, her superb organ towering above band and chorus in the most imposing manner; and the latter for her pathetic rendering of "Fac me vere," which she gave with praiseworthy purity of style. The quartet, "Quando corpus," sung by Gris, Alboni, Mario, and Tamburini, was also demanded twice, being a perfect specimen of the most refined part singing. The tenor air, "Cujus animam," so exquisitely sung by Mario, and the duetto, "Quis est homo," given in such finished style by Corbari and Alboni, were greatly applauded. Fiorini and Lavia assisted in the concerted pieces, thus adding to the completeness of the ensemble.

After the "Stabat," the National Anthem was called for and sung with the greatest enthusiasm, Grisi and Alboni taking the solo. As the house was crowded in every part, the effect of the audience upstanding was very grand. The Marquis of Lansdowne was remarked as most fervent in the cheering. The miscellaneous gleanings forming the second part of the concert were, with the exception of the début of M. Emile Prudent, developed no novelties. Herold's "Zampa" overture, played with marvellous skill and rapturously encored; Charubini's "Deux Journées" overture, and Beethoven's celebrated Dervish Chorus from "The Ruins of Athens," were the most attractive items: but there were operatic pieces by Mozart, Ricci, Donizetti, and Rossini, sung by Grisi, Persiani, Alboni, Castellan, Signori Mariti, Revere, Ronconi, and Tamburini, which afforded more or less delight to the auditory.

M. Emile Prudent has a great continental reputation; and as a conqueror of digital difficulties and dexterities, he is of the first class of executants; but the key-splitting school is beginning to be at a discount, and it behoves pianists to present new unexceptionable composition, as well as to exhibit marvellous mechanism. His "Sonnambula" fantasia, based on the "Ah! non giunge" of the Sonata dedicated to Kreutzer; and his "Sonnambula" Fantasia, with the Seguidilla (a Spanish dance), were brilliantly executed, and deservedly applauded; but these two pieces are not calculated to be the criteria of his general merit.

It is to be hoped that at the next concert, with such instrumental resources, some of the Symphonies of the great masters will be introduced in the programme.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

It has long been a standing complaint, that so little encouragement was given to pupils, past and present, in this academy, by producing their original compositions, according to one of the principles laid down in the statutes of the institution. It is to be hoped that the example supplied by the scheme of last Saturday's second concert will be steadily continued, and that in future no programme of a Royal Academy Concert will appear without some works in composition by pupils, to indicate the real value of the instructions they are receiving. It is a shame that we are put forward the concerts with pieces hackneyed by Italian singers, thus subjecting novices to most disagreeable and invidious comparisons. There was quite sufficient merit in the symphony by Mr. Thomas, the overture by Mr. Baly, and the second movement of Mr. C. A. Maddone, to justify their selection for performance. The motett by the young lady just named, written for four solo voices, with chorus and full orchestral arrangement, was particularly striking, for the beauty of the ideas and the classical excellence of the form. A song, "My soul is dark," composed by Mr. Whitehead Smith, sung by Miss A. Lincoln, if not remarkably original, was simple and expressive.

The selection of a Mass, written by the Earl of Westmoreland (our Minister at Berlin), and performed in the Prussian capital some two years since, proved that the praise of the German critics had been justly bestowed. Many persons displayed considerable power; such as the "Hosanna in Excelsis," in B flat, the "Kyrie Eleison," in F minor, the "Cum Sancto," in C. The "Benedictus," in F, seemed to make the greatest impression on the auditory, for when this production had peculiar interest, as the noble and accomplished amateur was the founder of the Royal Academy of Music. We regard the quartet, the "Laudamus te," in F, as the gem of the fine work.

The instrumental solos were executed by Miss Wolf and Mr. Old on the piano, and Mr. Layland on the harp; and there were songs given by Miss Rainsford and Miss Holroyd, alike creditable to all engaged. Mr. Lucas was the conductor, and M. Sainton the leader of the band.

UPPER SINGING SCHOOLS.—On Monday night Handel's oratorio of "Jephtha" was performed at Exeter Hall, under the direction of Mr. Hullah, in very creditable style. The orchestra was led by Mr. Loder, and conducted by professional aid. The principal singers were the Misses Williams, Miss Duval, Miss Sewell, Mr. Shus Reeves, and Mr. Phillips. Mr. Reeves made a very favourable impression in the music that Braham can be said to have made his own, such as the "Deeper and deeper still." The airs "Farewell ye limpid Springs," and "Te sacred Priests," were happily sung by Miss A. Williams; she was encored in the "Smiling Dawn," as was Mr. Reeves in "Waft her, angels, through the air." Mr. Phillips sang extremely well—sacred music having been always so well adapted to his voice and style. Mr. Wily led the band with energy and tact.

SACRED CONCERTS.—Exeter Hall was crowded on Monday night for the third Concert, directed by Miss Mounsey so judiciously. There was an excellent selection from Dr Boyce, Mandelssohn, Handel, Arne, Dr. Chard, Spohr, Rathbel, Neukomm, Beethoven, J. S. Bach, Weyse, Kummer, Eisenhofer, Von Bonn, &c. The vocalists were Miss Rainforth, Miss Poole, Messrs Francis and Kench. In the programmes of these concerts, there are generally skilful gleanings from the latest modern works, as well as from those of the ancient masters.

WESTERN MADRIGAL SOCIETY.—The ninth anniversary festival has been celebrated at the Freemasons' Tavern, with a selection from the works of Palestrina, Gibbons, Wilbye, Ward, Bennett, Morley, Bond, Cavendish, Horsley, Ferrabi, and Sir Henry Bishop, sung by a choir of 16 contra, 14 altos, 24 tenors, and 20 basses. There were many gems in this selection, but it lacked variety in style—a very requisite point to be observed in a Madrigalian evening. Mr. Turle conducted, and the aid of the Westminster Abbey boys, with several professors, sustained the anthems in their sessions exertions. J. Evans, Esq., the President of the Society, was the chairman, fulfilling the duties with tact. The National Anthem called forth an expression of loyalty unusually prolonged and fervent. Mr. Oliphant, in a happy address, alluded to the political agitation of the day, quoting the words of Wesley, Coleridge, Hare, Sterne, Quintilian, Terrella, and Sir Isaac Newton, all of which were appropriate and beautiful. The metaphors very ingeniously. The only drawback on a social and harmonious meeting, which was honoured with the presence of ladies in the gallery, was the absence from indisposition of Mr. G. Hudd, the hon. Librarian and Secretary, whose indefatigable exertions were duly acknowledged.

THE BEETHOVEN QUARTET SOCIETY.—The programme of the third meeting on Monday night, opened with No. 2, op. 18, in C minor, dedicated to Prince Lichnowsky, and composed in 1791. This was led by Molique. Salmon in No. 1, op. 74, in E flat major, and Molique led No. 12, op. 132, in A minor, composed in 1825. Hill was the tenor, and Konsecke the violoncello. The performance was admirable throughout, the quiet refined style of Molique being contrasted with the fire of Saunton. The execution of the adagio in the last quartet was one of the most perfect specimens of quartet playing we have ever heard.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS.—In addition to the concerts recorded above, there have been musical entertainments every evening this week (Friday excepted) at the Strand Theatre, by the Female Ethiopian Serenaders; on Wednesday and Thursday nights at Sedlier's Wells, by Mr. H. Russell; on Monday at the National Hall, by Mr. S. Cowell; on Monday and Thursday evenings at the Surrey Theatre, by Mr. H. Smith; and on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday at the Olympic Theatre, by the Singers of the Pyrenees and Distin Family. In the [illegible] of a London musical week we must add the Cater Cub, which meets to-night (Saturday), and the performance of Handel's "Messiah," last Wednesday evening, at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society. Next Monday will be Dando's 6th and final quartet meeting at Crosby Hall, and the first concert of the Whittington Club. On Wednesday the London Sacred Harmonic Society will perform, at Exeter Hall, Handel's "Judas Maccabæus," for the benefit of the workmen driven out of France by Republican tyranny. On the same evening there will be Mr. Lucas's fourth quartet meeting, and the Melodists, to which Molique, Benedict, Richardson, Sims Reeves, and Marras have been invited. Italian opera will be performed on the Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings, at her Majesty's and Royal Italian Theatres.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

We have a pleasing task before us this week—that of recording the triumphant début of the new contralto, Mdlle. Schwartz, and the successful appearance of Mdlle. Cruvelli in a new and arduous part, that of Lucrezia Borgia. A, however, so much curiosity has been evinced regarding the former, and so much anxiety as to whether she would realise the high expectations entertained, it is that of her first we will first speak.

Mdlle Schwartz is a singer of no ordinary merit; she possesses a fine voice, of the true contralto quality and great compass, embracing two octaves and a half, from the D below to the A above; her style is pure, full, and powerful, whilst the upper tones, although somewhat obscured on Saturday night by nervousness and fatigue, are pure and good, as she clearly evinced at the Concerto on Monday and Wednesday, when, having nearly recovered from the nervous incidental to a first appearance, she delighted her audience by her admirable rendering of Handel's "Ah! che assorta," and other morceaux. Her execution is finished, and her musical taste and feeling perfect. Her singing of "Il segreto," in "Lucrezia Borgia," was spontaneously encored, and loudly called for a third time—a demand which she, however, declined, as she had still an ther verse to sing. As regards Mdlle Schwartz's acting, a judgment cannot be passed on it in so trifling a part as that of Orsino, but, however, she played with spirit. The impression left on the minds of most persons who heard her on Saturday was a strong desire to see her in a part where her powers both of singing and acting would have fuller scope—an opportunity for which we shall, doubtless, not have long to wait. Mdlle Schwartz is a most valuable addition to the troupe of Her Majesty's. Good contraltos are rare everywhere, and valuable in proportion to their rarity; and now we will delay no longer paying our tribute of admiration to Mdlle. Cruvelli, whose impersonation of Lucrezia Borgia has raised her still higher in public estimation than she was before. Her singing of the whole opera was admirable, especially in the last fine air, "M'odi, ah! m'odi," which she rendered with surprising passion and energy, and which elicited an immediate encore. Indeed, throughout the whole of the last act her singing and acting were truly splendid, and surprised even her most partial admirers. It would be only be just to Mdlle. Cruvelli to say that she altogether looked the character, for youth and ingenuousness are not the qualifications for a Lucrezia Borgia, and were we inclined to be critical, we could point out errors in the costume of the second act as almost too hurried and impetuous to be entirely consistent with the onward calmness and complete self possession which essentially mark the disposition of the poisoner; but these are but trifles, easily remedied, and which in no way impair the excellence of the impersonation as a whole. She was admirably seconded by Gardoni, who rendered the charming air "Di pescatore" in his wonted excellence of style, and with an entirely new reading, by which it became more dramatic and expressive of the feeling of the moment, and whose acting, in the last scene especially, was remarkable for its pathos and tenderness. Indeed, we have never witnessed the dying scene rendered to greater perfection than by these two artists. As to Lablache, his performance of the part of the Duke is too well known to need any comment; when we say that he sang and looked it as well as ever, more need not be added. As a whole, "Lucrezia Borgia" went off admirably: the ensemble of chorus and orchestra was perfect; and we should pronounce it to be as yet decidedly the most successful production of the season.

Two grand vocal and instrumental concerts were given at this establishment on Monday and Wednesday. We have already noticed Mdlle. Schwartz's successful performance on these occasions, and Mdlle. Cruvelli and Mdlle. Vandenheuvel Gardoni, and that superb trio of basses, Lablache, Coletti, and Belletti, were among the vocal attractions of the greatest of pianoforte players, Thalberg, was among the instrumental performers. Such being the artistic programme, it is unnecessary to say that the whole affair went off with great brilliancy.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA

Bellini's "Puritani," with its ever fresh and gushing melodies, was presented on Saturday night, to introduce Marini on the first time this season, in his favourite part of Giorgio. Mariani has a splendid bass voice, and is a thorough master in his style of singing. The famed trumpet duo between him and Tamburini who resumed his popular part of Riccardo—created a great sensation, and was encored. The other parts were filled as before, and as a whole, "Lucrezia Borgia" went off admirably: the ensemble of chorus and orchestra was perfect; and we should pronounce it to be as yet decidedly the most successful production of the season.

Two grand vocal and instrumental concerts were given at this establishment on Monday and Wednesday. We have already noticed Mdlle. Schwartz's successful performance on these occasions, and Mdlle. Cruvelli and Mdlle. Vandenheuvel Gardoni, and that superb trio of basses, Lablache, Coletti, and Belletti, were among the vocal attractions of the greatest of pianoforte players, Thalberg, was among the instrumental performers. Such being the artistic programme, it is unnecessary to say that the whole affair went off with great brilliancy.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA

Bellini's "Puritani," with its ever fresh and gushing melodies, was presented on Saturday night, to introduce Mariani on the first time this season, in his favourite part of Giorgio. Mariani has a splendid bass voice, and is a thorough master in his style of singing. The famed trumpet duo between him and Tamburini who resumed his popular part of Riccardo—created a great sensation, and was encored. The other parts were filled as before, and as a whole, "Lucrezia Borgia" went off admirably: the ensemble of chorus and orchestra was perfect; and we should pronounce it to be as yet decidedly the most successful production of the season.

During the present week the theatres have been closed for regular dramatic performances, although behind the curtain, every department has been in full activity, in preparation for the various musical and miscellaneous entertainments have been given at most of the houses.

Why operas may be given piecemeal, and young ladies may blacken their faces and ride astride on pony bangles as Female Ethiopians, and Christy Minstrels, seeming to provoke the two Italian singers to extraordinary exertion, while was the Sirens, looking as blooming as in her earliest days of warbling the "Palace of Mario was the only performance during the week in a dramatic interest that commanded several encores. The entire performance afforded the highest gratification to a crowded house. The season before Easter has thus terminated

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

STATE OF IRELAND.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH followed up a motion for a return of the number of arms registered in Ireland between the 14th of March and the 14th of the present month, by referring to an article in the United Irishman calling upon the people to arm, with the view, when the system of organisation was complete, of plunging them in the heart's blood of their enemies. If no preparation was to be made for defence while the enemy was preparing for an attack, those who wished now to aid the Government in maintaining peace and order would be disheartened, and would begin to consider, and perhaps entertain, the question of compromise, on a subject with respect to which no compromise could take place—viz. the Repeal of the Union. He was unwilling to press the subject too prominently forward; he only wished to know distinctly what were the intentions of the Government; and he would therefore conclude by putting the question of which he had given notice, namely, whether it was the intention of the Government to extend the provisions of the Crime and Outrage (Ireland) Act to the city and county of Dublin, or to bring in a measure to amend that act?

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE intimated that there could be no objection to the production of the return moved for by the noble Earl, inasmuch as its object was to procure the latest information in reference to a very important subject. With reference to the question which the noble Earl contended, he must say he thought the Lord-Lieutenant was the best judge both of the time, the place, and the mode in which the power of the Government should be put in action, and he did not think that House was the place—if any part of Ireland was to be brought suddenly under the operation of the act—in which it was consistent that such a proclamation should be announced; he thought it should come at once and direct from the Lord-Lieutenant. After referring to various exaggerated statements in reference to the condition of Ireland and the arming of the disaffected, the noble Marquis said that, while he should be sorry to prefer the Lord-Lieutenant before all persons making application to him indiscriminately, yet that noble Lord had accepted the services of a large and efficient body of persons composed of both Protestants and Catholics, and arms had been sent over to be placed in their hands. The noble Earl had alluded to a compromise, of which certain rumours had been spread abroad, and upon which compromise was mentioned he was bound to take the first opportunity of stating that there was none. It was the determination of her Majesty's Ministers to resist all attempts to subvert the well-government of the country, and with the interests of which government the preservation of the Union was inseparable.

Lord BROUGHAM was of opinion that the repeal of the Union was only sought for by a very small body, who drove a pecuniary trade by advocating that measure.

SCOTCH PEERAGE.—The claim of a person assuming the title of Lord Colvill, of Ochiltree, to vote for representative peers for Scotland, was ordered to be referred to the Committee of Privileges, before which the claimant is to attend, and endeavour to make out his title.

The Removal of Aliens Bill, after a short discussion, passed through committee, as did also the Lunacy of Minors (Ireland) Bill.

ELECTION RECOGNIZANCES BILL.—Lord MONTEAGLE proposed the second reading of the Election Recognizances Bill, which was supported by Lord Colchester, Lord Stanley, and Lord Devon; Lord Brougham moving an amendment, with which he concurred in by Lords Campbell, Denman, and the Lord Chancellor, that the bill be read a second time that day six months. On a division, the second reading was carried by a majority of 10; the numbers being 19 to 9.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

DERBY ELECTION.—On the question of issuing new writs for Derby, in the room of Mr. Strutt and Mr. F. Gower, unseated on the ground of bribery, Mr. HUME moved that the writs be suspended until a full inquiry had been made into the whole subject. After some discussion, in which Lord J. RUSSELL and Sir R. PEEL took part, in favour of the amendment, the House divided, when the motion for issuing the writs was negatived by a majority of 106, the numbers being 43 to 149.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN. Lord PALMERSTON, in answer to Mr. J. Wilson, stated that an offer of amicable mediation on the part of England in the affairs of Denmark had been made, and with some hopes of its being accepted.

PROCESSION OF PAUPERS. Sir G GREY, in reply to Sir J. Buller, stated that, with respect to a threatened procession of paupers on Easter Monday, to present a petition and address to her Majesty through the Home Office, to be headed by Mr. C. Cochrane, he had intimated to that person that it would not be convenient for him to receive any deputation or address during the Easter week, since which he had received no further information from Mr. Cochrane of its being his intention to resort to such a proceeding; he therefore thought that individual might be safely left to the good sense of the community.—The Irish papers had been sent over to Dublin, special constables, Welsh education, charitable funds, and the Quadrant in Regent-street, next occupied the attention of the house; after which Lord J. RUSSELL, in reference to the question of adjournment for the holidays, stated that on Wednesday he should move that the House adjourn until Saturday next, and on Saturday he should move a further adjournment until Monday the 1st of May.

CROWN AND GOVERNMENT SECURITY.

On the question of the reception of the report of the Crown and Government Security Bill,

Mr. GOULBURN moved a clause, rendering misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment, with the view to leaving out the words "by open and advised speaking," which was negatived by a majority of 171 to 49.

A clause proposed by Sir W. CLAY, also in reference to the omission of the objectionable words, and the substitution of a proviso, enacting that when a second offence was charged, the offending party should not be admitted to bail, was negatived by 83 to 39, majority 44.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL submitted a proviso that informations must be sworn within six days after the commission of the offence, and the magistrate's warrant issued within ten days from that period, which, after a debate, was carried by 142 to 30—majority 112

Mr. BRIGHT moved an amendment that the powers of the act should not be invoked, except at the instance of the law officers of the Crown, which was rejected by a majority of 121, the numbers 49 to 170

Captain HARRIS moved, but subsequently withdrew, a clause proposing to empower the Government to disarm the people of Ireland of pikes and similar hostile weapons. The report was then received, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time on Tuesday, the debate to be taken on that question at twelve o'clock

COPPER AND LEAD ORE DUTIES

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved that the House go into Committee on the copper and lead ore duties.

Sir C. LEMON moving, as an amendment, that a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the effect of the existing duties on the importation and production of copper ore, the House divided.—For the original motion, 109; against it, 30: majority, 79.

The House then went into Committee, and the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER propounded resolutions for the reduction of the duties

Mr. GLADSTONE said, he should not interpose his amendment for the total repeal of the duties until the House went into Committee on the bill; in the meantime he wished to be informed whether the Government would be prepared to take a similar course to that now proposed with reference to tin.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, not having received any representations on the subject of tin, did not see any immediate necessity for such a reduction

Lord G. BENTINCK moved that the Chairman report progress, when on Captain BOLDERO, ayes 18, noes 71. The resolutions were then agreed to, and the House resumed.

On the motion of Sir W. SOMERVILLE, the Select Committee on the Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Bill was nominated, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

IRELAND.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE stated, in answer to a question from Lord BEAUMONT, that many persons who had been found at Dublin engaged in firing at targets, for the purpose of military training, had been arrested

The Election Recognizances Bill thus passed through committee, after a warm altercation between Lord MONTEAGLE and Lord BROUGHAM.

The Alien Bill was read a third time and passed.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

The House met at NOON.

After Sir G. GREY, in answer to a question from Mr. G. A. HAMILTON, had read to the House the correspondence which had passed between the leaders of a loyal association at Dublin and the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, relative to the expediency of assembling in arms, the order of the day was moved for the third reading of

THE CROWN AND GOVERNMENT SECURITY BILL

Mr. HUME repeated his objections to the measure, and moved that it be read a third time that day six months.

Sir De L. EVANS objected to certain portions of the bill, but could not concur in an indiscriminate censure of it

Mr. O'CONNOR contended that this bill took away the right of bail and traverse, and was therefore a violation of the constitution and the Bill of Rights. He vindicated his own poetical conduct at some length, and denied that he had ever recommended an appeal to physical force or to the assistance of a foreign country. He joined Mr. Hume in opposing this bill, which would deter men from speaking lest they should violate its provisions.

Mr. HEADLAM and Mr. SEYMER declared their intention of voting for the third reading of the bill.

Mr. P. WOOD could not let the bill be read a third time without entering his final protest against that which he conceived to be a direct violation of those principles of settled law which had now existed in this country for five hundred years.

Mr. ADDERLEY made a speech in favour of the bill, in which he passed some severe strictures on the triumvirate of sedition-mongers in Ireland who had applied for French intervention to carry the Repeal of the Union.

Mr. MITCHELL would not lend his countenance to a foolish agitation, which, if put down, would destroy the trade and commerce of the nation, and therefore gave his cordial assent to this measure

Mr. HORSMAN accepted the bill in the shape in which the House had determined to grant it. He warned the Government that it must enter upon a new system for Ireland, and must seek to conciliate and not to conquer it

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL entered into an able argument to controvert the historical and legal propositions laid down by Mr. P. Wood in his speech against this bill.

Sir R. PEEL said, he could not allow the bill to pass without distinctly avowing his approval of its provisions. He thought it right that men who had not the dignity of traitors should be reduced to the position of felons. He would keep those frogs that were croaking sedition in the marshes, and would not allow them to puff themselves into the dimensions of the nobler animals that believed treason. He warned Mr. O'Connor that those who drew 100,000 persons together could not foresee what might be the consequences. After shewing that the gentleman's declarations of loyalty were not very satisfactory, he said, that what he (Sir Robert) had read and witnessed in the last ten days, he saw proof that there was good reason for strengthening for a time the hands of her Majesty's Government. He referred to the magnificent demonstration of loyalty recently made in the metropolis, and exhorted the Government and the Legislature to encourage those whose exertions had been so admirable, in the good course on which they had entered, by shewing their united determination to uphold the institutions of the country in all their leading principles, and on their ancient foundations. (Hear.) He then referred to the condition of France, and declared it to be his firm belief that the security of every existing Government depended on a rigid abstinence from any interference in the transactions of that country. He hoped that the working classes of Great Britain would not be deluded by the meeting held in Trafalgar-square about the wages of labour. If it were true that men, without reference to their different capabilities, strength, and capacities, ought all to receive the same daily wages, all the experience and all the lights of the last 150 years had existed in vain.

Mr. BRIGHT and Mr. MUNTZ still retained in full force their objections to this measure

Lord J. RUSSELL briefly adverted to the different objections urged by different members against this bill, which, he believed, would tend much to the security of the peace of the empire. He then referred to the exciting and inflammatory language used in Dublin and other parts of Ireland, observing that it might lead in some parts of the country to outrage and insurrection; but that outrage and that insurrection would be put down, because the Government had the means of so doing at its disposal in the loyalty and affection of the people, and in the force of the army, whose fidelity had been most fully and systematically tested in various ways, both in and out of Ireland. He then proceeded to state that immediately after Easter the House would proceed to the discussion of measures which related to the political state of the Irish population. Referring to Mr. J. O'Connell's motion for the Repeal of the Union, he observed that all ring to Mr. J. O'Connell's motion for the Repeal of the Union, he observed that all the grievances of which Mr. Grattan complained in the Irish Parliament, and which remained unredressed by that Parliament, had been redressed by a Parliament of the United Kingdom. He declared his readiness to listen to any proposition supported by the great majority of Irish members, having for its object the improvement of the laws and condition of that country; but, by discussion (if the question should be for argument), and by force (if reason were had to arms), he was determined, as long as there was breath and life in him, to oppose the repeal of the legislative union. The noble Lord resumed his seat amid loud cheers

The House divided, when the numbers were—

| | |
|---|---|
| For the third reading | 261 |
| Against it | 40 |
| Majority | 221 |

The bill was then read a third time and passed

The evening sitting was almost exclusively occupied in a discussion respecting the issuing of a new writ for the borough of Horsham. Mr. STAFFORD moved the issue of the writ, but being opposed by Lord J. RUSSELL, Lord LINCOLN, and many other gentlemen on all sides of the House, he ultimately consented to withdraw his motion.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—WEDNESDAY.

CROWN AND GOVERNMENT SECURITY.

The Lord CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of the Crown and Government Security Bill.

Lord STANLEY said he would throw no obstacle in the way of the passing of the bill, though he felt strongly that Ministers should have given their Lordships an opportunity of considering properly the measure before them. He agreed that the wide gap between sedition and treason should be filled up, and that persons guilty of the offences referred to in the bill should be treated as common felons, and subjected to the same degrading punishment.

After some discussion on the bearing of the Act of Edward III. of treason from Lord BROUGHAM and Lord CAMPBELL,

The Duke of WELLINGTON expressed a wish that more time had been given for rendering the bill effectual in putting a stop to those monster meetings by which this country and Ireland had been so frequently disturbed in past years He hoped, however, their Lordships would assent to the bill with as little delay as possible, to put a check on those dangerous meetings to the public tranquility

Lord DENMAN supported the bill, as did also Earl ST. GERMANS

The bill was then read a second time.

The Election Recognizances Bill was read a third time and passed.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY

The House sat from noon to six o'clock

The ALIEN BILL.—In reply to a question from Mr. EWART,

Lord J. RUSSELL said that the introduction of the Alien Bill was the result of a decision which the Government had received from various quarters. He was aware that it was opposed to the general policy of the country, and that in ordinary times no such law ought to exist. Circumstances, however, which he could not state, rendered it necessary at the present time, but the bill would be only of temporary duration.

PUBLIC BUSINESS.—In moving the adjournment of the House at its rising until Saturday, and from thence to the 1st of May, Lord J. RUSSELL stated the course of public business proposed to be taken by the Government after the recess On Monday, May 1st, the House would be moved into Committee for two purposes—one being for certain West India loans, for the purpose of immigration, the other to enable Government to advance again any repayments of money out of the Consolidated Fund last year and this year. Tuesday, the same day he would move the second reading of the Alien Bill. On Thursday, the 4th of May, he would move the third reading of the Jews' Bill. On Friday, the 5th of May, he would move the committee on the Alien Bill, and if there should be time to proceed with other business, he would on the same day take the committee on the Health of Towns Bill. If not, he would propose to take it on Monday, the 8th. On Monday, the 10th, the Speaker of the House would bring up the report for consideration of the House a measure for the amendment of the Navigation Laws, and his right hon friend would also state the course proposed to be taken with respect to the registry of seamen and ships, and also with regard to the Merchant Seamen's Fund, so as to give the House a complete view of the intentions of Government upon those important subjects. On Monday, the 15th, or on Tuesday, the 2nd of May, his right hon friend the Secretary for Ireland would introduce a bill with regard to the Elective Franchise and Polling-places in Ireland.

In reply to a question from Mr BRIGHT, Lord J. RUSSELL said he had no measure to introduce on the subject of the Established Church of Ireland.

DENMARK.—Mr. DISRAELI drew attention to the present position of affairs between Denmark and Prussia, arising out of the Schleswig-Holstein question; and gave a sketch of the guarantee given by England, by the treaties of 1715 and 1720, that the Duchy of Schleswig should be secure to the King of Denmark, and that England would defend it against all who should seek to disturb Denmark in the peaceable possession of it. He hoped it would not go forth to Europe that England no longer respected her guarantees, and if so, that Government would insist that the British Government to make such a representation to Prussia as would be beneficial, by shewing that the British House of Commons was not indifferent to the invasion of our old ally, Denmark.—Lord PALMERSTON declined to enter at length into the question in dispute between Denmark and the German Confederation. That question was simply this, that the German Confederation insisted that Schleswig should form a portion of Holstein, whereas Denmark insisted that it should follow the fortunes of Denmark. The English Government had signified to both parties its readiness to endeavour to bring matters to an amicable settlement, and it would be premature to state what he should consider our opinion upon the case.—After a few words from Mr. UNGUBART, the matter dropped.

The Game Certificate for Killing Hares Bill was passed through committee.

The House adjourned until Saturday.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The Crown and Government Security Bill went through committee, and was afterwards read a third time and passed.

Their Lordships shortly afterwards adjourned till Saturday (this day), when the two Houses meet by command, for Royal assent given to this and other bills. After which their Lordships will adjourn till Thursday, the 4th of May.

A FORM OF PRAYER TO ALMIGHTY GOD, FOR THE MAINTENANCE OF PEACE AND TRANQUILLITY.

(To be read in all Churches on Good Friday, and the three following Sundays.)

O God, whose never-failing Providence ordereth all things both in heaven and earth: we thine unworthy servants most humbly beseech Thee to confirm Thy faithful promises which Thou hast mercifully made to us and to our forefathers; and graciously to hear the prayers which we now offer before Thee, that we, who for our manifold sins and wickedness do worthily deserve to be severely punished by Thee for the same, may be mercifully dealt with by Thee in this our necessity, according to the multitude of Thy mercies, for the honour of Jesus Christ our Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

John Hardy, Esq., late Member for Bradford, has presented to the Rev. Dr. Burnet, vicar of that parish, the sum of £5000, for the purposes of church building and endowment

A Lyons journal announces that the Central Club of Women, in that city, have decided to present an address to the Provisional Government, demanding the right of voting for females.

The Achaill and Fantome, ships-of-war, are ordered to be paid off at Portsmouth.

Lord Patrick James Stewart, M.P., is appointed to succeed his late brother, the Marquis of Bute, as Lord-Lieutenant of the county of Bute

There are at present upwards of one thousand seven hundred artillery recruits in the garrison of Woolwich.

A cup, supposed to be Parian, made of granite, and fluted on the outside, has recently been discovered at Ickleigh, Calthness. In that neighbourhood there are a number of Pictish remains to be seen.

Mr. C. R. M. Talbot, M.P. for Glamorgan, will be Lord-Lieutenant of that county, in the place of the Marquis of Bute, deceased

The Bishop of Salisbury will hold the triennial visitation of his diocese in the month of May.

The installation of Dr. Hampden, Bishop of Hereford, is fixed to take place in the Cathedral Church of his diocese, on Wednesday, the 26th inst.

Mr. Houston is appointed Registrar of the Supreme Court at Berbice, British Guiana, and Mr. W. Napier is to be Clerk of the Works and Civil Engineer at Hong Kong.

The 24 battalions of the National Garde Mobile of Paris have just received percussion muskets. This force amounts to from 16,000 to 18,000 men, giving about 600 for each battalion

The Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, Vice-Admiral Sir Edward Durnford King, K.C.H., will retain his command until the next month, although his three years' term of service, expired on Tuesday last.

An Orange meeting was held, at a warmined held in Cordwainers' Hall, for the purpose of electing an Alderman for Bread-street Ward, in the room of William Hughes Hughes, Esq., resigned in consequence of his long residence abroad through illness, Mr. William Lawrence, builder, was elected unanimously.

Vice-Admiral Dacres, now the Commander-in-Chief at the Cape of Good Hope, will not be superseded by a successor until he has fully served his term of three years.

A decree of the Provisional Government of France, authorises the Minister of Marine to take possession of the Transatlantic packets, due regard being paid to the rights of the interested parties

A military order has just been issued reducing the height at which young men will be enlisted for the artillery service from five feet nine inches to five feet seven inches, their age being between eighteen and twenty-two years.

A deputation from the Royal Asylum of the St. Ann's Society had an interview with his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury last week at the palace, when his Grace was pleased at once to accept the office of President, and to express the liveliest interest in the peculiar objects of the charity

The final arrangements are now completed for the approaching season at Almack's. The first ball of the series of six is to commence on the 4th proximo, and will be continued every alternate Thursday, instead of Wednesday, up to the 13th of July. There are now ten ladies patronesses; and it is made one of the rules that the ladies patronesses do attend when in town

An address from the inhabitants of Newport was presented to Prince Albert at Osborne (Isle of Wight), on Saturday, by the Mayor of Newport and a deputation, for presentation to her Majesty.

A patriotic offer is about to be made by the militia and other inhabitants of Jersey to the Government, to dispense with the presence there of any portion of the army, now so much required in England and Ireland; themselves undertake the guard of the various military stations of the island.

The Paris Union asserts that the King of Prussia has consented to abandon his rights in Neufchâtel

The Right Hon. H. Labouchere took his seat on Friday (last week) at the Board of the Commissioners of Railways, at their office in the Board of Trade

The Minister of the Interior (France) has just decided that the internal walls of the Pantheon are to be covered with paintings by M. Paul Chenavard and such assistants as he may think fit to associate with himself in the task.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, attended by Major Stephens and Mr. Edmond Mildmay, visited Christ's Hospital on Sunday afternoon.

On Sunday (to-morrow) the Bishop of Oxford will preach the sermon in the Chapel Royal, St. James's

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has received £15 from "a person who wishes to repair an inadvertent omission." The sum will be paid into the Exchequer.

Advices from St. Petersburg of the 28th ult., announce that, by an Imperial ukase, no Russian subject shall be allowed passports for foreign countries this restriction extends to merchants also.

Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston entertained at dinner on Saturday evening, at their residence in Carlton Gardens, several members of the Government.

The mortal remains of the Princess de Condé have been removed from the chapel of the Convent of the Benedictines (the Temple), Paris, where they were deposited on the suppression of the Revolution, and the crypt re-established, and transferred provisionally to the community of the Dames Bénédictines, in the Rue Neuve Sainte Geneviève

His Excellency the Prussian Minister gave a grand entertainment on Thursday evening, at the residence of the Legation, Carlton House-terrace, to Lord John Russell and a distinguished party. The Premier was expressly invited to meet his Royal Highness the Prince of Prussia

On Sunday last, being the first Sunday in Easter Term, the Judges and the Corporation of the city of London attended in state Divine service at St. Paul's Cathedral.

The Bishop of Chester (Dr. Graham) has appointed Mr. C. T. Parry, of Chester, to be his Lordship's secretary.

The post of Consul-General of France at Bagdad, which was filled by M. de Lesr. Wainsen, has been suppressed by the Provisional Government.

It is said that the Provisional Government of France is engaged in organising "ateliers fraternels" in the twenty detached forts which surround Paris Each fort can lodge about 2000 workmen.

It is stated to be in contemplation to place Dover Harbour entirely in the hands of the Government

The Right Hon. the Speaker gave his last parliamentary entertainment this season, on Saturday last, at his mansion in Eaton-square.

A reprieve has been granted for Thomas Aldridge Scarley, who was, at the last Norfolk assizes, left for execution.

It is reported in official quarters that the French navy is in such a state of disorganisation with respect to ships and men, that the Provisional Government is not in a position to make any demonstration afloat. It is also stated that the Prince de Joinville is to be offered the command of the French fleet.

The opening throughout of the Boulogne and Amiens Railway took place on Monday. An uninterrupted route now exists by railway from Boulogne to Paris.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint James Miller, M.D., Professor of Surgery in the University of Edinburgh, to be Surgeon in Ordinary to her Majesty in Scotland, in the room of James Syme, Esq., removed from Edinburgh.

In the Royal West Middlesex Regiment of Militia, Charles William Grenfell, Esq., M.P., is appointed Captain

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Sydney Otway Husband, of Mold, in the county of Flint, Gent., to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

The Earl and Countess of Ripon and Viscount Goderich have left Carlton-gardens, on a visit to the Countess (Dowager) of Buckinghamshire, at her seat in Surrey, for the recess.

Viscount Melbourne has gone to Brocket Hall, Herts, for the holidays during which the noble Viscount purposes to entertain a select party

We regret to learn that Lord Ashburton and the Baring family have sustained another family bereavement by the decease of Mr. Henry Baring, of Cromer Hall, who died on Thursday week, aged 73 years.

The clergy of the City of London, Fellows of Sion College, last week presented an address of congratulation to the Archbishop of Canterbury on his Grace's accession to the Primacy.

The Duke and Duchess of Norfolk intend to receive a succession of distinguished visitors at Arundel Castle during the Easter recess.

A deputation from the ward of Cripplegate-within (City), in favour of Corn-law Reform, had an interview with Lord John Russell on Tuesday, at his official residence in Downing-street.

M. Savoie had been appointed Chargé d'Affaires of the French Republic at Frankfort

The French Minister for Foreign Affaires had suppressed five subdirectors in his department; economy being the order of the day in all the Government offices.

The Archbishop of Paris had authorised a collection in all the churches of his diocese, last week, in favour of the wives and children of the Poles who had left France to re-conquer the independence of Poland.

The national cockade of the Venetian Republic is composed of the three Italian colours: green in the centre, red on the outside, and white between the two

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has received £20 from "G. H." The same will be paid into the Exchequer.

Her Majesty's ship Howe sailed on the 3rd instant from Lisbon for Madeira, to convey the Queen Dowager to England. The steamer Scourge immediately followed, to tow the Howe in case of light winds.

The Tower of London

CHAMBER IN THE BEAUCHAMP TOWER.

There is not a more rational mode of passing an Easter Holiday in the metropolis than in a visit to this famed prison-palace. Not many years since, this was an expensive recreation, and, of course, accessible only to the few. The judicious reduction of the admission money, to view what are peculiarly termed the curiosities, has, however, materially tended to increase the number of visitors, as appears from the following table, compiled from the Parliamentary Returns, at the periods of the change:

| Years. | | Visitors. | Revenue. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1837-38 | 2s. and fee | 11,104 | £1165 |
| 1838-39 | 1s. " | 42,212 | 2110 |
| 1839-40 | 6d. " | 84,472 | 2124 |
| 1840-41 | 6d. " | 95,231 | 2380 |

This relates to the Armouries alone. The experiment, however, being so successful, it was resolved to extend the plan to the Regalia, which are now to be seen for the same small sum.

We shall scarcely be expected to say anything new of the interest attached to the Tower as an historical locality. In this respect it is the most important spot in the metropolis. "The History of the Tower of London," says Mr. Hewitt, in his excellent Guide book, "is the history of England, at least, during the more historical age of our existence as a kingdom; and if, in later years, the dungeons of the fortress, the Block, and the Torture, have been less in request, there have yet been few stirring events in which the Tower of London has not played its part. From the days of William the Conqueror to those of Lovat and Bal-

APARTMENT IN THE ST. THOMAS'S, OR TRAITORS' TOWER.

RUINS OF THE BRICK TOWER.

THE HORSE ARMOURY.

merino, a long series of distinguished names connects the history of this prison-palace with that of our country."

The lofty square building, adorned with turrets, and seen from Tower-hill surmounting the rest of the fortress, formed, for many years, of itself the Tower of London. Its precise position is shown in the first illustration. The other buildings have been added as outworks to this, the original palace and castle of the early Monarchs of England, and known as "the White Tower;" of which, by the way, we shall speak more in detail upon some future occasion. Our present purpose is to point attention to certain other portions of the ancient fortress, which we have engraved as illustrative of its historical attraction.

Leaving Tower-hill, we enter the fortress at the point where formerly stood "the Lyons Gate," so named from the adjoining court having been occupied by the Royal Menagerie. The next gate is that of "the Middle Tower." This, and the one on the farther side of the moat (the Byward Tower), were strongly fortified, and provided each with a double portcullis: a drawbridge formerly united them. The moat was drained in 1843: it has been laid with grass turf, and is used for exercising the troops.

The towers above named, and all those of the Outer Ward, are of the age of Henry III., the works having been very much increased and strengthened by this monarch. A narrow street is here seen on the left, which extends entirely round the fortress, dividing the Outer from the Inner Ward, or Ballium.

Passing straight onward, we find ourselves between a water-gate to the right, and the Inner Ballium gate to the left. The former of these is or the Traitor's Gate, through which state prisoners were commonly brought to the Tower, and carried to their trial at Westminster. This tower has under it secured by strong double gates, an arched channel, which communicates with the river Thames by a passage beneath the wharf, through which the state delinquents were conveyed.

ST. THOMAS'S TOWER,

The tower is a large rectangular edifice, the outer line of which is strengthened by two circular towers, projecting from the south-east and south-west angles. These towers have been very little altered, and interiorly exhibit some fine examples of the early pointed architecture of Henry the Third's reign. Within each tower are two little vaulted apartments, of a hexagonal form, and corresponding in dimensions, their greatest width being nine feet. The ribs of the vaulting rise from the capitals of small round columns.

Passing under the square tower, opposite the water-gate, and known as the Bloody Tower, we find ourselves under the walls of the White Tower, and in front of the spot lately occupied by the Grand Storehouse (or arsenal of small arms), destroyed by fire on the night of October 30, 1841. Upon this site has been erected the noble pile of the Waterloo Barracks.

THE BOWYER TOWER—BASEMENT.

RUINS OF THE BOWYER TOWER

On the left is the church of St. Peter ad vincula; opposite to which, at the south west corner of the Tower Green, are "the Lieutenant's Lodgings," a structure of the time of Henry VIII., now the residence of the Governor.

Half-way between the Lieutenant's Lodgings and the Church, stands

THE BEAUCHAMP TOWER.

"This," says Mr. Hewitt, "is perhaps the most interesting building of the whole range, the White Tower not excepted. Employed during many years as a 'prison lodging,' its walls are covered with the carved memorials of its unfortunate occupants. Among those who have thus recorded their sorrows are John Dudley, Earl of Warwick, 1553; Philip Howard, Earl of Arundel, 1587; Charles Baldy, a Fleming, and agent of Mary Queen of Scots; Arthur and Edmund Pole, great grand-children of George Duke of Clarence, brother to King Edward IV.; Thomas Fitzgerald, son of the Earl of Kildare, 1534; Sedbar, Abbot of Jorevel, 1537; Dr. Abel, chaplain of Queen Catherine of Arragon; Thomas Cobham, son of Lord Cobham; Rebecca Dudley, Maid of Honour, the favourite of Queen Elizabeth; Sir Abel, chaplain of Queen Catherine of Arragon; Thomas Cobham, son of Lord Cobham; Rebecca Dudley, Maid of Honour, the favourite of Queen Elizabeth; Sir Abel, chaplain of Queen Catherine of Arragon; Thomas Percy, son of the Earl of Northumberland, 1587; Egremont Radcliffe, son of the Earl of Sussex, 1576, with many others."

"Complete, regular, and elegant inscriptions are sometimes added.

"BY TORTURE STRAUNGE MY TROUTH WAS TRYED.
YET OF MY LIBERTIE DENIED. 1584. THOMAS MYAGHE."

"This 'torture strange' was the rack.

'Hit is the poyse to make man to try and then truste,
For hapy is he who tyndeth one that is just' T. C.'

"This prisoner had evidently been the victim of some false friend. The following is the conceit of a poor lover:

"'Thomas Whitgrave, gentleman.' My hart is yours tel dethe.' And by the side is a figure of a bleeding 'hart,' and another of 'dethe.' The initials, T. W. and P. A., on each side of the bleeding hart, are doubtless those of the lover and his mistress. The upper chamber of the Beauchamp Tower is said to have been the prison of Queen Anne Boleyn. The lower one is now used as a mess-room by the officers of the garrison, but may be seen displaying in the early part of the day to the person left in charge of the apartments." We have engraved the latter apartment.

North of the Beauchamp Tower stands the Develin and Devereux Tower. This and the Beauchamp Tower being out of the way of the great Fire in 1841, they remain intact. Not so, however, the three next towers in the northern range of the inner Ballium wall—the Flint, the Bowyer, and the Brick Towers. The first and second of these were partly destroyed, but have been restored. The Brick Tower remains in ruins.

THE BOWYER TOWER,

or Bowyer's Tower, acquired that name from having been, in early times, assigned as the residence of the master and provider of the King's bows. Of the original tower, the basement floor was the only part remaining, up to 1841: the upper story being a modern edifice, and fitted up for the purpose of the imprisonment of small arms, manufactured by the contracting gun-makers; and in one of the work-rooms originated the above fire.

The entrance to the basement, we may have engraved, is from "the train of artillery," through a wall ten feet in thickness. The interior is strongly groined and vaulted: it has been restored in the recent works. It was in this gloomy chamber that George, Duke of Clarence, brother to Edward IV., was, according to tradition, murdered by drowning in a butt of malmsey wine. There is, however, a still more dreary vault beneath the floor, closed by a trap-door, opening upon a flight of steps. From the former, on the right, is a narrow cell, or, more probably, the commencement of a secret passage, now blocked up, constructed within the Ballium wall.

The Engraving accompanying the interior view shows a portion of the Bowyer Tower, as the ruins appeared after the fire of 1841.

Next is a view of

THE RUINS OF THE BRICK TOWER.

the last of the three towers above named. This is stated in the survey (temp. Henry VIII.) to be the lodging of the Master of the Ordnance; and here Lady Jane Grey is said to have been imprisoned. Its last official residence was named Butler, after whom it has been locally called "Butler's Tower." The superstructure was destroyed in the late fire; it was of brick, and thought to have been of the 14th century; it was repaired in 1823, when the windows were furnished, and the exterior walls stuccoed and embattled. There remained after the fire the basement floor, formerly part of the domestic offices, and beneath that a dungeon, said to have been used for prison purposes. The superstructure has been rebuilt in the style of the original edifice is very attractive, it being not at all unusual for several hundred persons to visit it in one day. This shows an inclination in the public to know something of the ancient war costume and weapons of their ancestors. A great advantage of the reduction of the admission money—the greatest, perhaps—is that persons of even moderate means may go again and again to examine this collection, who before were limited by the expence of the admission to a single view.

THE HORSE ARMOURY

We do not like modern imitations of the Armoury, and such opportunity of examining is very scarce. The Armoury, at Hafod, Abbotsford, and the Antiquaries, for the details of the figures in this apartment, as well as for the most salient points in the history and present state of the Tower:

"At the south-west corner of the Horse Armoury is the entrance to the Horse Armoury. This building was completed in 1826, and forms in its interior a single apartment of 150 feet in length by 33 in width. The Armoury is occupied by a line of equestrian and dismounted figures, twenty-seven in number, clothed in the armour of various reigns, from that of Edward I. to that of James II. Around the room are ranged other figures in armour, interspersed with military trophies and emblems. A recess in the centre of the south wall contains a magnificent suit worn by Henry VIII.: while two vestibules, one at each end of the building, exhibit a curious collection of weapons of various kinds, from different ages. On a recessed platform, against the central part of the north wall, is the equestrian figure formerly exhibited as the 'Norman Crusader,' with a great variety of helmets, shields, &c., of various descriptions. At each end of the room are other mounted figures, and on the ceiling a large collection of obsolete arms and accoutrements, arranged in various fanciful devices. These antiquities formerly occupied a building adjoining the eastern wall of the White Tower; but were removed here on the re-arrangement of the armouries by Sir S. Meyrick. Over the line of equestrian figures occupying the centre of the room will be seen a series of banners, each bearing a date, and the name of some king or knight whose person is represented by the effigy below. It must be carefully remembered, however, that, except in the cases which we shall specify, the names found on the banners are merely to be understood as indicating the age of the suit, and the king or knight who was contemporary. A few only of the armours have been actually worn by the persons to whom they are assigned."

Here, for the present, our illustrated glimpse of the Tower must halt.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, APRIL 18.

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED.

C. ELLIS, Bashfordby, Sussex, grocer. J. WADE, Mason-grove, draper.

BANKRUPTS.

S. BENTON, Tottenham-court-road, pawnbroker. J. STOPFORD, Austin-friars, merchant. HANNAH and ANN THORNHILL, Wakefield, dealers in yarn. D. and G. SEWELL, Threadneedle-street, merchants. S. TOWNSEND, Hungerford market, and Gower-street, North, Bedford-square, builder. C. CHURCHYARD, Market-hall, Woodbridge, builder. R. B. WEBB, Surry-place, Blackfriars-bridge. W. KILHAM, Swinton, Lincolnshire, J. SHAW, Bristol, brewer. W. CAVE, Wells, Somerset, draper. J. HILL, Lowdham, Nottinghamshire, grocer. T. HARKER, Wakefield, worsted-spinner. J. GREENWOOD and R. BRETTON, Wakefield, Yorkshire, worsted-spinners. T. MARTENS, Mirfield-burrough, Yorkshire, merchant. W. MAUD, Morley, Yorkshire, worsted-stuff manufacturer. J. HOLT, Liverpool, draper. A. W. HART, Liverpool, merchant. J. W. BROOKE and J. WILSON, Liverpool, merchants. T. BROWNE, Lincoln, wine-merchant and dealer. T. HUTCHER and W. RICHARDS, Aldermanbury, Middlesex, warehousemen. J. BLOXWICH, Bilston, Staffordshire, ironmaster. W. HARRIS, Gloucester, carpenter. G. MATHIAS, Somerset, serjeant-at-mace. G. MORRIS, Garsington, near Nuneham, Oxfordshire, grocer. T. SALMON, Brandon-buildings, Chancery-lane, accountant-in-bankruptcy. S. EARLSON, Newton, Worcestershire, shop-keeper. R. ROBERTSON, St. Paul's Churchyard, City, tailor.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

A. CRIDDELL, Edinburgh, Civil engineer. J. ARCHIBALD and Co. Petson Park Works, Glasgow, machine makers. J. RAINE, Hogganfield, near Glasgow, bleacher. T. WEDDELL and Co. Glasgow, merchants. G. HENDERSON, Greenock, merchant. P. DEWAR, Aberdeenshire, Forfarshire, road contractor. A. HERON, Cassencail, Kirkcudbright, manufacturer.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE OF TOM STEELE. This country gentleman, who figured among the Reposters during the days of the late Mr. O'Connell, made an attempt at suicide on Wednesday evening, at about seven o'clock, by which a respectable gentleman mounted one of the seats on the upper side of Waterloo-bridge, and instantly plunged head first into the river, the Lord arch into the river. A waterman, named Richard Lackin, of Stamford-place, Lambeth, was crossing the river in a boat with five persons in it, and by desperate exertions he succeeded in rescuing the poor fellow. The moment he got hold of him, he found all he could to get away and to accomplish his object, but fortunately he was prevented. He was immediately taken to Bow street police-station, and from thence to King's Coll ge Hospital, where it was found that no bones were broken. Whilst in the receiving-room of the hospital, he said that he was stopping at the Bull and Mouth, St. Martin's-le-Grand, and expressed a wish to be removed to Peel's Coffee-house. He also said that he had acted very foolishly in not waiting till it was dark, as then he could have done the business effectually. He, however, did not state what had induced him to make such a desperate attempt upon his life.

AT the WESTMINSTER Police-office, W. Tomkins, a young man about twenty-two years of age, was, on Tuesday, committed for trial on the capital charge of having wounded a man, named Mark Edlin, in Lee street, on Sunday night. The unfortunate wounded died almost immediately. Tomkins was said to have been the cause of the fatal act.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Woodstockensis." No 3 appears to be without error. Nos. 5 and 6 are too obvious and simple; and your problem No. 7 can be easily solved in less than five moves.

"G. W. C."—You are quite right; No. 218 is properly a six-move problem.

"Malta."—Get the "Chess-Player's Handbook," just published by Bohn.

"C. W. C."—You have failed in No. 221 Your communication should be addressed to the Editor, &c.

"J. R. B." It shall receive due attention

"A Subscriber." Look down at No. 224; it is very ingenious

"Δ." You are quite wrong with regard to Enigma No 301. It cannot possibly be solved in less than the stipulated moves

"Rusticus," West Ealing.—The distinguished writer mentioned is a member of the Club.

"J. D. T.," "V. N." The games of the celebrated match between Mr. Staunton and the French Champion are to be had complete in Vol. V. of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle." Apply to Hastings, or Purkey street.

"Rosa Terra."—Do not trow up either of the Enigmas, Nos. 202 or 301 They are both correct, and, as you say, excellent. You are wrong in Problem 221.

"R. S. T."—You have hit at length upon the key to 220. Your solution is the true one

"H. B. P." We are quite satisfied that Problem No. 218, by Mr. Stanley, is not to be solved in less than six moves.

"T. V.," "Amateur," "W. P.," and many others Enigma No 209, absent while we were under the terrible communications, all denying the possibility of its being right, we believe to be correctly given, and can confidently recommend it as a most instructive and ingenious piece of Chess strategy.

Solutions by "G. H. P.," "H. P.," "J. G. C.," "H. P.," "Sagacitia," "Philo-Chess," "C. S.," "W. S. B.," "R. F.," Royal Artillery," "Hexham," "W. T.," Lincoln," "W. C.," "Eva," "W. L.," "G. A. H.," "M. B." "Rufe Terra," are correct. Those by "C. A. M. K." "G. G." "Woodstockensis," "Mon. Exon.," "Almaric," "S. T.," are wrong.

 The answers to some communications are necessarily deferred till the next Number

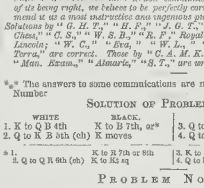
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 221.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. K to Q B 4th | K to B 7th, or* | 3. Q to K B sq (ch) | K moves |
| 2. Q to K B 8th (ch) | K moves | 4. Q to her 3d—Mate | |

* 1. K to R 7th or 8th | 2. K to Q 4th | K to B 7th
1. Q to Q R 6th (ch) | K to R 3d sq | 2. Q to her 3d—Mate.

PROBLEM NO. 222.

By J. E. COOMBS, Esq.



BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in seven moves.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 302. By an AMATEUR. Woodstock.

| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at Q B 2d | K at K sq | K at K sq | Q B 5th and 6th, |
| B at Q Kt 2d | P at Q B 5th | P at Q B 5th | and Q R 7th |
| P at K 3d | | | |

White to play, and mate in five moves.

No. 303.—By A. LUEMAN.

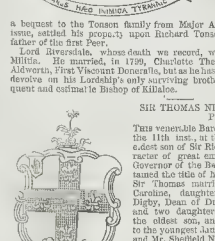
| WHITE. | BLACK. | WHITE. | BLACK. |
|---|---|---|---|
| K at his 4th | K at his 4th | P at K 2d, Q 6th, and | |
| P at Q 2d | P at Q 2d | Q B 5th | |
| B at K 3d | | | |

White playing first, can mate in three moves.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

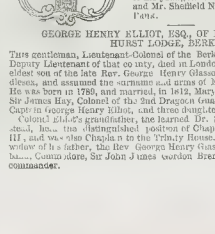
LORD RIVERSDALE.

ACCOUNTS from Ireland announce the death, at Lisnegar, county Cork, of the Right Hon. William Tonson Lord Riversdale. His Lordship, born 8th December, 1775, was eldest son of the first Peer, a military officer of rank, and Lieutenant-Governor of Cork, who was created Baron Riversdale of Rathcormac (of which he held the Post Office) 1st October, 1789. The patriarch of the family in Ireland, Major Richard Tonson, obtained a grant of land in the county of Cork from Charles II. for his gallant and active services during the Civil Wars, and purchased the castle and estate of Tynte Park in the same county. These estates were considerably increased by a bequest to the Tonson family from Major Anthony Tonson, who, having acquired a large property upon Richard Tonson, Esq., of Spanish Island, the father of the first Peer.



Lord Riversdale, whose death we record, was Colonel of the South Cork Militia. He married, in 1799, Charlotte Theodosia, daughter of St. Leger Aldworth, First Viscount Doneraile, but as he has left no child, the family honours devolve on his surviving brother, Dr. Lindlow Tonson, the distinguished and estimable Bishop of Killaloe.

SIR THOMAS NEAVE, BART., OF DAGNAM-PARK, ESSEX.



THIS venerable Baronet, whose decease occurred on the 11th inst., at the advanced age of 87, was the eldest son of Sir Richard Neave, a commercial character of great eminence, who filled the office of Governor of the Bank of England in 1780, and obtained the title of honour his family enjoys in 1795. Sir Thomas married, 13th June, 1791, Frances Caroline, daughter of the late Rev. William Digby, Dean of Durham, and has left four sons and two daughters. Sir Richard Digby Neave, the eldest son, and present Baronet, is married to the youngest daughter of the late Lord Arendell; and Mr. Sheffield Neave, the third a Director of the Bank.

GEORGE HENRY ELLIOT, ESQ., OF BINFIELD PARK AND BERKSHIRE.

THIS gentleman, Lieutenant-Colonel of the Berks Militia, and a Magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant of that county, died in London, on the 15th instant. He was eldest son of the late Rev. George Henry Glasse, A.M., Rector of Harwell, Middlesex, and assumed the surname and arms of Elliot by Royal license in 1811. He was born in 1789, and married, in 1812, Mary Josephine, daughter of General Sir James Kay, Colonel of the 2nd Dragoon Guards, by whom he leaves one son, Captain George Henry Elliot, and three daughters.

Colonel Elliot's grandfather, the learned Dr. Samuel Glasse, Vicar of Wanstead, held the distinguished position of Chaplain in Ordinary to King George III., and was also Chaplain to the Trinity House. The Colonel's stepmother, the widow of his father, the Rev George Henry Glasse, married, for her second husband, Commodore, Sir John James Gordon Bremer, K.C.B., the gallant naval commander.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Money continues abundant, and consequently its employment is difficult Large sums have been freely tendered for a month or six months, at two, and two-and-a-half per cent. Nevertheless, but few advances in favour of railway investments are apparent. Several of the dividend-paying companies are offering five per cent for seven years, with but trifling success, notwithstanding the much rate of interest already alluded to. How long this distrust in home investments will continue it is impossible to conjecture, but the rapid advance in Foreign Securities during the last week induces a belief that money is finding itself a channel in that direction

The English Funds were generally flat on Monday, at a slight decline upon the previous week's closing prices. Consols stood at 81¼ during the day. On Tuesday, however, an advance of about ¼ per cent was registered, upon the arrival of the Foreign expresses announcing an improvement of nearly three per cents in the French funds; but, later in the day, speculative sales reduced prices to about the previous day's quotation. Considerable firmness marked prices on Wednesday, and a rise of about ¼ per cent was finally registered. Such was the demand for Money Stock, that the price for delivery was 1 per cent more than for Account. A further improvement was the result of a renewed demand on Thursday, several large investments in Foreign securities having been made. Exchequer Bills continue firm, as a slight improvement; Bank Stock is also advancing, but the price of Reduced is nearly 1 per cent. below its relative value. Good Friday being a close holiday, no transactions occurred. The closing prices of the week, consequently, are, for—Bank Stock, 189; Three per Cent Reduced Annuities, 80¾; Three per Cent. Consols Annuities, 82¾; New Three per Cents Quarter per Cent Annuities, 81⅞; Long Annuities, 8 5-16ths; Ditto, 30 years Jan. 5, 1860, 8 9-16; India Stock, 227. India Bonds, £1000, 18 pm; Consols for Account, 82¾; Exchequer Bills, £1000, 44 pm; £500, 43 pm; Small, 40 pm.

The Foreign Market has been extremely animated, and speculative purchases and sales have greatly increased during the past week. In this change of feeling the public have also slightly shared, tempted, doubtless, by the low prices of several of the best Foreign securities. The changes in the values, it will be seen by the accompanying list, is nearly confined to the established dividend-paying lines:—Boston, Stamford, and Birmingham, 3½ dis., Bristol and Exeter, 59; Buckinghamshire, 4 dis.; Caledonian, 27¾; East Anglia, 2⅝, and E. and L. and D., 6½; Ditto, £18, E. and H., 5. Ditto, £3 dis., 3; Eastern Counties, 13½; Ditto, Extension, 5 per cent, Nor ..., 2 dis.; Ditto, North and Eastern, 49; Ditto, New, 36; Great Liverpools, 11; Great Northern, 81; Great Northern, 4 Shares, 90; Ditto, 2 Shares, 15; Ditto, Fifths, 19¾; Ditto, New, £17, 8; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 5 Shares, 56¾; Ditto, Fifths, 7¾; Leeds and Bradford, 85; Leeds and Thirsk, 16¾; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 28. London and ..., 5 per cents, 8¼; London and North Western, 198; Ditto, New, 4; London and South Western, 44½; Do., New £50, 27; Midland, 97; Do., Consol Pref., £50 Shares, 9; Norfolk, Guaranteed, 8¾ per Cent. 4½; North British, 20½; Do. Quarters, 3½; Do Thirds, 1; North Staffordshire, 7; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 20¾; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 6½; Scottish Central, 26½; Scottish Eastern, 22¾; Do., No. 2, 6; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 30; Ditto Original New and Berwick, 28; Ditto, Extension, No. 1, 13¾; Ditto ditto, No. 2, 9½; Ditto Great Northern and Eastern Preference, 7¾; York and North Midland, 54¾; Ditto Preference, 12½; Ditto, East and West Yorkshire Extension, 28½; Boulogne and Amiens, 6; Namur and Liege, 1; Northern of France, 3¾; Orleans and Bordeaux, 1¾; Paris and Lyons, 2¾; Paris and Strasbourg, 1¾.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE.—During the week, the arrivals of English wheat coastwise and by land carriage—have been on a very limited scale. Both on Monday and Wednesday—there being no market on Friday, from its being a holiday—most sales were in steady request, and prices were well supported. As the imports of foreign wheat continue large, that article has met a slow inquiry, but we have to describe no variation in the terms last noticed, with full rates of currency, but malt has commanded scarcely any attention. Oats have produced very little business, but all other articles have been supported, though we cannot call them cheaper.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 48s; ditto white, 48s to 52s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 42s to 48s; ditto, white, 46s to 51s; rye, 32s to 34s; grinding, 30s to 32s; distilling ditto, 28s to 31s; malting ditto, 52s to 55s; Norfolk and Suffolk, 50s to 54s; brown ditto, 46s to 53s; Kingston and Ware, 54s to 56s. Chevalier ditto, 56s to 58s; Scotch and Lincolnshire feed oats, 18s to 22s; potato ditto, 22s to 24s; Irish ... ditto, 18s to 19s; ditto, ... to 21s; ditto, ... to 18s; ditto, ... to 16s; grey peas, 32s to 36s; maple, 34s to 38s; white, 32s to 36s; boilers, 32s to 40s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 45s to 46s per sack; Essex and Suffolk, 40s to 42s; Stockton, 38s to 39s. per 280 lbs.

Foreign.—Dantzic red wheat, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; rye, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s; Flour, Hamburgh, 22s to 27s per barrel; Baltic —s to —s per 196 lbs.

Tare and Tret.—2lbs per bag and 8 per cent.

The Seed Trade.—So little business has been doing in seeds, that our quotations are nominal.

Linseed.—English, sowing, 56s to 60s. Baltic, crushing, 42s to 48s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 46s; hempseed, 30s to 38s per quarter, coriander, 16s to 18s per cwt. Kennedy, 40s to 44s; white do. 36s to 40s; brown do. 28s to 32s. Carraway seed, 42s to 46s; rapeseed, £30 to £34 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £12 10s to £13 0s. Foreign, £11 5s to £11 10s per 1000; rapecake, £4 10s per ton; canary, 60s to 72s per quarter. English clover-seed, red, —s to —s extra, —s to —s white, 56s to —s extra, up to 70s. Foreign, —s to —s extra, —s to —s white, —s to —s extra.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7½d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6d to 7½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Average.—Wheat, 49s 7d; barley, 32s 2d; oats, 18s 11d; rye, 29s 10c.; beans, 35s 6d; peas, 36s 1d

The Sea Freight Average.—Wheat, 10s 8d; barley, 3s 3d; oats, 2s 1d; rye, 3s 6d; beans, 5s 3d; peas, 2s 6d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 7s 0d; barley, 2s 0d; oats, 2s 0d, rye, 2s 0d; beans, 2s 0d; peas, 2s 0d

Flour.—The market is somewhat firmer than last week. In prices, however, owing to the heavy supplies at offer, we have no improvement to notice

Provisions.—We have to report a very steady inquiry for Irish provisions, at the currency of last week's quotations. Mauritius sugars have been in somewhat improved request at a trifle more money. In all other articles next to nothing has been doing, and prices are barely supported.

Coffee.—Mocha has sold at 30s 3 per cwt. Other kinds of coffee have moved off slowly, at late rates.

Rice.—All descriptions have been flat, and large parcels may be had on somewhat easier terms.

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO THE HON. AND RIGHT REV. [illegible]

SELECT PSALMS, in English Verse. By the Rev. R. B. BURROW, B.A., Curate of Clodwood, Somerset [illegible]
LONDON: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and [illegible]

NEW WORK BY GEORGE HERBERT ROUWELL, 2850.
On the 29th of April will be published, price 5s., No. 1 of a New Work, entitled [illegible]

OLD LONDON BRIDGE. By G. H. ROD-WELL. The Number will be Illustrated with a highly-Ornamental Cover of the Bridge, by an eminent artist and [illegible] Illustrations.

HENRY WYLDE'S PIANOFORTE [illegible] Pianoforte Manufactory, 76, Great Portland-street, Regent's Park. "Dr. Lindahardt, &c., &c., just Published by R. MILLS (late MITCHELL), 69 N w Bond-street.

Pianists Office, 67, Paternoster-row.
THE PIANISTA VOCAL EDITION of [illegible]

THE SPECIAL POLKA, inscribed to the Officers of the Corps of the Nation, by JOHN COOPER, is now ready, and "we feel sure every Special Constable will present his Wife Daughter or Sister with a copy, if only to commemorate the glorious 10th." Price 2s. 6d. Published by H. TOLKIEN, 28, King Williamstreet, City; and may be had "The Special Quadrilles," [illegible]

MRS. ELLIS'S NEW WORK.
On the 1st of May will be ready for delivery, Part I., price 1s.,
SOCIAL DISTINCTION; or, Hearts and Homes. By Mrs ELLIS, Author of "The Women of England," "The Daughters of England," &c. Illustrated by Original Engravings on Steel, from original designs by Henry Warren, Esq., President of the Water-colour Society. Each succeeding Part will consist of [illegible] press, and one Steel Engraving [illegible] St. Sold monthly; and all Booksellers [illegible] ond Edition, just published, price Twopence.
THE RIGHT of the ARISTOCRACY to the [illegible] CONSIDERED. By JOHN NOAKES [illegible] legitimately private, but public property.—The noble revenue [illegible] derived from Crown Lands and the Post-Office, paid by the Aristocracy as the condition of their enjoying the Lands unlawfully alienated from public uses, and appropriated by the Aristocracy.—The Feudal Dues revoked, and the revenue so derived [illegible] from Labour in lieu thereof. What is to be done now?—Full [illegible] many Months.—Weekly Dispatch.—"Mr. Noakes has put [illegible] Douglas Jerrold's New Spaper.—EFFINGHAM WILSON, Royal [illegible] Sent post free on transmission of Twenty Stamps.

LADIES' GAZETTE of FASHION for MAY, price 1s., contains double the number of SUMMER [illegible] of Fashions [illegible] Historical Picture of the Royal Family, with 8 full-length Portraits of the Queen, Prince Albert, and Family, engraved in a superior style, and other large Plates; 30 Pages, 50 Patterns, 35 Walking Dresses, 20 Polisses and Visites, 60 Bonnets [illegible] Descriptions, Tales, &c. Sent post-free for 64. extra.—G. BERGER, Holywell-street, Strand; and all Booksellers and Newsmen.

Now [illegible] price 9s. 6d.
PART III. 0
THE HISTORY and ART of WOOD EN-GRAVING; CONTAINING AN INTERESTING HISTORY OF THE ART OF WOOD EN-GRAVING FROM ITS EARLIEST PERIOD.
BY W. A. CHATTO.
With Fac-similes of curious Specimens of ancient Wood Engravings: [illegible]
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.
And exhibit in various styles the masterpieces of Wood Engraving [illegible]
Eight Of J. Jenkins] Girl and Lamb (Sheep)
Peasant (Winterhalter) The Infant Hercules (de Joshua Head of Paul in a Storm (Rembrandt) Berghem)
[illegible] Melancholy (after Landseer)
[illegible] Boilson) The Young Gardeners (E. Magnus)
[illegible] Morning Walks (Landseer)
[illegible] 81 and 11 of this beautiful work will be found [illegible] in the very interesting specimens of Engravings, the author [illegible] Pre-
The Prophet Jeremiah (Michael [illegible] Christmas Eve in Germany
[illegible] The Sleeping Boy (Hunt)
[illegible] Sailor Landscape
[illegible] Mignon regretting her Country
[illegible] Fisherman's Cottage
Game (Lance)
Wayfarers Resting (T. Taylor) Hogarth's portrait of Captain Coram
The Invention of the Stocking Loom (Zimmer) Engraved Portrait (Frederick Taylor)
Curious Antique Vases
Sunset (Danson) Sweet Summer Time (S. Dodgson)
Cavan's Well (Topham) Aurora (Guido)
Domestic Happiness (Mulready) Wedding Gown
South Sea Bubble (E. M Ward)
Each Work is printed on the most careful manner, upon a hot-pressed fine paper, made expressly for the purpose, which considerably enhances the beauty of the Engravings.
A Specimen Sheet sent to Paris, 2s. 8d. each.
No More Medicine for Indigestion and other Functional Disorders.—By DU BARRY and Co., 8, Bury court, St. Mary-axe, London, Price 6d., or 8d. sent free by post, a popular treatise, entitled
THE NATURAL REGENERATOR of the DIGESTIVE ORGANS (Stomach and Intestines), Without Medicine. Court copy, 8s. post paid

SMITH and CO.'S REGISTERED BOMBULE [illegible] cover for bonnets May be had of [illegible] d in each.

"OH! HOW VERY COMFORTABLE!"
[illegible] ants an essential to Invalids' Pelisses, combined [illegible] 14s to 63s., according to size or quality JOHN INGRAM and SONS, Manufacturing Upholsterers, 29 City road, Finsbury-square.

CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES of a very superior, elegant, and compact [illegible] and so easy and perfectly [illegible] hands Now in use from the Prince to the cottage Price most moderate [illegible] selection, is in Ice Shillibeer to Tweeny [illegible]
[illegible] ISAAC H. JENNER, Wheelwright, Manufacturer, [illegible]

METCALFE and CO.'S NEW PATENT [illegible] POOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA [illegible] the use of the extraordinary [illegible] and true economy sank all who have used Metcalfe's Brushes. The Tooth-brush performs the highly important office of searching thoroughly into the fissures, and cleansing in the most extraordinary manner [illegible] Sponge, [illegible] Like no other hair. Improved Clothes-brush, that cleans [illegible] a few strokes Improved Shaving-brush, that cleans [illegible] a lather in less time. The new Velvet Brush, the luxurious Shoe [illegible] unbleached Smyrna Sponge, at METCALFE and CO.'s Manufactory, Oxford-street, [illegible] one door from Bond-street.

IMPORTANT FACTS to BISCUIT CONSUMERS.—It is acknowledged by all eminent medical men [illegible] nutritious and wholesome [illegible] which made [illegible] Consumption, J. D. CARR and Co., of Carlisle [illegible] Such is the fact, have lately introduced into their Depot, 111, Strand [illegible] steps are constantly, which cannot fail to afford universal satisfaction, if price and quality, which consists [illegible] dered, they being light, crisp, and of [illegible] powerful steam machinery can produce. Biscuits from 3d. to 1s. per [illegible] lb.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY.—Baths, Stoves, Pans, Tea Urns, Patent Meat Steamers, Bottle Jacks, Tea Trays, Candlesticks, Lamps, Iron Bedsteads, Children's Cots, Fenders, Fire Irons, Fire Screens, Kitchen Ranges, Register Stoves, Garden Engines, and Rollers, Drawing and Dining-Room Stoves, Hot and Cold Water Cocks, Kitchen Utensils of the most approved description, Culinary Stoves and Ranges, [illegible] LAUKER and BRONZE Manufacturers, [illegible] Northern [illegible]

Establish [illegible] and upon daily for public [illegible] others forward [illegible] miles from 67, [illegible] Street and 5, [illegible] Crossman-[illegible]

OLD GILT FRAMES MADE NEW in one [illegible] ntment, by merely rubbing with SMITH'S GOLD RESTORER, 1s. 6d. per bottle. ELECTRO LIQUID SILVER, 1s. [illegible] ed without [illegible] 1000, Oxford-street, one door from Bullstreet. LAUKER and BRONZE Manufacturers, [illegible] Northern [illegible]

DEANE'S DOMESTIC BATHS. The [illegible] open each of seeing after a long week labour and which every one [illegible] suffers, may [illegible] Baths, [illegible] each and so fatally, renders it [illegible] that all of what no [illegible] or Cold Water Baths [illegible] Baths Departments is now [illegible] every town by, at [illegible] each, one of Baths, [illegible] which is not published, at many [illegible] Baths, one of their family, at which [illegible] Baths [illegible] served and put up within [illegible] miles of London before [illegible] Queen and both Houses, Shower Sitting [illegible] Sponge, [illegible] and [illegible] Hot Showers, &c. &c. Bath Manufactories opening to the Monument, 46, King William street, London-bridge.

TO ALL TEACHERS of DANCING.—A GENERAL MEETING of the Profession will be held at BLAGROVE'S CONCERT ROOMS, 71, Mortimer-street, Regent-street, on THURSDAY, the 20th of April at one o'clock, precisely to [illegible] requested to attend. Admittance Free.

ORGAN EXHIBITION.—G. M. HOLDICH Organ builder (son of the Rev. Thos. Holdich, Rector of Maldwell, Northampton) [illegible] selected a new St Organ for the parish church, Bath, [illegible] a most important instrument, p in its completion, it also possesses [illegible] performed upon at the MAY 1st, in consequence with Afternoon, at 3, [illegible] &c. &c.

description of Church, Chamber, and Barrel Organ Built, Tuned, and Repaired.—Manufactory, 31, Great-street, Soho-square, London.

Hafen von Great [illegible] Manufactur in 3 verschiedenen [illegible] Dafs die Fabrik von Herrn [illegible] wirklich die [illegible] at Great-Gerrards einfaches [illegible] auf 10 Meilen der resultirte Zon [illegible]

Aller Erkenntniß nach, werden beide neue Docken gegen den Ende [illegible] 1849 fertig sein. Es gen Great-[illegible] Docken und Werften [illegible] Schiffen Arbeitern, bei [illegible] allen Seiten [illegible] Arbeitern [illegible] Vortheil [illegible] Docken nach den Springs [illegible] [illegible] gänzlich [illegible] [illegible] Der Zoller hatte eine Arbeitergasse von aller Seiten [illegible] und [illegible] Werfter [illegible] Docken [illegible] Gegenden nach aus [illegible] Die [illegible] Docken [illegible] Arbeitergasse [illegible] [illegible] Docken [illegible] Werften [illegible] Docken [illegible] Manchester, Sheffield nach der Grafschaft Lincoln, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

UNDER THE SPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
THE ROYAL NAVAL MILITARY, EAST INDIA, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 13, WATERLOO-PLACE, LONDON.

CHAIRMAN.—Col Sir Frederick Smith, K.M., R.E.
DEPUTY CHAIRMAN.—M. Baldwin, Clerke, K.H. [illegible]
Vice-Admiral [illegible] Hon G. Mas-[illegible] Gen Taylor C.B. [illegible]
Colonel [illegible] Sir Henry [illegible] Sir H. K. [illegible]
Major-Gen. Sir J. Cockburn, Bt. Lieut.-Col. H. Hannen, K.H., late [illegible] C.B. R.M.A.
General Sir Thomas Bradford, G.C.H. Archibald Muir, Esq., M.D., late [illegible] H.E.I.C.S.
Major-Gen. C. Ross, G.C.M.G., K.C.H. Captain William Lamsey, R.E.
Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Gardiner, K.C.B. William Chard, Esq., Navy Agent, Whitehall-Yard, &c.
Major-Gen. Sir Hew D. Ross, K.C.B. Major-Gen. Sir John Rich, K.C.B.
Colonel George Buck, R.N. Major F. S. Solmay, C.B.
Colonel Sir Alexander, K.L.S. Captain Old Admiralty, K.H.
Major-Gen. John Wynyard, C.B.
[illegible] Coutts and Co., 59, Strand.
[illegible] Pinkerton, Esq., the Government Calculator.
[illegible] sanctioned upon the lives of persons in every station of life, and for every part of the world, upon particularly favourable terms.
[illegible] Parties about to take effect may change from one century to another [illegible] forfeiting their position.
A Bonus, amounting to 20 per Cent. on the actual value of the policies, was declared at the second at the first Septennial Meeting, held in the year 1844.
JOSEPH C. BIRTTELL, Secretary.

ENCHANTED SPY-GLASS! with fireworks, [illegible] Tricks, &c. &c., price 9s. [illegible] tables Diorama OUTH NEW for a new [illegible] Conjuring Tricks, Fireworks, &c. &c., price 9s. [illegible] Fanfarina in China, the Winter Garden at Paris, Walter Scott's House, [illegible] Bridge of Sighs at Venice, &c. &c. Various Dioramas for Evening Parties. Sold at A. BOUCHET'S Depot of Foreign Goods 24, [illegible] Regent-street, [illegible]

WINDOW BLINDS.—TYLOR & PACE'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE and PRICE LIST of WINDOW BLINDS will be forwarded on application, post free. The following are a few of the various sorts: Venetian Blinds, [illegible] Fringed Blinds, [illegible] Blinds, [illegible] Blinds, [illegible]

SKETCHES IN SPAIN.

THE HOLY WEEK IN MADRID.

HOLY WEEK.

Passion or Holy Week has supplied our Artist with the imposing scene depicted in the first of the accompanying Illustrations. This presents a grand display of architectural and ritual magnificence upon one of the days of the Holy Week, in Madrid; when the Queen goes in state, on foot, to visit the churches. The regal pageantry observed on such occasions has already been illustrated in our Journal for May 2, 1846. The ceremonies are carried to great excess; for we remember Blanco White, in "Doblado's Letters," says, "To tell the honest truth, we are quizzed everywhere for our conceit of these solemnities; and it is a standing joke against the Sevillians, that on the arrival of the King in summer, it was moved in the Cabildo, or town corporation, to repeat the Passion Week for the amusement of his Majesty. It must be owned, however, that our Cathedral service on that solemn Christian festival yields not in impressiveness to any ceremonies of modern worship."

In the Illustration, the Church is splendidly lighted, though, it must be admitted, with lustres too much in our ball-room style, to harmonise with the Anglican appropriateness of church decoration. Beside the high altar are massive candelabra, bearing lights. To the left sits, beneath a canopy of state, a lady of rank, superbly dressed, whose office it is to receive the alms and oblations of the congregation, which are dropped [illegible]. The domes, the soffites of the arches, and the sides of the piers are richly decorated; and the whole scene presents such a spectacle as must strike the eye of the painter and the lover of the picturesque.

The ceremonies of the Holy Week commence with the ringing of the Passion-bell on Palm Sunday, the bearing and blessing of palm branches, &c. On Wednesday, the singing of the "Miserere" is a great attraction. The ceremonies of Thursday, being intended as a remembrance of the Last Supper, are, very appropriately, of a mixed character—a splendid commemoration which leads the mind from gratitude to sorrow. The evening and part of the night of Thursday are spent by crowds of people visiting the numerous churches where the Host is entombed. The solemnities of Good Friday are short, and performed at an early hour; and the service of Saturday ends in a procession about the aisles of the churches.

FOUNTAIN IN MADRID.

The Gallegos or Water-Carriers are by no means the least characteristic portion of the population of Madrid. By them the water is conveyed from the fountains to the houses of the inhabitants. They are the exclusive Water-Carriers: [illegible] which has made a little fortune of two or three hundred dollars, wherewith to retire to his native mountains, and rear a family, has the privilege of either selling his business, or of bequeathing it gratuitously to a relative. To lay up money on their scanty earnings, of course, requires the most narrow economy. Accordingly, we find them doing menial offices for a family, for the sake of sleeping on the entry pavement; or else, clubbing together, a dozen or twenty, to hire an attic.

They buy their food at a taberna, or from old women who keep little portable kitchens, or rather furnaces, at the corners, and either eat it on the spot, or seated on their water-jars about the fountains. Others there are, who, instead of carrying water for domestic use, parade the streets, taking care not to infringe another's domain, and sell it by the glassful to those who pass. They carry simply an earthen jar, suspended behind the back by a leathern sling. The common mode of conveying the large jars, a number of which are seen in the Illustration, is by carrying on the head or in panniers upon the backs of mules.

FOUNTAIN IN MADRID.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198 Strand, in the Parish of St Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, April 22, 1848

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 314.—Vol. XII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE ORGANISATION OF LABOUR.

"The Organisation of Labour" is the title of a work published a few years ago, by an author at the time comparatively unknown in his own country—quite unknown in this. That author is now a member of the Provisional Government of France—one of that remarkable Decemvirate who rule the destinies of the most extraordinary people in the civilised world. The ideas expressed in this work brought him first into notice—secondly, into power. Those ideas maintain him where he is; and, by the influence excited in his favour among the great majority of the working classes of Paris, surround his position, his actions, and his words with an interest and a dignity which have seldom been the lot of a speculative philosopher at any period of the world's history. The hopes of French labourers are concentrated in him and in the colleagues who share his views; and at his hands are expected reforms and improvements amounting to nothing less than the regeneration of society, and the banishment of crime and poverty from the world—the realisation, in fact, of a political and social millennium. All this is very remarkable. People in this country, unfamiliar with the writings of M. Louis Blanc, make anxious enquiries of one another, and ask what is this new Utopia which he dreams of?—what the grounds of his belief in the great change he prophecies? what the organisation he meditates for making all labourers happy and prosperous, and banishing from the earth that extreme poverty of which all ages have been witnesses, and that crime and suffering which are its inevitable concomitants? Various attempts have been made to explain his views. One section of the community have held him up to admiration as the only social philosopher of our time; another have condemned him as an idle and vain dreamer, full of conceits and self-delusions, and preaching doctrines that tend to the subversion and ruin of society, and to the installation of anarchy on the throne of Europe. A third party consider him an enthusiast who can do no harm, and whose doctrines will refute themselves by their own absurdity. We intend to offer a few remarks upon the subject, that our readers may see what M. Louis Blanc really is, and judge for themselves by their own common sense in what category of these three to place him. First of all, let us do justice to his merits. Like other men, M. Louis Blanc has eyes to see, ears to hear, and a heart to feel. He has genius and ability, more than most men, and his sympathies are entirely with the people. Looking around him through the agricultural and manufacturing districts of France and through the workshops of Paris, he has discovered much misery, degradation, and ignorance among the labouring people. The pictures he has drawn of this misery are touching in the extreme; and their truth will be recognised by every one who knows anything whatever of the state of the working population in the old over-peopled countries of Europe—great wealth on the one hand, great poverty on the other; prodigious luxury balanced by astounding destitution; great and increasing civilisation shamed by a hideous barbarism. Such are the sights he has seen, and which we, too, in this country, can discover, if we look about us. Moved by this unhappy state, M. Louis Blanc has endeavoured to discover its secret, as well as its more palpable and obvious, causes. In this task he thinks he has succeeded, and his disciples and admirers have confirmed him in the belief by the loudness and unanimity of their plaudits. Let our readers judge for themselves. We give the secret in M. Louis Blanc's own words, extracted from a speech which he delivered at the Luxembourg, on the 3rd of the present month, before the Committee of Workmen, and which contains the [illegible] "The principle," said he, "upon which society rests at the present day is that of ISOLATION, of ANTAGONISM, and COMPETITION. This principle is the fertile source of all the miseries of the people. It causes a general poverty; because, by isolating men in their efforts [illegible] labour; because, every day, at every hour, upon every portion of the soil, it displays its power by the annihilation of some rival industry which it has vanquished. [illegible] leaves society to the vulgar governance of chance. Under [illegible] a single labourer, a single producer can secure himself against the evil effects of a stagnation of trade or other industrial crisis, by his good conduct, his wisdom, or his foresight. Competition forces production to develope itself in darkness —to trust to chance, to problematical consumers, and to unknown markets for its reward. Thence arise inexpressible disorders, and the absolute impossibility of establishing between production and consumption that equilibrium from which alone wealth can issue. Thus we see one branch of industry beset by labourers whom it cannot employ, alongside of another that fails for want of hands; one market empty and deserted; another deplorably over-supplied; powerlessness born of excessive power springing from chaos. What security is there in such a state of things?"

A STUDY.—PAINTED BY J. F. HERRING.—IN THE BRITISH INSTITUTION EXHIBITION.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Such are M. Louis Blanc's ideas of the undoubted evils of competition; evils which are very easy to discover, but very difficult to remedy. Those ideas are by no means new. He shares them in common with Mr. Owen, M. Fourier, M. Cabet, Mr. Minter Morgan, and many others who have written upon the subject; and who considering men as if they were a hive of bees, would wish them like bees to live in common. Labour in common, and share in common the proceeds of their industry, so that every man might have enough and no man too much to supply his rational want. He and they alike denounce competition as the fruitful mother of all [illegible] ills, and look upon union and organisation as the only remedy. It is an error, therefore, to consider M. Louis Blanc as the inventor or originator of a system. Were he not a member of the French Government, wielding power all but unlimited, his name would only have been known in all probability as that of an imitator—an amiable enthusiast, abounding in philanthropy, but deficient in knowledge of man, life, and nature, who had taken up the ideas of others and wrought them into more pathos and effect than his predecessors. He has, however, an advantage over them, not only in his high and powerful position as one of the rulers of a great nation at a time when new ideas are germinating in the popular mind, but in more boldly stating his views and intentions than they have done, and in carrying his reasoning to its legitimate ultimatum. While they would institute "paralellograms," "phalansteries," "Icarias," and "Christian Colonies" to carry out on a small scale their bee-like humanity, he, with more grandeur of conception, would at once overturn the existing order of Society. He would destroy competition, the monster evil, making the state the monster competitor of all trades, occupations, and industry whatever. He would swallow up one giant in the jaws of a greater. He is a lofty conception at all events, and at once fits M. Louis Blanc into the ranks of those men, whom society either fears or honours with its particular notice for their audacity and boldness whatever it may think of their prudence, their wisdom, or even their sanity. The working-classes having conquered power, are to retain it, according to M. Louis Blanc, that they may rule the State, and force it in all [illegible] to establish social workshops (ateliers sociaux) over the whole country—provide capital, tools, and all the necessaries of labour, and to manufacture upon the national account all articles whatever that are now manufactured by individuals;—whether in cotton, in wool, or in silk in gold, in silver, in iron, or in brass—ship-building and house-building—furnishing and upholstery even tailoring and shoe-making—in fact, every trade, occupation, and industry whatsoever. The spur of competition, and of self-interest and advancement, so powerful hitherto in inciting men to distinguish themselves above their fellows by their skill, their ingenuity, their enterprise, their daring, and their perseverance, is to be superseded; and men are to have no other incentives to labour than a feeling of honour towards each other, and a sense of duty. They are not to labour for themselves or their children, but for society. Were reason destroyed, and instinct established in the human mind or brain in its stead, there might be some chance that work would be done under this system; but with reason as our guide, and hope, passion, and intellectual and physical differences existing among men, there are insuperable obstacles in the way of the project, however well it may look upon paper. Men will never be transformed into machines, even for their own good. We willingly accord to M. Louis Blanc the praise of good intentions; but as long as men are men, it will be impossible to organise them upon the principles of instinct. M. Louis Blanc has already unsettled the minds of the working-classes, and led a portion of the masses to be unsatisfied with the practical good at their command, and to yearn insanely for a state of society which never can be established until we become like the ermuets, the beavers, the bees. This is a consummation not to be desired, and quite unobtainable as it is irreachable.

But while we thus express our dissent from the views of M. Louis Blanc, and our sorrow that his aspirations for the good of [illegible] governed by more wisdom, we would guard our [illegible] misunderstood in the observations we have [illegible] has its good side as well as its bad; and we [illegible] ation to remain as a necessary and wholesome [illegible] much might be done by Union to benefit the working classes; and that the isolation of which M. Louis Blanc complains might be superseded by a wiser system of mutual and co-operation, based upon the natural desires and passions of [illegible] many. But it is not necessary to transform men into machines, [illegible] or into insects, to improve their condition. It is not necessary to fetter down all intellects to one standard to destroy all individuality to repress all desires, in order to prove practically the advantages of union. These advantages are open and [illegible] and have long been enjoyed by a portion of society. The classes, by the exercise of thrift and industry—by self-[illegible] y self-reliance, may yet do much to improve their [illegible] ; and by competing with the classes above them, may [illegible] own level, instead of lowering to them the whole condition and intellect of the comfortable classes. The co-operative principle is one sanctified by their homely and essential virtues, cannot fail to be of service to us all. But let the working classes beware of some "will o' the wisps" as the author of the "Organisation of Labour." An injudicious friend may prove more hurtful than a foe; and an ignorant philanthropist may, with all his good intentions, become the most mischievous of public disturbers—the most prejudicial of men to the welfare of that people whose interest he has in his heart, but not in his head. There is, however, little fear that M. Louis Blanc will make many converts in this country.

"A STUDY." BY J. F. HERRING.

AT THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

This is a remarkably vigorous and characteristic portraiture of the fiery War-Horse. The composition was intended in the first instance to have had a female horse, and to have been entitled "Rarnan a Charlot Horses." On searching for authorities at the British Museum, the artist found the Egyptians [illegible] ses used by the Egyptians to be so covered with scales, buckles, and bosses, that had the horses been caparisoned by the painter, his object would have appeared rather to display gaudy trappings, than to exhibit what he more particularly wished to make the principal feature of his picture, viz. the portraiture of that noble animal, the Horse. The painter, however, made a small study, with the [illegible] and nose-pieces of the bridles so interfered with the character of the subject, that he relinquished his first intention, and merely called his picture, as in the catalogue—A Study.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—SATURDAY, APRIL 22.

ROYAL ASSENT. The House met at two o'clock, when the Royal assent by commission was given to the following bills:—The Crown and Government Security Bill, the Exchequer-bills Bill, the Mutiny Bill, the Marine Mutiny Bill, the Borough Police Superannuation Bill, Public Works Completion (Ireland) Bill, Mines (Ireland) Bill, and the Kettering Small Tenements Bill. The Lords Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Earl of Shaftesbury, and Lord Campbell.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said that on Monday, the 8th of May, he should move the re-committa of the Encumbered Estates (Ireland) Bill.

LORD CAMPBELL presented a petition in favour of the Bill to legalise the Odd Fellows' Society.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE laid on the table certain papers relative to the finance and commerce of Ceylon.

The House then adjourned to May the 4th.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—SATURDAY, APRIL 22.

The House met at two o'clock.

IRELAND.

Sir G. GREY moved that the House at its rising adjourn until Monday, the 1st of May.

Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL did not wish to detain the House, as it was about to adjourn for the holidays, but he felt he should not discharge his duty if he did not offer a few observations with respect to the state of Ireland before the motion was agreed to. He wished, in the first place, to express his regret at a portion of the address of the noble Lord on Monday. (Hear.) He alluded to the statement which he made at the close of his speech, that where or were his opinions with respect to the Repeal of the Union, he was prepared to resist any proposition of that kind by force. He expressed had been thus misinterpreted in Ireland, when as what he (Mr. O'Connell) understood him to say was this, that if he were met by argument on the subject, he should be prepared to contend with it on the matter; but that if force were resorted to, he should resist it by force. In his opinion, great injury could not fail to result to all parties in Ireland if any attempt were made to carry the Repeal of the Union, or any other political measure, by force of arms. (Hear, hear.) If the Irish people were insane enough to adopt violent measures, there would be one thing far more cruel and disastrous than success—the placing of the city in the hands of an armed, reckless, and undisciplined mob. (Hear, hear.) Such a proceeding every lover of humanity must deplore. With the state of the country was far from satisfactory, and he could not help stating that the Government had not introduced those measures for the benefit of Ireland, which, owing to their conduct with the Opposition, the people of that country had a right to expect. They had expected a Poor-law suitable for the country, but their expectations had not been realised; and the reclamation of waste lands, with other important measures, had been abandoned; and the difficulties which the Government stated they had to contend with were of their own creating. The Bill in their hall was one of their own raising. The wants of Ireland at this moment were rather more of a physical than political nature. The people of Ireland wanted employment as well as a further extension of the franchise. He warned the House not to mistake the opinions of the Irish people for those put forward by the Irish press. Here the hon. gentleman was interrupted by Sir AUGUSTUS CLIFFORD, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, who entered the House, and summoned the House to attend in the House of Peers, to hear a Royal assent given by commission to several bills.

The Speaker, accompanied by several members, proceeded to the House of Peers, and on his return he informed the House that he had been to the House of Lords to hear the Royal assent given by commission to several bills. (For which see our Lords' report.)

Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL resumed. He again warned the House not to look to the press of Ireland as the correct exponent of the popular feeling of Ireland. He believed that the measure of the Government for the adjustment of questions between landlord and tenant in Ireland would have a special effect. He also rejoiced to see that the Government was about to bring in a bill to put a stop to the sale of elections, and he trusted that they would bring in other measures of a similar character and tendency.

Sir G. GREY said that the hon. gentleman had given a perfectly fair representation of what had fallen from his noble friend (Lord John Russell) with reference to what he was prepared to do on the subject of the Repeal of the Union. He had to return the thanks of the Government to the hon. gentleman for having called the attention of the House to the subject. The Government was most anxious to see the state of Ireland improved in its best construction, and introduce such measures as appeared to them best calculated to benefit that country.

Mr. C. ANSTEY expressed his regret that the noble Lord should have coupled the discussion of the Repeal of the Union with those mischievous persons who were giving utterance to seditious language in Ireland; but he was bound to say at the same time that the noble Lord's speech had been much misrepresented. He (Mr. Anstey) had been taunted as a renegade to the cause of Repeal, because he had voted in favour of the Crown and Government security Bill, but he still professed himself to be in favour of a Repeal of the Legislative Union, he was strongly opposed to the criminal designs of traitors in Ireland.

After a few words from Mr. F. O'CONNOR,

The Earl of ARUNDEL and SURREY said he wished to know when it was the intention of the hon. member to bring in a bill, leave for which he had some time since obtained, upon the subject of the Chartist Land Company. (A laugh.)

Mr. F. O'CONNOR said that it was his intention to do so immediately after the Easter recess.

The motion was then agreed to.

MR. LOCHHART'S PAUPER PROCESSION.

Mr. J. A. SMITH said that he had seen an advertisement in one of the morning papers, to the effect that the Right Hon. Baronet the Secretary of State for the Home Department had given his assent to a certain procession taking place on Monday to the Home Office for the purpose of accompanying a petition. He wished to know whether such was the case?

Sir G. GREY. In answer to the question put to me by the hon. member, I beg to state that I have seen a bill-day a letter which was published in the Morning Advertiser, signed by Mr. Charles Cochrane, stating that there would be a large assemblage—[a laugh]—they have been pleased to call 90,000 persons, who were to proceed, accompanied by five large pictures, in procession to the Home Office, and adding "that the Secretary of State had most considerately declared that he would offer no opposition to such procession." That allegation, I beg to state, is totally without the least shadow of foundation, and Mr. Cochrane has been told, more than three weeks since, that no procession whatever could be allowed, and that no petition would be received by the Secretary of State if accompanied by large numbers of persons; but if sent, in the usual way, to the Secretary of State's Office, or brought by a small number of persons only, it would be received. Mr. Cochrane was also informed that it would not be convenient to receive the pictures in the Easter week, but that after that time, if presented in the usual way, it would be attended to. In consequence of the appearance of the advertisements upon the subject, the Commissioners of Police have received instructions, which they are prepared to carry into effect, in order to prevent any procession from passing through the streets, which will prove a serious inconvenience to the trade and industry of the public at large. I do not believe that any such number as that stated could be calle together by Mr. Cochrane. The statement which that gentleman has made with respect to my not having the procession, is totally without foundation; and effectual measures will be taken by the police to stop such procession, if he should attempt to carry it out. With respect to the subject for which the procession is ostensibly designed, viz. that of the condition of the unemployed, it is one well deserving of the most serious attention, and there are at present under the consideration of the Poor Law Commissioners measures calculated to place that class of persons in an improved position under proper management. It is not necessary, however, to the due consideration of the subject, that any such measures as that advocated by Mr. Cochrane should be carried into effect. (Hear, hear.)

LOAN MENTS IN IRELAND. Sir G. GREY obtained leave to bring in a bill to regulate parties, before they evict, to give seven days' notice to the tenants and the assistant board of Guardians, in order that food and shelter may be provided for them.

THE INSOLVENCY AND INSOLVENCY LAWS.—Mr. C. BERKELEY inquired if it was the intention of Government to introduce any measure with respect to these laws this session?

Sir G. GREY replied that the subject was under the consideration of the Lord Chancellor.

REPRESENTATION OF THE PEOPLE.—Mr. HUME gave notice that he would, on the 23rd of May, bring before the House a motion with respect to the state of the representation of the people in that House.

Sir G. GREY brought in the Destitute Poor (Ireland) Bill.

The House then adjourned to Monday next, the 1st of May.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The reforms and fundamental changes wrought by the provisional Government in the fiscal and other institutions of the nation continue to be pursued with the usual activity. A decree has just been issued, the principal enactments of which are: "A days of grace" are given upon the capital of all mortgages and other charges upon land, whether as rent-charges, perpetual or for life, or by judgments or decrees, with the exception of those comprised in No. 3 of Article 2103 of the Civil Code. The capital of perpetual rent-charges is to be estimated at twenty times the rent-charge, and that upon rent-charges for life is to be estimated at ten times the rent-charge. Landowners, whose estates are under mortgages or other charges, as mentioned, are bound to make signed declarations of such as are now existing between the 1st and 15th of May next. The duty imposed by this decree must be paid immediately after the publication of the rôles, in one sum, and not by twelfths; or, at least, in two equal sums: one within the month of the publication of the [illegible] and the other within [illegible]

[illegible] issued a proclamation against armed meetings of the [illegible] wards who did duty at the Prefecture of Police to be removed by order of the Provisional Government.

The Moniteur contains a circular addressed by M. Armand Marrast, member of the Provisional Government, to the mayors of Paris, in which he states that reports have been circulated in Paris, charging him with endeavouring to influence the unemployed operatives paid by the Government to vote for deputies to the National Assembly according to his dictation. A review of those operatives, which had been commanded for the 22nd inst., has in consequence been adjourned until after the elections.

Four complete regiments of the line which entered Paris for the fête of Thursday have been retained in the capital. In cases where detachments only from regiments quartered elsewhere came, they returned to their quarters.

The elections for the National Assembly commenced on Sunday, and were conducted with the greatest tranquility, regularity, and order. But we regret to learn that the same description of fraud, in some shape or other, which is so common in the United States where universal suffrage is established, has been already signalised in Paris. The journals of Sunday contain the avowal of individuals that he has been allowed to obtain two electoral cards on the 12th arrondissement, and might, if he had taken the trouble, have obtained a dozen. The effect of this would be to enable the same individual to deliver as many votes as he had obtained cards; in other words, to pass himself for, and exercise the rights of, as many different individuals. It will be more difficult to avoid this abuse than the partisans of universal suffrage imagine.

It has been settled in a satisfactory manner in the departments. To comprehend it, it must be understood that each elector claiming to vote presents himself at the mairie, and receives there a "carte électorale," which certifies his right to put his vote in the ballot-box. The thing works pretty well in this manner. The same individual presents himself over and over again in the same mairie, and receives several "cartes;" or he may present himself successively at different mairies, and thus obtain multiple "cartes."

This abuse may be practised either by deception of the authorities, or, as is affirmed is the case in the 12th arrondissement of Paris, by their connivance. Electoral "cartes" thus fraudulently obtained were actually offered for sale in an open manner in the departments, the price varying from 5 francs to 20 francs, according to circumstances. Thus we have already a practical proof that, with universal suffrage and vote by ballot, votes can be purchased as easily as any other article saleable in the market.

At the mairies of the several arrondissements, which served as the polling-places for the elections, the order, tranquillity, and facility of proceeding presented a remarkable contrast with the scenes we have been accustomed to witness on like occasions in England. The electors presented themselves at both the front of the mairie, in which were seated the officers appointed to examine their qualifications, which were attested upon the electoral cards offered by each voter. After this the voters were conducted to the interior of the mairie, where they received their respective ballot, and deposited by another door. All was conducted in perfect silence. There was no crowd collected at the doors, not above half-a-dozen voters were seen at one and the same time at the doors, and the number of the 12th arrondissement was sufficient, for the formation of a "queue," but this precaution did not appear necessary.

Late on Monday night the ballot-boxes closed, and the elections terminated. The general committee of the Hôtel de Ville met on Tuesday (yesterday), by an order of the Mayor of Paris, who also laid down the regulations to be followed on the occasion. The senior Mayor of Paris was to preside over the operation. The mayors of the several districts of Paris, and of the rural communes, accompanied by delegates from the central bureau, and of the bureaux of the cantons and arrondissements, were to assist, for the purpose of presenting their procès-verbaux of the elections, and the number of votes given in each section would then be examined and recorded. The examination being closed, the result was to be communicated to the Mayor of Paris and his adjoints. The candidates who should have obtained the 900 votes at least, according to the order of suffrages given to them, would then be proclaimed "representatives of the people" by the mayor of Paris. In the event of two candidates having an equal number of votes, the eldest candidate would be proclaimed. If the number of candidates who should have obtained two thousand votes and more be inferior to the number of representatives of the department, a new election for the completion of the representation was to take place in eight days.

Throughout Monday night considerable alarm was felt that the Clubs contemplated a coup de main. In point of fact, an attempt had been made by a body of armed men to break into the mairie of the second arrondissement, and to carry away the electoral ballot box of the arrondissement. Fortunately the affair was discovered in time to prevent the abduction, but was, however, so great, that the National Guards were called out, and large parties of them occupied the Hôtel de Ville and the twelve mairies of Paris during the night; the residence of all the members of the Government were guarded by detachments of National Guards, and all the sentinels were doubled. The night has, however, passed without any further disturbance.

It is stated that not more than one-half of the electors of Paris have exercised their right of voting at the election. The électeurs especially have shown very little anxiety to take part. This indifference has caused considerable uneasiness, as it is supposed that it proceeds from discontent, and that they have some scheme on foot of which the authorities and the public are yet in ignorance.

The Moniteur publishes decrees suppressing the octroi duties on pork, sausages, &c., and regulating the octroi duties to be levied on poultry, fish, truffles, oysters, butter, &c.

Another decree is published, placing two millions of francs at the disposal of the Minister of Public Works, for the continuation of the works on the Paris and Strasbourg Railway.

The Presse having stated that the workmen of the Ateliers Nationaux had been convoked at St. Maur, by M. Louis Blanc, M. Albert, and M. Flocon, to agree to a definitive list of candidates, but that M. E. Thomas and M. Jayme, directors of the Ateliers Nationaux, had prevented the meeting from taking place, the Moniteur says: "We are authorised to declare, in the most formal manner, that the statement made by the Presse is, in every respect contrary to the truth. The fact was, that the citizen Emile Thomas convoked the workmen formerly part of the Ateliers Nationaux to be passed in review at St. Maur; and that it was on the demand of the citizens Louis Blanc and Albert that counter-orders were given by the Minister of Public Works. Our readers may judge by this fact as to the degree of confidence which the rumours spread by certain newspapers merit."

A decree which has given much satisfaction has also been published, commanding that the National Guard (cavalry) of the city of Rouen, amounting to five hundred men, shall be incorporated with those of Paris, and that a corps of Lyonnais, amounting to seven hundred men, shall be incorporated with the body guard of the Republican Guard of Paris, consisting of one thousand five hundred men. No more volunteers are to be received for the National Guard (mobile) of Paris.

Another decree announces that "the Republican Guard of the Hôtel de Ville," consisting of six hundred men, shall form a special battalion.

La Liberté contains the following particulars relative to a grand banquet to be given on the 14th of May, to the National Guards and the troops of the line, at the Champ de Mars:—"Covers are to be laid for 80,000 guests. A contract has been made by the Minister of the Interior for 80,000 bottles of wine, and 80,000 pounds weight of bread. The guests are to be chosen by lot from La National Guard, the army, and the National Guard (mobile). Should the weather prove favourable, it will be the finest sight ever witnessed in France."

The Government have issued a decree ordering the Opera to open on Monday, because of some proceeding of M. Ducarl, and one which we have not seen has prevailed upon by M. Lamartine to recal his resignation.

We have an interesting account from Algiers. M. Ledru Rollin had sent there a Commissary with full and limited powers, civil and military, although Algeria is exclusively in the War Department. General Cavaignac would not receive the Commissary. The latter visited the camps, and at the head of a small escort, the cry of liberty. The Civic Guard and the respectable part of the people rose to down and trampled it under foot. The Governor-General declared that the country did not know a reign of anarchy, and threatened to ship off to [illegible] who then drew in his horns. The Governor-General has sent [illegible] the worst characters, and M. Cavaignac, [illegible] Bernager (the poet), [illegible] Rollin has been compelled by his colleagues to revoke his appointment of the Commissary.

During the week various rumours respecting the violent designs of the ultra-Republicans kept the peaceable part of the community in Paris in a state of great anxiety, but nothing occurred to justify their fears.

According to the sorting of detachments of votes, as drawn up to Thursday morning, M. Lamartine was at the head of the poll. His colleagues MM. Dupont (de l'Eure), Marrast, Arago, Marie, Garnier Pagès, Betmont, Carn, and Crémieux next; and then MM. Germain, Berenger (the poet), Sauvaire-Barthélemy, and other moderate Republicans. M. Albert (member of the Provisional Government) stood the 20th on the list in the Bourse section of the 1st arrondissement. MM. Ledru Rollin, Flocon, and Louis Blanc, not so high; but in some of the arrondissements, both for example, they had received many votes.

A curious fact connected with the election is stated. All the coalporters in Paris, and others residing at the Villette outside the barriers St. Martin, in which is situate the canal Harbor, voted for one candidate only, Prince Louis Napoleon, and, in anticipation of his triumph, are enjoying themselves "in surrounding cabarets and cafés.

Letters from Lyons state that the elections had gone on with tranquility and order in that city, but fears were entertained that there also the incomplete success of the late candidates would on occasion very serious disturbances.

In the department of the Aisne, MM. Odillon Barrot, L'Herbette, Vavin, and Quenaite (son of the Conventionalist) had been elected.

Generally speaking, was had. Menace had been exhibited on the part of the Parisians for the elective franchise. Fully one-third of those eligible had omitted voting.

An important decree of the Government had been issued, ordering, "because of its liability to cause uneasiness to the German States, and to commit the Republic in war with its neighbours," the dissolution and dispersion of the Germans assembled on the eastern frontier of France.

The decree caused a rise of prices on the Bourse on Wednesday, the Minister of Finance had, at the suggestion of M. Lamartine, agreed to leave the decision of the question to the National Assembly. The shares of the Bank of France had considerably improved, it being stated that it had come to an understanding with all the provincial banks for their interception with it. The bank of Bordeaux, however, had refused to accede to the arrangement.

SPAIN.

A decree had been issued for the construction of six engines of 350 horse power for six steamers, three of which were to be built in England. Another decree had also been issued for settling the quality of alloy to be mixed up with the coin of the realm.

Pursuant to a Royal ordinance of the 15th, the monetary unity of Spain is to be the real ineffective silver. The gold piece is to be the doubloon of Isabella, of the value of 100 reals. The silver pieces are to be the duro (piastre), of the value of 20 reals; the dem-piastre, of 10 reals; the peseta, of 4 reals, the decimeta, and the real.

The Madrid journals and letters of the 20th instant, which have reached us, are chiefly filled with details of the ceremonies of the court during its stay at Seville. The capital remained perfectly tranquil, but alarming accounts had been received from Catalonia of Carlist movements. The garrisons on the French frontiers were in consequence about to be reinforced.

Mr Bulwer, the English Ambassador at Madrid, having at the instance of Lord Palmerston addressed a note of remonstrance and advice to the Spanish Government, it was announced that the latter had taken the very unusual course of sending back Mr. Bulwer's note; and it is further understood that they have thought fit to cause a letter to be addressed to Lor Majesty Queen Victoria, demanding Mr Bulwer's recall.

PORTUGAL

The principle of direct instead of indirect election of representatives to the Chamber of Deputies, has been established by a late vote of the Chamber in Lisbon; the majority in favour of the proposition being 61 to 33.

ITALIAN STATES.

LOMBARDY.—The news of the surrender to the Piedmontese troops of the fortress of Peschiera, which we noticed last week, was premature. Some of the outworks had been captured, but nothing more. However, there was little doubt that it must shortly fall into the hands of King Charles Albert's troops. The war is progressing slowly. It was thought the Austrians would convey the stores of Peschiera into a bli kade. The following was the disposition of the troops up to the 20th inst.:—The Royal ... ed-quarters were at Volt ; the 1st Division, under General d'Arvillar, at Goito; the 2d Division, commanded by General Ferrero, between Goito and Borghetto; the 3d Division, under General Broglia, at Borghetto and Monzambano; the 4th, commanded by General Bès, within 1000 yards of Peschiera, and the division of reserve at Carsiana. Vicenza was garrisoned by 3000 volunteers, most of whom were completely armed and equipped. The French General Perrone had arrived at Turin, for the purpose, it was believed, of assuming the command of a division of a Sardinian army. The Austrian General Nugent was said to have crossed the Isonzo at the head of a corps of 20,000 men.

On the 19th a strong division of Piedmontese tried to surprise the advanced posts of the fortress of Mantua, but the garrison remained shut up in the fortress behind the ligatures. A few cannon shots were exchanged, without much effect on either side. The heavy artillery that was expected by the Piedmontese had arrived, and a vigorous attack upon Peschiera was hourly expected. After the bridge had been destroyed by the Austrians, at the affair of Monzambano, the inhabitants of that place assisted in crowds in the repair of it, even with their beams, planks, and tools, and assisted the Piedmontese in reconstructing the bridge, under the fire of the enemy.

The Provisional Government of Milan has called to arms the classes of 1826 and 1827. Their services will last three years. They have also addressed to Europe a manifesto, in which they declare that the conduct of Austria has rendered all arrangement between her and the Italians impossible. The document is of great length, and contains a full statement of the grievances and oppressions suffered by the Italians under Austrian domination. A new Austrian Rouge tariff had also been published by the Provisional Government, in which large reductions are made, both of import and of export duties.

The Gazette of the 19th, had turned out a circular letter, "The entire of Southern Tyrol has declared in favour of the good cause, with the exception only of the Valley of the Adige, which is kept in awe by the presence of the Austrian troops concentrated at Trentuan. The Piedmontese forces occupy the most advantageous position near Verona. The heavy artillery has arrived. Two convoys from Parma came to offer King Charles Albert the co-operation of their troops, which he accepted. Gen. Durando, with the pontifical division, was to blockade the fortress at Ferrara.

Among the various documents issued by the Provisional Government is an address to the bankers, merchants, and manufacturers of Lombardy, Moravia, and Bohemia, which it styles an explanation on their mutual interests. "The people of Italy," says this circular, "desire a congress at Rome, a uniform system of measures and coinage. No one can prevent us from doing this. Who wishes to wage war with us? The Council of War of Austria? It needs money for that, and where will it find any? Your credit is tottering, and you will soon see a loss at fifty per cent. Your finances were in a deplorable state even at the time when the Lombardo-Venetian territory paid annually twenty millions of florins into your coffers. That revenue is now no more. Your bankers, merchants, and manufacturers of the mountainous districts have lost the Italian market is shut to Austrian and Bohemian wares as soon as our commercial treaties are concluded. Austria can keep it open. Italy will that nation be which will be the first to enter into a commercial treaty with Europe. Italy! If Austria does not speedily come to terms of peace, it will be the only nation which will be for ever and most justly excluded from all commerce with us. Woe to Bohemia and Austria if they send a single band of volunteers against us. Only towards those who are compelled to take up arms against us will we prove magnanimous. As long as the war lasts, innumerable ships from every coast of Italy will blockade the Adriatic. Not a single ship will be allowed to enter Trieste or Fiume, unless bearing the cross branch."

The Concordia, Turin journal, of the 21st inst., announces the arrival at Spezzia of the French ship of war Eylau, three-decker, mounted by Admiral Baudin, two ships of the line, and a steam-frigate.

By a decree of the 17th inst., the Government has adopted the Italian tricolour, having the escutcheon of Tuscany.

According to the latest advices, a rumour prevailed of its being the intention of King Charles Albert to abandon the entire prosecution of the war of Independence. His Majesty, it was said, has intimated to the Provisional Government of Milan 1st. That he considers the Mincio as the extreme limit between Lombardy and Venetia. 2d. That Venice having constituted itself a Republic, he does not intend to enter the Venetian territories; and, 3d That the Austrians having abandoned Lombardy, with the exception of Mantua and Peschiera, he considers that his mission is fulfilled.

MODENA.—The Provisional Government of Modena, by a decree dated 10th instant, had admitted all the Israelites residing in the duchy to the enjoyment of all civil and political rights. They had also decreed the sequestration of all the property belonging to the ex Duke Francesco V., and invited the friendly Governments on whose territories any property of his should be situate, to sequester it for the benefit of the state of Modena and Reggio.

VENICE. The Gazzetta di Venezia continues to publish official decrees. All the property, moveable and immoveable, possessed in the united provinces of the Republic by the Archduke Ranieri is sequestered; and for the term of 10 days for the settlement of commercial transactions is extended to 20

ROME. The Epoca of Rome, of the 19th, contains a long Ministerial ordinance, which enacts that the notes of the Roman Bank shall be received as legal money for the space of three months, by the public banks and by private individuals.

During the same day considerable excitement prevailed, in consequence of the arrest of 60 or 70 individuals of the lower class of society, many of whom were armed with stilettos or pistols. They went through the streets begging, and refused to work. Their arrest was effected by the Civic Guard, under the direction of M. Galletti, the chief of the police. Sums of money, amounting to from 15 to 20 scudi, were found on several of them.

An English gentleman named Fitzgerald had been stabbed at a Custom-house in Ancona, on the 14th, in a scuffle with a sergeant of the Civic Guard.

The Lord Mayor sent for London.

Scarcity of money still continued to be severely felt in the capital.

The 18th from Rome states that tranquillity is restored; the workmen who had struck for an increase of wages, and menaced the population with an armed demonstration, have returned to their work.—Eight have been arrested. The Cardinal Legates of Ravenna, Urbino, and Pesaro, and the Bishop Delegate of Rimini, are recalled, and their offices to be filled by persons of the laity. The Jews are emancipated.

NAPLES.—Advices to the 17th state that King Ferdinand is so unpopular that he never ventured appeared inevitable.

SICILY. The Sicilian Parliament on the 13th instant proclaimed that King Ferdinand and his dynasty had forfeited all sovereignty over Sicily.

The following details are from the Palermo papers:—

"The Italian House of Commons met on the 13th, under the presidency of the Marquis de Torrearsa. At the opening of the sitting, the Minister for Foreign Affairs declared that Sicily was desirous to join the Italian League, and trusted that she would be able to defeat the intrigues of the King of Naples. M. Turrisi-Colonna observed that Sicily was bound to shake off her King, and proposed accordingly to declare on that very day that Ferdinand of Bourbon and his dynasty had to cease the throne of Sicily. M. Labrina said that perly could only choose a Sovereign in the families of Tuscany or Savoy. 'But,' added he, 'let us first think of ourselves. Let us organise our own resources, and prove to all that we are to be Italians. I merely shall decide whether we are to be a constitutional state, under an Italian Prince, or a Republic, should Providence smile on Italy.' After a few words from M. Forza, M. Interdonato exclaimed that the House should begin by proclaiming the downfall of Ferdinand and his dynasty, a Republican monarchy, the Government of an Italian Prince, and that the country should be saved. The adoption of the decree was then carried amidst the most enthusiastic applause."

The decree was as follows:—

"The Parliament declares—1. Ferdinand Bourbon and his dynasty are for ever fallen from the throne of Sicily. 2. Sicily shall govern herself constitutionally, and call to the throne an Italian prince, as soon as she shall have reformed her statuto.

"Done and resolved at Palermo, on the 13th April.

"The President of the Chamber of Commons,
"MARQUIS of TORREARSA.

"The President of the Chamber of Peers,
"DUKE of SERRADIFALCO.

"The President of the Kingdom,
"RUGGERO SETTIMO."

The town was to be illuminated the three nights following. On the 14th all the bronze statues of the house of Bourbon were thrown down, beginning with that of Philip V. That of Charles II. alone was spared, because he was a just and beneficent prince. Those statues were to be cast into cannon.

AUSTRIA.

The following are the heads of the Constitution which the Emperor has lately granted to his subjects:—

1. All the provinces are constituted into one body, with the exception of Hungary, Croatia, Sclavonia, Siebenbergen, and, for the present, the Italian provinces.
2. The division of the empire shall remain as it exists at present.
3. The person of the Emperor is sacred and inviolable
4. The Emperor has full power over the land and sea forces, and the right of making war or peace.
5. Treaties of every description with foreign Powers can only be made with the sanction of the two Houses of Parliament.
6. The attribute of mercy and the right of bestowing rewards belong to the Emperor; but mercy cannot be extended to the Ministers without the sanction of the Parliament.
7. The laws ... to be administered publicly in open courts by verbal pleadings, and trial to be by jury. The judges will be appointed for life
8. All projects of laws are to be proposed as well on ... question ... per
9. The Emperor will assemble the Parliament annually, and he must call them together at stated intervals. He has the right to prorogue and dissolve them.
10. Freedom of religion, speech, the press, petition, and public meeting is granted to every citizen, subject to future laws.
11. Entire liberty of conscience and religion.
12. The free exercise of religious worship is accorded to all Christians and Jews.
13. All citizens are equal in the eye of the law, and every citizen shall be tried by his peers.
14. The responsibility of the Ministers will be regulated by the Diet.
15. The legislative power is in the hands of the Emperor and the Diet.
16. The Houses of Parliament are to be composed with the qualifications for members of the Upper House ... birth and large landed property to be conferred by the Emperor. Members of the Lower House are to be chosen from all classes of society, under their every qualifications they may be represented.
17. The two Houses have the power to project laws and receive petitions.
18. All laws require the sanction of both Houses, particularly those relating to the expenditure, taxation, finance, and the sales of public property.
19. A law will be framed for the organisation of the National Guard. The law of election is only provisional, and will be settled by the first Parliament. Amendments of the Constitution can only be proposed by the Diet.

According to the latest advices, Vienna was in a state of perfect tranquillity; every appearance of disturbance, by a few ill-disposed persons, had been at once quietly suppressed.

In consequence of the formation of a responsible Ministry in Hungary, to which the financial affairs of the kingdom are confided, the Council of Ministers has prescribed the necessity of placing part of the public debt to the charge of Hungary. The Emperor has, by an autograph letter, approved of this.

PRUSSIA.

A letter from Breslau, dated 21st instant, states that the Central Committee of the Polish insurrection was in process of organisation in Posen, under the direction of one of the most distinguished of the Polish generals, and that all the accounts received from Russian Poland announced that the peasants were animated with the most hostile and most pacific feelings. From the fact that telegraphic communication between St. Petersburg and Cracow had been interrupted, it was surmised that insurrectionary movements had already occurred in the interior.

In Berlin all was quiet. An attempt to get up a demonstration among the working classes of the capital on Thursday (last week), against the present Ministry, had failed, and passed off in a disorderly fashion. Since then Berlin had relapsed into its wonted state of stagnant inactivity.

GERMAN STATES.

BADEN.—The small fraction of republicans who had raised the standard of rebellion had been put, under the leadership of two adventurers named Hecker and Struve, have been first some time past consulting dangerously in the villages near the Swiss frontier, and had compelled some of the male population to join their ranks. They were under the command of General Gagern, have at last come up with, and completely routed them. General Gagern had entered into a parley with the rebels, for the purpose of persuading them to give up their wicked design; but finding his arguments unavailing, and the ranks of the insurgents advancing closely upon him, he cut short the conversation with Hecker, and was on the point of mounting his horse, when the whole front fire at the rebels from all sides. Their troops, some have fell dead, others threw down their arms. This act of inhuman barbarity filled the troops with the greatest rage; they instantly attacked the rebels, killed more than one hundred of them; drove the remainder into the woods. They were then pursued, and the same fate awaited them. Struve is making a last unsuccessful effort, in violation of every law of war, has created but one cry of indignation wherever the news has reached. General Gagern was left dead on the ground, pierced through the heart. Prince Dar-stadt. He was a gr ... ears in the Dutch service, and was sent some time ago by the Dutch Government to Java, when that island was in a state of open revolt against the Dutch; it was principally by his influence and by his military measures that order was restored in that colony. He was but a fortnight ago selected by the Government of Baden to the command of its troops, since the Margrave of that land given up the command.

Hecker and Struve are said to have escaped.

DENMARK AND SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN

A second action has taken place between the Danes and the German Free Corps. The victory has been claimed on both sides, and the accounts of the affair are in some degree conflicting, but the weight of evidence is in favour of the account which gives the victory to the Danes. At an early hour on the morning of Friday, the 21st instant, the Berlin, Cologne, and Hamburg volunteers presented themselves in order of battle before a detachment of Danish dragoons and infantry, on the highway between Kiel and Eckernförde, in the wood of Schmalmacker.

The engagement immediately commenced with considerable spirit on both sides, and lasted till eleven in the forenoon, when the Free Corps were driven back. In the evening four waggons entered the town of Eckernförde, and it is evident that whatever military experience may be possessed by the commanders of the Holstein forces, it is totally disregarded by the Free Corps; the greater troops of Holstein, that is, the regiments who are in the pay of the Provisional Government, do not seem to use cellulons. The troops of the Confederation, Prussian and Hanoverian, have as yet been "kept in hand;" but the regiments of Cologne and Berlin have plunged at once into the fray with the most fatal result to themselves, and the effect of giving the confidence of victory to the Danes, though the latter, from being better armed and disciplined, probably fought at considerable advantage.

The King of Denmark, according to a bulletin published at Frederick on the 18th inst., had left on a journey into Schleswig he caught a cold, which has increased into bronchitis, and he has been bled and confined to his room, but he is now improving.

On the 19th the Danish Government laid an embargo on all the Prussian ships in the port of Copenhagen. The Copenhagen Post states that the embargo extends also to Mecklenburgh and Hanoverian vessels. Hamburgh and Lubeck are both warned that their neutrality will only be respected as long as they abstain from joining in any attack on Denmark.

At Kiauno, on the same day, the Prussian ships lying at anchor in the roadstead of that town had the colour of the police. Sums of money, amounting to from 15 to 20 scudi, were found on several of them.

An English gentleman named Fitzgerald had been stabbed at a Custom-house in Ancona, on the 14th, in a scuffle with a sergeant of the Civic Guard.

The Lord Mayor sent for London.

Scarcity of money still continued to be severely felt in the capital.

The 18th from Rome states that tranquillity is restored; the workmen who had struck for an increase of wages, and menaced the population with an armed demonstration, have returned to their work.—Eight have been arrested. The Cardinal Legates of Ravenna, Urbino, and Pesaro, and the Bishop Delegate of Rimini, are recalled, and their offices to be filled by persons of the laity. The Jews are emancipated.

NAPLES.—Advices to the 17th state that King Ferdinand is so unpopular that he never ventured appeared inevitable.

SICILY. The Sicilian Parliament on the 13th instant proclaimed that King Ferdinand and his dynasty had forfeited all sovereignty over Sicily.

The following details are from the Palermo papers:—

"The Italian House of Commons met on the 13th, under the presidency of the Marquis de Torrearsa. At the opening of the sitting, the Minister for Foreign Affairs declared that Sicily was desirous to join the Italian League, and trusted that she would be able to defeat the intrigues of the King of Naples. M. Turrisi-Colonna observed that Sicily was bound to shake off her King, and proposed accordingly to declare on that very day that Ferdinand of Bourbon and his dynasty had to cease the throne of Sicily. M. Labrina said that perly could only choose a Sovereign in the families of Tuscany or Savoy. 'But,' added he, 'let us first think of ourselves. Let us organise our own resources, and prove to all that we are to be Italians. I merely shall decide whether we are to be a constitutional state, under an Italian Prince, or a Republic, should Providence smile on Italy.' After a few words from M. Forza, M. Interdonato exclaimed that the House should begin by proclaiming the downfall of Ferdinand and his dynasty, a Republican monarchy, the Government of an Italian Prince, and that the country

States is to be maintained, after undergoing some reforms. The King is inviolable and Ministers are responsible.

The members of the provincial states are to be elected and renewed by thirds, like those of the Chambers. The King is to have the supreme direction of colonial affairs, but every second year he must lay before Parliament a detailed account of their administration and situation, and the Minister of that department will be obliged to communicate to the States-General any information they might desire respecting the colonies

The King commands in chief the army and navy, appoints, dismisses, and pensions the officers, according to the prescriptions of the laws. The Constitution recognises the right of citizens to hold meetings. Seigniorial rights are abolished and lay tithes redeemable.

RUSSIA.

From St. Petersburg we learn that, during the early part of the present month apprehensions were there entertained of a prohibition to export gold. Letters of the 15th, however, say that a ukase had just been received by the authorities of the customs from the Ministry, commanding that no obstacle should be opposed to the export of precious metals by s

The last number of the Warsaw Gazette brings the information that a deputation of Polish noblemen is to proceed to St. Petersburgh to petition the Emperor to reconstitute the kingdom of Poland, such as it was before the Revolution of 1830, and to place the crown upon the head of one of the sons of the present Polish empire (now in the possession of Prussia and Austria) to form one kingdom under Russian sovereignt.

The Russian regiments of the guards have left St. Petersburg; and are now stationed at B ...

TURKEY.

We learn from Constantinople of the 7th instant, that the greatest consternation had been created in the capital by the intelligence of the revolutions in Europe. The Porte was taking measures to strengthen and secure its fleets. Greek merchants were apprehended. The recruits raised in Albania were about arriving in the capital, and 7000 of them were to be incorporated in the regular army

The last mail was reported off the Edinburgh, Tuskar, at 40 minutes past 5 ... 3rd, with a cargo of the value of £2,000, on board.

EGYPT.

Mehemet Ali Pacha returned to Alexandria, from ... on the 3rd, in the French steamer Alexandre, after an absence of six w ...

... is still in a very precarious state of health, suffering the greatest debility both of body and mind

Ibrahim Pacha arrived here on the 2nd, in her Majesty's steamer Odin, in improved health, after his sojourn in Europe.

The Viceroy's medical attendants having declared his total unfitness to attend to the government of the country, Ibrahim Pacha caused the whole of the family and the most influential Pachas and Beys in the country to meet at Alexandria, and many consultations had been held to devise the best means to be adopted under existing circumstances.

It was finally decided that a council should be appointed, composed of Ibrahim Pacha as President; Said Pacha, his brother; Abbas Pacha, Mehemet Ali's grandson; and seven of the principal functionaries in the country, to take the government into their own hands, and assume Mehemet Ali's real title of Viceroy of Egypt, instead of ... Pacha, as hitherto, virtually the ... ler of Egypt, and as appointed this council, principally as a precaution ... for himself, as Mehemet Ali, although at times quite childish, still has his lucid intervals

UNITED STATES.

Advices to the 8th instant have been received during the week. The news partakes much of the same character as that received from the New World by the last mail. The intelligence of the 3 ... ratification of the treaty of peace by Europe had given a fresh impetus to the manifestations of sympathy on the part of the press, and the Senate had voted an official expression of their feelings on behalf of the French Republic. The official announcement of the Revolution had been received from the hon. R. Rush, the Minister in Paris. The news of the suspension of the Bank of France had excited lively apprehension in all the chief cities of the country. The intelligence from the seat of war is of a more later than our previous advices; but, with the exception that General Worth had withdrawn his charges against General Scott, and General Scott to use had transferred the Lieutenant Colonel Duncan and General Pillow, a feeling of interest has transpired. General Scott, however, returns speedily to the United States, having been superseded.

The question of taxation has arisen, which had become the law of the land, is to be borrowed within one year at six per cent. interest, payable (quarterly—principal not payable until after twenty years' certificates, with coupons attached, to be issued, signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, which will be current in the various banks assigned on the banks. Whenever the funds in the Treasury warrant, the Secretary is to buy up the stock at no price under par. It is supposed that only ten millions will be immediately wanted, though the whole will be eventually needed. The proposals would probably be submitted to European bidders.

CENTRAL AMERICA

The Government of Nicaragua have announced of the termination of the late difficulties with the Central American Governmen

The last advices also rebel the expedition as proceeding onwards to Granada, under the command of Colonel Cruzen. On demand of the Governor of Nicaragua the surrender of the prisoners, and an apology for the insult offered to the Mosquitian flag. The expedition reached Granada in safety, and matters were progressing favourably for delivering up of the prisoners, and by an apology to the effect demanded. The loss to our troops has been two killed, two wounded, and thirteen wounded. The loss of the Central Americans was more serious; twelve dead were buried by our men, and several found wounded afterwards died.

WEST INDIES

Accounts from Jamaica and the other islands have reached us during the week. The future prospects of the former were regarded as very gloomy, in consequence of the expressed determination of the Government to adhere to the Sugar Act of 1846, without modification. The Assembly and Council of Commerce had passed a series of resolutions deprecating that determination.

... Governor of Jamaica, had left Kingston for the purpose of meeting the Governor at Aux Cayes, the object of which was to put rid of the Commandant of that place, ... ublish p... ... ose a large body of people from the surrounding coast, entered the ... ... manding the General to be given up to them. That General Peltier ... ... would be an ... ... If opposed to the demand, he also was obnoxious to the invaders, he very prudently effected his escape from the town, and succeeded in reaching the shore, from the impunity which followed on this affair, it is very generally supposed that the President was at the bottom of this movement, to get rid of an officer not suited to his purposes

THE SHAKESPEARE BIRTHDAY FESTIVAL AT STRATFORD-UPON-AVON

THE twenty-fourth festival of the Royal Shakespearean Club of Stratford-upon-Avon, a band instituted to observe the natal day of William Shakspere, "wood Warwickshire Stratford upon Avon on the 23rd of April, 1564," was held on Monday last, the 24th inst., in the Town-hall of the ancient borough.

The year's festival drew a larger and more distinguished gathering than the club had been able to muster together on any previous anniversary, many of the London Committee for the purposes and preservation of the poet's house ... been present.

Lord Brooke, the eldest son of the Earl of Warwick, and one of the members, occupied the chair; and was supported by Viscount Mahon, as Viscount Villiers, M.P., the Earl of Bachan, the Hon Mr. Leigh (eldest son of Lord Leigh), Mr. Fitzgerald, Mr. Arkwright, Mr. Bracebridge, Mr. Dugdale, and John Payne Collier (the editor of "Shakspeare"), &c. About 100 persons sat down. The hall was tastefully decorated. Gainsborough's fine full-length portrait of Garrick, and Northcote's portrait of Sir John Fenton Boss of Dorset," had received careful cleaning from a "London hand." Singleton's series of paintings in illustration of Shakspere (some one hundred and twenty in number) were tastefully disposed around the walls.

A lady's gallery was erected for the occasion. The identical cup, made of Shakespeare's mulberry-tree, which the corporation of Stratford presented to David Garrick, in 1769, was brought from the house in which it has been preserved, and again upon the very table from which ... originally taken. After ... grace, to his mind on such occasions, the Chairman gave, with a few prefatory words, the first regular toast of the night, "The immortal memory of Shakspere."

Mr. J. Payne Collier spoke to the toast, and concluded an appropriate and eloquent address, by proposing the "Drama," a sentiment which was duly responded to, as also was the toast of "Wordsworth and the Poets of the Lake."

Lord Morpet followed next, with "Moore and the Poets of Ireland." It was a great treat, he observed, to escape as he had escaped from the dirty streets in the great metropolis, and to find himself on the banks of Shakspere's Avon. It was not about to pass any eulogium on this great poet. He traced that amid the crash of nations which we had now to witness the Russian, and the cause of which he and his colleagues to be a member, was far from inauspicious to the cause of genius. And Lord Orford's memorable sentiment of a well-balanced constitution, a combination of Monarchy, Aristocracy, and Democracy, was the true representation of the privileges of Government on behalf of which the Lords and Commons had a speech of great eloquence, filled with happy quotations from Shakspeare, concluded with a toast giving rise to the 56th session of the toast of "Moore and the poets of Ireland," he was asking for no more than "equal justice to Ireland."

Mr. Cunningham then proposed "The Memory of Burns, and the Poets of Scotland," which having been acknowledged, a few other complimentary toasts followed, and the festive meeting broke up at an advanced hour.

CHESTER CATHEDRAL.—Extensive works have been for some time past carried on in this cathedral. The choir has been restored and re-arranged; the cells which had never been finished; the roof of the choir has been replaced with substantial oak timbers, with solid beam ends; the unsightly galleries which disfigured the choir have all been taken away; the fine old screen, partly of black and white marble, and partly of carved oak, and a new stone screen (the gift of the Rev. W. P. Hamilton) has been placed between the choir and St Mary's Chapel. The bishop's throne, which was so much admired that it was difficult to decide what it had been originally, has been restored at the expense of the Rev. Canon Slade. The gift of the late Edward S Walker, of Chester, was designed by Mr. G. Gurney. It is in the decorated style, and stands, entirely detached, upon the north side of the choir. It stands about 22 feet high from the floor, and is octagonal in plan. The masonry was executed by Mr. Haswell, of Chester; the carving by Mr. Henry Pratt, of Birmingham. The restoration will proceed to remove wainscots

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE OF PRUSSIA.

CONFLICT AT MILAN.

The Porta Tosa, or, as it is now called, the Porta Victoria, is one of the principal gates of the city of Milan; and it was the only point during the late insurrection, where the people, after five days' fighting with the Austrian troops, succeeded in establishing a communication with their friends beyond the walls. The Austrians had three pieces of cannon within the gate, with which they fired along the wide street, or corso, leading from it; but their aim was so ill-directed, that no damage was done to the advancing parties, and the balls generally lodged in the second and third floors of distant houses.

On the right of the Sketch, the people are seen climbing over the roofs of the houses, and picking off the artillerymen as they stand to their guns, whilst others are setting fire to a mansion where several Croats had found shelter. On the left, the same audacity is displayed, but not with the same success, as the houses are more distant from the gate; and the Austrian cannon outside, in the bastions or boulevards, played incessantly on them.

In front are seen the fascines of brushwood bound with cords, which the brave Milanese rolled before them; and from under cover of which they kept up a murderous fire on the Austrian enemy. It is with difficulty believed that these fascines were not swept away by the first discharge of the artillery; in point of fact, they were never touched, as the artillerymen were totally demoralised, and none of them performed their duty with coolness. The post was taken at the close of the fifth day, by the Austrians being driven beyond the gate, and by a dash being made by the citizens, who, placing faggots and brushwood near it, and in the two houses at each side, set all on fire, and finally expelled the enemy. This operation was aided by the country people, who flocked to the spot, and by whose well-directed practice the Austrians were severely handled.

THE PRINCE OF PRUSSIA.

This Prince, whose arrival in this country, immediately subsequently to the recent Revolutionary proceedings in Berlin, and whose continued sojourn amongst us, have attracted some notice, is the brother of the reigning sovereign of Prussia, whose junior he is by only two years. He was born the 22nd of March, 1797, and holds the office of Lieutenant of the King in the Government of the province of Pomerania, and in the army the rank of General of Infantry, and commander of the Royal Guards.

He was married, the 11th of June, 1829, to the Princess Maria Louisa Augusta Catherine, daughter of Charles Frederick, Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, who was born the 30th of September, 1811, and has two children, Prince Frederick William Nicholas Charles, and the Princess Louisa Maria Elizabeth, the former 17, and the latter 10 years of age.

The Prince of Prussia cannot be said to be popular with his brother's subjects; and one of the reasons assigned for his present stay in England, which has been most generally believed, is the odium which had been lately excited against him in Berlin by the supposition that he was instrumental in causing the fusillade of the troops upon the people, which afterwards led to so sanguinary an encounter between the soldiery and the Berliners. On his arrival, however, in this country, a paragraph, apparently of an authentic and official character, was published in the leading journals, stating that the Prince had had nothing whatever to do with the proceedings of the troops on that melancholy occasion, and that his arrival in England was in no way connected with the revolutionary émeute in Berlin, but that, on the contrary, he had come on a special mission from his Royal brother to her Britannic Majesty. However the case may be, certain it is that the Prince's name is generally associated with the partisans of what is considered the retrograde party in Prussia.

Since his arrival in the metropolis his Royal Highness has mingled freely in the higher circles of the aristocracy, and last week he staid for some days on a visit to her Majesty, at Osborne.

During the present week his Royal Highness has passed some days at Strathfieldsaye, with the Duke of Wellington and a distinguished party of the nobility. When in town the Prince attends divine service at the German Lutheran Chapel, in the Savoy.

THE LATE MRS. HOFLAND.

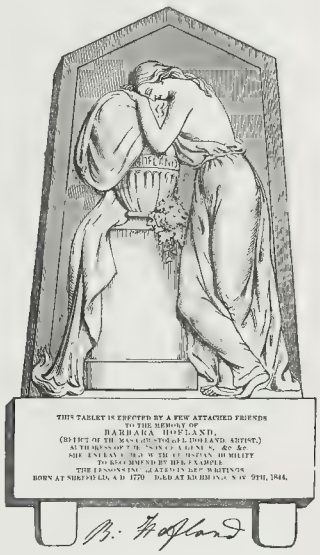
This neat tribute to the memory of Mrs. Hofland, the amiable authoress, has lately been erected at the Parish Church of Richmond, at a short distance from the mural tablet to Kean, the tragedian.



The tablet to Mrs. Hofland is a graceful composition, by Mr. E. W Wyon—the inscription table supported by two plain trusses, between which our Artist has placed the autograph.

Rock of Cashel.—We are glad to learn from a visitor, that the late fall of part of the ruins has not injured the general character or appearance of that very curious edifice to the extent which might be supposed from the account first received. The part which fell was the south wall of "the strong castle which served as the palace of the Archbishops of Cashel;" in its fall it carried with it a portico or porch to which was the principal entrance. It is supposed the catastrophe was caused by the frost of last winter acting upon a crack or opening in the wall, which had been observed for many years. The Great Southern and Western Railway being now open to Thurles (ten miles from Cashel), a [illegible] opportunity is thus afforded for visiting the "Rock" than formerly. (From a Clonmel Correspondent.)

Convicts.—It is said that application for four thousand five hundred conditional pardons for convicts in Van Diemen's Land has been recommended to the Queen by Sir William Denison, Governor of that colony. If this statement is correct, it is a most serious matter—the disproportion of punishment to the offence (more particularly at sessions and connected with the game laws) has been much commented upon of late, and it is to be feared with too much truth CONFLICT AT THE PORTA TOSA, MILAN.

GARDE MOBILE.—DRAWN BY GAVARNI.

GARDE MOBILE.—DRAWN BY GAVARNI.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

People looked forward with the greatest alarm to the general elections, the belief being almost universally entertained that they would occasion a fierce and bloody struggle. But they have passed off with the greatest order, in the most admirable manner. Not even a single row, nor a single display of ill-will, has been occasioned by them. During the two days—Sunday and Monday—on which the polling took place, Paris was as calm and as dull as it ever was, even in its calmest and dullest days. And yet on those days the people were exercising the right of universal suffrage all the male population, of 21 years and upwards, of a city containing a million souls, a city second only to London in the vastness of its population, were electing their representatives. There is no denying that the spectacle thereby presented was a proud and glorious one, and none can doubt that it will render great service to the democratic cause throughout Europe, by showing that the time has truly arrived in which the people are ripe for liberty and self-government.

The result of the elections will not be formally known before Friday, but there already exists good reason to believe that the people have put at the head of the poll none but moderate men, and in the foremost place of all the great and glorious Lamartine.

The opening of the National Assembly is, it appears, to be preceded by a grand banquet to the National Guard, the army, and the people, or rather to 80,000 persons representing them. The Minister of the Interior has already contracted for the supply of food and wine sufficient for this small dinner party. If the weather be fine the display will be an extraordinary one; but, unfortunately, one can scarcely dare to hope for fine weather, for the clouds seem to have vowed hostility to the Republic, inasmuch as they have poured down deluges of water on all its fêtes except one, and that one was the burial of the victims of the barricades.

One of the bitterest and best-founded complaints urged against the ex-Chamber of Deputies was that it contained an immense number of placemen, who, for the most part, were dependent on the Government. Singular to relate, a vast number of functionaries—somewhere about 1200—have stood as candidates for the Republican Legislature, and, what is still more singular, two hundred of them, at least, have, it is believed, been elected.

It is henceforth a check is to be placed on the subscriptions to new publications by the Government. Under the ex-Government most scandalous abuses were committed. One man, for instance, actually received £20,000 as the Government subscription to a work of no importance; another got a large subscription to a work which he promised should be completed in six parts, but which he carried on for fifteen or twenty years, the mere subscription covering all his expenses, and leaving him a handsome profit; whilst a whole host of the small body of littérateurs, especially such as were what was called bon pensant, i.e., favourable to the Government, coaxed or bullied the Government into subscribing for works which publishers would not buy and the public would not read. The literary pensions, indemnités, and gratuities awarded to authors by the Government are also to be distributed on a fairer principle; but loud complaints are made that the highest literary pension to be allowed has been fixed at £8 a month.

The revolution has completely annihilated the once famous Longchamps. There have been no promenades this year, if we except the ghost of one on the first day. What will the ladies do for the spring fashions? It was at Longchamps that they were adopted, or at least were supposed to be adopted. Poor Longchamps! It is hard that it should drop into the grave of oblivion, after centuries of glorious existence.

At Lyons there are some dangerous bands of armed men who call themselves by the sweet names of "the Voracious," and the "Empty Bellies." They keep the peaceable inhabitants in a continual state of terror, and the other day went up to the Government Commissary with a polite request to be allowed deux petites heures de pillage! At Bordeaux, Beauvais, Rouen, and a multitude of other towns also, the mob seem well disposed to allow themselves the innocent recreation of a few hours' pillaging.

No general improvement has taken place in the state of things in this capital. Trade is as depressed as ever; money as scarce; private fêtes as rare; and public rejoicings as thinly attended. Before the revolution the Boulevards and Champs Elysées used to be thronged every afternoon at this period of the year with dashing equipages; but now there are scarcely any to be seen. You may buy carriages, in fact, for a mere song, and have horses at a gift. But if all goes well on the meeting of the National Assembly, we shall soon see a striking improvement.

THE FETE OF FRATERNITY.

In our Postscript of last week we briefly noticed the grand Fête of Fraternity celebrated in Paris on Thursday, the 20th inst., when a cordial reunion was effected between the troops of the line and the National Guards of the capital and suburbs. As the proceedings on that memorable day will live in history, as the most extraordinary feature of the modern Revolutionary movement, as developed not merely in France but throughout Europe, we give this week some interesting details, which, accompanied by the illustrations, will present to the mind a vivid idea of that magnificent display.

Yesterday as five in the morning the drums were beat for the assembling of the different legions of the National Guards; by eight, all Paris seemed to have poured down into the streets. The day was dull, drizzly, and dreary, with grey dripping skies above, and an ocean of mud below; but the ardour neither of the actors in the mighty show, nor of the crowds of spectators, was to be damped. The countless throngs that poured along the Champs Elysées to the chief point of interest bewildered the imagination. The immense estrade erected beneath and before the Arch of Triumph, with its ascending galleries and tribunes, and decorations of Roman and Grecian attributes, was not without a certain grandeur of effect. Upon this estrade were assembled all the corps de l'état, the generals, the courts, and the tribunals, the wounded of the days of February, a variety of citoyens politiques, delegates from the schools, the commissions and associations of the working classes, and, finally, from the clubs. On either side, and in the climbing galleries behind, was a crowd of privileged spectators and ladies, admitted by tickets.

The ceremonies were announced to commence at nine o'clock; at eight already the tribunes had been filled, but it was nearly half-past ten before the main body of the members of the Provisional Government made their appearance; until that hour, excepting M. Crémieux, M Ledru Rollin had alone appeared upon the estrade. Spite of the falling rain and the bared heads, the crowd, although it pushed and waved hither and thither, was a good-tempered one. When the other members of the Government were at last assembled, the ceremonies of the day began forthwith. Lamartine looked, as he stood at one of the further extremities of the line, pale, wearied, and careworn, but erect and noble as ever: poor old Dupont de l'Eure, seemed sadly bowed down by the weight of his obligations as well as his years. An address to the armed force was read by Arago, as Minister at War. Then came the distribution of the banners to the Colonels of the different legions and regiments, as they mounted one after the other the steps of the estrade.

As each Colonel advanced to receive the colours he was addressed in a short speech by a member of the Government, who then saluted him with an embrace and presented him with the banner intended for his regiment.

About eleven o'clock began the révue monstre. Nothing could be more really imposing than the immense flood of bayonets, as it poured up the long avenue of the Champs Elysées, and mounted, like an inundating torrent, towards the Arch of Triumph. The different troops were mixed in the order of their approach—now it was a legion of the Garde Mobile, now a regiment of the line, now a legion of the National Guards, now the schools, now the associations of artisans, now cavalry, now infantry. The flood poured on, and on, and on, until the brain was distracted with the sight. Once or twice a regiment of the line and a legion of the Garde Mobile had joined, and came up together, side by side, like two distinct streams flowing on together, amidst cries of "Vive la Ligne!" "Vive la Garde Mobile!" and "Vive la Garde Nationale!" Of the streams flowing side by side, the poor Gardes Mobiles, with their ragged attire, formed the muddy one by the side of the more brightly-coloured uniforms; but there was a martial spirit and a discipline of bearing among these volun-

(Continued on page 278.)

GARDES MOBILES.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—First appearance of Mdlle. JENNY LIND. It is respectfully announced that Mdlle. Jenny Lind will have the honour to make her first appearance this season on THURSDAY NEXT, the 4th of MAY, as Amina, in Bellini's Opera of LA SONNAMBULA. This Night will be Included in the Se-

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT-GARDEN.—The Directors have the honour to announce that on TUESDAY NEXT, MAY 2nd, Rossini's OPERA entitled will be performed for the first time at this Theatre, a Commander by Mdlle. Alaria, in which she has last

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE. LAST WEEK BUT

ROYAL OLYMPIC THEATRE. Mr. DAVIDSON, Lessee and Manager.—Overflowing Houses

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE ROBERT-HOUDIN Mr.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Immense hit of the Easter Spectacle. Overflowing Houses

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the MUSICAL UNION, TUESDAY, MAY 2nd, at Half-past Three o'Clock. WILLIS'S ROOMS. Quartet in G (Mozart), Trio in D Flat, (Beethoven); Quartet in A, Op. 18 (Mendelssohn). Executants, Herr Ernst, Mr. Hill, Mr. Mellon, and Piatti. Pianist, M. Billet. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each, to be had at Cramer and Co., 20, Regent-street. Members introduce VISITORS, on pay

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES, PRINCESS'S CONCERT ROOMS, Oxford-street. Three Nights Monday, May 1, and two following Mondays, when the course of the season and termination of the present subscriptions. Single tickets 7s each. Weekly subscription, 21s. Quadrilles conducted by Mons. MD. ZO Corbin. Doors open at 11, commence at 8. Tickets and programmes at 21, Soho-square.

CROSBY HALL, Bishopsgate-street. MESMERISM. Mr. SPENCER T. HALL respectfully announces to those who wish to profit of Mesmerism

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, REGENT'S-PARK.—Visitors are admitted WITHOUT ORDERS, on the payment of SIXPENCE each on MONDAYS, and ONE SHILLING each on the four following days. Children under twelve years of age, on payment of Sixpence each, on all days except those of Fêtes.

EXHIBITIONS of PLANTS, FLOWERS, and FRUIT, for PRIZES to be awarded by the ROYAL BOTANIC SOCIETY, Regent's-park, Wednesdays, May 10, June 14, and July 5th. Tickets to be had of the Fellows, price 5s. or on the days of Exhibition, 7s. 6d. each

SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.—The EIGHTEENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION will OPEN MONDAY, MAY 1st, at their GALLERY, PALL-MALL EAST. Open from Nine till Six. GEORGE FRIPP, Secretary

INSTITUTION of the PRIZE EXHIBITION of MODERN

SOYER'S PHILANTHROPIC GALLERY.—In a few days

MODELS of the TABERNACLE and ENCAMPMENT of ISRAEL, by the Rev. ROBERT HARTLEY, M.R.S.L. VIEWED from 10, PALL MALL, to 6 P.M. Twelve doors west of Exeter Hall, will be EXHIBITED on MONDAY NEXT.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK

SUNDAY, April 30.—Low Sunday. Venus rises at 4h. 2m. A.M.; Mars sets at 5h. 28m. A.M.

MONDAY, May 1.—St. Philip and St. James. The Moon is near Mercury, Venus, and Uranus.

TUESDAY, 2. Day breaks at 2h. 0m. A.M.; and twilight ends at 9h.

WEDNESDAY, 3. Oxford Term begins. Cambridge Term begins. New Moon

THURSDAY, 4. The Sun rises at 4h. 2m. and sets at 7h. 26m.

FRIDAY, 5.—The length of the day

SATURDAY, 6. St. John, ante Port. Lat

During the month of May the planet Mars is situate near to Castor and Pollux. (See the diagram in the "Illustrated London Almanac," showing their relative position.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 6

| Wednesday 1 | Thursday 2 | Friday | Saturday |
|---|---|---|---|
| A M | A M | A M | A M |
| P M | P M | P M | P M |

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"——" [illegible] The eldest son of an heiress is not entitled to

"——" [illegible] Daughter to the Princess Marie Caroline de Bourbon, Princess Leopold, of Salerno. The style of Highness to Joinville is Joinville Prince de Capoue, Joseph, daughter of the late Emperor, of Brazil. The present Lord Byron is cousin german to the poet,

"——" [illegible] The Duchess of Cumberland is daughter of Frederick Louis, late Hereditary

"P. P. C." [illegible]

"J. O., Northwich, should apply at either of the Government dockyards.

"H. S. M."—There is no authority for the usage of a ducal coronet by the Archbishop of Canterbury

"S. W."—[illegible] is her Majesty's private residence, and is, of course, not open to the public

"——" [illegible] A messenger may be sent more than once through the

"Kilkenny."—The office of the Canada Company is at 13, St. Helen's-place

"A Sheffield Cutler."—A father may appoint his son executor of his will; but an executor cannot also be a witness of the same will

"T., Scarboro'"—We must decline the Translations. Persons who wish to purchase particular books should write to the "Publishers' Circular," Fleet-street.

"An Old Subscriber, Brompton-square.—Clark's "Heraldry," last edition, published by Washbourn

"A Regular Subscriber"—Troubadour. There is not any edition of Campbell's "Gertrude of Wyoming" of a size to suit the London Art-Union Etchings. Of "Pilgrim's Progress" there is, however, such an edition

"A. S."—Swindon.—We have not room for the song this

"G. F. M. D."—Lisbon, is thanked; but we have not room to insert the Sketch.

"Two Constant Readers."—"Tate's Principles of Geometry," 3s. 6d.

"O. P."—We have Lamartine's signature before us. He writes his name without any accent; and, if we are to be mistaken, we have heard him pronounce it as we recorded last week. To set the question at rest, we will take information on the

"——" [illegible] Musical Society, the Sacred Harmonic

"——" [illegible] man, but of what family we do not

"——" [illegible] ——, ex-King of France, and Henry, Duc de Bordeaux, a

"——" [illegible] having a common ancestor in Louis XIII., King of France. The monarch's eldest son, Louis XIV., was great great great great grandfather of the Duc de Bordeaux, and his second son, Philip, Duc d'Orleans, great great great great grandfather of Louis Philippe. The Duc de Bordeaux is grandson of Charles X.

"S. M.," Canton, is thanked for the Sketch, though we cannot avail ourselves of it.

"C. C."—Penrith, is thanked; but we have not room.

"T. K.," Oxford. Thanks

"Omega," Edinburgh. We do not remember ever having recently published on

"——" [illegible] Mackenzie's "Guide to Australia." (Orr and Co.)

"——" [illegible] is not sent

"J. M.," Aberdeen.—We have not room for the Engraving of the new Church

"——" [illegible] whose tombstones, signifies "Requiescat in Pace" ("May he

"——" [illegible] Probably in a month or so

"——" [illegible] If marriage of a man with his deceased wife's sister, under any circumstances, is illegal.

"M. W. S." Coventry.—The House of Lords may be seen, by gratuitous ticket, on

"——" [illegible]

"E. T." Belfast. No. 305 of our Journal is only sold with No. 306 All Numbers dated beyond a month back are 1*d. each*

"Several Mechanics." Penrith.—Refer to Richardson's Dictionary, 2 vols. 4*to; or, abridged,* 1 vol. 8*vo*

"A Commercial Traveller." Manchester. See in No. 207 of our Journal, the mode by which children are admitted into the Blue Coat School

"——" [illegible] Mormonite is to be observed.

"A. M. N."—Mr. Caroline Scores is the Secretary and Manager of Troops on the London and South-Western Railway.

"G. E. D.," Market Bosworth.—By Act of Parliament (2 Vic., c. 12) the printer of every paper or book intended for publication must affix his imprint to the same: penalty for omission, £

"Quelp"—Is the question by Lindley?

"Cuticlina."—We have not seen the work

"F. F.," Rathbone-place—Indeed!

"Query." Newspapers may be sent to the British Colonies free of postage, if posted within seven days of their publication.

"An Amateur," Belfast." Smart's "Practice of Elocution." Knight's edition of Shakespere

"A Constant Subscriber," Chelsea.—*The issue of Bank of England £*1 *and £*2 notes ceased in 1821; though they were again issued on the emergency in 1825.

"An Old Subscriber." The price of "Real Life in India" is 5*s*

"Clericus." The bat is a mammiferous animal. We have not room to reply further

"A Constant Reader," Taunton.—We are not acquainted with the system.

"Fanny," Peckham. A memoir of Richard Lander appeared in the "Literary Gazette" soon after his death

"Mordecai."—See Peters's Account of New Zealand. (Smith and Elder.)

"Somerset"—We do not know of any uniform series of Lives of the Kings of England

"W. H. B.," Amesbury.—See "Chattè's History and Practices of Wood Engraving," just reprinted from our Journal.

"Pulex." It is impossible, within our limit, to reply satisfactorily to your question.

DECLINED.—"W. P. D.," Manchester; "——" Z." Liverpool; "Y. F. W.," "A. G.," Hemel Hempstead; "Boots a Soc?" "A Subscriber" "S. Wallace." "Outlaw." "An Orphan." "G. S. R.;" "Parochialis" (four questions;" "A. Z.," Kendal

* * The View of the Kensington Common Meeting, in our Journal for April 15 from a Daguerreotype by Kilburn and Co., Regent-street.

ERRATA. At page 269, in the account of the Government survey of London, for "Black Marks" read "Bench Marks." And the Rev. Mr. Hartshorn's Models of the Tabernacle, and Encampment of Israel, were last week stated to be on sale and on view at the Egyptian Hall, instead of 58, Pall Mall. They are now to be seen at the Bedford Gallery, 303, Strand

BOOKS RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Rose, Blanche, and Violet. 3 vols.—Fashion. By Mrs. Maberley. 3 vols.—Ireland Before and After the Union. Memoir on the Constitutional Rights of Schleswig and Holstein from the Danish Yoke. By Edm. Burke.—Louis Philippe. Cradock.—Notes on the Nobility. No. 2.—Lucretia A Tragedy.—The Bubble of the Age.—A Ramble about Hastings and St. Leonard's.—De La Veye's Pictorial French Grammar.—Da La Veye's Les Jeunes Narrateurs.—Mrs. London's Glimpses of Nature.

MUSIC.—"Victoria and our Native Land."—"The Gipsey's Life is a Joyous Life."—"Early Flowers."

INSTALLATION OF THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.—The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for Saturday next, May 6, will contain a Series of Illustrations of the Grand Ceremony of the Enthronization in the Canterbury Cathedral, on Friday the 28th instant

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1848.

THE question vexata of the right of the Danes to the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein has been brought unhappily to the issues of battle; and war rages in the north as furiously as in the south of Europe. The districts in dispute are not of great extent; but their possession is of much importance to the contending powers. Independently of the political and commercial considerations connected with the struggle, the people of England may be excused for taking more than common interest in the fate of a country from which their early progenitors immigrated, and one district of which, that of Anglia, gave us not only forefathers, but a name.

The question is a complicated one in itself, and has been rendered more so by the precipitancy of the King of Prussia. This in march, it seems to us, has somewhat unceremoniously, and very mischievously, thrust himself into the fray, in order to acquire popularity in Germany—a popularity of which, individually, he stands very greatly in need. There is one dispute between Denmark and the two Duchies—a second dispute between Denmark and the German Confederation. According to present appearances, the small but brave nation of the Danes is very well able to maintain itself against both parties. The insular position of Denmark—her strong, well-manned, and well-disciplined navy—and the utter powerlessness of Prussia and the other States of the Germanic Confederation at sea—give her great advantages. In addition to these, she has achieved a temporary victory over the German party, by gaining the first battle upon land.

A memoir upon the whole subject, presented to Lord Palmerston by the Chevalier Bunsen, on the 6th of April, has just been published by command in the form of a pamphlet, together with an essay by M. De Grunor, and all the official documents relative to it. The Chevalier Bunsen makes out a strong case against the Danes. Though it is greatly to be desired that there should be no weakening of such a power as Denmark, and that she should be maintained intact in territory, and increased in resources, we dare not to confess, that, as far as we have been enabled to judge, Denmark, whatever may be her might, has little of the right on her side. The difficulty that has now arisen has long been foreseen, and has been discussed in Germany and Denmark with more or less vehemence for the last twenty years. The question briefly stated is this: Schleswig and Holstein are inhabited by a mixed population, the great majority of which is German, and not Danish. Both claim to be states of their own right, independent of Denmark, and to enjoy liberties, unknown in Denmark, secured to them by ancient charter. They yield allegiance to the present reigning family, and only assert a right of succession, after the death of the King of Denmark, by which they will pass de jure and de facto into the Germanic Confederation. They allege that the Duchies never can be separated one from the other, and that the male line alone can succeed in either. The absence of heirs male to the present Royal family has raised the controversy; and the controversy, unhappily, quickened by the revolutionary excitement of the time, has ended in an appeal to arms.

The dynasty which now rules Denmark is a branch of the Oldenburg family, which is divided into two principal lines—the elder or Royal line, and the younger or Gottorp line. We borrow the details from M. De Grunor.

The Royal line is subdivided in two branches; viz., the elder Royal line, which occupies the throne of Denmark, and the younger Royal line, whose members hold the position of landed proprietors in the two duchies, and which is again subdivided in two branches; viz., in the direct house of Augustenburg, and in that of Glucksburg, also Beck.

The Gottorp line, also, has two principal divisions, of whom the elder occupies the imperial throne of Russia, while the younger branches off in two other separate lines; viz., in the Wasa branch, which formerly reigned in Sweden, and of which the Prince of Wasa is at present the only male representative, and in the grand ducal house of Oldenburg.

All these numerous branches of the Oldenburg family issued from Christian I., Count of Oldenburg, the first of his race who reigned over Denmark Proper. He was offered the crown in 1448 by the estates of the kingdom.

Christian I., in his quality as an elected King, had no title to the Danish throne, and his descendants could not, therefore, claim any hereditary rights; but the estates of the kingdom from that time forward conferred the hereditary upon none but princes of the House of Oldenburg; and when this House branched off in the above-mentioned two lines, they chose their Kings exclusively among the princes of the elder Royal line. It was as late as 1660 that the States General of the kingdom offered the absolute power and an hereditary title to the crown, to Frederic III., who was then the head of the elder Royal branch. Up to this time the kingdom of Denmark had been a constitutional and elective monarchy; but from that year it was, for the benefit of the elder Royal branch, transformed into an absolute and hereditary kingdom. On the strength of his title, as first possessor of the hereditary crown, and by the power which the estates had given him, Frederic III. established the order of succession to the throne of Denmark by the statute of 1665, which is more generally known by the name of "the Royal law," and according to which the crown of Denmark should be hereditary for all his descendants, no matter whether male or female, adhering to the right of primogeniture, but in such a manner that no person who should not succeed to the throne unless there was none of his male descendants in existence.

There being no prospect of heirs to the present King, the male line of the elder Royal branch threatens to become extinct. If it does so, the crown of Denmark Proper will descend to the King's aunt, and after her death, she being childless, to the Prince Frederick of Hesse-Cassel.

The cabinet of Copenhagen claims this succession, excepting merely some parts of Holstein, for the female line of the Royal House of Denmark; that is to say, for the female line of the elder Royal branch of the House of Oldenburg; and it even expresses the intention of conserving as its own favour the inequality in the succession, the male line of the younger Royal branch, on the other hand, viz., the ducal families of Augustenburg and of Glucksburg, and indeed the bulk of the inhabitants of both duchies, protest that the eventual succession belongs to the male line of the younger Royal branch—namely, to the Duke of Augustenburg

It is deeply to be regretted that this family question should have led to war; and that Denmark, whether right or wrong, should have allowed no voice in the matter to the people of Schleswig and Holstein themselves. The latter object to the union with Denmark on the threefold ground of nationality, interest, and right. Nationality, because they are Germans, not Danes; interest, because as a portion of the Germanic Confederation, they can secure a constitutional liberty, which they do not expect from Denmark, or believe in at her hands, although it has been promised; and right, because, after the death of the present King, they fully believe in the legitimate claim to the succession of the Duke of Augustenburg. Had the King of Prussia not interfered, it is possible that a mediation might have been attempted with happier results: but at present it is difficult to anticipate the course of events, or to speculate on the probable extent of the mischief that may ensue.

LORD PALMERSTON, who, with undoubted ability, has a knack at interference with the affairs of friendly nations, that is both gratuitous and impertinent, and likely to lead to mischief, has committed a new escapade of this kind. His Lordship's attempt to bully the Government of Greece was bad enough, but the tone he has assumed towards Spain is still more offensive and uncalled for. Unsatisfied, it appears, with the arbitrary policy of Narvaez, he has taken it upon himself to recommend a different course by a despatch to Mr. Bulwer, our Minister at Madrid, to be communicated to the Duke de Sotomayor. This despatch was so haughty in its tone—so dictatorial and insulting in every way, that the Duke de Sotomayor thought it incumbent upon him to return the document to the sender, and to demand of the British Government the recall of Mr. Bulwer. Though Lord Palmerston might have had a right to be dissatisfied with the progress of events in Spain, he had no right to interfere in this manner; and the public opinion of this country, if we mistake not, will not only approve of the spirit shown by the Spanish Minister, but very cordially disapprove of Lord Palmerston's meddling.

These are times when the greatest caution and discretion are needed in the conduct of our foreign affairs, and when one false step on the part of our Government may cause, not merely ill-will on the part of nations with which it is our interest to keep on good terms, but differences that may lead to embroilment and hostility. Lord Palmerston has acquired quite fame enough for daring. It is time he should try what credit he can gain by the more estimable quality of prudence.

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the past week has been very gloomy; the sky has been almost wholly covered by cloud, and rain has fallen frequently; it is seldom that we have a period of such gloomy, dull, and wet weather at this season of the year as we have had recently. The following are some particulars:—

Thursday, with the exception of a short time during the morning, the sky was overcast, and rain to the depth of half an inch fell during the afternoon and evening; the direction of the wind was N.E.; the average temperature for the day was 49½°: Friday, the sky was overcast all day, and rain fell four at different times during the afternoon; the direction of the wind was N.; and the average temperature for the day was 51°. Saturday, the sky was overcast all day, and rain was falling frequently during the morning; the direction of the wind was N.W.; the average temperature for the day was 45°. Sunday, with the exception of a few breaks in the early part of the morning, the sky was overcast; the temperature was 47½°. Monday, the sky was cold and gloomy; its average temperature was 47½°. Monday, the sky was covered by cloud all day, and rain was falling frequently; the direction of the wind was N.; the day was very cold and comfortless; its average temperature was 44½°. Tuesday, the sky was overcast all day, and rain was falling frequently; the direction of the wind was N.N.W.; the day was very cold and gloomy; the average temperature was 42½°. Wednesday, the sky was at times overcast, but it was for the most part free from cloud; some rain fell in the morning; early in the morning the temperature of the air was as low as 34°; the direction of the wind was N.N.E., and the average temperature for the day was 44½°; and that for the week ending this day was 46.

In the following are the extreme and semi-metrical readings for each day:

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Thursday, | April 20, the highest day was | 49 deg., | and the wind was | E. |
| Friday, | " | 21, | " | N. |
| Saturday, | " | 22, | " | N. |
| Sunday, | " | 23, | " | N. |
| Monday, | " | 24, | " | N. |
| Tuesday, | " | 25, | " | N. |
| Wednesday, | April 26, | | | |

Blackheath, Thursday, April 27, 1848. J. G

POSTSCRIPT.

IRELAND.

STATE PROSECUTIONS.—On Thursday morning, in the Court of Queen's Bench, [illegible] was in the case of Mr. Mitchell on the preceding day, [illegible] sequel in the cases of Messrs. Meagher and O'Brien, and subsequently [illegible] against those gentlemen. Mr. Meagher immediately entered an appearance. Mr. O'Brien being out of town was allowed until Monday to make his appearance.

The contested election for the County Wicklow terminated on Wednesday, in the return of the Whig candidate, Sir Ralph Howard, who had a majority only of [illegible] over the Conservative candidate, Mr. Charles Stanley Monck; the numbers [illegible]

The Lord Lieutenant has issued a circular to the magistrates of various towns, requiring them to swear in special constables.

NEWMARKET RACES.—FRIDAY.

Handicap Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each. D.M.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Sir Peter Laurie | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | 1 |
| Pantaloon | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | 2 |

Newmarket Stakes of 50 sovs each. D.M.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Glendower | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | 1 |
| Coriolan | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | 2 |

Won easy.

The installation of Dr. Hampden, as Bishop of Hereford, took place on Thursday in the Hereford [illegible] in presence of a body of the clergy and laity. [illegible] of the proceedings a document, said to be a protest from the Dean of Hereford, was handed to the [illegible] Canon Musgrave, who presided, in the absence of the Dean, Dr. Merewether.

GENERAL POST-OFFICE, APRIL, 1848.—On and after 28th inst. any money order presented through a bank will be paid without the name of a remitter, and the signature in full of the Christian name of the payee being insisted upon as a condition of payment, provided that the bank be situated in the town on which the money-order is drawn, that the order be crossed with the banker's name, and that the party applying at the Money-order-office be known there as on the employment of the bank. It must be understood, however, that in all such cases the liability of the Post-office will absolutely terminate with the payment of the order so presented.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

The Prussian troops and the Danes have come into collision, and a sanguinary battle between them is stated to have taken place, which [illegible] terminated in the surrender of the city of Schleswig to the Prussians. The following is the official despatch

"Head Quarters, Schleswig, April [illegible], 1848. Eleven o'Clock at night.—To the whole Provincial Government of the Duchy of Schleswig-Holstein. I have the honour to transmit to the Provincial Government the joyful intelligence that, after an obstinate engagement of several hours, the Danes had been defeated, and the city of Schleswig, so far as the Gottorp Schlossdamm, fell into our hands about two o'clock this afternoon.

"The attack was afterwards renewed by the left wing, whereby the city of Schleswig was surrounded, and our troops penetrated as far as the Chaussée at Flensburg. At half-past seven the battle was over. In consequence of the advance of the troops, the whole of the Danish [illegible] encompassing the city, the castle of Gottorp was evacuated by the Danes.

(Signed) "VON WRANGEL, Royal Prussian General of Cavalry."

The place, which was obstinately defended, was taken by the Prussians at the point of the bayonet, without waiting for their artillery. The next day the Federal troops marched beyond Schleswig, and their advanced party had in the evening entered Flensburg.

General Von Wrangel has assumed the command-in-chief of all the German Federal troops serving in the Duchies.

FRANCE

THE ELECTIONS.—Although the result of the Paris elections could not be officially ascertained until yesterday (Friday), yet on Thursday enough was known to enable us to judge as to what the result will be. An account of the polling in a great number of the sections into which Paris is divided has been already published, and it is a remarkable fact that, with one exception, [illegible] and M. Arago, or, in other words, the members of the Provisional Government, are at the head of the poll, while MM. Ledru-Rollin, Louis Blanc, Albert, and Flocon, who had addressed themselves to the masses, and were supposed to be their favourites, were left lagging behind. These appear to be, no doubt, however, that the whole of the members of the Provisional Government will be returned among the thirty-four representatives. In all the arrondissements inhabited by the respectable citizens M. Ledru Rollin was either without a vote at all, or in a great minority.

SWITZERLAND.

The Diet has not yet come to its [illegible] stage of 1847. Before separating it adopted the report of the committee charged with the distribution of the sums subscribed in favour of the victims of the war against the Sonderbund. It referred to a [illegible] the demand of the Cantons Uri, Schwitz, Zug, and Unterwalden, for [illegible] of the [illegible] of sequestration taken off which had been placed on the ammunition [illegible] belonging to Lieut, and seized at Constance. It also heard several communications relative to the events occurring in Germany.

SICILY.

A letter from Palermo states that the Sicilians have offered the crown of Sicily to Charles Albert, or his heir. The Grand Duke of Tuscany was, it is said, talked of, but it was thought that he was not of sufficient weight to protect Sicily against Naples.

IRELAND.

STATE PROSECUTIONS.

On Wednesday, in the Court of Queen's Bench, the Attorney-General entered a Nolle prosequi, on the part of the Crown, to the bills found by the Grand Jury against Mitchell, and stated it was his intention to file an ex-officio information against him.

This proceeding was in consequence of the plea filed by Mr Mitchell, which would lead to considerable delay previously to the merits of the case being entered into.

At a subsequent period of the day Mr. Mitchell, being in court, was served with copies of the informations entered against him.

In the afternoon of Wednesday it was stated, and generally believed, that the Privy Council had ordered the city of Dublin to be proclaimed, and an immediate search to be made for arms.

THE REPEAL MOVEMENT

On Thursday evening (last week), at a general meeting of the Confederate Repeal Clubs in Dublin, the following resolution was agreed to:—

"Resolved,—That inasmuch as the circumstances of the present time require that every man should hold himself in readiness to take up arms in defence of his country, and that the names of those who are willing to perform so sacred a duty should be known to the British Government and to their fellow countrymen, it is recommended that the following declaration be signed by all Irishmen between the ages of 18 and 60, who are willing to serve as members of a National Guard:—

"We, the undersigned, hereby declare that we are willing to enrol ourselves as members of a National Guard, for the purpose of preserving the public peace, to prevent the Irish land against all foes, domestic and foreign, that we are prepared to furnish ourselves with suitable weapons and accoutrements, and are resolved to hazard our lives in defence of our country, in case any emergency may arise which may require our services in its behalf."

The "declaration" has been signed by several thousands.

With a view of suspending all verbal drilling, the Government has addressed a circular to the magistrates at petty sessions, calling attention to the act 56th George III., and 1st George IV. chap. 1, by which all persons training and drilling others, or attending meetings for the purpose of doing so, or who shall aid or assist in drilling, are liable to be punished by transportation or imprisonment, and those who are trained or drilled, or shall attend for that purpose, to fine, and imprisonment, at the discretion of the Court of Assize or Quarter Sessions.

The seditious spirit of the articles in the United Irishman and Nation newspapers continues unabated.

On Saturday evening last, a prelim nary meeting (the first) of the Protestant Repeal Association was held at their temporary rooms in College-green. The [illegible] was both numerous and respectable, far exceeding the anticipations of the promoters of the movement. The assembly was addressed, amongst others, by Mr Samuel Ferguson, a barrister, and a gentleman favourably known in the literary world; he was followed by Mr. Ireland, also a barrister, and both spoke as well mark. By calmness, moderation, and plain sense. A general meeting is shortly to take place.

MEETING OF PROTEST CHARTISTS AND IRISH REPEALERS.—An adjourned meeting of the citizens of Dublin was held on Monday at the Princess Theatre, for the purpose of adopting "the best, surest, and shortest plan [illegible] Union, by [illegible] number a league between the Repealers and [illegible] of Great Britain for that purpose, and based upon the principle of a full, free, and complete representation of the people in the Commons' House of Parliament." Mr. James Leach and Mr. Samuel Kidd, members of the Chartist Convention, attended as delegates from the Engl sh Chartists, to promote the objects of the meeting. There were not more than 300 persons present when Mr. John Mitchell occupied the chair. Resolutions in accordance with the objects of the meeting were, after the delivery of several speeches, agreed to.

CONCILIATION HALL.—The Repeal Association held their usual meeting in Dublin on Monday, Mr. James Mahony, C.C., in the chair. The police were preparing notes. An address was read from the committee of the Association, referring to the recent declaration of London in favour of Repeal, and recommending the people that similar declarations should be made throughout the nation and the Reform Act shortly pre [illegible] the restoration of both those great measures. The Repealers, there [illegible] to courage and confidence, [illegible] that there was no cause for [illegible] Mr. Reynolds, M.P. for Dublin, addressed the meeting on the Crown [illegible] government Security Bill. The hon. member was received with considerable enthusiasm. Rent for the week, £30.

ADDRESS TO THE LORD LIEUTENANT.—On Saturday the high sheriff and the foreman and gentlemen of the grand jury of the county of Dublin waited on His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, at the Viceregal Lodge, and presented an address of loyalty and devotion to the Queen, and of confidence in His Excellency's government of this country. The address was read by Mr. James Hans Hamilton, M.P., in the capacity of foreman of the grand jury. His Excellency returned a suitable reply.

EXECUTIONS.—On Thursday (last week), Michael Ryan and Thomas Fitzgerald were executed at Limerick, in pursuance of the sentence passed on them at the late assizes; the former convicted of the murder of Honoria Ryan, the latter of the murder of John M'Geary. Fitzgerald in presence of the people and a [illegible] confessed the crime for which he was about to suffer.—On Saturday last, the convicts Brown and Shea, found guilty at the late assizes of the murder of Mr. Prim, jury clerk under the [illegible] Works, were executed at the gaol of Milmeay by [illegible] Nenagh, John and Michael Connell, were executed for the murder of J. Dillon.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

THE ART-UNION OF LONDON.—The twelfth annual meeting of this society was held in Drury-lane Theatre on Tuesday, for the distribution of prizes, the Duke of Cambridge presiding. The report, which was very voluminous, stated with reference to the controversy with the Board of Trade "The vital question at present, then, between the Board [illegible] Art-Union of London is simply whether the council shall select the prizes for the prizeholders, or the prizeholders select them for themselves: and to make the point [illegible] clear to those who have not that opportunity of otherwise learning it which you council have, a resolution will presently be submitted for your consideration." The following is the resolution adverted to, which was carried unanimously at a subsequent part of the proceedings:—"That this meeting cordially concurs in the remarks made by the Council of the Art-Union of London, as to the fundamental principles of that institution, and that they hope the Council will persevere in their endeavours, and that the thanks of the association are due to the Council for their conduct during the past year." The report also appeared that this following pictures are already in hand: "The Burial of Harold," by Mr F. R. Pickersgill, R.A. (which received the premium in lieu from the Royal Commissioners of Fine Arts), to be engraved by Mr. Bacon; "Richard Cœur de Lion Pardoning the Archer, &c.," by Mr. J. Cross (which received the premium from the commissioners), to be engraved in line by Mr. Stenton; "The Irish Piper," by Mr. F. Goodall, to be engraved by Mr F. Goodall: and, "For the current year it is proposed to produce in bronze a bust of her Majesty, [illegible] presentation of the grant of the charter. The [illegible] Albert bronze taken [illegible] Windsor Castle, is adopted as the best, and a cast having been [illegible] the society, with her Majesty's gracious permission, it was resolved to be executed in bronze forthwith. Thirty of these busts will form distribution."

ANTI BRIBERY SOCIETY.—On Tuesday a meeting was held at the Royal Standard, Mortimer-street, to receive a deputation from [illegible] ciety, and petition Parliament in favour of purity of election [illegible] Sargood, was called to the chair. Addresses were delivered [illegible] the deputation. A novelty in the mode of petitioning was to be introduced by Mr. Bacon, "Richard Cœur de Lion Pardoning the Archer, &c.," by Mr. J. Cross (which received the premium from the commissioners), to be engraved in line by Mr. Stenton; "The Irish Piper," by Mr. F. Goodall, to be engraved by Mr F. Goodall: and, "For the current year it is proposed to produce in bronze a bust of her Majesty, [illegible] presentation of the grant of the charter. The opinion [illegible] Albert bronze taken [illegible] Windsor Castle, is adopted as the best, and a cast having been [illegible] the society, with her Majesty's gracious permission, it was resolved to be executed in bronze forthwith. Thirty of these busts will form distribution.

ANTI BRIBERY SOCIETY.—On Tuesday a meeting was held at the Royal Standard, Mortimer-street, to receive a deputation from [illegible] ciety, and petition Parliament in favour of purity of election [illegible] Sargood, was called to the chair. Addresses were delivered [illegible] the deputation. A novelty in the mode of petitioning was to be introduced by Mr. Bacon, another by the inhabitants of Finsbury, and a third by the inhabitants of Westminster. In strict compliance with the Act of the 13th Charles II., c. 5, only 20 signatures were received to each petition, and every signature was authenticated with the profession and the address of the party signing it. This mode of signing was recommended as a mode ful. of advantages to the cause of popular rights.

BATHS AND WASH-HOUSES.—On Monday, at a meeting of the inhabitants of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, held in the vestry-room, for electing churchwardens and sidesmen for the ensuing year, a report was [illegible] and adopted to [illegible] of the Commissioners of Sewers, [illegible] erected [illegible] back of St. George's Barracks, Charing-cross, from which after [illegible] are progressing rapidly; that the [illegible] have subscribed £250, and a sum of [illegible] has been had from the Lords [illegible] Assurance Office [illegible] a loan of £10,000 on the rates. In the [illegible] rer's hands there is [illegible] 10½d. in the pound in the clerk's [illegible] 2s. 2½d.

INTRA-MURAL BURIALS.—At a vestry meeting held in St. Clement Danes' parish, Strand, on Monday, it was announced that the select Committee appointed to inquire into matters respecting burials in cities and towns had nominated twenty clergymen and twenty laymen, whose names were to be forwarded to Lord Morpeth, for his Lordship to appoint a Committee from those gentlemen for the purpose of finally suppressing burials in cities and [illegible] the following gentlemen were nominated for the parish of St. Clement Danes, [illegible] Mackinnon, M.P., Mr. G. A. Walker, Mr. Twining, and Mr. Cochrane.

MR. COCHRANE'S PAUPER PROCESSION.—On Monday, towards noon, [illegible] fifty sixty persons assembled in groups in Leicester-square, [illegible] to see the procession of paupers invited by Mr. Cochrane [illegible] him to Whitehall. The point of attraction evidently was the b[illegible] by the Poor Man's Guardian Society, Mr. Cochrane's head-quarters. Every and anon the door of this building was opened, and individual distributed printed papers to whoever chose to take them. These documents purported to be copies of a petition adopted "at numerous crowded meetings," and her Majesty to instruct her House of Commons to correct various abuses therein stated. Though these papers were abundantly d[illegible] some time elapsed, still there was nothing like a gal[illegible] the view, no doubt, of getting up an excitement. Mr. Cochrane [illegible] advertising van, drawn by one wretched animal, and [illegible] vered with rude representations of the pauper accommodations in the casual wards of the various metropolitan workhouses, was driven [illegible] surely round the square some half-dozen times, making short trips into the confined avenues around. This of course attracted attention, and the crowd was swelled to 100 or 150 by half past twelve o'clock, when a detachment [illegible] division of police was marched into the square, [illegible] footpaths. The crowd, however, continued opposite the house of the poor man's guardian Society, at the door of which Mr. Cochrane stood himself two or three times, as though to intimate that he was quite ready to take his part in the intended demonstration, and was only waiting the appearance of the "one hundred thousand." The time passed, but still they came not, and accordingly about a quarter before one, an open carriage was drawn up in front of the door, and Mr. Cochrane and three other gentlemen entered. They were greeted by a faint cheer from the assemblage, which then perhaps numbered 300 persons, and the vehicle was driven in the direction of the Haymarket, closely followed by the van above described, with its [illegible] and pale. The police [illegible] the crowd of pedestrians who followed the carriage, Mr. Cochrane proceeded to Trafalgar-square, and there endeavoured to address some [illegible] of soldiers, but [illegible] persed them, and Mr. Cochrane then proceeded [illegible] stone in front of [illegible] Whitehall, [illegible] the door of [illegible] office. Mr. Cochrane [illegible] by a message in answer to [illegible] Grey could not then see him, but that he would be [illegible] for at least half an hour, in which, having first visited the petition in the hands of the messenger, they retired to the steps [illegible] Nelson's column, where they remained for some time in doubt whether they should wait for the chance of seeing Sir Grey, or return to the place from which they came. Ultimately they decided on the latter course, and having informed those assembled outside of what they had done, they commenced the carriage and drove off in the direction of Charing-cross, amid the shouts of their dirty body guard.

LOYALTY OF THE CITIZENS OF LONDON.—On Tuesday a large number of signatures were appended to the subjoined declaration of loyalty to the throne, in the several wards of the City of London, in accordance with the motion passed at the last Court of Common Council:—"We, the undersigned citizens and inhabitants of the respective wards of the City of London, desire to express our unshaken loyalty and attachment to the throne; our firm determination to uphold, to the utmost of our power, and by every constitutional means, the just legal rights of the Sovereign, and the authority of both Houses of Parliament, as by law established; to preserve inviolate, by combined and persevering efforts, the peace of the metropolis against all attempts that may be made to disturb the public tranquillity, or to put in jeopardy the property of our fellow-citizens and fellow-subjects. And we desire [illegible] the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, the magistrates, the police, and citizens at large, in co-operation with [illegible] Majesty's Government, that happily accord from approbended tumult and confusion [illegible] peace of this city."

At the Bow-street Police office on Tuesday, Tom Steele was charged with the attempt at suicide, which we mentioned in our number of last week. The unfortunate gentleman appeared, himself, the terrors of the [illegible] and the kindness he had received at King's College Hospital. The magistrate adopted the course usually followed in such cases, and ordered the defendant to find bail, he [illegible] and [illegible] two respectable householders in the sum of £50 each, to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for twelve months. Mr. Steele [illegible] provided the required sureties, and was then liberated. He appeared to have completely recovered from the illness occasioned by the shock sustained by his system.

BIRTHS, DEATHS, ETC., FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 22.—The number of births registered in the suburban and metropolitan districts during the above week was 1298, of which 694 were males and 604 females. This number exceeds that of the preceding week by 58. The number of deaths during the same time was 901, of which 492 were males and 409 females. Thus the births this week exceed the deaths by 397. The latter, however, exceed the weekly average for the last five springs by 46, but are less than the deaths of the preceding week by 56.

THE CHARTIST MEETING IN EDINBURGH.—The Chartist demonstration, held on the Calton Hill, on Monday evening, proved a total failure. There might have been 600 or 700 persons on the hill; but, owing to the weather, the meeting adjourned to the hall in Adam-square, where, after the assemblage had been kept waiting for a considerable time for the committee, a memorial to the Queen, praying her Majesty to dissolve the present Parliament, was ultimately adopted. Delegates were then appointed to report-out the Scotch Chartists to the great "National Assembly," to be held in this metropolis on the 1st of May

COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Saturday afternoon her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, [illegible] attended by the Baroness de Speth and Sir George Comp[illegible] proceeded to Farnborough-road station, and from thence by the London and South-Western Railway to Gosport, en route to Osborne in the Fairy steam-yacht. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay arrived at Osborne from town, on a visit to her Majesty. The Queen and Prince Albert walked in the pleasure grounds of Osborne, and the Royal child[illegible] [illegible] in the pleasure grounds of Osborne, and the Royal children [illegible]

On Sunday morning, her Majesty and Prince Albert, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, and the Ladies and Gentlemen in Waiting, attended [illegible]

Tuesday was the birthday of the Princess Alice. The auspicious [illegible] celebrated at Osborne. The band of the 5th Regiment arrived in the morning, and performed a number of favourite pieces. The Queen and Prince Albert walked in the forenoon in the pleasure-grounds; and the Princess Alice, together with the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, and the Princess Royal, took all rides in the walks and rides. Viscountess Jocelyn, lady in waiting to her Majesty, took her departure from Osborne during the morning. The Royal dinner party in the evening included the Duchess of Kent, Baron de Beust, the Baroness de Speth, and Sir G. Couper.

ARRIVAL OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN DOWAGER.—The Queen Dowager and the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Weimar arrived at Spithead on Thursday morning, at eight A.M., in the Hone, 120, Captain Sir James Stirling, in tow of the Sovereign steam-sloop, Commander Wingfield. Her Majesty landed [illegible] and proceeded to town by express train.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

GENERAL ORDINATIONS.—The following Archbishops and Bishops have intimated their intention of holding general ordinations for their respective dioceses on Trinity Sunday: Archbishop of Canterbury, at Canterbury Cathedral; Archbishop of York, at York Minster; Bishop of London, at Fulham Palace; Bishop of Winchester, at Farnham Castle; Bishop of Durham, at Auckland Castle, Durham; Bishop of Lincoln, at Lincoln Cathedral; Bishop of Rochester, at London; Bishop of Lichfield, at Lichfield Cathedral; Bishop of [illegible] Bishop of Hereford, at [illegible] Bishop of Worcester, at All Saints' Church, Hereford; [illegible] Chichester, at Chichester Cathedral; Bishop of Exeter, at Exeter Cathedral; Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, at London, Bishop of Manchester, at Manchester Cathedral; Bishop of Llandaff, at Peterborough Cathedral; Bishop of Ripon, at Ripon Minster; Bishop of Salisbury, at Salisbury Cathedral; Bishop of St. Asaph, at St. Asaph Cathedral; Bishop of St. David's, at Lampeter College; Bishop of Worcester, at Worcester Cathedral; Bishop of Sodor and Man, at Bishop's Court. The Lord Bishop of Norwich will hold a general ordination at the cathedral church of Norwich.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

[illegible]

This lamented lady died on the 20th instant, shortly after her infant child. A the period of her decease she had completed her 39th year.

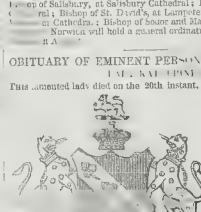
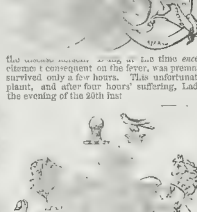
Her Ladyship was fourth daughter of the Duke of Portland, and wife of Earl Jermyn, eldest son of the Marquiss of Bristol. Her surviving issue are four sons and three daughters.

Lady Katherine Jermyn's death occurred under very painful circumstances. A few days before her first child [illegible] and during his Lordship's illness her Ladyship persisted in attending her personal attendance. The result was that she took [illegible] fever, from the excitement consequent on the fever, was prematurely confined of an infant, which survived only a few hours. This unfortunate occurrence aggravated the complaint, and after four hours' suffering, Lady Katherine breathed her last in the evening of the 20th inst.



ANNE LUCY, LADY NUGENT

HER LADYSHIP, [illegible] daughter for her literary taste and mental [illegible] talents, expired on the 19th inst., in the 88th year of her age, after an illness of some weeks' duration. Her [illegible] husband, the late Lieutenant-General the Hon. Vere Poulett, M.P., second son of Vere, third Earl Poulett, and grandfather to the present Peer, died in October, 1843, George Lord Nugent, by whom she had [illegible]



JOHN JONES, ESQ., OF LLANARTH, CO. MON[illegible]

